ABSTRACT

This handbook describes in detail the method by which a student enrolled in Reading Efficiency and Communication Training (REACT), a course for college students who have not acquired basic reading and study skills, may earn a grade. The grade is determined by the total number of points earned by a student during the quarter. Students may earn points by developing a main idea notebook, formulating an original list of forty words based on the levels of abstraction, and making correct choices on a multiple-choice test. A course description, unit outline and objectives, suggested readings and study questions and an appendix of students' evaluations of REACT are also included. (SW)

FOREWORD

During the past ten years enrollment at Memphis State University has quadrupled accompanying the surge in enrollment are numerous curriculum related problems. One of these problems involves serving the needs of an expanded number of students whose reading skills fall below that which is necessary to successfully complete college level reading assignments. The Reading Efficiency And Communications Training (REACT) program is designed to provide educational opportunities for students who have not acquired basic reading and study skills. The course carries hour credit and provides a core of experiences designed to increase the communication skills that directly affect the academic performance and achievement of the undergraduate students at Memphis State University.

REACT - A CONTINGENCY MANAGEMENT HANDBOOK

This handbook describes the method by which a student enrolled in Reading Efficiency And Communications Training (REACT) may earn a grade. The grade is determined by the total number of points earned by a student during the quarter. Points may be earned in the following ways:

1. By developing any of the following: Main Idea Notebook and/or Propaganda Notebook,
2. By formulating an original list of forty words based on the Levels of Abstraction,
3. By participating in Laboratory practice periods, and
4. By making correct choices on a multiple-choice test which is given three times during the course. A student may take the examination one, two, or three times until he has attained the desired number of points. One point is earned for each correct response on the test. The highest score made on any of the three trials will be used to compute the total points earned.

The above information is explained in detail throughout the handbook. The quality of the work will determine the number of points awarded for each activity. A copy of this handbook and explanation guide for each project will be distributed on the first night of class.

Projects may be given to the instructor throughout the course until one week prior to the final examination. No points may be earned on projects completed after this deadline.

Point distribution for grades is as follows:

A - 180 or more points

B - 160 - 179 points

C - 140 - 159 points

D - 120 - 139 points

F - 119 or less

The quarter schedule for REACT is as follows:

Class Meetings	Topics
1	Introduction to Course Test - Trial I
2	Unit I - Study Habits to Develop
3	Unit II - Adjusting Method of Reading to Purpose
4	Unit III - Remembering What Is Read
5	Unit IV - Developing Skills in Using Information
6	Test - Trial II
7	Unit V - Capturing New Words
8	Unit VI - Specifics of Comprehension
9	Unit VII - Evaluating Content
10	Unit VIII - The Functional Dictionary
11	Test - Trial III

The following section is a course description of REACT. Included is a unit outline for each topic, unit objectives for each topic, suggested readings for further explanation and practice, and study questions for each unit.

A DESCRIPTION OF A CONTINGENCY MANAGEMENT HANDBOOK

The following report is a description of a contingency management handbook for REACT. This course is designed for use through the Memphis State University Reading Center.

1. Specify how students will participate in the formulation of a contingency contract system.

Students will not participate in the formulation of the contingency contract system. Students will participate in the point system by selecting the area(s) in which they desire to earn points. Student evaluations of the system will be considered at the conclusion of each quarter.

2. Specify behaviors to be reinforced.

The following behaviors will be reinforced with possible accumulation of points:

- a. Correctly answering the multiple-choice items on an examination.

- b. Completing any or all of the following activities:

- (1) Main Idea Notebook

- (2) Propaganda Notebook

- (3) Original Levels of Abstraction List

- (4) Participation in Laboratory Practice Sessions

3. Specify behaviors to be penalized.

There are no behaviors offered in this contingency management handbook which will involve a system of penalties.

4. Specify consequences (points gained or lost) for emitting or failing to emit each behavior.

Since no points will be deducted, points can only be gained in this course. The single consequence is the final grade awarded at the conclusion of the course.

5. Describe in detail your system for recording points.

Accumulation of points for each activity is as follows:

a. Test Items

One point is given for each of the 200 multiple-choice test items answered correctly by the student.

b. Main Idea Notebook

Number of students working on same Main Idea Notebook	1	2	3
Number of possible points	20	15	10

c. Propaganda Notebook

Number of students working on same Propaganda Notebook	1	2	3
Number of possible points	20	15	10

d. Levels of Abstraction List

Number of students working on same Levels of Abstraction List	1	2
Number of possible points	10	5

e. Laboratory Practice Periods

One point is allowed for each hour of participation up to a maximum of twenty points.

The following page is a student chart for recording points earned during the course. This allows each student to keep a record of his accumulate points and plan his work accordingly.

6. Specifically describe how points will be related to grades.

The accumulation of points will be the criterion for determining the final grade of the student. Point distribution for letter grades is as follows:

A - 180 or more points

B - 160 - 179 points

C - 140 - 159 points

D - 120 - 139 points

7. Describe in specific terms the activities to be used as reinforcers.

The final grade is the single reinforcer for the course.

