Mr. Jule M. Sugarman
Administrator
Human Resources Administration
220 Church Street
New York, New York 10013

Dear Mr. Sugarman:

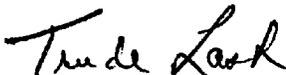

We are happy to present to you officially the report and recommendations of the Early Childhood Development Task Force appointed at the request of the Mayor by former Human Resources Administrator Mitchell I. Ginsberg.

I know you are familiar with the charges given to the Task Force and have kept in close touch with our work. It seems important to stress the fact that the Task Force members who represented many different points of view were able to reach a consensus.

Members of the Task Force were tireless and totally committed to the task at hand. Their work, however, would not have been possible without the wholehearted support of Mitchell I. Ginsberg, who was always available and assigned to the Task Force a full-time staff under the brilliant and wise leadership of Miss Georgia L. McMurray. She was devotedly and ably supported by Dolores Kazanjian, Marie Sloan, William H. Brett and staff from Project Management and Corporation Counsel. Miss Jan Tyroler was of great help in writing the report.

We are fortunate, not only to have the Mayor's full support but to be able to depend on you for the actual implementation of our recommendations. We know of your deep commitment to the fullest development of early childhood programs and we wish to assure you of our full support and help in every way.

Sincerely,

Trude Lash
Chairman

STATEMENT OF BELIEF

Because we value our children, the members of the Task Force believe

. . . that every child, regardless of his economic, social or family background, has a right to the advantages of an enriched pre-school experience, including a range of health, educational and social services,

. . . that children with special needs must receive full and special consideration in the planning of any early childhood services,

. . . and, that until such time as early childhood programs are available to all children, priority must be given to those in families with the greatest economic and social need.

Because we value family life, the Task Force believes

. . . that to create early childhood services solely as an alternative to public assistance is not desirable,

. . . that no mother should be forced to work as a condition for using early childhood services,

- . . . that parents have the right to decide which services best meet the needs of their children,
- . . . that early childhood services must be viewed as a support extended to families,
- . . . that strong parent involvement must be a prime factor in the development and on-going operation of early childhood centers,
- . . . and, that it must be made easier for families to obtain services for their children.

Because the life of our city depends upon the re-emergence of a sense of community, the Task Force believes

- . . . that maximum flexibility in the designing of new programs must be encouraged to truly reflect individual community needs,
- . . . that community representatives must be involved in the initial planning of facilities and must have the opportunity to originate and sponsor programs,
- . . . and that government, at every level, has the responsibility to provide the means by which all this can happen.

"Know you what it is to be a child? .....it is to believe in love, to believe in lovliness, to believe in belief; it is to be so little that the elves can reach to whisper in your ear; it is to turn pumpkins into coaches, and mice into horses, lowness into loftiness; and nothing into everything . . ."

INTRODUCTION

On March 9, 1970 Mayor John V. Lindsay appointed a 21-member Task Force to examine early childhood services in New York City, to assess their effectiveness in meeting the needs of children and their parents, and to recommend changes in the quantity and quality of the programs. In his charge, the Mayor requested that the Task Force explore the feasibility of establishing an office for early childhood services.

For a number of years, civic and community groups had expressed concern about the shortage of early childhood services in the City and about the confusion resulting from lack of coordination of, and communication between, existing programs. In 1966, a report, Ladder to Learning, prepared by Dr. Milton Young for a group of representatives of civic and governmental agencies, recommended a process of coordination. Subsequently, a number of meetings were called by the Human Resources Administration in order to consider problems in the early childhood field. Continuing concern was expressed by the Mayor in his 1970-71 Budget Message. He stated that "there are currently eight different pre-school programs operated by the City under the auspices of two separate administrations, in addition to the Board of Education.

In addition to the City agencies involved in direct operation of programs or in supervision of operating agencies, there are at least four other City agencies and innumerable divisions, bureaus and units that play some part in approving or funding early childhood programs.

The chaos created by this multiplicity of responsibilities is compounded by the funding patterns. Funding for facilities and operating expenses comes from a variety of City, State and Federal sources. Guidelines are unclear. In some instances, notably in licensing procedures, requirements are restrictive and not only create obstacles to funding but to the delivery of service.

And this funding process is only one of the confusing variables faced by parents and community groups. Eligibility for service varies from program to program because of historical happenstance rather than rational decision. Some programs are free and, in others, parents pay fees. The degree of parent and community participation varies over a wide scale. Educational content is only included in one family day care program that is funded by the Department of Social Services.

No data, research or overall planning helps to guide communities in the location or type of program to be initiated. And there is virtually no communication between programs either on a Citywide or local level.

The rigid staffing qualifications set by the New York City Health Code virtually lock out a large group of talented non-professionals whose vital role in teaching young children has been abundantly demonstrated.

Efforts to construct, rehabilitate or lease new facilities have been frustrating. The numbers of approvals required from different agencies, the lack of funds to enable community groups to take the first necessary steps in the process or obtain funds to finance renovation of facilities, effectively bar almost all but wealthy groups from sponsoring centers. These sometimes unrealistic demands have meant unconscionable delays and even more unconscionable continuing gaps in service.

Lack of coordination--lack of communication--lack of planning--all these have helped to perpetuate lack of service. There is unanimity on one point above all others, and that is that our society is guilty of the tragic, overwhelming and continuing neglect of tens- or hundreds-of-thousands of children in New York City during the most critical years of their lives.

Need is always difficult to measure, particularly since waiting lists tend to be self-limiting. Parents cannot register children in areas where there are no programs, and they do not register when lists are so long that the prospect of admission is completely discouraging.

It is probable that all children need some kind of program of educational stimulation in their pre-school years. Experts have confirmed the fact that the developmental phase from birth to six is not merely crucial, but that it determines to an overwhelming extent the entire future pattern of life. Society has been slow in recognizing the importance of this fact. But it is recognized now. Minority groups, the poor, the working mothers and citizens in general, are demanding that recognition be followed by action. Parents are no longer content to see their children begin to fall behind in the first year of school nor will they continue to accept illiteracy as a way of life.

Incredible as it may seem, it is a fact that in

New York City only 57,000 children under the age of six out of a total of 825,000--or only seven percent of all pre-school children--are in any recognized early childhood program.* And even though waiting lists reflect only a small part of the need, it is important to note that there are 8,000 children on the waiting lists of day care centers operated under the supervision of the Department of Social Services. There are no waiting list figures available from the central Head Start office, but many Head Start centers record waiting lists as large as the number of enrollees in the center.

There are countless numbers of children in families below or close to the poverty line. Many live in decaying neighborhoods and, more often than not, in crowded, dilapidated housing. Medical statistics record anemia levels that indicate that there are a substantial number of children in these areas who suffer from nutritional deficiencies. Today, we know that such deficiencies may have a serious effect on how well children function.

The presence of so many young school age children on the streets, and the evidence of narcotic addiction at an early age make it reasonable to assume that a great many school age children are in need of supervision in their out-of-school hours.

Urban life and the shortage of housing for more than one family under the same roof make it unlikely that relatives will be available to care for children when the mother is not present.

There are simply not enough early childhood programs in the City. But we do have something to build on and, in that sense, we are rich. There is diversity. It exists not because of a plan but, because at various times, civic groups, parents or government agencies became aware of need and attempted to meet it in a particular way. In these recurring attempts there was frequent disregard for existing programs or patterns, so that programs developed separately and unrelated to other programs. Some needs, such as infant care, night care, and short term or "drop-in" care, were never met at all. But there is the beginning of the wide range of services that we must have in order to meet the wide range of needs.

Historically, the origins of group day care can be traced back to the 1850s. During the depression years of the 1930s, a number of centers opened with money provided by the Works Project Administration in order to provide jobs for teachers. Today's publicly-funded program grew out of the emergency created by World War II. Although its chief raison d'etre was the employment of women, it incorporated strong concern for children. Other early childhood programs, such as Head Start, came out of the poverty program with its insistence upon strong parent involvement in all aspects of early childhood services.

In addition to the public and philanthropically-supported programs, there are private and proprietary programs in the City. These have been in existence for varying periods--some for thirty or more years. The majority operate part day nursery school programs and charge fees that restrict their use to people in middle or upper income brackets.

