This short document highlights community service and continuing education programs in Tennessee under Title I of the Higher Education Act of 1965 for the fiscal years 1966-1970. During this period, community service and continuing education programs at 22 colleges and universities have used $835,213.15 in Federal funds out of a total of $1,521,971.01 allocated for these purposes. The state agency for Title I has been the University of Tennessee. During the cited time period there have been some encouraging developments in community service awareness. Among the projects funded were those dealing with urban leadership training, regional economic development, health services, law enforcement training, and cultural development of poor minorities. (DM)
Stewardship is always important. It is doubly important when that stewardship involves federal and non-federal matching funds utilized to implement the legislative intent of Congress. This short document is designed to highlight the following facts concerning community service and continuing education programming under Title I of the Higher Education Act of 1965 in Tennessee:

- During five fiscal years, eighty-six community service and continuing education programs at twenty-two colleges and universities in Tennessee have utilized $835,213.15 in federal funds. (See Table I, p. 1, for a distribution of the federal funds.)

- As a result of Title I, there have been some encouraging developments in community service awareness in Tennessee since 1966. (See pp. 2-4 for these encouraging developments.)

- A total of $1,521,971.01 in federal and non-federal administrative and program funds has been budgeted for these eighty-six community service and continuing education programs in Tennessee. (See pp. 5-20 for an identification of these programs.)

- The State Agency for Title I (The University of Tennessee) has been ably assisted by a State Advisory Council of twenty-two dedicated leaders in Tennessee. (See pp. 21-22.)

Title I is a remarkable piece of legislation. The State Agency staff in Tennessee, increasingly involved in the area of program development, is already planning for a more long-range and sustained involvement of colleges and universities in their communities. The house is half built. The personnel and machinery are in place to demonstrate effective federal-state teamwork in strengthening the community service dimensions of higher education and in providing problem-solving assistance to Tennessee communities. Many colleges and universities are concerned and committed, and they are now ready to develop community service and continuing education programs. Tennessee’s institutions are ready to demonstrate the potential of the legislation, and they can move massively and effectively with a level of financial support that matches the tasks at hand.

NOTE: The $835,213.15 in federal funds are shown above as granted in the contracts for the period ending June 30, 1970. No effort is made here either to show the final amounts actually expended or to denote the non-federal matching funds expended. Three different matching arrangements were in force during this period.
It is always difficult to pin down a direct cause-and-effect relationship between specific Title I programs and certain accomplishments or encouraging developments in the communities or in the institutions of higher education in Tennessee—developments in community service awareness that reflect the consummation of the dual-aims of Title I of the Higher Education Act of 1965.

The staff of the State Agency is convinced that the measure of success or failure of Title I depends on its long-range impact on an institution’s capacity to conduct community service programs. In several cases, institutions of higher education in Tennessee have developed permanent strengths and resources in their community service programming; in some cases, colleges and universities have established some permanent organizational structures for on-going community service efforts after Title I funds were expended; in a few cases, community resources and community institutions were improved through the contributions and efforts of certain colleges and universities in Tennessee.

Listed below are several encouraging developments in community service awareness since 1966 that can be attributed, in whole or in part, to some of the eighty-six proposals that have been funded under Title I of the Higher Education Act of 1965 for the first five fiscal years. This summary of the accomplishments is not necessarily listed in rank order of importance and reflects the subjective view of the staff.

1. There has been some "new" college and university involvement in community service in Tennessee under the aegis of Title I. Seven private liberal arts institutions, never before involved in significant community service programs, began their first ventures with funding under Title I (Belmont College, Bethel College, Carson-Newman College, Christian Brothers College, Knoxville College, Lambuth College, and LeMoyne-Owen College). At least two state-supported institutions, never before involved in community service programs, began their first ventures with funding under Title I (Middle Tennessee State University and The University of Tennessee at Martin).

2. Several institutions have become directly involved, through specific Title I programs, in some phase of the Model Cities Program in these three Tennessee cities: Nashville (Vanderbilt University, joined with Fisk University, George Peabody College for Teachers, Meharry Medical College, and Tennessee State University); Smithville (Middle Tennessee State University, joined with George Peabody College for Teachers, Tennessee Technological University, and The University of Tennessee); and Chattanooga (The University of Tennessee at Chattanooga).

