ABSTRACT

The Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program was a 3-year program supported by the Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education (FIPSE), which sought to identify Hispanic college faculty and professionals who demonstrated the desire and potential to move into middle and top administrative positions in higher education. The 74 candidates in the program received training in personal and career goal-setting, strategic planning, the budgetary process, and leadership styles. Fellows also had to serve as interns for 2 weeks at an institution other than their own. Components of this project include the following: winter and summer institutes; attendance at a national higher education conference; the internship and written project; the selection procedure; a group profile; the project budget; a program evaluation and outcomes; and the overall program effectiveness. Participation in this project enabled some fellows to move on to administrative positions and some to get promotions within their institutions. Eight appendices contain: the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program Handbook; agendas of the winter-summer institutes, national conference, and closing seminar; the nomination packet; a profile of Hispanic leadership fellows 1983-1986; end-of-the-year evaluation questionnaire; the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Directory for 1983-1984, 1984-1985, and 1985-1986. Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program
(1983 - 1986)

Project Summary

The Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program was a three year program which sought to identify Hispanic faculty and professionals at postsecondary institutions who demonstrated the desire and the potential to move into middle and top administrative positions in higher education. Candidates in the program received training in personal and career goal-setting, strategic planning, the budgetary process and leadership styles. In addition, fellows were required to serve as interns for a maximum of two weeks at an institution other than their own. The fellows also submitted written projects on issues in higher education. A total of 74 individuals participated and completed the requirements of the program. The fellowship was carried out in close cooperation with the American Council on Education and the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation.

Project Overview

In the spring of 1983, the Office of Bilingual and International Education, Department of Higher Education, in cooperation with the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation, submitted a three-year proposal to the fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education to offer a Hispanic Leadership Training Institute each year for faculty and administrators in higher education institutions.

In its first year of operation participants in the program were nominated by private and public institutions in the states of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and New York. During its second and third years, the region was expanded to include individuals from all the states along the east coast. Thirty participated in the first year of the program (1983-84), twenty-two were admitted for the second year (1984-85), and twenty-two were selected for the third year (1985-86).

Program participants reflected the demographic profile of the Hispanic community on the east coast. The majority of the fellows were of Puerto Rican descent (66%), followed by Cubans (12%) and Mexican-Americans (8%). With the exception of one candidate who claimed Spanish national origin, the rest of the participants (15%) included persons from Central and South America. Seventy-three percent of the fellows held full or part-time administrative/counseling positions. The majority of those engaged in full-time teaching (21%) were faculty members in foreign language departments. Of the 74 fellows, 40 had doctoral degrees and 34 had earned a master's degree. Participation in the fellowship program was almost evenly divided by sex, with thirty-eight females and thirty-six males.

Purpose

The purpose of the project was to provide management and leadership training for Hispanic faculty and administrators in higher education. The rapid increase in Hispanic undergraduate enrollments, the limited managerial and administrative experiences of young Hispanic faculty in higher education, and the lack of institutional commitment to management training, justified the call for a program which would contribute to the training of Hispanic faculty and staff in the areas of management and administrative leadership.

Background and Origins

During the 1970s and 1980s, Hispanic higher education enrollments grew significantly. To meet the special needs of a growing Hispanic student population, many colleges developed instructional programs and support services, emphasizing Spanish language and cultural awareness abilities of faculty and other service providers.

Hispanic educators recruited to direct such programs had to assume leadership positions in administration and educational policy making. Unfortunately, many were unprepared for these new career opportunities, since their formal training had concentrated on teaching methods, content areas, or student services. Few institutions provided either formal or informal management training programs, and there was a need to develop Hispanic educators' administrative skills as quickly as possible while they continued in their new positions. There was a need also to contravene a view of these professionals as "one issue" administrators (best utilized serving only minority subgroups), a perception that limited their influence on overall college policies and governance, their professional networks and contacts, and their movement into the mainstream of academic administration.

All of these factors supported the need for a broad-based leadership/management training program for Hispanic higher education professionals to address three areas: general administrative/management skills, cultural factors affecting management style, and career opportunities.

Project Description

Each fellowship year had three components. At the center were two (winter and summer) intensive training institutes. The three-day, winter institutes featured lectures and seminars on uses of computers in higher education, the federal budgetary process, cross-cultural dimensions in administration, and effective communication techniques. They set the tone for the rest of the year, by clarifying program goals and performance expectations, encouraging networking, and helping participants evaluate their personal career choices. The five-day, summer institutes focused on self-assessment, in-depth group sharing, and personal and career goal setting, through workshops, lectures, and seminars. Topics included the budgetary process, management skills, Hispanic issues in higher education, the State's role in higher education, and strategic planning. Institute presenters included leaders and scholars from various national organizations, state agencies, and institutions of higher education.

The second program component was the fellows' attendance at the week-long annual conference of the American Association for Higher Education (AAHE). The AAHE provided meeting rooms, helped identify speakers for training sessions, and underwrote reductions for AAHE membership and conference registration costs.

The final component was a 2 to 4-week internship/writing project, arranged by the fellows and supported by their sponsoring institutions, to expose them to new administrative tasks, procedures, and policymaking processes. Guided by mentors at the host institutions (or organizations/agencies), fellows participated in meetings, reviewed programmatic and budgetary documents, interviewed administrators, and/or prepared the written project. Fellows were encouraged to undertake projects that could contribute to both their sponsoring institutions' needs and their own professional growth.

To be considered for the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program, applicants needed master's degrees or higher and three years of full-time higher education experience (at least one at the nominating sponsoring institution). Candidates working in programs or offices that served Hispanic and other ethnic minority students had preference. Nominations were invited from higher education institutions in the northeast and in Florida, and from regional and national professional organizations. During the second and third years of the project, alumni fellows also assisted in recruitment. Applicants were interviewed by members of the program's advisory committee, representatives of the two co-sponsoring organizations, and project staff.

Project Results

Overall, the program achieved its goals. The internships enhanced fellows' professional skills and career exposure. The institutes expanded administrative perspectives and knowledge about administrative skills necessary for career development. The skills workshops enhanced professional understanding and self-perception, increased awareness regarding development of self-support systems, and fostered other skills for professional and personal effectiveness. Fellowship participation was reported also to have fostered Hispanic perspectives and expanded concepts about what Hispanic faculty and administrators can achieve.

