ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Dr. Fay Haisley is a professor in the Department of Education at the University of Oregon and has been instrumental in organizing the University of Oregon masters program in gifted education.

George Wilhelmi has previously worked in gifted education in Connecticut and is presently the head teacher in the P.A.C.E. Program for the talented and gifted in the Eugene School District, Eugene, Oregon.

Richard Bagley, Kenneth Frazee, Jean Hosey, James Kononen, Jan Speciale and Doris Woodfield were participants in the Summer Institute on Talented and Gifted Education in Monmouth, Oregon, sponsored by the Oregon Department of Education during the summer of 1978. All are teachers either directly involved in the instruction of talented and gifted children or are involved in organizing programs in their districts.

Sandra Howell has a long association with gifted education in Oregon. Once a teaching assistant with Elizebeth Monroe Drews and Portland State University, Sandra is now the project director for M.A.C.E., a Title IV C project for talented and gifted children.

Alfreda Ebeling has training and experience in the field of counseling; and, as a mother of gifted children, has experienced the problems and approaches for parental counseling. Alfreda is presently a free lance writer and consultant.

Kendra Morberg has her M.S. in gifted education from the University of Oregon and is presently teaching primary grade talented and gifted children. Kendra also participated in the State Task Force on Early Identification and Programming for Gifted Children during 1978-79 and co-authored the Task Force report.

Samellyn Wood is presently conducting workshops and classes in Oregon on parenting talented and gifted children, and is a co-author of Four Styles of Parenting.

Gail Horner and Sue Rits are parents of gifted children, are officers in the Oregon Association for Talented and Gifted, and are actively involved in supporting school programs for talented and gifted children.

Veronica Boeholt is a member of the steering committee for the talented and gifted program in the district where she teaches. She is actively involved in the Oregon Association for Talented and Gifted, and was among the original organizers for this state wide association.

Jackie Buisman is one of the originators of the Oregon Association for Talented and Gifted and served as the organization's president in 1978-79. Jackie is presently a teacher of intermediate grade talented and gifted children, and is the mother of a gifted child.

FOREWORD

The purpose of this booklet is to assist parents in the organization of a support group for talented and gifted. The needs for a support group for parents of talented and gifted children are identified. The booklet describes organizing techniques for the support groups--contacts that can be made, development of structure for the group, special projects and activities, and program topics. Techniques for insuring group success are also described. Model by-laws are given in the Appendix.

A UNIFIED EFFORT

A parent support group is a unified effort to meet the needs of parents and their talented and gifted children. The people who most significantly touch the lives of talented and gifted children are the parents. These special adults, more than anyone else, have the opportunity and responsibility to guide and support these talented and gifted children into realizing and continually stretching to reach their full potential.

Talented and gifted children have special needs--needs of guidance, emotional support and educational opportunities. When these are fulfilled, they are able to rise to their greatest capabilities. They need an understanding with and from their peers and adults. Not only do the children have these special needs, but so do their parents. Parents are continually faced with special challenges.

- o "I'd love to talk about my child's successes, but I'm afraid it would be bragging."
- o "I think my child is gifted, but I don't know who to talk to."
- o "He's only four but thinks in analogies, reads at the third grade level, memorizes all the TV commercials, and wants to go to school. He has two years to wait. What can I do?"

Frustrations because people don't understand, and fears of rejection, scorn, envy, and loneliness can be eased when parents meet other parents to talk, to share concerns and to plan for these children.

A safe, responsive environment can provide the necessary emotional support parents are seeking. A parent support group can not only do this, but can also open communication channels between the schools and community to enhance appropriate educational opportunities for talented and gifted children. With these lines open, parents, teachers and community forces can share and plan together, dissolving many of their problems and concerns. When the home, school and community work together, the child's special needs may be realized more quickly and conscientiously.

HOW TO ORGANIZE A PARENT SUPPORT GROUP

MAKING THE CONTACTS

Each community may be at a different stage of development in meeting the needs of the talented and gifted. Some schools will be underway with programs, others in the planning phase, and some in the "no-plan" stage. In some communities, parent groups may be in the formative stages already, while in others only the occasional voice of an isolated parent advocating talented and gifted programming for his or her own child will be heard.