The picture, then, is confused. There are gaps in types of services, and there are far too few places for the numbers of children who need care. Lack of communication between programs makes it difficult for a child to move from one program to another as his needs change. Parents have no one place to go in their communities to learn what services are available, or to be helped to select the service best qualified to meet their child's need. Space is available in private agencies and in family day care homes, but lack of coordination has made it difficult to move children from group day care waiting lists to family day care homes. Licensing requirements have made it impossible to make full use of community workers who may have a very special knowledge and a rich contribution to make to the programs. Jobs that should lead to careers are, too often, dead end roads for family day care provider mothers, and for parent aides and community workers. And expansion is restricted not by lack of funds but by lack of rational procedures for either construction or program.

Through his appointment of a Task Force, the Mayor announced his concern for the young children of this City. In reporting its recommendations, the Task Force expresses its gratitude for this concern and its conviction that this is a time for action. The City can give national leadership to the national interest in early childhood development. Such leadership can result in a new approach to the expressed principles and suppressed implementation of the democratic principle of equal opportunity.

The Task Force believes that its major recommendations are dramatic in the sense that they contemplate almost total change in administration and procedure, while retaining the diversity of programmatic approaches that presently exist. The recommendations that follow this introductory statement are made, in each instance, in response to a specific problem. The problem and the reason for the recommendation appear in the body of the report.

One recommendation transcends the others, and on its implementation will depend the growth and shape of early childhood programs--established and innovative--in the future. That recommendation is to bring together as many programs as possible in a new Department of Early Childhood Services. To insure parent and community participation at the policy-making levels, the Task Force has recommended the appointment of a Commission as an integral part of the new Department.

The new Department is designed, not to create another layer of government, but to absorb many of the existing and overlapping agencies and procedures. All other recommendations deal with structure and procedures in an effort to bring order and simplicity to this chaotic field.

In presenting its recommendations the Task Force recognizes that, at best, it has proposed one small step toward the ultimate goal of care for any part of the 24-hour day for all children on all income levels in whatever form and for whatever time the parents and the program director agree is desirable.

It remains the firm conviction of all the members who worked to produce this report that the care and education of young children is a top priority for our City and our country, and that all the concern of government must be focused on eliminating the obstacles, solving the problems, building the facilities, training the staff, and providing for parents the rich educational opportunities they want for their children, and ours.

*"There should be some type of organization where all people interested in early childhood development could come together instead of being scattered all over the place . . . what this City needs is an organization whose primary focus is on our primary resource--the children."**

**the above quotation and those that precede all chapters are taken from testimony given at public hearings held by the Task Force.*

Chapter II

THE DEPARTMENT OF EARLY CHILDHOOD SERVICES

The Task Force Recommends the establishment of a Department of Early Childhood Services within the Human Resources Administration with a chief administrative officer of Commissioner or of equivalent status.

The Department shall plan, administer and fund all publicly-funded early childhood programs, except those currently operated by the Board of Education.

Group and family day care programs, now under the auspices of the Department of Social Services, shall be transferred.

The Head Start and Family Day Care-Careers Programs, now under the auspices of the Community Development Agency, shall be transferred.

The Department shall assume responsibility for administering the Department of Parks Pre-School Program.

The Department shall be responsible for licensing all early childhood services, public and non-public.

Major Goals of the Department

To provide a variety of early childhood programs.

To insure that an educational component is included in all programs.

To insure that existing early childhood programs are enriched and expanded.

To provide for communication, information-sharing and planning among all programs.

To enable children to move from one program to another as the needs of the family or child change.

To give children from different backgrounds and with various handicaps an opportunity to participate in the same center.

To provide for strong parent involvement in all early childhood centers.

To encourage and enable parent, community and church and industry-related organizations to sponsor early childhood services.

To increase knowledge and understanding of the developmental years of childhood.

To work toward the day when no child in New York City will be denied access to the advantages of an enriching early childhood experience.

Functions of the Department

A. Funding

The Department's prime responsibility shall be to administer and fund all publicly-financed early childhood programs, including DOSS Group and Family

Day Care, CDA Head Start and Family Day Care-Careers, and Parks Department Pre-School. It shall monitor, review, and evaluate programs including those services provided through purchase of service. The Department shall not assume fiscal responsibility for pre-kindergarten programs presently operated by the Board of Education.

Top priority shall be given to developing an implementation plan by which the Department assumes responsibility for allocating those Federal, State, and City funds now administered by the Department of Social Services, the Community Development Agency and the Department of Parks. This plan shall provide for the transfer of staff currently involved in administering early childhood services in the Department of Social Services and the Community Development Agency.* The plan shall also provide for the decentralization of staff to expedite the flow of services to the neighborhoods.

Special Consideration: Relationship to Board of Education

Ideally, the Task Force would like the Department

*Department of Parks staff will not be transferred since they operate programs directly.

of Early Childhood Services to assume responsibility for funding all early childhood programs, including those of the Board of Education. However, we must take note of the fact that federal legislation mandates that the administration of funds appropriated through the Elementary & Secondary Education Act (ESEA) be restricted to the local educational institution; in this instance, the Board of Education; further, that the community school boards established by the State legislature in 1969, were clearly delegated the responsibility of administering pre-kindergarten services within the school system. The direction that the community boards will take with regard to this responsibility is yet to be determined.

Therefore, the Task Force recommends that the Department of Early Childhood Services initiate and maintain liaison with the community school boards and help them in every way possible to plan for early childhood services.

It is further recommended that agreements be developed with the Board of Education so that its standards for early childhood programs follow those that may be set by the Department of Early Childhood Services with regard to provision of services and parent and community involvement.

B. Licensing

The Task Force recommends that responsibility for licensing early childhood services, currently performed by the Department of Health, shall be transferred to the Department of Early Childhood Services.

Until such time as the necessary legislative changes can be made to accomplish this, Department of Health staff empowered to make decisions, shall be assigned to the Department through administrative agreement.

Rationale

The administration of early childhood programs cuts across agency lines. For instance, DOSS funds sponsoring agencies for group day care but they are licensed by the Department of Health. Head Start is funded by CDA, but licensed by the Department of Health. This functional separation began twenty-five years ago and was based on the belief, probably true at that time, that the Health Department offered the only protection for children being taken care of outside their homes. This arrangement is a part of the State law.

It is interesting to note, however, that because their activities are so similar, DOSS and the Health Department staff agree to accept the findings of DOSS in determining an application for service.

In Family Day Care, the Department of Health exercises no review over DOSS-funded homes, which are certified strictly as a delegated State Department of Social Services function. The Board of Education must meet Health Department standards but its services are not actually licensed. The Department of Parks operates its program virtually isolated from any standard-setting authority.

The CDA Family Day Care-Careers Program offers a graphic illustration of what happens when jurisdiction is divided among agencies. CDA administers the program which is operated through twenty delegate agencies. DOSS certifies the homes, pays stipends to provider mothers and picks up part of the administrative costs. This year, Model Cities assumed the administrative costs for six family day care delegate agencies in their areas. The Board of Education, the Manpower and Career Development Agency and the Human Resources Administration each contribute staff time, consultation service or technical assistance to the program.

Much of this confusion results from the fact that the original source of funds from OEO was terminated in 1968. DOSS took over part of the funding responsibility for Family Day Care-Careers in 1969. The administrative responsibility for the program has remained in the hands of CDA. Such instability in funding and confusion about jurisdiction has created uncertainty about the future of the program though its success has been well-documented.

C. Operation of Programs

The Task Force recommends that the allocation of funds to sponsoring agencies shall be based upon the number of children served, rather than on the funding source. Allocating funds on this basis will permit children to remain in the same center as the family's income changes, if the parents so choose.

If a sponsoring agency develops a comprehensive program proposal that requires funding from several sources, the Department shall develop a mechanism by which the proposal can be submitted through the proper channels and, further, the Department shall coordinate the funding process which the various components of the proposals may entail.

Every sponsor agency shall develop its own program budget and submit it to the Department of Early Childhood Services for funding. Departmental guidelines shall include provisions for budget modifications and discretionary funds. Every sponsor agency shall also develop plans for ongoing evaluation of its program.

