The Honorable Raul Castro
Governor of Arizona
State Capitol Complex
Phoenix, Arizona 85007

Dear Governor Castro:

It is with pleasure that I submit to you the Arizona Commission of Indian Affairs 1974-1975 Annual Report. This report is responsive to the provisions of Article 4, Title 41-542 of the Arizona revised statutes.

This Annual Report is designed to guide the Governor, State Legislature and local Tribal Governments of the proceedings, transactions, findings and recommendations made by the commission.

This Commission will endeavor to increase its efforts to serve the Indian Tribes by actively soliciting their input, there by, strengthening the commissions operation.

The key to strengthening our operation lies in the unity of the commission members and stronger support by the Governor and his Staff. Without cooperative effort, little in the way of accomplishments will be made.

In behalf of the Commission and Staff we want to express our appreciation and personal gratitude to you and your Staff for your involvement with us.

Sincerely,

Alvin Dashee,
Chairman

FOREWORD

The Arizona Commission of Indian Affairs was established by the Arizona Legislature in 1953 and is operative under Arizona Revised Statutes Article 4, Titles 41-541 and 41-542 as amended July 15, 1964 and April 17, 1974.

A very important area of our responsibility has been to improve communications, understanding and working relationships between all concerned and we have diligently been working to this extent. In building better understanding and communications, the Commission has sponsored, very successfully, two Indian Town Hall type conferences on the controversial subjects of Indian Water Rights and Sovereignty and Inter-Governmental Relations with Arizona Indian Tribes. Such conferences are sponsored on an annual basis (subjects chosen by the tribal leaders). We also work very closely with the State Coliseum and tribal leaders in developing the Indians' image at the Arizona State Fair - Indian Village. These areas of responsibility have been progressing at a very satisfactory rate.

The Commission, in an attempt to be more responsive to the tribes and to yield tangible results, has taken steps to implement the following areas as soon as possible: 1) Monitoring of State Legislation; 2) Publication of a Directory of Services/Programs to the Tribes of Arizona; and 3) Project packaging.

Future Annual Reports will concentrate on the tribes input as to their social and economic needs; their goals and objectives for fulfilling these needs; their priorities needed to increase their economic potential; and the Commission providing opportunities for gaining their social and economic "self-sufficiency."

SPECIAL FEATURE - PROFILE OF:

COLORADO RIVER INDIAN TRIBES

INTRODUCTION:

The Colorado River Indian Reservation was established by Executive Order on March 3, 1865, but later amended by a series of Executive Orders to redefine the reservation boundary lines. Presently, the reservation consists of about 90 miles of shoreline on each side of the Colorado River. The fact that the Colorado River runs through the reservation and has been a centuries-old resource for Indians is perhaps the reason why the present tribal economy continues to be based primarily on farming.

AGRICULTURE:

Being in a desert basin which once was covered largely by cactus, mesquite, chapparel, and arrowweed growth, the reservation of 268,691 acres now offers rich, river bottom soils capable of producing some of the best harvest yields per acre in the United States with enough water guaranteed by Supreme Court decree to irrigate 135,000 acres of land (Arizona v. Calif.). Some of the crops produced on these valley soils are: alfalfa, lettuce, cantaloupes, barley, wheat, cotton, safflower, etc.

Currently the tribes have a proposal for developing an added 10,800 acres of native lands for farming purposes. According to a recent report, there are "204 leaseholders with acreage ranging from less than 100 to over 6,000 for a total producing area of 67,000 acres." Future crop production levels on tribal farm lands can be expected to increase -- facilitated by a major packing firm -- as sufficient water at comparatively low rates is diverted from the river and transported through a modern irrigation system.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS:

Many other economic projects directed towards tribal self-sufficiency have been planned and are either in the feasibility studies stage, or have been started and are operating as projected -- in some cases, beyond expectations. As examples: the much-heralded Blue Water Marina now operating in the black for the past few years; a fast-growing utilities and power authority with a budget estimated in 1973 at $805,021, including construction costs of approximately $600,000 and add-on funds of $300,000; a completely-staffed reservation museum and library containing over 25,000 volumes and unmatched by other Arizona tribes in terms of financial support and ownership by the Tribe; a 140-acre industrial park ideally located to suit the transportation needs of potential customers; a low-rent housing complex for senior citizens funded through H.U.D.