The data also suggested other important program outcomes that the fellows valued highly. The internships, for example, did more than offer opportunities for skill enhancement and career exposure. They also increased self-confidence, and provided first-hand administrative experience as well as insights into policy-level decision making processes. The institutes fostered network development while also stimulating heightened career motivation and a sense of renewal and professional validation. The skills workshops raised fellows' self-confidence and enhanced their sense of professional potential. Fellows reported both administrative and interpersonal skills were expanded and strengthened. In sum, the program, by supplementing traditional experiences in important ways, appears to have produced outcomes -- rated important by the fellows -- that prior educational and professional experiences did not.

Introduction

In the spring of 1983, the Office of Bilingual and International Education, Department of Higher Education, in cooperation with the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation, submitted a three-year proposal to the Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education to offer a Hispanic Leadership Training Institute each year for faculty and administrators in higher education institutions in New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania. The project was to be carried out with the assistance of other higher education state agencies, higher education professional associations and Hispanic community organizations. Representation from each of the sectors was invited to participate in the project's advisory committee.

The participation and co-sponsorship of the American Council on Education (ACE) and the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation played a significant role in the program's early development. After the proposal was funded the Foundation and ACE provided valuable programmatic assistance. In addition, personnel from both organizations participated in the selection of candidates and enlisted the support of nationally known educators from public and nonprofit higher education organizations as guest speakers for the training program.

Purpose

The purpose of the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program was to provide management and leadership training for Hispanic faculty and administrators in higher education. The rapid increase in Hispanic undergraduate enrollments, the limited managerial and administrative experiences of young Hispanic faculty in higher education and the lack of institutional commitment to management training, justified the call for a program which would contribute to the training of Hispanic faculty and staff in the areas of management and administrative leadership.

During the 1970s and 1980s there was a significant increase in Hispanic undergraduate enrollment in the southwest and in the northeast sectors of the United States (Olivas, 1982). In the state of New Jersey Hispanic enrollments in the public higher education system surpassed the national rate, rising from 4.1 percent in 1976 to 6.3 percent in 1980 (New Jersey Department of Higher Education, 1981).

As a result of this influx of Hispanic students, colleges across the nation and in the states of New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania developed instructional programs and support services to meet the special needs of these students, with emphasis on the ability of faculty and other service providers to speak Spanish and understand the cultural backgrounds of the students.

Consequently, Hispanic faculty in foreign language departments and in the area of student personnel services were frequently recruited and hired to direct such programs.

As the Hispanic college student population grew, Hispanic educators were called on to assume positions of leadership through new administrative assignments. This development offered Hispanic educators new career opportunities in administration and educational policymaking. The new career opportunities very often helped to create new problems. Newly appointed Hispanic administrators were expected to function immediately and effectively in the new role. They were expected to understand the structure and procedures of the institution, to contribute to policy formation, to be skilled in management and advocacy and to garner support for the program being directed. Many of these new administrators had little formal training for such tasks since earlier training was centered on teaching methods, content areas, or student services, rather than on management and administration. There was a clear need to develop the full range of administrative skills as quickly as possible while allowing the individual to perform in the new position. However, few institutions provided formal or informal management training programs.

There was another problem which further supported the need for a broad-based leadership/management training program among Hispanic higher education professionals. While some progress had been documented on the number of Hispanics employed in higher education, they were largely concentrated in foreign language departments, bilingual and English-as-a-second language programs, student affairs, and affirmative action positions. There was a tendency to view these professionals as "one issue" administrators who were best utilized to serve minority subgroups. As a result, Hispanics were limited in their ability to influence overall college policies and governance, to establish broad professional networks and contacts, and to move into the mainstream of academic administration. (Hispanic Participation in Higher Education, 1982).

As a result of national and local state studies on the condition of Hispanic participation in higher education it was found that new Hispanic faculty and administrators could greatly benefit from a leadership program which sought to address three areas: one, general administration/management skills; two, cultural factors affecting management style and three, increased career opportunities into all levels of higher education administration.

Description of Program

The Hispanic Leadership Fellows program was divided into two components: one, intensive group centered institutes and two, individually sponsored projects. The core component of the year-long project was the training institutes. The first institute was held in the winter and the second institute was held in the summer. In order to foster the formation of close working relationships and networks among the participants, the training sessions were held at conference sites which minimized external distractions. The winter institute was held at the Henry Chauncey Conference Center, Educational Testing Service in Princeton, New Jersey, and the summer institute was held on the campus of Princeton University. The institutes for each fellowship class were held at both sites during the 3-year funding period of the project (Appendix A)

Winter and Summer Institutes

During the three-day winter institute the training sessions consisted of lectures and seminars on the use of computers in higher education, the federal budgetary process, cross-cultural dimensions in administration and effective communication techniques.

Presenters at the winter institutes included, among others: Martin Schneiderman, Director of Computer Education Programs at ETS; Madeleine F. Green, Director of the Center for Leadership Development and Academic Administration at ACE; Henry T. Engle, Dean, School of Communication at California State University, Chico and Sarah E. Melendez, Associate Director, Office of Minority Concerns, American Council on Education. The first training institute set the pace for the rest of the fellowship year by clarifying the goals of the program, setting high expectations of performance, encouraging the formation of networks, and creating a climate where participants could evaluate their personal reasons for continuing or considering a career in higher education.

The focus of the 5-day summer institute was self-assessment, in-depth group sharing, personal and career goal setting. Training sessions in the form of workshops, lectures and seminars were scheduled from 9 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. Additional topics covered included the budgetary process, management skills, minority Hispanic issues in higher education, the state's role in higher education and strategic planning.

Presenters included, among others: Marvin W. Greenberg, Senior Vice President for Program Development, Budgeting and Student Services, Rutgers, The State University, New Brunswick; Frank Newman, President, Education Commission of the States; Vera King Farris, President, Stockton State College; Elsa Gomez, Director of Academic Programs, Massachusetts Board of Regents of Higher Education; Howard L. Simmons, Associate Director, Commission on Higher Education; T. Edward Hollander, Chancellor, New Jersey Department of Higher Education and Norma Foreman Glasgow, Commissioner, Connecticut Department of Higher Education.