The Task Force specifically recommends that the three publicly-funded early childhood programs--CDA Family Day Care-Careers, DOSS-operated and DOSS-purchase of service Family Day Care--and proprietary family day care now under the Department of Health, be administered through one unit in the Department of Early Childhood Services. This unit shall provide a variety of services, including educational, consultative, vocational counseling and in-service training, similar to the CDA model. Provider homes, now licensed by DOSS-operated Family Day Care, shall be contracted out to community and voluntary agencies presently sponsoring neighborhood group or family day care.

The Task Force also recommends that separate units be established for Group Care, with divisions for Infant Care, Services to Three to Six-Year Olds, Head Start, Liaison to the Board of Education, and non-publicly funded programs that will be licensed by the Department.

The Department will not operate programs. However, it shall have the authority to sponsor demonstration and pilot projects. If, after evaluation, these projects prove worthwhile, they shall be taken over by community sponsors.

Programs in Temporary Facilities

The Task Force recommends that the Department shall approve and provide funds to community groups sponsoring early childhood services serving fewer children than the number allowed by DOSS, and to operate programs in temporary facilities while these groups plan for permanent facilities. This provision should be implemented immediately with specific guidelines established. Funds shall be available to help them meet minimum licensing and funding standards. In order to receive these funds, groups must be serving families who meet current DOSS standards with regard to eligibility requirements. Lack of State incorporation as an agency providing day care services shall not be used as a reason for denying these funds.

D. Research and Long Range Planning

The Department shall be responsible for research, evaluation and long range planning, including the physical planning and development of facilities. It shall coordinate its planning activities with those of other agencies.

Rationale

One central agency must be responsible for collecting the demographic and other data which document present and future need for early childhood services. Such information should be available to the public.

In developing plans for a wide range of services for children, it is clear that the Department will need information from other city and private agencies that provide such services as health care, recreation, transportation, etc.

E. Physical Planning and Development

The Department shall be responsible for the planning and development of facilities, including provisions for financing their construction and renovation. Specific recommendations are discussed in Chapter VI of this report.

F. Establishing Staffing Standards

The Department shall develop and implement training and career development programs. It shall also make provisions for center staff to utilize these career development opportunities as specified in Chapter V

The Department shall initiate the development of new curricula and training methods for use by institutions of higher learning in training early childhood educators and related professionals.

Rationale

A child learns from everyone he comes in contact with: his parents, professionals and non-professionals. Early childhood programs must, therefore, encourage flexible staffing patterns which support the vital role that each group plays in the education of young children. Opportunities must be developed, moreover, for those who wish to develop special skills in working with children.

G. Information and Referral Service

The Department shall provide information and referral services to all early childhood programs, both public and private. Where possible, these services shall be decentralized so that parents and community organizations have easy access to information about the whole range of early childhood services.

H. Technical Assistance

The Department shall provide technical assistance for the development of facilities and programs. Technical assistance staff shall be available in neighborhood offices to expedite the approval process for potential sponsors of new programs and, also, to assist them in setting up health, education, and organizational components.

I. Advocacy

The Department shall provide staff to work with groups to press for changes in City, State, and Federal laws as well as in administrative arrangements, when those affected believe that such changes are needed.

J. Public Affairs

The Department shall establish a public affairs unit to handle media relations and to write and produce informational material.

*Fiscal Responsibility of Sponsoring Agency*A. Three Percent Contribution

The Task Force strongly recommends that this requirement be discontinued immediately regardless of the agency's ability to pay.

Rationale

At present, agencies sponsoring group day care funded by DOSS must contribute three percent of the operating costs. The rationale for this three percent contribution originated 25 years ago when City officials believed that if a voluntary agency contributed toward the program costs, it would become more involved in the center. In many instances, it did, because board members had to spend time raising money. However, emerging community organizations in poverty areas find such thinking obsolete. They cannot sponsor group day care because they cannot raise the necessary funds. Furthermore, this policy has eroded over the years. Some voluntary agencies now contribute little more than one percent annually by agreement with the Department of Social Services. If the contribution is discontinued, funds raised by a sponsor agency on its own could be used to enrich the center's program over and beyond items covered by public funds.

B. State Incorporation

The Task Force recommends that the Department of Early Childhood Services begin negotiation with the State Department of Social Services to amend the law that mandates special incorporation for agencies sponsoring day care centers.

Rationale

Current regulations mandate that agencies sponsoring day care services funded by DOSS be incorporated for such purpose. This requirement grew out of the era when voluntary agencies had to solicit funds and was intended to protect private philanthropic efforts. The Task Force has found that the process for incorporation is long and cumbersome and, again, prohibits new community organizations from sponsoring services in their neighborhoods.

Because part of the requirements involve assessment of individual board member's ability to assume financial responsibility for the center, as well as his moral and social standing in the community, people living in poverty areas are unduly scrutinized by the State Department of Social Services. Many community people find such an approach insulting and condescending. The Task Force is aware of groups who had to wait for from nine months to one year before being formally approved by the State. Furthermore, of the 36 day care centers now under construction or renovation by the Department of Social Services, only one-third have been incorporated. So DOSS is faced with the possibility of having the centers ready for operation but with few agencies incorporated to sponsor the services.

Inasmuch as we are moving toward 100 percent public funding of day care centers, the need for special incorporation of agencies to insure fiscal accountability is obsolete. Such responsibility can be insured through contractual agreements such as now exist between public and delegate agencies that sponsor Head Start and CDA Family Day Care Programs.

Special Considerations

Most important and immediate is the matter of adequate funds. For, without money, it is clear that the goals set forth for the Department cannot be accomplished. Regardless of the action that may be taken on the State or Federal level, there are specific steps the City can take at this time to insure, if not expand, the present level of services.

Therefore, the Task Force recommends that:

- a. The City of New York continue the current dollar allocation for early childhood services within the City's 1970-71 Executive Budget. This must be done whether or not the Federal Government increases its level of reimbursement for early childhood services. The Mayor, Board of Estimate and the City Council should insure that City money that may become available is not reallocated for other purposes.
- b. Any City tax-levy funds should be immediately available to cover the anticipated deficits in CDA Head Start and Family Day Care-Career Programs.
- c. The City and State should use additional funds that may accrue to provide early childhood services for those children who may not be eligible for care through federally-reimbursable programs.

". . . It has taken us more than half way through the 20th century to concern ourselves with early childhood education and to realize how important the beginning years are.

. . . My great-grandfather was a builder. I remember him telling me he always put the best material into the foundation because that was the thing everything else was going to stand on. So I think early childhood education is the most important part of education."

Chapter III

A LOOK AT THE PROGRAMS

Enrollment vs. Need

As was stated in the introduction, less than seven percent of the children under six years of age living in New York City are served by early childhood programs, not including the kindergarten programs of the Board of Education. The City Planning Commission estimates, based upon its analysis of vital statistics with live birth data projected from 1965 to date, that there are about 825,000 children under six years of age living in New York City. Of that number, about 57,000 are served in programs shown in the following chart:

PROGRAMS	NO. OF CHILDREN SERVED <sup>1</sup>
Privately-funded	25,000 <sup>2</sup>
Board of Education Pre-Kindergarten	8,000

Board of Education More Effective Schools	2,500
Board of Education Early Childhood Centers	285
D .S Group Day Care	8,000
DOSS Family Day Care	1,500
CDA Family Day Care-Careers	3,000
Head Start	5,800
Parks Department Pre-School	3,000

As shown on the chart, publicly-funded programs account for about 32,000 children; privately-funded ones, about 25,000.

There is no way to estimate the exact number of children served in unlicensed arrangements, either in individual homes or in centers set up by community groups. We do know that this number is large and that it continues to grow.

The whole question of the universe of need is, of course, one that must be examined. How many people want or need programs? What kind? Where?

From time to time, agencies such as the Bureau of the Budget, the City Planning Commission, the Department of Social Services, Model Cities, try to evaluate the situation. But how can they do systematic planning without an up-to-date count on how many children there are, where they live, how old they are, the income level of the family, the need for care, what kind of care, and other accurate demographic data? Obviously, it is impossible. It can only be hoped that the 1970 census data will supply some of the missing information.