OUTDOOR RECREATION AND SPORTS:

In the area of outdoor recreation and sports, the tribal administration is continuously seeking improvements in the tourism trade wherever they can. In pursuing this course, recreational development and residential leases are made available. For instance, several months ago, the Colorado River Tribes signed a multi-million dollar lease for a term of 65 years with a West Coast contractor to construct 288 units of condominiums above the Blue Water Marina Park. The target of all the housing accommodations, is the tourist sector: water sports and recreational enthusiasts who on weekends and holidays, jam the Colorado River beaches and camping facilities in ever-increasing numbers. Some of the recreational activities being planned and promoted for visitors to the Parker area are: swimming, water-skiing, boating, boat-racing, hunting, fishing, golf and tennis.

Airline services are now being provided by the Colorado River Indian Tribes with the recent purchase of three aircrafts capable of not only providing passenger service on scheduled flights between Parker and Phoenix, but also fitted for transporting cargo between Phoenix and Las Vegas.

MOHAVES:

The origin and history of the Colorado River Indian Tribes cannot be depicted adequately unless some practical observations are first portrayed in their proper perspective regarding the present-day membership and a brief description of the original natives of the reservation.

Written history asserts that the Mohave people were the first inhabitants of the lands lying along the Colorado River in the Parker area long before Juan de Onate, Spanish explorer, had made contact with the Mohaves, and centuries before the native lands were declared a reservation by President Lincoln in 1865.

Classified as Yuman by their language stock, the Mohave Indians resided in large areas along the Colorado River and upon arrival of the Spanish explorers, were known to have extended their trade with California Indians to the West Coast.

Traditionally, the Mohaves subsisted on foods largely produced through small scale farming methods; at other times they gathered wild vegetables supplemented by fish and wild game. One of the methods used to produce crops of corn, melons and pumpkins -- later beans, cantaloupes, and wheat -- was through seasonal use of flood waters. When floods did not occur, "beans" gathered from mesquite trees were prepared in a variety of ways to sustain the tribal people.

Not far from tribal headquarters is "AVIKWAME," a mountain located northwest of the Mohave Valley. It is a legendary, revered mountain which stands alone in height in the Newberry Mountain Range; it has traditionally been thought of as the original place where Mohave existence began, and where departed spirits of the Mohave are destined to go -- a reminder perhaps, that the Mohave spirit will always exist as long as "AVIKWAME" is there.

THE CHEMEHUEVIS:

In later years of the Tribes' history, there would be a group of Southern Paiutes known to Mohave Indians as Chemehuevis who would be the first of three tribes to be accepted as members, and resettled from their own native lands to the present Colorado River Indian Reservation during the period of 1913 to 1930. Classified by anthropologists as a tribal segment of the Southern Paiute Indians, the Chemehuevi language is identified as Shoshonean and is closely associated with the language of the Las Vegas Band of Southern Paiutes. In traditional Indian arts and crafts, the basketry of the Chemehuevi is considered among the finest in the Southwest. The final relocation of the Chemehuevis at-large began with the construction of Parker Dam and the subsequent flooding of irrigable lands then occupied by remnants of the Chemehuevi Tribe. Apparently, there was no other choice for the Chemehuevi but to move elsewhere.

THE HOPIS:

Among the late-comers into the fertile river-bottom lands of the Colorado River was a group of 16 Hopi families who were relocated after the second World War on September 1, 1945 through an enabling tribal resolution (R-30a-44), dated March 25, 1944, and a BIA sponsored relocation program. Upon their arrival, the small Hopi group was assigned 40 acres of land per family for farming purposes. Later, members of this Hopi group and the first Navajo arrivals, would be declared members of the Colorado River Indian Tribes under an amended tribal constitution, but only after the tribal council had rescinded Ordinance 5 pertaining to resettlement regulations, by a referendum vote in January, 1952.