A parent support group may come in all shapes and sizes. It will grow and develop into a viable group as people begin to share with one another.

- o Possibly your favorite method of communication is sitting down in a cozy living room sharing with a handful of other parents "what parenting the gifted is all about."

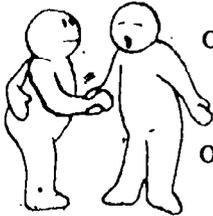

- o An informal session to share experiences and ideas may totally hit the target for your needs. Coffees in homes with a guest from the school, or the Oregon Association for Talented and Gifted (OATAG) may answer questions and help the small informal group become familiar with resources and books of interest.

The number in each group may vary. The key to success is the quality of the people in the group, not the quantity. Quality comes from discovering some common needs of those together. Once the problem or common needs are identified, the group may brainstorm to set possible goals.

o "I'd like to get together and talk about recommended books."

o "Well, I just moved here, and I'd like to talk about places to go."

o "I have an idea. Let's plan a trip together for our children."

These are some of the informal ways groups may cooperate to support both needs of parents and children.

How do you begin? A feeling of isolation makes it difficult for some to begin. Two or three parents with gifted children can begin to support each other and develop some understanding of the gifted and talented.

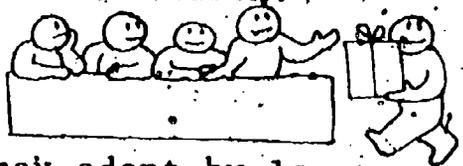

You may begin by contacting the local school personnel: the superintendent, principal, counselor, teachers and school board members. Ask if there is a local organization, and if so, whom should you contact? Join efforts with them. If not, ask for names of others who have also inquired. Leave your name and ask for it to be passed on to others who inquire about the talented and gifted. If there is a program in the school, but no parent organization, ask if you can send a notice home via the children.

Write to the State Specialist for Talented and Gifted in the Oregon Department of Education and to the Oregon Association, for Talented and Gifted (OATAG) to obtain names of regional and local community groups. They too may have some leads for you. Contact your local Education Service District (ESD) to find out what is happening throughout the county.

With the support of a few people with the same interests, you are on your way. It only takes a few concerned parents and educators to establish a viable group. Notification of an organizational meeting could be announced in the local newspaper and the newsletters of the ESD, school, PTA, district, and OATAG. Word of mouth will be one of your best methods of communication. Soon you will have people contacting you.

Step by step, with patience, time and effort, you will have a core group who can form a task force to establish initial goals and objectives and a plan to achieve them. "Allow your group time to grow. Many times school districts adopt a 'wait and see' attitude before establishing a working relationship with a parent group, and remember also that the school district is not the 'enemy.' It represents your best chance of securing appropriate educational opportunities for talented and gifted children."*

DEVELOPING THE STRUCTURE

The newly established task force may adopt by-laws, select pro-tem officers, incorporate and then present a comprehensive package to the community. Print informational brochures with tentative goals, dues and a date set for a membership meeting. At that meeting you could give an interest survey and recruit volunteers for committees. By-laws should be flexible and simple. Model by-laws are included in the Appendix. The working body of the association should include elected officers such as President; Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer, and your appointed committee Chairperson. Possible committees may include By-Laws, Budget, Membership, Newsletter, Dues, Legislation, Elections, Publicity, Community Resources, Education, Scholarship, and Program.

Incorporate your organization to limit personal liability and provide tax exemptions. Membership dues will be tax deductible. For incorporating, contact the Oregon Department of Commerce, Corporation Division, for the necessary forms. Get the State Tax Exemption Forms from the Department of State Revenue. Contact the Internal Revenue Service for the Federal Tax Exemption Form #1023 and Form #SS4 to apply for a federal employer identification number. The IRS has a publication #557 explaining qualification for IRS tax exemption. For information on non-profit or bulk-rate mailing contact your local post office. Check on insurance coverage, especially if you plan to sponsor classes or activities for children. An attorney may be willing to advise you on these matters.

