ABSTRACT

This guide to U.S. Office of Education programs in foreign language, area studies, and world affairs describes opportunities for training during the 1972-73 school year. A section on graduate fellowships describes eligibility requirements, qualifications, financial provisions, conditions for study outside the United States, and application procedures. Information is also provided on: (1) undergraduate fellowships for summer study, (2) languages approved for graduate fellowships in modern foreign languages, by world areas (1972-73), (3) award quotas at American institutions for graduate fellowships in modern languages (1972-73), and (4) award quotas for summer intensive study of modern foreign languages at American institutions, by world areas (1972). INTRODUCTION

U.S. Office of Education programs in foreign language, area studies, and world affairs are an important part of the national effort to meet the critical needs of American education, Government, and business for experts in these fields and to promote throughout the United States better knowledge of other countries and cultures.

The National Defense Foreign Language Fellowship (NDFL) program, authorized by the National Defense Education Act, Title VI, provides opportunities for training in foreign languages and area studies in selected programs of U.S. institutions of higher education.

In 1959, the first year of the program, 171 graduate fellowships were awarded for the study of six non-Western languages in which the national need for specialists was considered most critical: Arabic, Chinese, Hindi-Urdu, Japanese, Portuguese, and Russian. In 1971-72, graduate fellowships were awarded for the study of over 90 modern foreign languages and related area subjects and fields. The total number of graduate fellowships awarded to date is approximately 15,300.

In order to provide college students in foreign language and area studies with increased opportunities to undertake basic language study before entering graduate school, the program was expanded in 1963 to include fellowships for undergraduate training in intensive summer language programs. Since that time, about 2,700 college students have received NDFL undergraduate fellowships to study 35 foreign languages in selected summer language programs.

The 1972-73 program will support approximately 1,200 graduate academic-year fellowships and 900 graduate and undergraduate awards for summer intensive language study. Fellowships will be concentrated in institutional programs which have demonstrated strength in those foreign languages, geographic areas, and academic fields in which there is a significant shortage of trained specialists.

ADMINISTRATION

The Institute of International Studies (IIS) in the U.S. Office of Education is responsible for the general administration of the NDFL program. Each year the Institute invites graduate institutions offering foreign language and area study programs to apply for fellowship allotments. With the assistance of a panel of specialists from the academic community, the Institute then allocates fellowships on a competitive basis to institutional programs which offer advanced degrees and which combine language and area study relating to a specific region of the world. Quotas of graduate and undergraduate fellowships for intensive summer language study are also allocated to college and university programs which have successfully competed for this category of NDEA Title VI assistance.

Institutions receiving quotas of awards are responsible for publicizing their respective programs, nominating candidates for awards, and administering grant funds allocated to them.¹ The Division of Foreign Studies of the Institute of International Studies reviews individual nominations and approves those which meet technical eligibility criteria.

GRADUATE FELLOWSHIPS

Graduate fellowships will be awarded for modern foreign language and area study during the 1972-73 academic year,² and for intensive language study during summer 1972³ in selected programs of several U.S. universities. Since the NDFL program is designed to train specialists in the less widely studied foreign languages and world areas which are important to the national interest, no awards are available under this program for the study of French, German, or Iberian Spanish. Awards involving Spanish are available only for Latin American studies.

Eligibility Requirements

To be eligible for an NDFL graduate fellowship, a candidate must:

1. Be a citizen of the United States or have such immigration status and personal plans as to indicate that he or she is in the United States for other than a temporary purpose and will make a continuing contribution to the manpower resources of this country.
2. Subscribe to the loyalty provisions of the National Defense Education Act.

² Institutions receiving academic-year quotas and languages to be offered are listed on pp. 17-25.

³ Institutions receiving summer intensive language awards and languages to be offered are listed on pp. 26-34.

3. Be preparing for employment in either of the following capacities:
 - a. A teacher at an institution of higher education in the United States of certain critical languages or of subjects in which proficiency in the language(s) is necessary or highly desirable.

