ABSTRACT

A total of 78 books and journal articles examining the writing and teaching of history in China are annotated. While some of the cited works review the importance of history and historical analysis throughout Chinese history, the primary focus is on historiography in the People's Republic since the 1949 Revolution. Major emphasis is placed on the impact of Marxian and Maoist thought on historical research, analysis and writing. The specific influence of the Cultural Revolution is described. The bibliography includes publications written in Chinese, French, German, Italian, Korean, and Russian; but all abstracts are in English. (CFR)

(pre-1949 reports and records) as an unparalleled contribution to Chinese historical literature. Maoists see history as mirror to guide their policies.

Boorman, Howard Lyon. "Mao Tse-tung as Historian."
HISTORY IN COMMUNIST CHINA. Edited by Albert Feuerwerker. Cambridge MA: MIT Press, 1968, pp. 306-30.

After the Long March and establishment of a Communist base in Shensi province, Mao's pronouncements (1937-49) formed the basic framework for history writing after the Communists assumed power. Mao's view of history, essentially modern, holds that man can consciously change his social environment. His pre-1949 reports and directives are important historical literature.

Two Peking University Chinese history courses for foreign students only dealt with modern history since 1840 based almost entirely on Mao's writings, and classical history based on writing of Ssu-ma Kuang, which give a Marxist analysis.

HISTORIOGRAPHY

Ch'en, Jerome. "Letter from Jerome Ch'en." MODERN CHINA, 5, 4 (1979), 525-30.

After the Cultural Revolution historians emphasized basic theory and knowledge. After Mao's death, historians' interest heightened in compilations, publications, and conferences.

Post-1949 historiography has concentrated on a few themes (peasant rebellions, periodization) and has followed Mao's guidelines concerning class struggle, ideological and political needs, and the ideological framework. Communist historians have clashed, with some stressing classical Marxism while others stress peasant rebellions.

Demieville, Paul. "Chang Hsüeh-ch'eng and His Historiography." HISTORIANS OF CHINA AND JAPAN. Edited by William Gerald Beasley and Edwin George Pulleyblank. London: Oxford University Press, 1961, pp. 167-85.

Chang Hsüeh-ch'eng (1738-1801), ranked with the greatest contemporary European historiographers, was against excessive criticism of his time and important for his modern reflections on the theory, methods, and ideology of history.

Esherick, Joseph W. REFORM AND REVOLUTION IN CHINA: THE 1911 REVOLUTION IN HUNAN AND HUBEI. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1976.

Examines the period 1897-1913 to assess causes and significance of the Revolution of 1911 in the central China provinces of Hunan and Hubei. In 1905-1906 students in Western-style Chinese schools and those recently returned from Japan grew increasingly radical. Their actions aided a popular uprising (1906) that had its own inner dynamic. Elites, in order to control the outcome, supported the revolution—aimed primarily at overthrowing the Manchu, not at radical social change.

Feuerwerker, Albert. "China's History in Marxian Dress." AMERICAN HISTORICAL REVIEW, 66, 2 (1961), 323-53.

Party directives for research and historical monographs show difficulties of rewriting history in a Communist setting. Major concerns have been peasant rebellions, sources of capitalism, the place of "imperialism," and periodization of China's past.

Feuerwerker, Albert. "China's History in Marxian Dress." HISTORY IN COMMUNIST CHINA. Edited by Albert Feuerwerker. Cambridge MA: MIT Press, 1968, pp. 14-44. Communist historians have not produced the promised general history of China. The mechanical, anti-imperialist, ideological quality of their historiography has biased their writing.

Feuerwerker, Albert. "China's Modern Economic History in Communist Chinese Historiography." CHINA QUARTERLY, 22 (April-June 1965), 31-61.

Chinese economic historians have spent less time on agricultural history than on money, banking, and company histories. Their need for a proletariat has spurred study of roots of modern capitalistic practices in China.

Feuerwerker, Albert. "China's Modern Economic History in Communist Chinese Historiography." HISTORY IN COMMUNIST CHINA. Edited by Albert Feuerwerker. Cambridge, MA: MIT Press, 1968, pp. 216-46.

Since 1949, Communist economic historians, passively ideological, have not attacked problems posed by nineteenth and twentieth century economic history.

Feuerwerker, Albert. "From 'Feudalism' to 'Capitalism' in Recent Historical Writing from Mainland China." JOURNAL OF ASIAN STUDIES, 18, 1 (November 1958), 107-16.

Review of three books of historical studies published in China in 1957 comments on direction and tone of Chinese historiography.

