LOCATION OF INDIAN TRIBES IN ARIZONA

LOCATION OF INDIAN TRIBES IN NEW MEXICO

THE NAVAJO TRIBE

ARIZONA AND NEW MEXICO

The Navajo Tribe does not presently operate under a federal charter, nor does it have a formal constitution and by-laws. However, the following pages should help to explain their situation with regard to said documents, past history, and present operational procedures.

KENT FITZGERALD, Superintendent, Bureau of Indian Affairs (Eastern Navajo Agency), Crownpoint, New Mexico (personal communiqué):

The Navajo Tribe "operates under regulations promulgated in 1938 by the Secretary of the Interior and under a Tribal Code which is a compilation of various resolutions and ordinances adopted by the Navajo Tribal Council. The Secretary's regulations are included in The Navajo Yearbook, Report No. VIII, 1951-1961, A Decade of Progress. ...The Navajo Tribal Code is published in two volumes and is brought up-to-date every year by means of pocket supplements.

"The Navajo Tribal government operates at the local community level through organizations known as Navajo Tribal Chapters. There are 97 of these. They were brought into existence many years ago by early Superintendents on the Navajo as a device for communication between Bureau administrators and the Navajo people at the local level. The Chapters have three elected officers each of whom is paid on the basis of meetings (not more than two a month) held at the Chapter Houses. Some Chapters have more than two meetings a month, but the Chapter Officers are paid for only two meetings--$30 per meeting. This payment is made by the Navajo Tribe from Tribal appropriated funds. The Chapters still have very little in the way of legal authorities, but are becoming increasingly significant as a force for the people at the local level to articulate their views on matters of concern to them.

"Back in 1963, the Tribal Council appropriated funds for the Chapter Officers to meet each month along with their Tribal Council Delegates in associations given the names of District Council and Agency Council. Chapter Officers were initially given $30 for each District and Agency Council meeting attended. Again, no formal authorities were granted to these regional organizations by the Tribal Council. The District Council (composed of Chapter Officers within a land management district) and the Agency Council, which brings all of the Chapter Officers together from throughout each of the five Navajo Agency areas in each instance, serve principally as a means of getting the Chapter leaders together on a regular basis for mutual discussions of common problems and, infrequently, as a means for the Tribal Council to get reactions from all of the Chapter leaders within Districts or Agencies to various government and Tribal proposals.

"We have two District Councils in the Eastern Navajo Agency. ...Both our District Councils and our Agency Council are quite active and are playing an increasingly important role in giving the people a sense of unity in this area. Our Agency Council, which calls itself the Eastern Navajo Council, is the only Agency Council operating now in any of the five Navajo Agency areas. The others appear to be defunct, or meet only infrequently for Agency Council meetings during the current fiscal year. Even though our Eastern Navajo Council continues to meet on a regular basis.

"As problems have been recognized by the people in conducting the meetings and business of the District Councils and Agency Council, individual resolutions have been adopted from time to time, fixing the dates for regular meetings, defining the terms of office for the officers, setting up procedures for drafting agendas for their meetings, etc. These resolutions finally culminated within the past year in the drafting and adoption of Plans of Operation by our District 16 Council and by our Eastern Navajo Council. I am enclosing copies of each of these Plans of Operation [reproduced herein]. I consider it indicative of the growing sophistication of the Navajo leaders in the Eastern Navajo area that they have moved this far during the period when there has been so much confusion and misunderstanding within the Tribal Council itself over what a constitution is. As you know, the Chairman of the Navajo Tribe [Raymond Nakai], who [recently started] his second term of office, has campaigned in each of the Tribal Chairman elections on a platform declaring the need for constitutional government on the Navajo. At a recent meeting of the Tribal Council he announced plans to move ahead now with plans for the drafting of a constitution for the Navajo Tribe."

PAUL W. HAND, Superintendent, Bureau of Indian Affairs (Chinle Agency), Chinle, Arizona (personal communiqué):

"The Chairman has indicated that he does propose to present a written constitution to the Navajo people in the near future, time unstated. You may wish to write to him directly and request a copy of the proposed constitution. We have not received a copy here and are not certain that one will be furnished you at the present time."

[The editor did write directly to the Tribal Chairman, stating the purpose of the Constitutional Series project, requesting a copy of the proposed constitution. However, no answer was ever received.]

PERRY ALLEN, Director of Public Relations, Navajo Tribe, Window Rock, Arizona (personal communiqué):

"Attached please find a copy of the By-Laws of the Navajo Tribal Council [reproduced herein]. A Navajo Tribal Constitution has been advocated by the present Administration for the Navajo people."

GALLUP [NEW MEXICO] INDEPENDENT (January 4, 1966):

"Raymond Nakai, Navajo Tribal Council chairman...[at a Many Farms political rally] said: 'This [the advocated constitution] is the principal issue and on it our stand is clear; my administration wishes to establish a democratic government according to the will of the people.'