National Higher Education Conference

A second component of the program required participants to attend a week long national conference of the American Association for Higher Education (AAHE). The conference sessions were held in Chicago, Illinois or Washington, D.C. The higher education association provided meeting rooms at no cost, helped to identify additional speakers for the training sessions and provided a 30% reduction of the cost of registration and memberships in AAHE and the Hispanic Caucus of the association. Throughout the conference major emphasis was given to Hispanic issues in higher education. Presenters at the sessions included, among others: Harry Pachon, Executive Director, National Association for Latin Elected and Appointed Officials, Washington, D.C.; Arturo Madrid, President, Tomas Rivera Center, the Claremont Graduate School; and Reginald Wilson, Director, Office of Minority Concerns, American Council on Education. Other sessions included workshops on writing grants, decision making and public policy.

Internship and Written Project

The final components of the fellowship year consisted of a two or four week internship at a host institution, and the preparation of a written project. Each participant was responsible for arranging, in cooperation with the sponsoring institution, for a two or four week placement at another institution which allowed for a broad exposure to administrative tasks, procedures and the policymaking process. The internship was designed to allow participants to broaden their horizons and seek out administrative tasks outside of their professional experience.

With their college employers covering the expenses, participants served their administrative internships in higher education professional associations, i.e. American Association of State Colleges and Universities (AASCU), American Council on Education (ACE), other 2 and 4-year higher education institutions and with departments of higher education. Guided by the mentor at the host institution fellows were encouraged to participate in regular meetings, allowed to review programmatic and budgetary documents, interview administrators, and/or work on the preparation of a written project.

The final phase of the program required the fellows to produce a written project. A suitable written project might include an article for publication, a grant proposal, a conference presentation or a curriculum design under the sponsorship of a high-level administrator. Fellows were encouraged to undertake a project which could contribute to the needs of the sponsoring institution while at the same time it promoted and broadened the participant's professional growth as an administrator and educational leader (Appendix B).

Selection Procedure

The initial selection of potential candidates was based on the applicant's work experience and academic credentials. To be considered an applicant needed to have a master's degree or higher, and three years of full-time higher education experience of which one year needed to be at the nominating institution. Preference was given to those candidates who were working in programs or in an office that served Hispanic and other ethnic minority students.

The request for nominations was sent to the presidents of institutions of higher education in the northeast and Florida. Information about the project was also disseminated to regional and national professional organizations. During the second and third years of the project, alumni of the fellowship program also assisted with the recruitment of candidates.

The second phase of the selection process consisted of an hour long interview by members of the advisory committee, project staff and the two co-sponsoring professional organizations. In addition to the quality of the applicant, attention was given to several other factors: i.e. type of institution

(two-year, four-year, independent college), administrative or other work assignment of the applicant, sex and national origin (Appendix C).

Group Profile

The first year candidates in the program were recruited from colleges and universities in the states of New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania. Of the thirty candidates who participated in the first class (1984), thirteen came from higher education institutions in New Jersey, twelve were drawn from New York, and five received nominations from higher education institutions in Pennsylvania. Twenty-two fellows participated in the second year (1985) of the fellowship program. Nine came from New York institutions, four each came from the States of Connecticut and Pennsylvania, three were sponsored by New Jersey institutions. One candidate came from the State of Virginia, and another candidate was sponsored by an institution in Massachusetts. The membership of the third year fellowship class (1986) was drawn from six east coast states. Seven fellows were chosen from New Jersey, four fellows were nominated by institutions in New York, four came from Pennsylvania, and one came from Massachusetts, three were sponsored by Florida institutions of higher education, and three others were sponsored by colleges and universities in the State of Connecticut. Of the seventy-four fellows who participated in the fellowship program, thirty-four percent were drawn from the State of New York, thirty-one percent came from the State of New Jersey, and eighteen percent were accepted from the State of Pennsylvania.

Program participants reflected the demographic profile of the Hispanic community on the east coast. The majority of the fellows were of Puerto Rican descent (66%), followed by Cubans (12%) and Mexican-Americans (8%). With the exception of one candidate who claimed Spanish national origin, the rest of the participants (15%) included persons from Central and South America. Seventy-three percent of the fellows held full or part-time administrative/counseling positions. The majority of those engaged in full-time teaching (21%) were faculty members in foreign language departments. Of the 74 fellows, 40 had doctoral degrees and 34 had earned a master's degree. Participation in the fellowship program was almost evenly divided by sex, with thirty-eight females and thirty-six males (Appendix D).

Project Budget

The total budget received from the Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education for the three year project amounted to $210,778. An estimated $50,000 or more in direct and indirect costs was contributed by the New Jersey Department of Higher Education during the three-year grant period. Direct costs included salaries, wages and employee benefits, for the director of the project, program officer, project coordinator, and secretarial assistant. Other costs included the use of consultants who were responsible for preparing materials and leading training sessions during the summer and winter institutes. The consultants were paid $150 per day plus travel expenses as determined by Department fiscal policies and procedures. The expenses incurred to hold the two institutes represented a sizable portion of the budget. The budget covered the room and board for all the participants as well as the three staff members. The six day summer institute, for example, cost $6,957 in 1984, $6,605 in 1985 and $7,345 in 1986. The decision to hold the summer institute at Princeton University rather than at a hotel conference center kept the costs of the institutes at a reasonable level. Other items in the budget included materials, supplies, books, printing, telephone and postage. Indirect costs for the project were calculated at 3.9%, as required by state fiscal regulations. The expenses in connection with attendance at a national higher education conference were all borne by the sponsoring institution. These included transportation, hotel room and board, conference registration fee and one year's membership in the American Association for Higher Education and the Hispanic Caucus.

Program Evaluation and Outcomes

Both formative and summative evaluative data was collected from all three fellowship classes. The purpose of the evaluation process was two fold: First, it sought to assess whether program participants had attained new knowledge, skills, and attitudes as a result of their experiences in the training program. Second, it sought to determine the overall effectiveness of the training institutes in meeting individual needs and programmatic objectives. The feedback obtained from each class permitted program staff to make programmatic modifications which were needed in any of the program components, or in the improvement of instructional practices and procedures.