(Note: A student preparing to teach in elementary or secondary schools or to teach English as a second or foreign language is not eligible under this program.)
 - b. An employee in a governmental or private (nonprofit and nonsectarian) professional or technical activity which contributes significantly to the conduct of U.S. cultural, economic, educational, political, or scientific relations with other peoples, and for which proficiency in the program-supported language is desirable.
4. Have earned a baccalaureate or comparable degree before the fellowship begins.
5. For an academic-year fellowship, be accepted for graduate-level training in a foreign language and related studies by a graduate school program with a quota of NDFL fellowships.

For a summer-session fellowship, be admitted to an institution which has received a quota of NDFL awards for summer intensive language study.

6. For an academic-year fellowship, present a study plan which indicates that:
- a. The student intends to pursue suitable training in an approved foreign language, ordinarily through established courses.

(Note: A doctoral candidate working on a dissertation or a student who has already mastered the language may, in place of formal language study, satisfy this provision through use of the language in research or course work.)

- b. The study program will be interdisciplinary or multidisciplinary, including fields such as anthropology, economics, geography, history, linguistics, literature, philosophy, political science, sociology, or other professional studies.

- c. If the student is applying for an award in either Russian or Latin American Spanish, he must fulfill the following specific requirements:

- (1) An applicant for a fellowship in Russian should have successfully completed at least 2 years of college instruction or otherwise achieved the equivalent proficiency in that language.

- (2) An applicant for a fellowship in Latin American Spanish should have a major in a discipline or in area studies related to Spanish-speaking Latin American countries and should have successfully completed at least 2 years of college instruction or otherwise achieved the equivalent proficiency in that language.

(Note: Students of these languages will be expected to enroll in language courses at the next appropriate instructional level.)

7. Agree to pursue full-time study in accordance with his university's requirements during the entire award period, except as follows:
A student may accept limited employment in teaching or research related to his field of study, provided that such employment is approved by his university and that it:
 - a. Is located at the student's university or at an accredited institution of higher education, local elementary or secondary schools, junior colleges, or nonprofit educational organizations within commuting distance of his university.
 - b. Requires no more than one-quarter of the student's time.
 - c. Does not prolong the time normally required to complete the program of study.
8. Receive no more than a cumulative total of 48 months of fellowship support (including the time period of the NDFL grant applied for) under the various programs of the Institute of International Studies. Such support may be entirely under the NDFL programs or may include up to 1 year of study abroad under a section 102(b)(6) Fulbright-Hays or Excess Foreign Currency award.

Preferred Qualifications

An eligible applicant will be given preference in consideration for an award if he:

1. Is working toward an advanced degree.
2. Has already acquired some competence in the language for which he seeks a fellowship.
3. Does not already possess native speaker proficiency in the language for which he seeks an award.

Additional Requirements for Federal Employees

To be considered for a fellowship under this program, a Federal Government employee who does not plan to resign his position must:

1. Be on annual leave or leave without pay during the fellowship period.

(During the fellowship period he may not receive any other Federal educational benefit or Federal compensation for services except annual leave pay or assistance under chapter 34 or 35 of Title 38 [Veterans' Benefits] of the United States Code.)

2. Obtain a letter from the head or other authorized representative of his agency certifying that the desired language is not available through his agency and submit the letter to an institution having an NDFL fellowship quota in the language he desires to study. The institution can then consider his application on the same basis as any other application under this program.

Financial Provisions

Graduate fellowships include the following:

1. Tuition: Cost of tuition and all required fees except application fees.
2. Basic Stipend:
 - a. The stipend rates for academic-year fellowships are determined by a student's level of study as follows:
 - * $2,000 (first post-baccalaureate year)
 - * $2,200 (years between the first and terminal year)
 - * $2,400 (terminal year)
 - b. The stipend rate for all summer fellowships is $450.
3. Dependents' Allowance:
 - a. For academic-year fellowships, an allowance of $500 for each dependent.
 - b. For summer fellowships, an allowance of $100 for each dependent.
4. Travel Allowance (Summer Fellowships Only):

If the fellow must travel more than 50 miles from his current residence in the United States to his place of summer study, he may receive an allowance for one-way travel. The allowance will be computed at the rate of 8¢ a mile. No allowance may be made for dependents' travel.