8. Indicate duration of reinforcing activity, where activity will be available (e.g., section of regular classroom, central reinforcement center), and the extent to which a student can choose from a variety of reinforcing activities.

The reinforcer will be permanent in the form of a final grade representing three quarter hours of credit. The reinforcer will be available to the student approximately three weeks after the completion of the course. Reinforcement activities may be selected for letter grades of A, B, C, or D.

9. Specifically, describe the reinforcement contingencies. Are the contingencies group, individual, or a combination of the two? How many points must be earned for each reinforcing activity? When and how can points be cashed in for a reinforcing activity? Can a student participate in a succession of reinforcing periods by accumulating enough points?

Reinforcement is contingent upon the accumulation of points throughout the course. All of the student's choices of activities are based on individual or group projects and/or laboratory participation. The number of possible points for each activity is dependent upon the extent to which the student chooses to participate. He may receive full or partial credit for any or all of the activities. At the termination of the course the student receives reinforcement in the form of a final grade.

Unit Objectives

Suggested Readings

Study Questions

UNIT I - STUDY HABITS TO DEVELOP

A. Outline of Unit

1. How to Study
2. Characteristics of a Successful Reader
3. Eye Fixations
4. Bad Habits to Overcome
 - a. Vocalization
 - b. Regression
 - c. Pointing
 - d. Head Movements
5. How to Get Ready to Study
 - a. Study Schedule
 - b. Definite Study Plan
 - c. Right Place to Study
 - d. Study Aids
 - e. Distractions

B. Unit Objectives

1. The student will be able to specify on paper those reading habits which he feels need improving.
2. The student will be able to list the primary elements necessary in preparing to study.
3. After viewing a video-tape of several study situations, the student will be able to differentiate through oral discussion or written statements those proper study methods from improper study habits.
4. The student will be able to list the characteristics of a successful reader.
5. The student will be able to identify four poor reading habits and explain how each may be improved.

D. Study Questions

1. What are some of the common sources of distraction while studying and ways to reduce them?
2. What are some of the differences between a successful reader and a nonsuccessful reader?
3. Why are the mechanics of eye movement important in relation to reading speed and comprehension?

4. Why should one want to become a better reader?
5. Why are poor study habits blocks to rapid and efficient reading?
6. Why is it necessary to carefully plan a study schedule?
7. Where is the right place to study?
8. What tools and materials should you have ready for your study in the following subjects: (a) history; (b) mathematics; or (c) English?

UNIT II - ADJUSTING METHOD OF READING TO PURPOSE

A. Outline of Unit

1. Skimming and Scanning
2. Casual Reading
3. Study-type Reading
4. Study and Read for Examinations
 - a. Types of Examinations
 - b. Important Words in Essay Questions
 - c. Study for Examinations
 - d. Taking Examinations

B. Unit Objectives

1. Given a series of appropriate situations on paper or through class demonstration, the student will be able to identify the basic methods of reading based upon the given situation.
2. The student will be able to list the factors associated in reading for examinations.
3. The student will be able to identify the differences between the following methods of reading: reading for examinations, casual reading, and skimming and scanning.
4. Given specific questions, the student will be able to locate the relevant words that serve to control the answerable condition in each question.

D. Study Questions

1. What are the differences between skimming and scanning?
2. What is an "appropriate rate" for one to read?
3. What is casual reading?
4. How does casual reading differ from study-type reading?
5. How should one study for an examination?
6. Why does a test begin with the directions rather than the test items?
7. Why is it important to organize and outline your thoughts before answering an essay-type question?

UNIT III - REMEMBERING WHAT IS READ

A. Outline of Unit

1. Location of Information
2. Definite Study Methods
 - a. SQ4R Method of Study
 - b. PQRS Method of Study
 - c. OK4R Method of Study
3. Note-taking
4. Noting Events in Sequence
5. Mnemonic Devices

B. Unit Objectives

1. Given a series of explanations, a student will be able to identify the following study methods: SQ4R, PQRS, OK4R.
2. By listening to a series of recordings, the student will be able to write the significant thoughts on paper.
3. Given a series of situations or events, the student will be able to organize this information into a sequential order.
4. Given specific exercises involving parts of a book, the student will be able to identify the appropriate responses offered on a written examination.

Chapter 11 - "How do you Take Notes and Make Outlines?"

D. Study Questions

1. Why is it important to be able to locate information in a book quickly?

2. Discuss the major advantages and disadvantages of the following methods of study: SQ4R Method of Study, PQRS Method of Study, and OK4R Method of Study.
3. Why should each method of study be given a "fair trial"?
4. Why are organizational skills important in a well-kept notebook?
5. Discuss the advantages of a well-kept notebook over those of a disorganized notebook.
6. Discuss the reasons for taking notes.
7. Discuss the methods of outlining as an efficient method of taking notes.
8. What is a mnemonic device?