Quantitative and qualitative data were obtained from a 9-page questionnaire. The questionnaire was constructed to elicit information from the fellows regarding their perceptions of the program. The questions incorporated in the evaluation instrument were all derived from the program content. The questionnaire consisted of three parts. The first part asked the respondents to assess their experiences by answering 26 items. A Likert-type scale was used for the first 16 items. The other 10 items were open-ended questions which also asked the respondent to check-off one of three responses (e.g. Yes, No, Unsure). The second part of the questionnaire focused on obtaining information on their overall reaction to the winter and summer training institutes. The third part of the instrument was used as a pre- and post-training survey instrument. The pre-training survey was administered to determine the respondents' personal assessments regarding their level of knowledge in various areas. The post-training survey was conducted to ascertain what, if any, change(s) the fellows perceived to have occurred in their level of knowledge. Thirty-seven Likert-type scale items were used under 9 distinct categories. Each of the categories corresponded to workshop presentations at the winter and summer institutes and at the national conference. In addition, respondents were asked to provide information on any professional accomplishments which may have occurred during or after the fellowship year.

The questionnaires were sent to the fellows in the tenth month of the fellowship year, approaching the close of the fellow's participation in the program. By this time most of the fellows had completed their internships and approximately half had also finished their required written projects. The scope of the evaluation process focused primarily on ascertaining the short-term effects of the program (Appendix E).

Overall Program Effectiveness

The fellows reported that the program achieved the goals that it had promised. The internships promoted professional skills and career exposure. The training institutes expanded administrative perspectives and fostered knowledge about administrative skills necessary for career development. The skills workshops led to increased professional understanding, enhanced self-perception, greater awareness regarding development of self-support systems, and other skills related to professional and personal effectiveness. Participation in the fellowship was also reported to have fostered Hispanic perspectives and expanded concepts about what Hispanic faculty and administrators can achieve.

The questionnaire data also indicated that the program achieved other important results which were highly valued by the fellows. The internships did more than provide career exposure. They increased self-confidence, provided first-hand administrative experiences, and insights on the policy level decision-making processes. The institutes promoted network development and professional "contacts" as well as stimulated heightened career motivation, a sense of renewal and professional validation. The skills workshops were noted as having a positive effect on self-confidence and also fostered an enhanced sense of professional potential. Both administrative and interpersonal skills were reported expanded and strengthened. In sum, participation in the fellowship program appeared to have contributed to some outcomes that prior educational and professional experiences had not produced. The program appeared to have an impact on outcomes that the fellows rated as important. Participation in the program did make a difference, over the short-term, supplementing the traditional administrative and faculty experiences in many important ways.

There is some evidence to suggest that, in addition to the individual and group benefits, participation in the fellowship program may have contributed to career changes, promotions, and other work related opportunities. The information which was collected on the accomplishments of participants was limited to the voluntary reports of individuals.

Of the 30 fellows in the 1984 class, eight were promoted and four received awards, including one Fulbright and one ACE fellowship. The nomination to the ACE fellowship program was a result of the fellow's performance in the Hispanic Leadership Program. After the ACE fellowship program the candidate left her position as a faculty member and accepted the post of Associate Dean of Faculty at CUNY. Of the 22 fellows in the 1985 class, two were awarded tenure, one was promoted and another left a faculty position in New York to accept an administrative post with the New Jersey Department of Higher Education. Of the 22 fellows in the 1986 class, three were promoted from an assistant to associate administrative post, one was granted a leave of absence to head a federally sponsored international education agency, two were appointed to direct task forces on behalf of Hispanic and other minority students, one fellow decided to pursue doctoral studies, and was accepted at Pennsylvania State University (Appendix F, G, H).

Summary and Conclusions

The Hispanic Leadership Project was conceived as a vehicle whereby Hispanic faculty and administrators could be prepared in higher education management skills. It allowed participants to become aware of the cultural dimensions which affect leadership roles. The program permitted participants to benefit from a series of training sessions and activities while they remained employed at their respective institutions. It helped to create new career paths into all levels of higher education administration.

The financial and moral support which the New Jersey Department of Higher Education provided were key elements in the successful implementation of the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program. The cooperation of the American Council on Education and the National Woodrow Wilson Fellowship Foundation were also key elements in its creation and development. The evaluative process contributed to the fine tuning of the program at every stage.

Participation in the fellowship program enabled some fellows to move on to administrative positions. It also contributed to the promotion of some fellows within their institutions. The training sessions and the opportunity to attend a national higher education conference gave them greater access to a wide array of higher education issues and concerns. The program allowed fellows to interact with other Hispanic administrators and faculty, enabling them to compare experiences and share information. For the majority of the fellows the communication and cultural dimensions components of the group training sessions provided them with a unique opportunity to assess their personal and career goals in higher education administration.

PROGRAM HANDBOOK

PREFACE

On behalf of the New Jersey Department of Higher Education, the co-sponsoring organizations and all those involved in the planning and implementation of the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program, I would like to congratulate each of you on becoming Hispanic Leadership Fellows. Your being selected as a fellow in this highly innovative program is further recognition of your professional accomplishments and your commitment to higher education as well as to the Hispanic community.

Your fellowship year will be a busy one, combining intensive administrative training with concurrent employment. The training institutes will focus on such topics as management, budgeting, communication, and other areas of higher education administration. So as to address the needs of your institution while maximizing your professional and personal growth, you and your mentor will be able to tailor the rest of your fellowship year.

The benefits from the program are mutual. Both you and your home institution will gain from your acquisition of more comprehensive skills, your greater knowledge of the issues in higher education, and your more extensive understanding of the policy-making process.

Let me once again congratulate you on having been selected to participate in the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program. I hope that your fellowship year will be both professionally and personally rewarding.

PROGRAM HANDBOOK

I. INTRODUCTION

The information contained herein is designed to serve as guidelines for the Hispanic Leadership Fellows and their mentors during the fellowship year. It is crucial from the outset that both the fellow and the mentor understand the goals of the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program as well as the objectives of each of the program's components. In addition, the fellow and the mentor should be aware of their respective roles and responsibilities as it is the mentor and the fellow together who shape and determine the fellowship experiences. Therefore, this handbook describes the program's various activities and also suggests how the mentor may best help the fellow fulfill all the requirements of the program and have a truly successful fellowship year.

Whereas it is essential that the fellow have the mentor's full support and cooperation in order to derive the greatest benefits from his/her fellowship experience, the fellow must realize that his/her experiences are in large part his/her own responsibility: the fellow profits from his/her participation in the program in direct proportion to the amount of effort expended.