THE NAVAJOS:

Another tribal group which was included in the BIA's "colonizing" project which offered to resettle Indians of other tribes to a land area developed by the War Relocation Authority on the CRIT Reservation, was a small segment of the Navajo Tribe. Each Navajo family which had been increased to seven by 1948, was also offered credit and farm lands along with a 50'x100' building plot. Eventually, the relocated Navajos were also adopted as members of the Colorado River Indian Tribes.

INTER-TRIBAL CO-EXISTENCE:

How these four distinct tribal groups co-exist as partners on a mutually-preserved land base is in itself, an achievement yet to be fully understood and appreciated. Good indicators of this integration factor are the number, types, sizes, etc. of human resource development programs now taking place on the reservation.

N.A.P.A.

Perhaps, the largest on-going project on the Colorado River Reservation is the H.E.W.-sponsored Native American Program in Action (NAPA) which in turn has responsibility for coordinating and supplementing such projects as Alcoholism Prevention and Education, Credit Union activities, Emergency Food and Medical Service (EFMS), Senior Citizens Program, Headstart Operations, and the WIC and BINA projects.

The present operating budget of NAPA is $82,000 which includes 15% of in-kind contributions advanced by the tribal council.

ALCOHOLISM PROGRAM:

Under the auspices of NAPA, Alcoholism Program staff reported that during the calendar year ended 1974, program clients had increased 28%. Services provided by alcoholism staff in utilizing a half-way house and in cooperation with other programs were: detoxification, health care, counselling, group therapy, lectures using audio-visual aids, employment referrals, and assistance with courts and with families of alcoholism program participants.

Associated with this project is an ambitious youth activity which involves the development of film strips and sound effects intended to present problems related to the abuse of alcohol and drugs.

MENTAL HEALTH PROGRAM:

Another program which promises to supplement and strengthen the alcoholism prevention process, is a newly-created Mental Health Program which offers in-depth counselling in the areas of: general psychotherapy, marital conflicts, psychiatric treatment, alcohol-related employment problems, medical diagnosis on a limited basis, and referrals from other tribal agencies. This particular project is under the direction of a Mental Health Specialist recently hired under contract by the Tribe with the Indian Health Service. Current plans call for the hiring of a mental health technician to assist in carrying out program goals and objectives.

EFMS:

One of the most pressing needs which has been felt by a substantial number of eligible residents of Northern Yuma County, has been for assistance in participating in the Food Stamp Program. Fortunately, through a Food Stamp Plan developed through tribal initiative, such assistance has become available not only for eligible members of the Colorado River Tribes, but also for non-Indians as far north as Parker Dam and for those residing in immediate areas too far otherwise from Yuma County offices. The EFMS (Emergency Food and Medical Supply) Program has experienced excellent response mainly from participants themselves on the supportive services being provided such as in notifying constituents about their eligibility, in transporting indigent applicants with an EFMS van, and in assisting participants with the process of certification for the Food Stamp Program.

TRIBAL CREDIT UNION:

Another tribal venture which began in 1967 under OEO and which is still considered to be under the NAPA umbrella, is the Tribe's credit union -- an enterprise which has its own bylaws, policies and Board of Directors, but which functions with three staff members employed under the NAPA Program. It is anticipated that in keeping with its original objectives, the total operation of the credit union will be taken over by its membership when the credit union becomes self-sufficient financially.

W.I.C.:

Underprivileged women, infants and children have not been left out of the Tribe's growth total; "nourishment" has been planned and provided for them by program developers through a federal-funded project called "W.I.C." Through this program which is aimed primarily at providing proper nutritional care, low income, pregnant women and infant children up to two years of age, are rendered services by a NAPA-sponsored staff member in assisting eligible members to obtain needed food vouchers.

HEADSTART OPERATIONS:

One of the most popular programs on the Colorado River Reservation is the Headstart Program which now serves 125 children who have been determined by federal criteria to be in the poverty level. Of the total number in the program, 10% are included as being handicapped and as such, special federal funds are being received for that purpose. Intangible benefits are expected since children will be exposed to members of other races, other foods, and other languages. The overall objectives are two: namely, to prepare a child to enter a regular school system, and to expose parents to the things which their children experience.