Feuerwerker, Albert. "Rewriting Chinese History: Interpreting the Past in the People's Republic of China." UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO QUARTERLY, 30, 3 (April 1961), 273-85.

Concludes that rewriting China's history in keeping with Communist ideology has produced more homogeneity than was found in Soviet historical writing after the Russian Revolution.

Chinese Communist historians condemn as "feudal" 316 A.D.-1278 A.D., a period criticized less since their break with the U.S.S.R. The trend is to exalt China and Chinese experience, though historians have not yet questioned the Marxist scheme of rigid periods based on European history.

HISTORIOGRAPHY

The twentieth century saw history writing revived in China and Western scientific methods used for the first time. Despite Western influence, Chinese history writing is distinctive because of its unique material and the Chinese conception of the past as a series of concrete events.

Goldman, Merle. "The Role of History in Party Struggle, 1962-64." CHINA QUARTERLY, 51 (1972), 500-19.

The 1962-64 period, relatively free of overt dissidence, was marked by intellectual and scholarly discussion on ways to use China's history to attain harmony, a basic Chinese value.

Before 1949, almost all intellectuals favored a socialist revolution. In the years 1930-37 several distinguished university history departments interpreted, in Marxist terms, the nature of Chinese society and its past.

Israel, John Warren. "The December 9 Movement: A Case Study in Chinese Communist Historiography." CHINA QUARTERLY, 23 (July-September 1965), 140-69.

Although Communist historians have attributed the origin of the December 9 (1935) movement to Communist youth, evidence proves that the movement, in protest against Japan's attempts to establish autonomous governments in Hopei and Chahar provinces, was only later endorsed by Communists. Student demonstrations were aided by Americans Edgar and Helen Snow at the U.S.-sponsored Yenching University, Peking, and spread to schools in 32 other cities.

Israel, John Warren. "The December 9th Movement: A Case Study in Chinese Communist Historiography." HISTORY IN COMMUNIST CHINA. Edited by Albert Feuerwerker. Cambridge, MA: MIT Press, 1968, pp. 247-76.

Contends that the December 9, 1935, Peking student demonstration to protest Japanese government in Hopei and Chahar provinces was inspired not by Communists but by faculty (including Edgar Snow) and students at Yenching University, who were motivated by selfless concern for China. This argument, supported by original sources, refutes the claim that Communists led the movement.

From the twentieth century conflict between the significance of China's history and the Communist ideology came the Four Histories Movement: family (clan) history, village history, commune history, and industrial history. Many specialists and writers compiled these histories, but four-history activities were stopped by the Cultural Revolution.

Viatkin, Rudolf Vsevolodovich, and Sergei Leonidovich Tikhvinskii. "Some Problems of Historical Scholarship in the Chinese People's Republic." SOVIET STUDIES IN HISTORY, 2, 4 (Spring 1964), 44-60.

Soviet historians, writing soon after the China-U.S.S.R. break, criticize China's "mistaken political course" and Chinese historians for "idealization of the Chinese past and a continuous disparagement of the history of other peoples."

Viatkin, Rudolf Vsevolodovich, and Sergei Leonidovich Tikhvinskii. "Some Questions of Historical Science in the Chinese People's Republic." HISTORY IN COMMUNIST CHINA. Edited by Albert Feuerwerker. Cambridge, MA: MIT Press, 1968, pp. 331-55.

Soviet historians criticize Chinese historiography for abandoning Marxist-Leninist principles after China broke with the U.S.S.R. One cause is that most Chinese historians were trained in "old" China or in capitalist countries. Their theme is ethnocentric and their motive is to isolate themselves from the Soviet people.

HISTORIOGRAPHY

CHINA QUARTERLY, 76 (December 1978), 891-911.

Delegation of the U.S. Committee on Scholarly Communication with the People's Republic of China visited leading historians at the Institute of History of Peking University, Fudan University, Shanghai Museums, and Nanking University. China's scholars were experiencing less restraint within the limits of conventional Chinese Marxist historiography.

Wang, Gungwu. "The Inside and Outside of Chinese History. A Perspective on China's Relations With the World." ROUND TABLE, 247 (1972), 283-95.

China's view of history for many centuries kept it culture-bound. Marxist universalism's influence since 1949 has put China's history into a radically different perspective.

Wang, Gungwu. "The Origins of Civilization: An Essay on Chinese Scholarship in Transition." ASIAN THOUGHT AND SOCIETY, 1, 3 (1976), 247-57.

Examines the origins of civilization according to nationalist Chinese historians influenced by evolutionary theories during the early twentieth century.