II. PURPOSE AND GOALS

The Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program has been developed and implemented by the New Jersey Department of Higher Education in cooperation with the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation and the American Council on Education. The program, with support from the Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education, is specifically designed to improve both the skills and the status of Hispanics currently employed by postsecondary educational institutions in the 17 states that comprise the East Coast. The short-term goal of the program is to afford Hispanic faculty and administrators the opportunity to develop and upgrade administrative skills while continuing to work full-time at the institutions where they are employed. The long-term goal of the program is to enable Hispanic faculty and administrators to assume top-level administrative positions where they will affect and implement policies that have direct impact on Hispanics seeking a higher education.

III. NEED

The need for a program such as the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program has been established by the growing numbers of both Hispanic faculty and administrators and Hispanic college students. In order to address the needs of the steadily increasing Hispanic college student population, many Hispanic faculty and administrators have assumed leadership roles for which they may not be adequately trained, skilled, or experienced. Thus, through attainment of both the short- and long-term goals, the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program is developing a cadre of highly skilled Hispanic professionals prepared to assume top administrative positions in colleges and universities.

IV. CANDIDATES AND PROGRAM COMPONENTS

The Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program is an annual year-long program which combines several training components with concurrent employment. A maximum of thirty candidates is accepted into the program. The program places a priority on training Hispanics, but any applicant working in a program or office that seeks to serve Hispanics will be considered for candidacy. In addition, the candidate must have at least a master's degree and a minimum of three years of full-time higher education experience, one year of which must have been completed at the nominating institution. Candidates also must either demonstrate administrative potential or indicate a definite interest in administration.

The program seeks to address the needs of the fellows and encourages the development and/or refinement of skills in management, communication, budgeting, and decision-making, with special emphasis on pragmatic application and cross-cultural dimensions.

There are four components to the fellowship program: the training component, the short-term internship, the written project, and the mentor/fellow relationship.

A. The Training Component

The training component of the fellowship consists of participation in two Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program training institutes, a four-day institute held in February and a week-long institute in July. The fellows are also expected to attend and participate in the national conference of the American Association for Higher Education in March. In addition, fellows will have the opportunity to attend and participate in other fellowship-sponsored activities.

In order to promote each fellow's successful completion of the program requirements and to ensure his/her maximum benefit from the fellowship experience, certain policies have been established. Each fellow is expected to attend and participate fully in the two training institutes and the American Association for Higher Education's national conference. In the event that a conflict in scheduling should arise, it is the fellow's responsibility to notify the program director.

B. The Short-term Internship

The internship is an integral element of the fellowship as it provides benefits for the fellow, his/her home institution, and the host institution as well. The internship is to last a minimum of two-weeks. A two-week block of time is recommended for the internship as it provides the fellow with ample time to observe and study his/her area of interest within the host institution and to begin to understand the daily activities of the host mentor. However, realizing that scheduling such a block of time may be impossible, the two weeks of the internship may be divided up into segments after consulting with the program staff. It should be kept in mind that a fragmented internship may not provide as much value or continuity as one of a single time period.

In order to ensure the fellow's maximum development during the program, the mentor will help the fellow select the site and focus of the short-term internship. Since one of the goals of the program is to strengthen and enhance the leadership skills of the fellow, the mentor must be sure that the internship concentrates on a specific field of administration. The mentor and fellow may consider an internship with a top administrator in another institution or with a state education agency official whose daily activities present valuable learning opportunities for the fellow. Other possibilities for the internship include working with a foundation officer or with an administrative officer in a national professional organization. The crucial point is to make sure that the person under whom the internship is served is a top-level administrator.

To guarantee the success of the internship, the program staff strongly recommends that an explicit statement of objectives to be accomplished within a definite time period be drawn up and agreed upon and signed by the mentor, the fellow, and the person under whose tutelage the internship is to be carried out. The Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program staff should receive a copy of this signed agreement.

The mentor is responsible for assuring that both the fellow and the home institution receive direct and positive benefits from the fellow's participation in the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program and the internship. The benefits from the program and the internship are mutual because the fellow returns to the home institution with more comprehensive skills and greater knowledge of issues in higher education and the policymaking process.

Before beginning the short-term internship, the fellow and the mentor must make sure that the internship will provide valuable experiences for the fellow. The program staff urges the fellow and the mentor to progress systematically through the following seven stages before actually beginning the internship.

1. Self-analysis

The fellow should analyze his/her skills and interests as well as his/her personal and career goals in order to best determine the type of experience to be acquired during the internship. Also to be decided is the type of host institution, the exact dates of the internship, whether full- or part-time, and geographical restrictions. When contemplating institutions, the fellow and the mentor should only consider educational institutions of a similar nature. That is, if the fellow's home institution is in the public two-year sector, it is strongly suggested that the fellow and the mentor only include institutions of the same sector on the list of potential host institutions. Other factors to be considered include the location and setting of the institution, the size and composition of the student body, and the range of academic programs offered.

2. Information Gathering

The fellow will gain many insights into the internship by consulting colleagues, other faculty and administrators, and former as well as current Hispanic Leadership Fellows. Such information will more than likely help the fellow answer all the questions he/she may have. Colleagues should be consulted when considering institutions for the internship as they may have had previous experience at one of the institutions being considered. Other faculty and administrators as well as colleagues may be able to provide the fellow with names of institutions that have special programs in the area of interest or they may know which institutions would serve as models in the area of interest for the home institution. Other Hispanic Leadership Fellows, both past and current, are good sources of information especially when discussing topics for the internship and institutions. The fellow and mentor should make a special effort to contact a past fellow whose area of interest or internship institution was the same as that being considered by the fellow. Another matter to be discussed with past fellows is their impression of what makes an internship an especially positive experience.

3. Focusing

After taking into consideration all the information from self-analysis and from the consultations, the fellow will have an overabundance of data at his/her disposal. It will be necessary to narrow down the field of choices and to focus on specific answers to the questions asked during self-analysis. It is recommended that the fellow write down all his/her preferences and objectives pertaining to personal and career goals to be attained, type of administrative experience to be gained, kind of educational institution to be visited during the internship, and exact dates to be reserved for the internship. These variables should be considered by the fellow and the mentor in narrowing down the field of host institutions and the administrative areas to be studied.

4. Personal Contact

Upon completing a mutually satisfactory list of institutions and administrators, the fellow should contact the people on the list and request specific information relating to the proposed goals of the internship. Making a personal visit to the potential host institutions is strongly suggested.

5. The Decision

After the contacts and visits have been made, the fellow should discuss his/her findings with the mentor. The host institution, host mentor, and administrative field to be studied should be decided upon mutually by the mentor and the fellow and should be presented in written form to program staff for approval.