SENIOR CITIZENS PROJECT:

Also under NAPA administration is a Senior Citizens activity involving participants who are seriously concerned about preventing isolation among their number and in obtaining proper meals needed for certain nutritional values. Although cultural gaps exist among the older Mohave, Chemohuevi, Navajo and Hopi members of the Colorado River Indian Tribes, one of the goals of the elderly groups is to overcome this culture barrier by promoting cooperation and by encouraging fellowship among themselves. In preventing isolation, many activities take place each month without unnecessary costs to the agencies involved.

BINA:

However, the hottest reservation program going now under NAPA-sponsorship is BINA; a name synonymous with enthusiasm, youth and persistence -- at least as far as the younger elements of the reservation are concerned. Funded by the Office of Education under Title IV for $40,000 the FM radio project is also supported with $75,000 worth of NAPA equipment, $2,000 granted by the Tribal Council for renovation and maintenance purposes, and additional support through a federal manpower program -- besides the initial "seed money" contributed by the Save The Children Federation in order to get the project started.

Although the Indian-oriented low-power transmitting station has been operating in an old jailhouse with make shift antenna and furnishings, nevertheless broadcasts are carried out each weekday with brand new turntables, consoles, and a studio/remote control center. Community response has been more complimentary than negative; local businessmen have shown keen interest in the likelihood of BINA providing increased advertising services for the Parker area. Several plans are in the immediate offing, but practically all are contingent upon the granting of an FCC license to BINA (Broadcasting Information to Native Americans).

MANPOWER:

Although many of the activities taking place on the reservation presents a healthy employment situation on the contrary, the actual employment picture within the Colorado River Indian Community is far from stable. It is doubtful that the unemployment rate for the Colorado River Indian Tribes has improved significantly since March 1973, when the BIA reported that although there was an available labor force of 542 out of a total population of 1,550, only 291 members of the tribes had permanent jobs. This is substantiated in a statement made last year to a federal funding agency as follows: "...as of now the unemployment rate is at an all time high..." In response to this serious situation a CETA Manpower Program has been developed and is taking up much of the local economic slack by providing jobs for the unemployed.

EDUCATIONAL CONCERNS:

Not unlike the educational problems often misinterpreted and associated with Indian students of other reservations, it was found through research data obtained, that members of the Colorado River Indian Tribes also have their share of educational handicaps and related difficulties. For instance, while Indian students attending Parker High School made up about one-fourth of the school's enrollment some two years ago, more than 40% of the total failing grades were attributed to Indian students. This problem was compounded by the fact that on a proportional basis, Indian students had a far greater number of absenteeism. Furthermore, it was found that the general attitude of Indian students and their parents and tribal leaders towards the educational system was a relatively indifferent one.

REHABILITATION CENTER:

However, with the hiring of a Rehabilitation Director in March, 1974, the CRIT Indian education scene began to change. A Coordinator for Indian students was added to supplement the regular counselling program at Parker High School. After considerable discussions with students, parents, school representatives and tribal leaders, a plan of action was initiated which would be the basis for carrying out educational goals and objectives as conceived by community participants. Since then, several projects have been initiated including a grant to find out the extent of the need for higher educational and vocational training programs on the Colorado River Reservation. Another educational project in the making is an extensive counselling program funded under Title IV of the Indian Education Act. A third activity under way at this time is a career orientation research program which involves pre-and post-testing and field trips. What has been the result of this overall endeavor in responding to the community needs? The answer is best illustrated in a guidance-counselling report dated January 1, 1975 which reveals that there had been dramatic reductions of Indian youth drop-outs and significant decreases in truancy and absenteeism rates.

VALLEY SCHOOL GROUP HOME:

Also as a result of this community concern, a Valley School Group Home has been established under Title IV of the Office of Education. The primary purpose of the school is "...to provide intensive counselling services for those Indian youth experiencing difficulty in the home, school and community environment..." Thus far, seven Indian youths have participated in the custodial-type youth home which has been shown to be more successful than had been anticipated. One report submitted in January, 1975 stated that among residents of the School Group Home, truancy and/or absenteeism had been reduced 80%, while academic achievement had improved and a definite reduction in adjustment problems had occurred.