Who Gets What Service There Is

Available studies indicate that the closer a child is to school age, the more likely he is to be served.<sup>3</sup> The Board of Education and Head Start programs are almost exclusively for four-year olds, reflecting these programs' emphasis on school readiness. The under-three group gets the least service. The lack of service for this age group is attributable, in part, to the fact that, until 1968, Health Code guidelines specifically prohibited group day care for children under three. Because of the pressing need for this kind of care, the Health Code was amended and the Department of Social Services now funds two centers for infants, with eighteen more in the planning stage. A good, if belated beginning, but one that doesn't even begin to meet the needs of this age group.

Another group, almost completely overlooked and brought to the attention of the Task Force through its consultation with parents and community groups, are those children of school age whose home situation makes after-school services a vital necessity.

It is a matter of particular concern to the Task Force to insure that publicly-funded programs for pre-school children provide service for the mentally or physically handicapped. This is an area which the Task Force feels has not received the attention it should.

How Children Get Into Programs

Another area of confusion was found in the eligibility requirements for the different programs. Because there are so few places in early childhood programs and so many children who want them, this becomes a crucial factor. Eligibility requirements are based mainly on guidelines mandated by the different funding sources (See Appendix A). None of these consider the specific needs of children for early childhood services, but rather serve to select children on the basis of the social and economic needs of their families.

In addition, the operating or administering agency often adds its own restricting guidelines. For instance, the Board of Education gives priority to welfare recipients and to children whose siblings receive free lunches.

Only the Parks Department Pre-School Program accepts children on a first-come, first-served basis. All other programs are almost exclusively for poverty and near-poverty families, though the definition of what constitutes poverty or near-poverty varies from one program to another. The notable exception to this poverty orientation is the new Early Childhood Centers program of the Board of Education, financed by City tax levy funds. It enrolls children of women returning to teach in poverty area schools up to fifty per cent of total enrollment.<sup>4</sup>

The Department of Social Services will accept children from higher income families in both group and family day care when there is an urgent social need for services, demonstrated to the satisfaction of the admitting caseworker. Fees are charged according to a sliding scale based on ability to pay. Of all public programs, only those funded by DOSS charge fees.

The CDA Family Day Care-Career Program is tied into a work/training component. In order to be eligible, all user mothers must be on public assistance or of low income and be enrolled in a skills training program or a full-day remedial education course or be employed.

Residence in the neighborhood served by the center is a requirement of all programs, but, generally, this is loosely defined. The exception is the Board of Education programs where the child must live in the school district.

Guidelines for Head Start, also adopted by the Board of Education, mandate that every recruitment effort be made so that the center's ethnic composition reflects the neighborhood's. Guidelines for other programs make no mention of selection on the basis of ethnicity.

Board of Education recruitment is handled by family service staff under guidelines established by the school principal. For Head Start, the decision to admit is made by the family service staff, under the supervision of a social worker. In the DOSS Group Day Care Program and the DOSS-operated Family Day Care Program, the admitting decisions are made by a DOSS Bureau of Child Welfare caseworker at the local center.

Obviously, some across-the-board coherence for eligibility requirements is needed--badly. Taking into consideration the fact that New York State Department of Social Services guidelines establishing eligibility for free group day care services under the 1967 Social Security Amendments, will be based upon an income level of $7,500 a year for a family of four,

The Task Force recommends that this poverty line income level shall be used to determine eligibility for free early childhood services in all programs.

In order to eliminate the individual means test, eligibility for service should be based on residence in a target area*. Inasmuch as such a procedure is now precluded by legislation that governs some programs, as an immediate measure, determination of financial and social need and ability to pay shall be by declaration.

No mother receiving public assistance (or otherwise defined as being low income or poverty level) shall be required to be employed or to seek employment as a pre-condition for receiving early childhood services. Where federal legislation mandates such a requirement, federal funds

*The term "target area" could be defined by the percentage of families in a given area having incomes below the poverty line, numbers of children under age six, and by other criteria that might be established by the Department in compliance with Federal and State funding mandates.

must be supplemented by City and State funds to pay the cost of care for those children whose mothers do not wish to work.

As a family's income increases, a fee based on a sliding scale or a dual flat fee system** shall be established, and shall be the same across programs.

The staff of individual centers shall be responsible for implementing the Federal, State and City guidelines with respect to eligibility.

Grievance procedures shall be available in the Department for those families who are denied admission arbitrarily.

What the Programs Include

Program content varies according to the goals and philosophy spelled out in program guidelines.

The Group Day Care Program has its roots in World War II when the national emergency made it imperative to provide care for children of working mothers. With the end of the war, the need to respond to this particular situation was over and the program was taken over by the Department of Social Services--known then as the **Two fees: one for those above a certain income level, e.g., $10,000 or above, and one for those below.

Department of Welfare. It has been administered by the Division of Day Care of the Bureau of Child Welfare as one answer to the social and psychological needs of low income families, as well as those of working mothers. There is an educational component in the program but the program rests on a welfare orientation.

DOSS Family Day Care, also under the Bureau of Child Welfare, is provided in home settings rather than in group centers. Supporters of this program believe that some young children do better when they do not have to compete with a large number of children as in the group center. The DOSS-operated and purchased family day care services flow out of this philosophy, which has its roots in foster care.

The CDA Family Day Care-Career Program evolved out of the Head Start Program and was established to provide training and work opportunities for mothers participating in the program either as users or providers of care. There are strong vocational training and educational components in the program to equip the provider mothers to give the children an enriched pre-school experience.

Title I programs, operated by the Board of Education, emphasize the educational component.

Head Start aims for total development of the child and his family--educational, social, psychological and physiological--with emphasis on school readiness and on family and community involvement.

The Parks Department Pre-School Program is primarily recreational but is also intended to broaden the cultural horizons of children by providing story-telling, painting, library activities, arts and crafts, etc.

Program Hours

The only programs that operate a sufficient number of hours each day to accommodate mothers who work during the day are the DOSS Group Day Care and the Family Day Care programs. They are open from eight in the morning to six at night. Even these hours do not completely fill the need for travel time and taking care of household chores.

The Department of Health reports that only about fifteen proprietary and voluntary agencies run full-day programs.

Most other programs operate on a half-day basis. The exceptions are twenty-four Head Start Centers and two More Effective Schools Centers, open from about 9 to 3; and fourteen Early Childhood Centers, which operate from 8 to 4 to accommodate teachers' children.

There are two main reasons for the preponderance of half-day programs. The first is programmatic; for example, the belief that young children ought not to be in a classroom for longer than three to three and a half hours. The second is practical. Space limitations, for example, may necessitate split sessions.

Evening or night programs for children whose mothers work these shifts, and drop-in service to give mothers time for shopping, clinic visits or other chores, are virtually non-existent.

All DOSS programs, Head Start and most proprietary and voluntary agencies, maintain a year-round schedule. The Board of Education and the Parks Department run their programs during the school year.

Head Start's summer program, which last year gave some additional 17,000 pre-schoolers an eight-week educational experience, was cut from the Federal budget for 1970.

Taking into consideration, then, the complete lack of some programs, the gaps in others and the need to expand early childhood services for the total development of the child and his family,

The Task Force recommends that all early childhood programs shall have a strong educational component with health and specialized social services available.

Early childhood services shall be made available, either in regular or special programs, to children with special needs. The Department of Early Childhood Services shall initiate liaison with public and voluntary agencies that work with mentally retarded and physically or emotionally handicapped children, not only to make sure they are not excluded from the Department's concern, but also to use the skills and know-how acquired by people who have worked in this field over the years for the benefit of all early childhood services.

Guidelines for new services such as Emergency, Drop-In, and Night Care, shall be developed and such programs shall be established based on the expressed needs of individual communities.

The Department shall also be responsible for developing after-school programs for school-age children.

The Department shall collaborate with the Department of Health to develop standards for health care of children enrolled in early childhood centers, including training the people who provide such services.

Educational Liaison

In addition to the recommendations relating to the Board of Education that appear in Chapter II, to make sure that every child who has benefited from an enriched educational experience in an early childhood program has an opportunity to build on that experience,

The Task force recommends that the Department shall develop procedures with the Board of Education, and with private and parochial institutions, so that those benefits are not dissipated by lack of appropriate follow-through.