6. Arrangements

Before finalizing arrangements for the internship with the host institution, the specific details must be submitted in writing to and approved by the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program staff. Upon receiving staff approval, the mentor and fellow may proceed with finalizing arrangements with the host institution.

7. The Internship

When the fellow actually begins the internship, he/she will want to remember every detail of the new experiences provided by the internship. Keeping a journal is an excellent way of remembering the salient features and the most valuable aspects of the busy days of the internship. The journal will also enable the fellow to determine whether his/her learning objectives are being met. Although most of the daily activities will directly involve the fellow, many other important activities will be constantly going on around the fellow. Detailed notes on people, events, problems, and the environment may prove invaluable to the fellow. First impressions of the people and the institution provide the fellow with a base from which to compare subsequent occurrences and may actually help the fellow later to understand and make sense of the institution and/or its organization and daily routine.

8. Evaluation

After having completed the internship, the fellow will write a short report evaluating his/her experiences. Although there is no specific format to be followed, there is certain information the fellow will want to include, such as the host institution, the host mentor, the focus of the internship, and the dates of the internship. The fellow may also want to briefly describe the host institution as well as his/her responsibilities during the internship. As the report is an evaluation of the specific internship, daily activities need not be detailed. The purpose of the written evaluation is to assess the experiences in terms of the fellow's goals. The fellow should determine whether his/her goals were accomplished during the internship.

C. The Written Project

The written project is another requirement made of all the fellows in the program. The mentor, once again, plays a vital role in the fellow's successful completion of this component of the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program. By helping the fellow choose a pertinent issue relating to academic administration, the mentor ensures that both the fellow and the home institution mutually benefit from the written project. The issue examined by the fellow should be relevant not only to the home institution, but also to other institutions of higher education and/or the Hispanic higher education community. The written project should be worthy of subsequent publication, thus further enhancing the status and visibility of both the fellow, his/her home institution, and the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program.

Unlike the written evaluation of the internship, there is a specific format to be followed in preparing the written project. The fellow should follow the guidelines in the third edition of the Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association, published in 1983.

D. The Mentor/Fellow Relationship

The importance of the mentor and his/her role during the fellowship year cannot be emphasized enough. The mentor is crucial to the fellow's successful completion of the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program. Either the president of the home institution or a top academic official designated by the president will serve as the fellow's mentor. The mentor must be someone who can and will devote sufficient time and energy to truly help and guide the fellow during the fellowship year.

It is vital that both the fellow and the mentor be fully cognizant of their responsibilities during the fellowship year. The mentor must understand the purpose and objectives of the program so that he/she can truly support the fellow. The mentor should apprise others in the college administration, especially the top officials, of the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program, of the fellow, and of his/her participation in the program. Such information will not only explain the fellow's presence and facilitate his/her work, but will also serve as an announcement of the mentor's full support of the fellow. It is the mentor's responsibility to assist the fellow in searching out opportunities for professional development and to help him/her realize full potential as a leader in every sense of the word.

The fellow must recognize the significance of his/her position: he/she will necessarily be placed in the spotlight on his/her own campus, a situation that will afford the fellow opportunities that otherwise may not have been possible. The fellow must realize that he/she will only benefit from the program if he/she is willing to devote the time and energy to make the most of his/her new visibility and access to new people, situations, and opportunities.

V. LEARNING CONTRACT

Although an open working relationship between the mentor and the fellow is desirable, there should also be a formalized and explicit statement of the objectives of that relationship. The success of the fellowship year and the mentor's and fellow's participation in the program is largely determined by the fellow's stated objectives. The proposed goals must be expressed as explicitly as possible and arranged in logical order with completion set within a realistic time period. In addition, it is the fellow's responsibility to inform all parties directly affected, including department colleagues and chairpersons, deans and mentors, of the requirements of the program. The fellow must be certain that both his/her department and the university/college understand the time commitment involved: the fellow should be guaranteed sufficient time off from normal duties/responsibilities in order to be able to successfully complete all the requirements of and participate fully in all the activities of the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program.

The program staff strongly recommends that the fellow develop a learning contract in which he/she details the objectives of the fellowship year. The learning contract is a written agreement between the fellow and the mentor. Any changes in the content of the contract will have to be negotiated between the mentor and the fellow; all changes must be mutually acceptable. The following learning contract format is suggested not only as a formalization of the mentor/fellow relationship but also as the principal guide for the short-term internship and the written project as well. The fellow should also consider having a written plan detailing his/her overall goals for the entire fellowship year.

The following sample learning contract suggests the type of information that should be included.

VII. FELLOWS' COMMENTS

The following quotes are from 1984 and 1985 Hispanic Leadership Fellows. These candid remarks serve not only to confirm the success of the first two years of the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Programs but also to justify continuation of the program beyond the 1986 fellowship year.

"The Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program is the finest professional growth experience that I have had since I completed my doctorate. The training institutes, the participants and the other Hispanic Leadership Fellows all combined to create a highly invigorating environment which produced the most rewarding intellectual and professional experience of my life."

"The Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program is a way to open up society to Hispanics without giving up quality standards . . . we are a bridge to the future."

"Higher education is a way to create the intellectual progeny we are engendering in our demographic time bomb."

"For me, the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program was instrumental in breaking a feeling of social and professional isolation in higher education by providing me with greater visibility within my own institution and in higher education in general. Also, it has provided me with a very extensive support network of fellow Hispanics similarly situated in their respective institutions. Finally, as a result of my participation in the program, I have found doors, previously unknown and/or unopen, suddenly accessible to me."

"I recommend the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program to my colleagues in academe as an outstanding example of quality and excellence. In my opinion, it recognizes and fulfills a need. That is, the program prepares Hispanic professionals to work in academic administration at a time when it is projected that Hispanics will be present in ever increasing numbers in colleges and universities throughout the nation."

"The internship experience was most rewarding and challenging because it provided the opportunity for me to explore a realm that had not been accessible to me previously."

"The Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program is a superb mechanism to learn about academic administration in a competitive but, at the same time, collegial environment."

"My experience as a Hispanic Leadership Fellow has given me a perception of the role and importance of administration and an opportunity to better form my career goals."

"Through my participation in the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program, I now feel more secure and knowledgeable in my own position. I can predict problems and seek appropriate strategies to solve them. It makes things easier since I now have an insider's point of view."