"Nakai told the group he advocates a constitution for the Navajo Tribe 'which will impose limitations on the legislative, judicial and executive departments.' He pointed out [that] the council chairman does not now have veto power as do executive leaders of other governmental bodies. The chairman said that without a veto power there is no system of checks and balances in the tribal government.

"Nakai quoted Senator Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.) as saying, '...an Indian citizen has all the constitutional rights of other citizens while off the reservation, but on the reservation (in the absence of federal legislation) he has only the rights given him by the tribal governing body.'

"The chairman suggested that a Navajo constitutional convention be convened to draft a tribal constitution to be presented to the Navajo people for adoption."

IRVIN J. JONES, Tribal Operations Assistant, Bureau of Indian Affairs (Navajo Area Office), Window Rock, Arizona (personal communiqué):

"Under separate cover we are mailing you the Navajo Yearbook, VIII, 1961. This is the last volume of this particular document."

The following pages are excerpts from The Navajo Yearbook. Report No. VIII, 1951-1961, A Decade of Progress; specifically from pp. 371-429, a report prepared by Robert W. Young: "The Origin and Development of Navajo Tribal Government".

THE ORIGIN AND DEVELOPMENT OF NAVAJO TRIBAL GOVERNMENT

"A little over a century ago the territory occupied by the Navajo people became a part of the United States. At that time, and previously, the Navajo Tribe did not exist in the ordinary political sense. There was a group of people sharing a common language and culture, but political organization apparently did not extend beyond local bands led by headmen.... The headmen enjoyed varying amounts of power based on their persuasive ability, but no powers of coercion were attached to the office; the position of headman was not hereditary, and coalitions of headmen were probably few and of short duration. In short, the Tribe did not constitute a political entity."

"The development of a medium for effective communication and contact between the federal government and the Navajo people remained a serious problem [following years of warfare and ineffective treaty making] and, in 1927, John Hunter, Superintendent of Leupp Agency began the development of local community organizations which came to be known as Chapters. These were designed to bring the Navajo people together at a local level where representatives of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, in conjunction with returned Navajo students, could exert more effective influence toward the improvement of livestock, and agricultural techniques, the advancement of education and other objectives of the administration.

"...The Chapter movement began only a few years after the establishment of the first Navajo Tribal Council, but for many years the Chapters were more important as aspects of Navajo political life than the artificially created Council."

"A reorganization of the Council along constitutional lines would have taken place in 1934 if the Navajo Tribe, by the narrow margin of 7,992 to 7,608, had not rejected the Indian Reorganization Act."

ARTICLE XI

SECTION 1. The Navajo Reservation with its surface and sub-surface natural resources shall remain tribal property.

SEC. 6. Upon the decease of the assignee, his heirs shall have the first preference for the reassignment of the land which was under his assignment at the time of his death.

SEC. 7. Various tracts of land cultivated and otherwise improved for agricultural purposes by individual members of the Navajo Tribe prior to the adoption of this constitution, shall not be affected by the provisions of the preceding sections unless sold or voluntarily surrendered to the tribe, or abandoned. Failure to cultivate or otherwise improve the land for a period of two years shall be considered an abandonment of the land.

SEC. 8. No grazing land shall be fenced for the exclusive use of any member of the tribe; and any grazing land now under fence for the exclusive use of any member of the tribe shall be subject to the right of eminent domain of the tribe.

SEC. 9. Any agricultural land held by any member of the tribe in excess of forty acres in area shall be subject to taxation by the Navajo Council, provided that the taxation shall not exceed one dollar ($1.00) per acre for every acre held in excess of forty acres.

SEC. 2. The right to mine or otherwise take coal from any deposits of coal on any tribal land, classified by the government to be suitable for mining, may be granted by the Navajo Council to capable coal operators and miners under such terms and restrictions as may be required by the Council not inconsistent with any mining laws of the Federal Government.

SEC. 2. All power sites on the Navajo Reservation shall remain tribal property.

ARTICLE XV

SECTION 1. The Navajo Council whenever it deems it necessary shall propose amendments to this Constitution, which shall be valid as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the affirmative vote of a majority of the eligible voters of the Navajo Tribe and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

[This proposed Constitution was subsequently amended, revisions made, inconsistencies corrected, but still remains unapproved or unadopted by the Navajo Tribe. Perhaps the present tribal administration will succeed in obtaining a Constitution. This 1937 proposed Constitution is included for possible eventual comparison.]

(e) All actions of the Council whether in the form of motions, resolutions, ordinances or regulations, shall be entitled according to the subject matter listed in the index of "Navajo Tribal Council Resolutions" in order to assure continuity of subject matter in subsequent volumes of such compilations.

SEC. 5. Minutes. The minutes of each Council meeting shall be transcribed by a qualified court reporter or reporters, to the extent possible upon a basis permitting copies of the record to be available the day next succeeding the day of the proceedings. Copies shall be available for all delegates, tribal attorneys and the Area Director, and shall be maintained by the tribal Secretary as part of the permanent files.