The Department shall initiate Follow-Through Programs, similar to the Head Start model, to provide an upgraded kindergarten curriculum in all elementary schools.

The Department shall, also, provide information on and encourage the development of scholarships for economically disadvantaged children who may wish to attend private elementary schools.

And, finally, the Task Force recommends that the State Department of Education establish criteria and a certification process so that sponsoring agencies may receive accreditation as educational institutions.

What the Programs Cost

The City Budget for 1969-70 allowed a total of $42,100,000 for early childhood services as seen in the following chart. By comparing these total program costs with number of children served, some estimate can be made about per capita costs in a given program.

NAME OF PROGRAM	CHILDREN SERVED	AGENCY	AMOUNT OF BUDGET*
Group Day Care	8,000	DOSS	$16,500,000
Family Day Care	1,500	DOSS	2,000,000
Family Day Care-Careers	3,000	CDA	4,000,000
Head Start	5,800	CDA	11,100,000
Pre-Kindergarten	10,785	B of E	8,000,000
Pre-School Program	3,000	Parks Dept.	500,000
		TOTAL	$42,100,000

It is difficult to compare each program by unit cost because of differences in hours of operation, length of program year, staff-child ratio, and salary differentials.

The program analysis done by the Bureau of the

*These figures are based upon Bureau of Budget estimates.

Budget in 1968 suggested that monthly unit costs may provide the most accurate comparison. At that time the Bureau found DOSS group day care was the most expensive and the Pre-School Program of the Parks Department the least.*

Pending Federal Legislation: Discussion of Its Impact on New York City Early Childhood Services

There are several pieces of legislation pending in Congress that, if passed, will have major impact on the development of early childhood services in New York City.

One of the more important is the Family Assistance Program (FAP). This is the Administration bill that provides minimum income to families participating in the program. Child care will be provided for mothers to enable them to go to work. Child care is thus linked to jobs. The present form of the legislation recommends that child care service be 100 percent federally reimbursed.

This legislation has evoked major criticism because it appears to push mothers of school-age children into the job market as an alternative to public assistance. Many parents are strongly opposed to this kind of approach to social welfare.

*For further information on currently operating early childhood programs, refer to the Fact Sheets in Appendix A.

Other legislative bills, introduced by Brademas, Dellenback and Ford, provide comprehensive child development services that move beyond the job-link orientation of the FAP plan. Many believe that this legislation, if passed, will provide a real opportunity for mounting broad-based child development programs that can include education, health, nutrition, specialized social services, etc.

*"Head Start is a program that shows that community control is feasible
. . . It has given my child a sense of belonging, responsibility, concern for classmates, and a sense of wanting to learn. She has brought joy to the family . . ."*

Chapter IVPARENT AND COMMUNITY INVOLVEMENT

The demands of parents and community groups to control the development and administration of early childhood services within their own neighborhoods evolved out of frustrations with large bureaucracies and an increasing distrust of government and its ability to respond to their needs.

The antipoverty legislation of 1964 gave additional impetus to the movement toward community control by calling for local involvement in the planning and delivery of services. This legislation provided the thrust for organizing the disenfranchised and established the Head Start Program, which served as a model for parent involvement in early childhood services.

It is no accident, therefore, that recent pressures to change the antiquated process of providing day care services, as well as the demand for community control, arose from parents and groups who were part of the City's poverty program.

These parent and community groups have led the struggle for local control of early childhood services. Their approach has moved far beyond the reforms sought by professional and civic organizations over the years.

The Task Force has been impressed by the parent involvement in the Head Start and Family Day Care programs and the degree to which such involvement has been maintained on a citywide level.

The Task Force wholeheartedly endorses the philosophy that mandates parent and community involvement in every aspect of early childhood services.

The Task Force recommends* the establishment of an Early Childhood Commission as a policy-making body for the Department of Early Childhood Services with the majority of its members being parents of children enrolled in programs funded by the Department.

One-third parent representatives on the boards of existing sponsor agencies. For those agencies that sponsor other services in addition, a special committee for the early childhood program to be set up with a majority of parents.

A majority of parent representatives on the boards of future sponsor agencies.

*These recommendations are repeated and enlarged upon in the body of this Section but, because we feel they are particularly significant, we are listing them here.

Parent-controlled policy advisory committees for every publicly-funded early childhood center.

The Early Childhood Commission

The Commission shall establish the policies of the Department of Early Childhood Services but shall not be responsible for its day-to-day operations. The Commissioner of the Department shall serve as chairman of the Commission.

He shall vote, however, only in cases of a tie. The Commission shall meet at least once a month. A majority of its members shall constitute a quorum for transaction of all business, including the convening of additional meetings if necessary. Members shall be paid on a per diem basis.

The Commission shall employ a secretary to take care of administrative matters such as preparation of agendas, acting as liaison to the Department, etc.

Membership

The Commission shall consist of no more than twenty-one members; the majority to be parents of children enrolled in programs funded by the Department at the commencement of their term of office.

Parents receiving early childhood services from agencies not funded by the Department shall also be represented on the Commission.

Commission members shall serve a two-year term and parent representatives shall serve no more than two consecutive terms. At its establishment, one-half of the Commission shall be appointed for one year terms so that no more than one-half of the membership will be retired within a year.

The Mayor shall appoint all members of the Commission. He shall appoint two members from a list of five submitted by each of the following organizations:

City-Wide Head Start Committee

City-Wide Policy Advisory Board of Family Day Care

Council Against Poverty (Poverty Area Representatives)

Day Care Council of New York

Community controlled day care groups

Confederation of Local School Boards

The Task Force recognizes that most community controlled day care groups are not represented by a single organization. They must, however, have meaningful representation on the Commission. To this end, the existing groups should agree to meet for the purpose of selecting nominees to be presented to the Mayor. The Human Resources Administrator shall be responsible for convening this meeting.

The Mayor shall insure that at least two members from each borough have seats on the Commission except Staten Island, which shall have at least one.

The Mayor shall appoint in addition six members from citywide agencies, including one representative of agencies concerned about children with physical or mental handicaps.

Functions

Approving the Department's annual requests for capital funds and operating expenses before these budgets are presented by the HRA Administrator for review by the City Planning Commission, the Mayor, the Board of Estimate, and the City Council.

Establishing policy for the approval of individual requests for grants.

Serving as an appellate body for parent grievances and for sponsoring agencies seeking or receiving funds from the Department.

Serving in an advocate capacity to the Department and safeguarding the interests of children and their parents.

Developing overall guidelines--within statutory limitations--for early childhood programs funded by the Department, including standards for personnel policies and qualifications.

Acting on other policy matters as may be deemed necessary.

Having the ability and financial resources to engage consultants from a variety of fields including health, psychiatry, psychology and social services and, particularly, those from educational institutions involved in the training of early childhood educators.

The Commission shall also consult with representatives of Model Cities, the Professional Association of Day Care Directors, and various unions that represent central and center staff.

Board Membership

The Task Force believes that, as a goal, parent involvement should exist at all levels of early childhood services--classroom, center and City agencies. Federal Inter-agency Requirements already mandate parent participation for all federally reimbursable programs. These, however, should only serve as minimum guidelines. For programs such as Head Start, which has already achieved a great measure of parent involvement, such involvement should be supported and maintained. Head Start has pioneered in the field of parent-community responsibility and some of its policies should be used as a model for the development of early childhood programs.

Board Membership - Current Programs

Recognizing the existing variety of agency sponsorships, with varying degrees of parent and community involvement, the Task Force recommends that each agency strive for full parent involvement at the earliest possible time on the policy-making board level, as well as in an advisory capacity.

In order to insure that such parent involvement takes place in the immediate future, the Task Force recommends that for agencies whose sole responsibility is the operation of early childhood programs, there be one-third parent representation on the board level.

That, for agencies who operate early childhood programs as well as other services, a special committee be set up with responsibility for the early childhood program. The membership of this committee should be composed of a majority of parents with children currently enrolled in the program.