"It has been an incredibly rewarding experience to have been part of the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program. The program gave me not only the chance to develop leadership and administrative skills, but also the opportunity to meet and interact with some of the most spirited and talented young professionals in higher education."

"The Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program provided me with several advantages: First, since I am a faculty member, it allowed me the opportunity to explore the possibility of pursuing a career in academic administration. Second, it introduced me to a valuable network of bright, enthusiastic individuals who have been identified as leaders in higher education. Finally, it better prepared me to assume my responsibilities in the American Council on Education (A.C.E.) Fellowship Program."

"This program made it possible for me to consider areas other than college administration for my own professional development. I would not have been as open to a policymaking role in a state department of education had it not been for the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program."

"For me it was really important to find a group of peers, colleagues who are Hispanic, so that I could discuss issues in higher education and how these issues affected us from the point of view of our culture. In finding this group of colleagues, developing a support group was important."

"The Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program represents a singular opportunity for those identified as possible Hispanic leaders to receive the kind of training that will enable them to develop the skills and administrative background so that they may be ready to accept advancement opportunities."

September 5, 1985

Dear Colleague:

Enclosed you will find materials describing the New Jersey Department of Higher Education's Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program. With the continued increase in the Hispanic college student population, Hispanic educators are accepting administrative assignments either as full-time administrators or as faculty with time reallocation to head instructional or student services programs. Because few institutions offer formal or informal training for these new administrators, the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program has been developed to provide intensive training in basic areas such as budgeting, management, administration, and communication with emphasis on the cultural aspects of each. The training is scheduled so that the fellows may continue to work full-time while completing the program's requirements.

The Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program is currently seeking nominees for its third fellowship class. This year the program is expanding beyond last year's five-state area to include candidates from the entire East Coast. The recruitment drive is twofold: direct contact with institutions of higher education in several states and contact through higher education associations and consortia with headquarters in other East Coast states. You may participate in this expansion effort by disseminating the enclosed letter and application materials to the appropriate people within your organization; that is, candidates must be nominated by the president of the employing postsecondary educational institution or by the chief executive officer of the employing state educational agency.

Thank you, in advance, for your cooperation and assistance. Should you have any questions, please do not hesitate to call me at (609) 292-6835.

Sincerely,

Virginia P. Rojas
Director

International Education

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

September 5, 1985

Dear Colleague:

The Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program, a highly innovative program and the first of its kind in the nation, is currently seeking applicants for the third fellowship class. The program is designed to afford Hispanic faculty and administrators the opportunity to develop and/or refine their administrative skills through intensive training institutes and an internship. The first two years of this program were extremely successful: the evaluations and comments from the fellows as well as from the presidents who sponsored them have been overwhelmingly positive and encouraging.

As a direct result of the outstanding ratings received, the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program has continued to grow. The first fellowship class was composed of Hispanic faculty and administrators from postsecondary institutions in New Jersey, Pennsylvania and New York. Fellows from Connecticut, Massachusetts and Virginia as well as from the original three states comprised the second fellowship class. The third year class will consist of fellows from the entire East Coast.

The continued growth of the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program parallels projections made based on the 1980 census data which indicated approximately 15 million Hispanics in the United States. The projections for the year 2000 estimate that 11 percent of the nation's population will be Hispanic. These data, together with the considerably lower median age of the Hispanic population, have significant implications for higher education as Hispanics will comprise an increasingly larger percentage of the traditional college-age population. The Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program will identify Hispanic leaders who will greatly enhance their institutions' ability to respond to the needs and demands of both the Hispanic students and the job market. (Please refer to the enclosed program brochure.)

As chief executive officer of your institution, you know the administrators and faculty members who have demonstrated administrative potential and who are committed to serving the changing college student population. Therefore, I am inviting you to nominate candidates and to facilitate their participation in the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program. Tuition and on-site expenses associated with the two training institutes will be paid for out of grant monies. The home institution is expected to assume the travel and accommodation expenses associated with the final interview, attendance at the national conference of the American Association of Higher Education and participation in the closing ceremony. Your institution will also pay the costs of travel to the two training institutes; the total cost is estimated at between $1,500 and $3,000, depending on your location. Such an amount represents a minimal investment when compared to the long-term benefits for both your institution and the Fellow as well as for the current and future students.

In addition to the home institution's financial commitment, you will also want to make a time commitment to the fellow. The first training institute is four days in February; the second institute is one week in July. The fellow will also need sufficient time to research and develop a written project, worthy of publication, on a topic in higher education administration that will help the fellow to grow as an administrator. Another component of the program, the short-term internship, requires a time commitment. The fellow is expected to serve an administrative internship of at least two weeks' duration at an institution other than the home institution. The fellow/mentor relationship is an element of the program that also must be considered in the time commitment. You, as the chief executive officer of your institution, will either serve as the fellow's mentor or designate a top academic official as mentor. The mentor is crucial to the fellow's successful completion of the requirements of the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program. The mentor must be someone who can and will devote sufficient time and energy to ensure that both the fellow and the home institution profit from the program.

Upon selecting your nominee(s), please complete Form #1 and return it at your earliest convenience. Should you nominate more than one candidate, please duplicate the enclosed materials. The application packet, consisting of the multi-page Forms #2 and #3, is to be completed by the applicant, his/her immediate supervisor and two other individuals who can assess the applicant's professional potential and recommend him/her for the program. Please note that the deadline for receipt of all three forms is November 1, 1985. Should you have any questions, do not hesitate to call Virginia P. Rojas, Director of the Office of Bilingual and International Education, at (609) 292-6835.

I am sure you will concur with me that the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program will provide your eligible faculty members a unique opportunity to improve both administrative skills and the potential to advance professionally.

Sincerely,

T. Edward Hollander
Chancellor TEH

QUESTIONNAIRE

Thank you very much for responding. As you know from the cover letter, this questionnaire is meant to provide information which can assist us with assessment of the program. Data from this questionnaire can give insight on what was accomplished in light of what was expected. In addition, though, we are also interested in learning about any unintended consequences of the program. It is our experience that many positive aspects of programs, and some of the more troublesome, negative aspects, are unintended. Therefore we are willing to look for all effects, goal-related or not, and we appreciate your sharing with us any and all relevant information.

I. Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program Information

Kindly assess your own experiences within the fellowship program in light of your original statement of objectives.