3. In Nashville, six colleges and universities have formed a legal consortium to provide community service programs in an Urban Observatory (George Peabody College for Teachers, Fisk University, Meharry Medical College, Tennessee State University, The University of Tennessee, and Vanderbilt University). Nashville is one of ten cities in the present "network" of Urban Observatories.
4. The Municipal Technical Advisory Service at The University of Tennessee has, with four new full-time consultants, expanded 200 percent its initial function of providing information and technical assistance to officials and employees of municipalities in Tennessee.

5. Memphis State University has been able to expand its Department of Sociology until it now offers a major and minor in Law Enforcement.

6. The College of Home Economics at The University of Tennessee has offered extension graduate courses (some by telewriter) in areas of Tennessee never before served—at Martin, Nashville, Kingsport, and Chattanooga.

7. Still in the beginning stages, and as a result of two Title I grants, teacher training and inservice programs in adult basic education may eventually lead to graduate degree programs in newly created departments known as Adult Education at Memphis State University and Continuing and Higher Education at The University of Tennessee.

8. Middle Tennessee State University has created a Regional and Community Service and Research Center.

9. The University of Tennessee, through its newly created Center for Training and Career Development in Nashville, is now significantly involved in training State and local government personnel. The Center has initiated and developed comprehensive training programs for the professional development of tax assessors, members of boards of equalization, and quarterly county court members.

10. Lambuth College has created a Family Services Bureau (Office of Sociological Services).

11. Memphis State University has created an Institute for Urban Development and an Urban Action Center.

12. A Title I proposal by the College of Law at The University of Tennessee resulted in the creation of a permanent Appalachian Legal Resource Foundation.

13. A Title I proposal by the Department of Political Science at Middle Tennessee State University resulted in the creation of a permanent Magistrates Association of Tennessee.

14. A Title I proposal by the Department of Sociology at Lambuth College resulted in the creation of a permanent Tennessee Council on Family Relations.

15. A Title I proposal by the Department of Business at Austin Peay State University contributed to the development of a Clarksville Port Authority on the Cumberland River.

16. A Title I proposal by Carson-Newman College resulted in a successful outdoor drama, entitled "Walk Toward the Sunset: The Melungeon Story," at Sneedville and served to enhance the economic viability of Hancock County.
17. The School of Architecture at The University of Tennessee created a unique Title I publication on strip highways that has gained national publicity, including articles in several newspapers in Tennessee, in the New York Times, and in the National Observer.

18. A Title I proposal by the College of Education at The University of Tennessee, joined with nine other institutions (Austin Peay State University, East Tennessee State University, George Peabody College for Teachers, Memphis State University, Middle Tennessee State University, Tennessee State University, Tennessee Technological University, The University of Tennessee at Chattanooga, and The University of Tennessee at Martin) in the inservice training program for school board members in Tennessee has revitalized the Tennessee School Board Association, produced a "Guide for Developing Written School Board Policies" (two volumes), and furnished school boards with a library of current, pertinent literature.

19. There has been the development of consortium and other multi-institutional arrangements for community services for several programs under Title I in Tennessee. Three examples are mentioned in points 2, 3, and 18 above. Also, East Tennessee State University joined with Carson-Newman College in one proposal. The University of Tennessee Medical Units joined with Vanderbilt University School of Medicine and Meharry Medical College in two Title I grants. Memphis State University joined with LeMoyne-Owen College and Memphis Academy of Arts. These initial projects should result in continuing ties of cooperation.

It is the view of the staff of the State Agency that much has been accomplished these first five fiscal years to further the dual-aims of Title I as the staff has placed increasing emphasis in relating the focus of Title I (1) in strengthening and improving the resources of Tennessee's institutions of higher education, and (2) in assisting these colleges and universities to relate to communities in a better way. An analysis of the following eighty-six proposals should demonstrate the scope of Title I programming in Tennessee since 1966, and the examples of accomplishments or encouraging developments in community service awareness should provide some measure of the impact Title I has had in Tennessee since 1966.