Board Membership - New Agencies

In considering the extent to which parents should be represented on the board of agencies that will sponsor early childhood services in the future, Task Force members were unable to come to a unanimous decision. This reflected, perhaps, the ideological conflicts that exist regarding parent vs. community involvement as compared with parent and community involvement. The majority opinion held that, for new agencies, parent representatives should constitute a majority of the board. However, a minority, almost one-half of the Task Force, believed that the boards of sponsoring agencies should consist of a broad spectrum, one-third parent, one-third community, one-third professional and civic interests. This issue will need top priority attention from the Early Childhood Commission.

Policy Advisory Committee

Besides representation on board level, the Task Force recommends that all agencies receiving public funds for early childhood services have a policy advisory committee and that this committee be elected by the parents or persons who have children currently enrolled in the program.

This committee shall have authority to invite non-voting participants from the community and from professional ranks and shall be the mechanism through which parent representatives are selected for board membership.

The policy advisory committee shall participate in planning the center's program, including preparation of proposals. It shall make recommendations on staff hiring, set up grievance procedures, and perform activities as outlined in the Federal Inter-Agency Requirements. It shall have its own funds for parent activities.

". . . Most of us feel very strongly about the contribution that paraprofessionals have made in the life of the children. And I think there is no disagreement about the warmth and understanding the children must have. But I also feel that the children are entitled to the skills that come from education. And that the way for the paraprofessionals to get that education must be opened and made more flexible and fluid."

Chapter VSTAFFING QUALIFICATIONS

The New York City Health Code,<sup>1</sup> which has the legal responsibility for setting staffing standards through the New York State Social Service Law, provides a number of options for becoming a qualified group teacher:

- a. Licensing by the New York City Board of Education as an Early Childhood teacher and completion of at least 150 hours of practice teaching in Kindergarten or pre-kindergarten; or
- b. Certification by the State Education Department as an Early Childhood teacher under regulations in effect prior to September, 1966; or
- c. Eligibility for certification by the State Education Department for teaching in Early Childhood grades, plus upper elementary grades, except for the citizenship requirement, upon completion of 300 hours of practice teaching, 150 of which are in pre-Kindergarten. Also completion of 30 semester hours of education; or

- d. Certification by another public or private certifying agency whose standards are equivalent to those specified in paragraph (c); or
- e. Having a plan for meeting the requirements in (a), (b) or (c) approved by a college accredited by the University of the State of New York.

In order to obtain either State Certification or City licensing, a person must have a college degree with a specialty in Early Childhood Education.

The New York City Health Code exceeds all Federal, State and local guidelines except those of the Board of Education, which require a teacher to be licensed in Early Childhood by the New York City Board of Education. The latter entails fulfilling essentially the same course credit and practice teaching requirements as State Certification, plus passing both written and oral examinations prepared by the Board of Education's Board of Examiners.

The State Department of Social Services requires that "heads of groups" (the equivalent of group teacher) be "qualified by appropriate degree or certificate, with good physical and mental health, of good character and shall possess suitable personal qualifications for working with children."

The OEO guidelines for Head Start state that, ideally, a teacher should have a college degree in Early Childhood education, with studies in related fields, and teaching or other relevant experience. They go on to state:

OEO does not require completion of degrees or certificates as a condition of professional employment. Degrees are one indicator of competence. But degree or not, the record of performance is an even more accurate guide. In some communities, state or local law requires certification. Such law must be complied with. However, grantees should carefully examine the requirement to determine whether it in fact applies to pre-school programs. . . . This does not mean, however, that only certified or formally-trained persons should be considered. Since a male authority figure is missing in many poverty households, a man with limited training may be more desirable than a woman having all the requisite education. Similarly, a non-certified bilingual teacher is obviously preferable to a certified teacher who cannot communicate with the children enrolled in the center.<sup>2</sup>

In reviewing the City, State and Federal requirements, it is obvious that the City Health Code has the most stringent standards. This has been due to the firmly entrenched conviction on the part of most professional early childhood educators that the education of young children should only be entrusted to academically-trained people.

Parent, professional, and community groups now criticize these educational requirements because they lock out many competent people who lack credentials. Many of these groups also question the relevance of training to the job to be performed. The New York City Department of Health, recognizing this, has been quite lenient in its interpretation of option "e", thus enabling many people who would not otherwise be able to do so to advance to group teacher.

Staffing Patterns for Classrooms

In the group programs, there are generally fifteen children to a class, except for DOSS programs which place four- and five-year olds in groups of twenty.

The Health Code requires<sup>3</sup> at least one teacher

<sup>3</sup>Except for the Parks Department program which, by its nature, does not come under Health Code requirements.

and one assistant teacher in each classroom. In addition, the Department of Social Services uses a third person--either another assistant teacher or a teacher aide--in each classroom. The Board of Education uses the basic staffing pattern--one teacher plus one teacher aide or educational assistant--in the regular pre-kindergarten classes. The More Effective Schools use three teachers for every two classes and one teacher aide in every class. The Board of Education Early Childhood Centers have four staff members for each class: two teachers and two teacher aides or educational assistants.<sup>4</sup> Head Start uses one or more head teachers in large centers.

Other Staffing Patterns

The Health Code requires a director for every center who, in addition to being a qualified teacher in Early Childhood, must have a minimum of two years' experience in pre-school programs. Additional staff employed in the center varies according to the nature of the program.

Head Start staffing patterns, for example, call

<sup>4</sup>One teacher and one teacher aide work from about 8-2; the others from 10-4, so that there are actually four people in the classroom for only a portion of each day.

for an administrative director, an education director, a social worker, and a part-time psychologist. The Department of Social Services employs an assistant director for its large centers and, in some centers, uses an administrative associate.

Family workers and family assistants are used in CDA Family Day Care-Careers, Board of Education and Head Start programs. The staff and parents from these programs gave eloquent testimony to the value of the family service staff, and many people associated with the DOSS programs expressed a desire for this kind of staff.

There are no specific educational requirements for family day care provider mothers. Each one cares for a maximum of six children, including her own.

Standards for provider mothers are set by the State Department of Social Services.<sup>5</sup> These standards apply to all provider homes that are reimbursed by the State. For other provider homes, including those operated on a proprietary basis, the Health Code requires certification only for those mothers who care for children under two years of age; otherwise certification is voluntary.

In-Service Training

During the course of its many meetings with program representatives, the Task Force heard staff of all kinds--professional, paraprofessional, administrative, clerical, volunteer parents, etc.--express the need for more in-service training. They urged that this training be part of a career ladder program, and carry academic credit to insure mobility both within and outside the program. There was general agreement, too, that there be released time and financial reward for this training.

Two training programs for DOSS group day care staff, developed with the Day Care Council, are now underway. One, developed with New York City Community College, provides for bookkeepers to move up to administrative associates. The credits earned under this program, for which students are granted released time by DOSS, are applicable toward the A.A. degree. The other, developed with Lehman College, allows assistant teachers with partial college training to become certified group teachers with baccalaureate degrees. These students are given released time two afternoons a week, and will earn twelve credits during the first year.

Salaries

Salaries for group teachers in DOSS and Head Start programs have improved considerably in the last few years but there is still some discrepancy between salaries in these programs and those of the Board of Education. They are as follows:

Head Start	$7,500 - $10,584
DOSS	$7,950 - $11,000
Board of Education	$7,950 - $14,500

It must also be noted that the Board of Education staff have a ten-week summer vacation, which enables them to seek summer employment; and that DOSS staff works more hours per day: from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. or longer.

Head Start has had particular problems in recruiting social workers. The entry-level salary for a Master's in Social Work or equivalent, is $8,500, much less than social workers earn in other institutions. The Board of Education starting salary for social workers is $10,000.

Local 1707 of the Community and Social Agency Employees Union is the bargaining agent for staff employed in DOSS Group Day Care centers; the United Federation of Teachers is the bargaining agent for all Board of Education staff.

Paraprofessional salaries in all programs are too low. Teacher aides in the DOSS and Head Start programs, for example, start at $5,200 a year.

Family Day Care provider mothers do not receive salaries but are paid stipends of $75 a month a child, plus $15 a month a child for food.

The whole question of stipends is one that should be looked into. The women who receive them are doing a full child care job and, yet, are not even accorded the dignity of receiving a regular salary. Not only is this method of payment demeaning, but it presents very real financial problems. Provider mothers are not able to plan their budgets because their income stops and starts depending on the number of children in their homes; they get no vacations; and there is no real career ladder that permits them to increase their income as their skills increase.