UNIT IV - DEVELOPING SKILLS IN USING INFORMATION

A. Outline of Unit

1. Following Directions
 - a. Types of Directions
 - b. Oral Directions
 - c. Written Directions
2. Levels of Abstraction
3. Listening
 - a. Listernability Factors
 - b. Readiness for Listening
 - c. Types of Listening
 - d. Listening Lessons
4. Analogous Relationships

B. Unit Objectives

1. Given a series of oral directions, the student will be able to successfully complete the operation suggested in the directions.
2. Given a series of written directions, the student will be able to successfully complete the specific operation suggested in the directions.
3. Given a group of selected words, the student will be able to arrange the words according to their level of abstraction.
4. Given a series of tape recordings, the student will be able to determine the major points offered and transcribe his thoughts into clear, concise notes.
5. Given a series of specific incomplete word analogies, the student will be able to successfully complete the analogies with 80% accuracy.

D. Study Questions

1. Why is it important for scientist, cooks, factory assemblymen and dressmakers to follow directions?
2. What are the advantages of written directions over oral directions?
3. Discuss the listenability factors.
4. Discuss the quote by Zeno "we have two ears and one mouth that we may listen the more and talk the less."
5. Why is attentive discriminatory listening necessary for following oral directions?
6. Identify the eight types of listening.
7. What is the importance of analogous relationships?

UNIT V - CAPTURING NEW WORDS

A. Outline of Unit

1. Affixes
 - a. Latin and Greek Prefixes
 - b. Old English Prefixes
 - c. Word Parts Denoting Numbers
 - d. Suffixes
2. Greek and Latin Roots
3. Combined Word Parts
4. Assimilation

B. Unit Objectives

1. The student will be able to successfully complete (80% correct responses) exercises pertaining to Latin and Greek prefixes, Old English prefixes, suffixes and word parts.
2. Given an exercise on assimilation, the student will be able to respond correctly to 80% of the items presented.

3. How can organization help one to remember details?
4. List the places a main idea may be found in a paragraph.
5. How can the levels of abstraction be related to the relationship of main and subordinate ideas?

UNIT VII - EVALUATING CONTENT

A. Unit Outline

1. Critical Reading
 - a. Levels of Thinking
 - b. Steps in Critical Reading
 - c. Devices of Propaganda
2. Predicting Outcomes
3. Comparing, Contrasting, Discriminating
4. Forming Opinions, Judgments, and Conclusions

B. Unit Objectives

1. Given a specific reading lesson, the student will be able to locate all of the propaganda devices illustrated in the selection.
2. Given three short reading selections, the student will be able either by written examination or oral discussion, to compare, contrast, and discriminate among the primary points of agreement and disagreement.
3. Given a series of statements, the student will be able to determine whether each statement represents fact or opinion.

3. How can a dictionary aid in facilitating vocabulary growth?
4. What is the importance of knowing the etymology of a word?
5. What is the purpose of having a cross-reference?
6. How can the dictionary aid a student trying to decide which college to attend?

METHODS OF ACCUMULATING POINTS

MAIN IDEA NOTEBOOK

A student may earn additional points by constructing an original Main Idea Notebook. The notebook will include a copy or original of twenty different magazine articles selected by the student. Following each article will be a brief statement of the main idea of that article and two or three supporting details.

The student has a choice of whether to work alone or in a group of two or three. The points will be distributed according to how many students work on the notebook. A maximum of twenty points may be earned. A sample notebook will be provided.

The point distribution is as follows:

Number of students working on same Main Idea Notebook	1	2	3
Number of possible points	20	15	10

PROPAGANDA NOTEBOOK

Additional points may be earned by the construction of an original Propaganda Notebook. The notebook will involve the selection of a minimum of fifteen different newspaper articles that may be copied or pasted in the notebook. Appropriate reference will be made for each example of propaganda illustrated in the articles. A minimum of five examples of each of the eight propaganda devices will be presented to receive the maximum number of points.

The student has a choice of whether to work alone or in groups of two or three. The points will be distributed according to how many students work on the notebook. A maximum of twenty points may be earned. A sample notebook will be provided.

The point distribution is as follows:

Number of students working on same Notebook	1	2	3
Number of possible points	20	15	10

LEVELS OF ABSTRACTION

Additional points may be earned by developing an original list of eight groups containing five words each. Each group will be arranged according to their level of abstraction.

The student has a choice of whether to work alone or with a partner. The points will be distributed according to how many students work on the list. A maximum of ten points may be earned. A sample list of Levels of Abstraction will be provided.

The point distribution is as follows:

Number of students working on same Levels of Abstraction List	1	2
Number of possible points	10	5

LABORATORY PARTICIPATION

A student may earn additional points through his participation in laboratory periods offered bi-weekly for two hours each meeting. A student may attend either of the periods. The activities presented will involve reading to improve rate, flexibility of rate, comprehension, and vocabulary skills. The student must cooperate in working on each activity to receive points.

One point is given for each hour of participation with a maximum of two points per week. A total of twenty points may be gained throughout the quarter.