PROBATION PROGRAM:

Other areas of concern undertaken by the eleven staff members of the Rehabilitation Center include a probation program which has provided counselling and other follow-up services for at least 90 juveniles and adults assigned by the Federal Magistrate, through the tribal court system and at the direction of the Yuma County Juvenile Court. Presently, under this program, two probation officers are employed, one of whom has been granted a special police commission.

TRIBAL CONSTRUCTION COMPANY:

Another project which was initiated only recently with the assistance of the Rehabilitation Director, is a tribal-sponsored construction company which includes participants of the various rehabilitation programs, financial help by the Colorado River Tribes, and in-direct cooperation of other tribal, federal, state and county agencies. The company has just completed a senior citizens facility complete with domestic water, sanitation and power systems. Expansion to involve off-reservation construction jobs is expected in the near future.

ADULT EDUCATION:

In responding to community interests, the Rehabilitation Department also cooperates with the BIA-funded Adult Education GED Program aimed at assisting adults in obtaining a GED certificate which is equivalent to a high school diploma. Tests and evaluations are made of those interested in the GED Program after which an individualized instruction program is set up for the participant.

EDUCATIONAL DATA:

Last year approximately 120 reservation Indian students, 15 through 18 years of age, were enrolled in the Public School system in Parker while a total of 32 Indian members of the Colorado River Indian Tribes were boarded at and attended federal schools. The latest school census also accounts for 18 males and 19 females of the Tribe who attended various colleges and universities.

OTHER ACTIVITIES:

Numerous other tribal activities take place of course during the year. Recreation, sports and social events for CRIT youths for instance, is coordinated by a Community Development Director; the peak season for this department being in the summertime when school-age children are out of school. The local IRATABA Society, in pursuing certain cultural, charitable, and educational endeavors, is very active in community affairs, and sponsors the annual Indian Day Celebration in cooperation with "outside" groups and committees. A local

Save The Children Federation Committee is working voluntarily to see that the purposes of individual sponsorship of needy children and improved development of the child's community is carried out to its fullest extent. Presently, the Committee is well on its way in plans to equip a playground near the BIA's Foster Home Project on the Colorado River Indian Reservation. Most activities are given wide coverage for the benefit of CRIT members in the SMOKE SIGNALS which is a tribal-publication, 700 copies of which are printed on a monthly basis and also distributed nationwide.

TRIBAL GOVERNMENT:

The overall control of the Tribes' complex operations, however, is ultimately tied into standing and advisory committees and other sub-ordinate boards and authorities under the direction of a nine-member Tribal Council, which in turn must be capable of governing all of the tribe's affairs and in being responsible for overseeing each tribal department and activity. What this awesome mission and responsibility implies is that the Tribal Council in providing services to its members, must be able to deal with a delivery system quite similar to that maintained by a county or state government. Therein perhaps lies the basis for portraying a profile of the Colorado River Indian Tribes; namely, a simple statement which outlines the ability and extent to which the Tribes are able to make decisions on their own. Conclusive results on the CRIT reservation show that the tribal people through their elected representatives are doing just that.

SUMMATION

In submitting this Annual Report, the Arizona Commission of Indian Affairs and the staff wishes to acknowledge the many individuals and elected officials in all levels of government for contributing their time to the progress and well-being of the Indian people of this State. Our special appreciation goes to the tribal leaders and council members of each reservation for their continued support.

The Commission realizes the complex difficulties in achieving social and economic progress on Indian reservations. To obtain, improve and understand these facts concerning their conditions, it was necessary for the Commission staff to travel approximately 20,000 miles to and from reservations in Arizona.

The Commission is grateful to the State Legislature for the backing and the financing of our office. We are hopeful that with the new legislation, the Commission can and will embark on programming that will enable it to be more responsive to the Indian citizens, state leaders and other in achieving significant goals and accomplishments; thus always keeping in mind that the Indian people should and must be involved in determining their own destiny, yet bearing in mind the needs and well-being of all citizens of this State.

Respectfully submitted,

ALVIN DAS'HEE - Chairman