The Task Force believes strongly that education and advancement opportunities must be available to all staff. At the same time, it endorses the value of quality education.

Therefore, the Task Force recommends that new methods be established to include performance as a criteria for teacher qualification and that this be achieved by emphasizing work experience in preparation for teaching positions.

The Task Force further recommends more flexible routes by which those working in early childhood centers may advance to the position of group teacher.

These flexible routes shall include educational programs, as well as in-service training in child care and development, and infant care.

Arrangements shall be made for the care of the children, including "released time" provisions while the center worker is in training.

The use of "floating" teachers as part of the staffing pattern is suggested as a way to expedite staff training.

The Task Force recommends that staffing qualifications, as prescribed by the Health Code, be amended so that persons without formal academic credentials can be employed within competitive salary ranges. Further, Code revisions shall provide opportunity for these persons to advance to positions such as group teacher through a variety of academic and in-service training experiences.

The City shall begin an immediate study of the Health Code to make revisions on staffing qualifications beyond those specified above.

The Task Force recommends that the Department of Early Childhood Services establish a special committee to devise alternate ways for non-college as well as partially-college-trained staff to complete a college education within the City University system.

In addition to cooperating with colleges in developing new educational programs, this committee will work toward the creation of new staffing patterns for early childhood centers.

A leading educator suggested that flexibility in staffing day care centers should include the possibility of hiring as group teachers people who have had prior experience as assistant teacher, plus some special workshops. Each cluster of three group teachers and their assistant teachers should be placed with a thoroughly experienced Early Childhood curriculum specialist or supervisor who would work closely on a daily in-service basis, on program planning and development and interaction and growth of children. These group teachers would be expected to attend college part-time while on the job, with the ultimate goal of obtaining a bachelor's degree with a specialty in Early Childhood education.

If the Family Assistance Plan legislation is passed by Congress, it will require that mothers of school age children be in a training program, seeking employment, or employed, in order to be eligible for family assistance. FAP will provide funds for such training.

The Task Force recommends that some of these training slots be used to train mothers receiving Family Assistance to become child care workers, thus making maximum use of the child care provisions of the Act and providing employment opportunities.

The Early Childhood center, as viewed by the Task Force, is a total teaching-learning situation. To this end, all persons in the center, including participating parents, should meet at least once a week for in-service training.

Each early childhood center shall provide the children with a program of educational enrichment, as well as a complete range of physical and mental health services and social services. These services to be available on the premises through employment of part-time professional staff or, through referral. Funds should be provided for these services through Federal or State reimbursement to Group Day Care Centers presently funded through DOSS. If this is not possible, the City should make funds available.

A family worker shall also be employed by each early childhood center to perform such duties as recruitment, referral, community services, and coordination of parent activities.

" . . . I see building after building going up without space for day care centers. And parents keep running around looking for make-do space in storefronts, and in church basements and in abandoned buildings. It costs more money to run around trying to find space and fix it up, than if day care centers were included in new housing. The little children are the only ones who are always in makeshift quarters . . . that's a disgrace in a city like this. I think we should take a stand that no building should go up--certainly no dwelling unit--and absolutely no dwelling unit that is getting public funds--without day care facilities being included."

Chapter VIEXPANSION OF FACILITIES

Nowhere is there more need for revision or change than in existing procedures for creating new facilities for early childhood programs. The experiences of community groups in attempting to work their way through the Kafkaesque maze of red tape to get an early childhood center licensed and approved almost defies description. But one thing is clear-- Government has shown a remarkable inability to respond to change.

The Task Force agrees that children cannot live and cannot be served in hazardous conditions and we in no way support any procedures that state otherwise. However, we do believe that the City should develop policies to expedite the development of safe facilities and, at the same time, allow for urgently-needed, rapid expansion of services.

Moreover, the high cost of land, the scarcity of building space, as well as the dilapidated conditions of existing housing, are creating pressures upon City government to re-examine the procedures and the standards by which facilities are currently approved.

Permanent Facilities

The Task Force recommends that the Department of Early Childhood Services be concerned with the long range development of facilities including capital construction; further, that the City adopt a policy whereby space for early childhood centers is included in the construction of multi-dwelling units, public and privately-built office buildings, where feasible.

In order to insure community participation, the Task Force recommends that parent and community representatives be involved in the initial planning stages for early childhood centers including those which may be publicly or commercially-operated.

Temporary Facilities

The Task Force has recommended in Chapter II that funds be available to community groups for the operation of programs in temporary facilities including funds for minor renovations. A definite time limit should be set for the operation of such temporary facilities.

The Task Force strongly recommends that until such time as the Department of Early Childhood Services is established, the Departments of Health, Social Services, Buildings, and Fire develop procedures whereby the recommendation regarding the availability of funds for temporary facilities is implemented immediately, including revisions of appropriate code sections, if necessary. The Special Office of Day Care, DOSS, shall be given additional staff to expedite this recommendation.

The Task Force also recommends that the Department study the cost and practicability of purchasing or leasing portable, prefabricated, light steel structures for use as temporary facilities. If the results of the study are favorable, the Department will press for a review of the Building Code to put this plan into operation.

FINANCING OF FACILITIES

New Provisions

The Task Force recommends that the new Department establish a division of finance with responsibility for generating new financing plans for the construction of facilities and to assist community groups in securing such financing.

The division's responsibility shall also include working with private lending institutions to devise new and more flexible financing methods. It shall also work with seed money loan corporations in an effort to obtain private grants.

Community groups need help to finance the construction of new facilities. Data obtained from the Department of Social Services indicate that, as of May 31, 1970, 41 sites have been approved by the Board of Estimate and are awaiting construction or renovation. But nothing has happened, mainly because either the landlords or the community group is having difficulty in obtaining a loan to finance the construction. Because of the current tight money market, many groups have found that private institutions are reluctant to extend loans to communities and organizations that have little or no collateral. This situation presents a special hardship to churches, especially those in low income areas, which are excluded from using the State Youth Facilities Mortgage Program.

The Task Force recognizes that seed money from the private sector will, most likely, be insufficient to help community groups develop new facilities. The Department of Social Services estimates that at least $500,000 in seed money is needed for this purpose, just to take care of present needs.

The Task Force recommends that the City immediately establish a Seed Money Fund so that community groups planning permanent facilities can have funds for architectural and legal services, organizational staff and program planning.

The Task Force is aware of the fact that such an approach is being considered by Model Cities and the Human Resources Administration and supports expansion of this approach.

Revisions in Existing Financing Methods

1. City Direct Lease Program

In 1968, DOSS instituted its Direct Lease Program under which landlords are encouraged to renovate and adjust their buildings for day care use by sponsoring agencies. Necessary bank loans or mortgages are secured by 15- or 20-year leases with the City, at the end of which time the renovated space belongs to them, free and clear. The Direct Lease Program has many advantages for landlords. Among others, it permits them to arrange for renovation or construction outside of public bidding.

Major criticism has been raised by community groups about the lack of community participation in planning of these landlord-initiated sites. According to DOSS, of 242 sites in the process of approval, 67 have no community group attached to them. Because DOSS policy now calls for non-public sponsorship of services, it will be necessary to identify and attach a sponsoring agency to these facilities before they open.

In order to make the Direct Lease Program more responsive to the community needs, the Task Force recommends that:

No lease be signed with a landlord unless a community group is attached or has been involved with the planning of the facility.

Landlords be prohibited from obtaining a Direct Lease after a potential sponsor has obtained a private commitment to purchase the landlord's property through a Youth Facilities Mortgage.

Contractual agreements under the present lease program be reviewed immediately by the Corporation Counsel and Department of Real Estate, specifically in the areas of fire insurance, maintenance, and landlord-tenant-city relationships. These obligations must be clarified to expedite loans to sponsoring agencies from private lending institutions. The Department of Early Childhood Services will collaborate with the Corporation Counsel and the Department of Real Estate in developing a lease agreement that serves this purpose.

The Task Force further recommends that these revised agreements provide for continued use of early childhood facilities after the initial fifteen or twenty year lease; further, that lease renewals provide options for purchase.