During the award period, a fellow may receive a loan (including a National Defense Student Loan), an additional non-Federal Government fellowship, or additional financial aid from his institution, a foundation, or any other non-Federal source. He may not, however, receive any other Federal educational benefits except assistance under chapter 34 or 35 of Title 38 [Veterans' Benefits] of the United States Code.

Conditions for Study Outside the United States

If approved in advance by the Institute of International Studies, NDFL graduate fellowships may be utilized outside the United States under either of the following conditions:

1. The student has completed all course work for the Ph.D. and, in order to complete dissertation research, must have access to materials not available in the United States. An outline of the proposed dissertation together with a verified justification of the need for research abroad and a tentative itinerary must be included with the application for an award.⁴
2. The student would engage in intensive foreign language study at the advanced level at an American institution's established overseas program which has been approved by the Institute of International Studies.

(Note: NDFL grants used abroad contain essentially the same provisions as those in the United States except that they do not include allowances for international transportation or local travel in the overseas area. Tuition charges must reflect costs of the overseas program.)

⁴ If a student is given approval to use his award abroad and his research or study will be conducted in a country where U.S.-owned excess foreign currency is available for educational purposes, all in-country allowances will be paid exclusively in local currencies. In 1972-73, this ruling is expected to apply in: Guinea, India, Morocco, Pakistan, Poland, Tunisia, and the United Arab Republic.

Application Procedures

An interested student should apply directly to an institution which has a quota of NDFL academic-year or summer fellowships -- not to the Office of Education. He should contact the institution for information concerning application forms, deadlines, and related matters. If the student would like to have more than one institution consider his application for a fellowship, he should apply separately to each institution. Any student seeking both a fellowship during the academic year and an award for study in an intensive summer language program must file a separate application for each.

Renewal of a fellowship depends upon a variety of factors including suitable evidence of the continued high quality of the fellow's work, the merit of his proposal for further study in the light of a continuing reassessment of national needs and priorities, and the availability of funds. For both student and institution the process is the same as that followed in seeking the fellowship originally. The basic responsibility for determining which individuals get renewals, as well as initial fellowships, rests with the institution, not the Office of Education.

UNDERGRADUATE FELLOWSHIPS FOR SUMMER STUDY

Undergraduate fellowships are available for study in selected intensive language programs during the summer of 1972.⁵

An undergraduate applying for an award in a summer intensive language program must:

1. Be a citizen of the United States or have such immigration status and personal plans as to indicate that he or she is in the United States for other than a temporary purpose and will make a continuing contribution to the manpower resources of this country.
2. Subscribe to the loyalty provisions of the National Defense Education Act.
3. Have completed, before the summer session begins, at least 1 year of full-time formal study for the bachelor's degree.
4. Have completed at least 1 year of college course work in a language or geographic area related to the language to be studied under the award, except that --
 - (a) For an award in Russian, the student should have completed 2 years of study or otherwise achieved the equivalent proficiency in that language.

⁵ Institutions receiving summer intensive language awards and languages to be offered are listed on pp. 26-34.

- (b) For an award in Arabic, Chinese, Japanese, or Portuguese, the student should have completed at least 1 year of college study or achieved the equivalent proficiency in that language.

A student who expects to obtain a bachelor's degree at the close of the 1972 summer session is ineligible for an undergraduate award unless he:

1. Is majoring in the language of the award or in related area studies and needs the summer language training to fulfill graduate requirements.

AND

2. Plans graduate study in the language or related area studies during the following academic term:

Financial Provisions

Undergraduate awards for summer study include the following:

1. Tuition: Cost of tuition and all required fees.
2. Basic Stipend: A maintenance allowance of $450. (No allowance will be paid for dependents.)
3. Travel Allowance: If the student must travel more than 50 miles from his current residence in the United States to his place of summer study, he may receive an allowance for one-way travel. The allowance will be computed at the rate of 8¢ a mile. No travel will be paid for dependents.

Application Procedures

A student must apply directly to an institution which has a quota of NDFL summer fellowships, not to the Office of Education. He should also contact the institution for information concerning application forms, deadlines, and related matters.