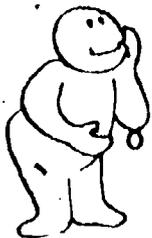

Select a name for your group that notifies the public and potential members where your interests are. For example, "The (your city's name) Association for Talented and Gifted." Membership dues should be sufficient to cover expenses such as newsletters, mailings, printings, phone costs and special programs.

An Advisory Board made up of professional people who are advocates of the talented and gifted can be a real asset in your initial planning and later in supporting your efforts in the community and school.

PROJECTS AND ACTIVITIES

The following is a list of possible actions your group may plan to do:

- o Do an interest survey of the membership to find out which activities and projects they want to do.
 - o Develop a library and resource center.
 - o Sponsor public workshops and discussion sessions.
 - o Develop a Mentor Program so individual children can work with a specialist in his or her field.
 - o Develop a volunteer program to arrange and conduct field trips in the community.
 - o Give scholarship aid to talented and gifted children.
 - o Sponsor "Kids Meet Kids" outings.
 - o Publish a newsletter with local, state and national news, book reviews and children's works.
 - o Actively work towards talented and gifted legislation to provide funds for programs and training teachers.
- Sponsor "Get-Acquainted" sessions for parents with teachers, counselors, principals, OATAG board members, Department of Education representatives and other people who directly and indirectly touch the lives of the talented and gifted.

- o Produce a film, video tape, or slide/tape presentation on talented and gifted.

PROGRAM TOPICS

The following is a list of possible topics that you may want to explore:

- o Characteristics of talented and gifted children
- o Role of the parents in the child's education
- o Identification and selection procedures for school programs
- o Understanding the problems of talented and gifted children
- o Developing the self-concept of the parent and child
- o Legislation and judicial decisions affecting talented and gifted programs
- o Existing school programs for the talented and gifted
- o How to start a program for the gifted
- o Social and emotional problems of the talented and gifted
- o Models of thinking and the creative process
- o History of education and awareness of the talented and gifted
- o Evaluation procedures of programs

- o Materials and publications available on talented and gifted programs
- o Community resources: "People to see and places to go"
- o Activities to do at home

INSURE GROUP SUCCESS

BE EFFECTIVE

An effective group determines goals and purposes to meet its own special needs. It identifies and solves problems with a commitment to support its decisions. Individuals join a group with certain ideas and needs. An effective group allows time to explore individual ideas and needs while keeping a balance between group consensus and individual dominance.

BE PRODUCTIVE

Committees and individuals need to follow through on group commitments and continue to plan, re-evaluate and solve problems. The membership will change as you grow. Have flexible attitudes towards new ideas and procedures. Many assets are intangible. Some of them might include an inspiring speech, a "heart-to-heart" with a new member, a decision to carry out your idea. Products that are tangible include newsletters; field trips and resource files. The group needs to be aware of its accomplishments. This inspires people to accomplish more.

DEVELOP OWNERSHIP

Share in the tasks right from the beginning to give all people a feeling of ownership. A project that has acceptance by a group will get the group's energy, time and enthusiasm and this builds a shared feeling of commitment. Maintain those feelings and watch your team efforts multiply.

REVITALIZE YOUR GROUP

Groups go through different stages. Periods of great organization and growth may be followed by periods of less effectiveness. If your group's energy has fallen, find ways to recapture constructive energy. Assign a task group to re-evaluate your goals, procedures and direction. The group may recommend doing an interest survey with the membership. It may be time to set new goals and try new methods for reaching them.

KNOW THE CHARACTERISTICS OF "ALIVE AND WELL"

The results often speak for themselves. People are feeling useful. They want to support their interests. There is a feeling of sincerity, a genuine regard for opinions, and a willingness to work hard and give quality time to projects. A total involvement leads to planning, problem solving, evaluating and looking ahead. Keep your group "alive and well" to benefit the talented and gifted.

GET READY...GET SET...GO...

Meet the challenge. Find others who know that a parent support group is needed in your community. Talk to others and discover that a unified effort will begin to meet the needs of talented and gifted children.