2. State Youth Facilities Mortgage Program

The New York State legislature passed the Youth Facilities Improvement Act in 1969 to help non-profit community organizations obtain a mortgage to purchase land, or a building capable of being renovated for day care use. In 1970, this fund was increased to $100,000,000 and legislation was passed to provide $2,000,000 for seed money grants. Since the inception of this program in September, 1969, only two mortgage applications have been approved for all of New York State. The Task Force believes that the procedures for using this fund are extraordinarily cumbersome. As a matter of fact, most community groups do not have enough money to develop the necessary data to even apply for a State mortgage loan. The Department of Social Services reports that, of 59 sites being considered for Youth Facilities Mortgages, fifty are still awaiting DOSS approval because the community groups have not been able to present the preliminary plans needed by the Department before it can issue a Letter of Intent and refer the group to the State Department of Social Services. When and if such Letter of Intent is issued, the State must review the referral and perform a lengthy feasibility study before it decides to issue a "formal invitation" to the community group to apply for a mortgage loan.

The Task Force recommends several ways to open up this funding source:

The State Department of Social Services, through administrative agreement, should permit the Department of Early Childhood Services to perform the feasibility study, including a title search, which meets the expressed needs of the State program.

In order to coordinate approvals for the Youth Facilities Mortgage within one office, the State Department of Social Services should agree to assign staff, including an appraiser or mortgage administrator, to the Department of Early Childhood Services.

3. Other Ways to Obtain Sites

Condemnation Procedures

In view of the fact that a substantial number of community organizations are unable to negotiate leases or purchase property approved by the State and City for day care because the price is higher than that considered reasonable under the State Youth Facilities Mortgage Program, the City should, as a matter of course, use its condemnation powers so that the fair price can be determined by the courts. It is City policy to condemn property for public improvements such as schools. Early childhood centers are equally important.

The Task Force recommends that legal approvals, such as the City Planning Commission's and the Board of Estimate's be obtained in order to use this procedure.

Purchase of City-Owned Property

The Task Force recommends that the Mayor direct the Commissioner of Real Estate to make certain city-owned property available to early childhood sponsors for the Youth Facilities Mortgages. Further, that these properties be made available at costs comparable to those accorded to the Board of Education or the Housing Authority.

Licensing and Permits

There are numerous steps to facility approval and almost as many governmental agencies to deal with.* The figures tell the story. Since 1968, when the Department of Social Services decided to expand day care services quickly by using the Direct Lease Program, only six centers have been opened by this route. As of May 31, 1970, there were a total of 360 day care sites in the process of development-- 242 through the City Direct Lease plan, 59 through the Indirect Lease plan** and 59 pursuing Youth Facilities Mortgages. Of these 360 sites, only 36 are in the renovation or construction stage.

Of the 242 sites in the hopper under the City Direct Lease Program, preliminary drawings have not yet been completed for 165 sites. These drawings must be submitted before DOSS, the Department of Real Estate and other appropriate City agencies give their approval. Included in these 165 sites are 50 which are still awaiting review by the borough offices of the City Planning Commission. Several sites have been delayed in these offices for from three to four months.

In the Department of Social Services, alone, a proposed site must be approved by four different units--the Special Office of Day Care, the Division of Day Care, Plant Management, and Management Planning--before being referred to the Borough President's Office, the City Planning Commission--and its borough offices - and then on to the Department of Real Estate, the Bureau of the Budget, the Board of Estimate, the Corporation Counsel, and the Departments of Health, Fire, and Buildings.

*See Appendix C.

**DOSS signs a contract with sponsor group to pay for operating cost and amortizes renovation costs with the rent, if necessary. In these instances, the sponsor organization owns the building.

One of the major bottlenecks in the approval process is to get community agreement on a site. For example, the City Planning Commission Central Office reviews sites to find out if other public improvements are planned for the area. At the same time, the Commission's borough office investigates "community reaction" toward the proposed site. It then notifies the local Community Planning Board which has responsibility for advising the Borough President's Office on matters which affect the area. Some Community Planning Boards also investigate community feelings about the proposed site and they may use a different constituency than that used by DOSS. After review, the Community Planning Board registers its approval or disapproval of both the site and the sponsoring agency. It then makes decisions known to both the Borough President's Office and the borough office of the City Planning Commission.

There have been several instances where the CPC borough office vetoed a site after initial approval by DOSS because it felt that community interest had not been considered. In another instance, a CPC borough office recommended a bowling alley rather than a day care center for a particular site.

The Task Force has recommended previously that the licensing function of the Department of Health be transferred to the Department of Early Childhood Services.

The Task Force further recommends that the Department coordinate the approval process. To implement this recommendation, staff empowered to make decisions shall be assigned to the Department of Early Childhood Services from the Departments of Buildings, Fire and Real Estate by administrative agreement.

The Department shall also make an immediate study of the present Health Code and develop recommendations for changes beyond the specific ones recommended elsewhere in this document.

Inasmuch as all proposed facilities must be reviewed by various community planning bodies, depending upon funding source, the Task Force recommends that necessary approvals be a part of the Department's initial site evaluation.

The Task Force also recommends that staff from the Corporation Counsel be assigned to the Department to perform the title search so that once a decision has been made by the Board of Estimate there will be no further delays in moving into the renovation and construction phase.

Inevitably, there will be a number of city agencies involved in the approval process for facilities; therefore, the Task Force strongly recommends that the Department of Early Childhood Service provide technical assistance, on a decentralized basis, to expedite the approval process both within the Department and among the other City agencies.

Parent and Community Participation

There is a Parent Advisory Committee at the classroom, center, and delegate agency levels. Although the guidelines only mandate 50 percent parent representation, in actual practice the composition of these committees is usually 100 percent parents. Each committee elects representatives to serve at the next highest level.

The City-Wide Head Start Committee consists of one parent representative from each of the twenty-six poverty areas, who in turn choose nine representatives from private and public agencies from a list supplied by the Council Against Poverty. In addition, there are six to eight non-voting delegate agency staff members on the City-Wide Committee.

All of these committees make policy decisions, help develop and approve budgets, and participate in hiring decisions.

Parents serve as volunteers in the program. They also have a variety of educational, recreational and cultural activities which are financed by special parent activities funds.

The Council Against Poverty must approve all sponsoring agencies.

*Note: As of March, 1970, there were about 100 additional licensed but, for various reasons, not in use.

Funding Sources

50 percent State under Title IV of the Social Security Act, 50 percent City tax levy. In addition, Model Cities contributes some of the cost of the programs in the Model Cities areas.

Cost per Child

Approximately $1,300

Ages Served

2 months - 12 years

Eligibility Requirements

User mother must be receiving public assistance or low income (currently defined at $6,200 for a family of four). She must also be enrolled in a full day remedial education course or a skill training program, or be employed. On a citywide basis, at least 25 percent of the user mothers must be welfare recipients.

Intake

BCW caseworker, outstationed by DOSS, makes admissions decisions and certifies homes and provider mothers.

Fees

None

Children per Home

Each home is certified to serve up to a maximum of six children, including the children of the provider mother. The average number of user children per home, based on current enrollment, is 3.5.

Note: These salary figures do not represent a fixed range, but rather reflect current practice. The sponsoring agency fixes its own salaries.

Provider Mother

Stipend of $75 per month per child, plus $15 per month per child for food. This is calculated on a daily basis. Full time care is considered four hours or more per day. The provider mother is not reimbursed for her own children.

Inter-agency Linkages

Department of Social Services

Supplies an Applications Counselor to each Center to certify homes and provider mothers and make admissions decisions.

Manpower and Career Development Agency

Provides training and vocational counseling to career mothers.

Board of Education

Provides educational consultants to assist in training provider mothers.

Parent and Community Participation

Each sponsoring agency must be approved by the New York City Council Against Poverty. There is a City-Wide Policy Advisory Board consisting of 35 percent provider mothers, 35 percent user mothers and 30 percent representatives of professional, civic and social welfare organizations. There are also policy advisory committees at the center and sponsoring agency levels consisting of the same representation. These committees elect representatives to sit on the citywide committee.

There is a parent activities fund that provides for educational, recreational and cultural activities.