Using a scale of 1 to 5, where 1 represents no new knowledge and 5 represents much new knowledge, please indicate which skill(s) you have refined or strengthened as a result of the fellowship program.

2. Have you become more knowledgeable about how to increase your chances for getting your work published?	5	4	3	2	1
3. Have you become more knowledgeable about how to gain visibility in professional organizations?	5	4	3	2	1

PREFACE

I am pleased to introduce to you the 1983-84 Hispanic Leadership Fellows. Their professional accomplishments have identified them as disciplined scholars and practitioners, committed to the improvement of higher education while continuing the challenging task of providing meaningful contributions and leadership to the Hispanic community.

The Fellows successfully competed in a rigorous selection process which included a review of their qualifications, professional experience, and career aspirations and an interview process conducted by representatives from the American Council on Education, the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation, the Hispanic Higher Education Coalition, and representatives from the national Hispanic higher education community.

The professional development training experience offered by the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program will enable the Fellows to function more effectively on their home campuses, serve as role models for students and colleagues, and move into the mainstream of higher education administration. Ultimately, however, the real impact will be on the growing population of Hispanic college students. They will benefit from the improved ability of the higher education system to respond to their needs brought about by the Fellows' active participation in the overall policies and governance of their institutions.

On behalf of the Department and the co-sponsoring organizations, I invite you to join us in congratulating the 1983-84 Fellows and wishing them success in all their future endeavors.

INTRODUCTION

The Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program has been funded by the Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education, United States Department of Education, and is being sponsored by the New Jersey Department of Higher Education in cooperation with the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation and the American Council on Education.

The Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program is designed to identify a select group of Hispanic faculty and administrators currently employed by colleges and universities in New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania who have the potential of moving into top or middle management positions. Each year, thirty Fellows will be chosen to participate during the course of the academic year in a training program to develop skills in management, communication, budgeting, and decision-making, with emphasis on practical applications and cross-cultural dimensions.

PREFACE

I am pleased to present the 1984-85 Hispanic Leadership Fellows. They are disciplined scholars and administrators committed to the improvement of higher education and to the challenging task of providing meaningful contributions and leadership to the higher education community.

The selection of the fellows is rigorous. Among the criteria considered are the candidates' professional experiences and their career aspirations as well as the extent to which the candidates meet the stated qualifications set forth by the program. The 1984-85 finalists were interviewed by representatives from the American Council on Education, the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation, the Hispanic Higher Education Coalition, the 1983-84 Hispanic Leadership Fellows, and from the national Hispanic higher education community. This year, there are 22 fellows representing 20 institutions of higher education in the states of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Virginia.

In response to the current and projected increase in the Hispanic college student population, the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program affords Hispanic faculty and administrators the opportunity to develop and improve their administrative skills while continuing to work full-time at the postsecondary institutions where they are employed; ultimately this will enable them to assume top-level administrative positions where they will affect and implement policies that have direct impact on Hispanics seeking a higher education. Thus, through the attainment of its short- and long-term goals, the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program is developing a cadre of highly skilled Hispanic professionals prepared to assume top administrative positions in colleges and universities.

On behalf of the Department and the co-sponsoring organizations, I invite you to join us in congratulating the 1984-85 fellows and wishing them success in their future endeavors.

T. Edward Hollander
Chancellor
Department of Higher Education

INTRODUCTION

The Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program has been developed and implemented by the New Jersey Department of Higher Education in cooperation with the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation and the American Council on Education. Initial support for the program was secured from the Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education.

The first program of its kind in the nation, the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program is a year-long program that offers intensive training in specific areas of higher education administration such as management, budgeting, communication and decision-making, with special emphasis on pragmatic application and cross-cultural dimensions. In addition to the formal training, the fellows are able to tailor their fellowship year, not only to their own needs but also to those of their home institutions. The fellows serve as interns, for at least two weeks, under top-level administrators at host institutions. The fellows also submit written projects that address particular areas or issues in higher education administration. The fellows' mentors assist in selecting the topics for the internships and the projects and, aside from serving as role models, provide the fellows with both the opportunities and the means to seek out professional development at their home institutions. The mentors help their fellows realize their full potential as leaders in the higher education community.

The program is designed to identify Hispanic faculty and administrators, currently employed by postsecondary institutions in selected states, who demonstrate the potential and the desire to move into middle or top administrative positions in higher education. Each year a maximum of 30 fellows will be chosen to participate in this highly innovative training program.

On the basis of their qualifications, professional experience and career aspirations as detailed in their application packets and personal interviews, 23 fellows were selected for the 1985 fellowship class. The members of this second-year class are faculty and administrators from public and private, two- and four-year colleges and universities in New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Virginia. These Hispanic Leadership Fellows come from diverse backgrounds and represent such varied fields as student services, humanities, education, social work, and health sciences.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The planning and implementation of the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program is the result of the collaborative efforts of many people. The time and expertise which these individuals so willingly gave to help plan the program and/or select the fellows are greatly appreciated.

DIRECTORY

PREFACE

I am pleased to present the 1985-86 Hispanic Leadership Fellows. They are disciplined scholars and administrators committed to the improvement of higher education and to the challenging task of providing meaningful contributions and leadership to the higher education community.

The selection of the fellows is rigorous. Among the criteria considered are the candidates' professional experiences and their career aspirations as well as the extent to which the candidates meet the stated qualifications set forth by the program. The 1985-86 finalists were interviewed by representatives from the American Council on Education, the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation, the Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education, the Massachusetts Board of Regents of Higher Education, the 1983-84 and 1984-85 Hispanic Leadership Fellows, and the national Hispanic higher education community. This year, there are 22 fellows representing 20 institutions of higher education in the states of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Florida.

In response to the current and projected increase in the Hispanic college student population, the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program affords Hispanic faculty and administrators the opportunity to develop and improve their administrative skills while continuing to work full-time at the postsecondary institutions where they are employed; ultimately this will enable them to assume top-level administrative positions where they will affect and implement policies that have direct impact on Hispanics seeking a higher education. Thus, through the attainment of its short- and long-term goals, the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program is developing a cadre of highly skilled Hispanic professionals prepared to assume top administrative positions in colleges and universities.

On behalf of the Department and the co-sponsoring organizations, I invite you to join us in congratulating the 1985-86 fellows and wishing them success in their future endeavors.

T. Edward Hollander
Chancellor
Department of Higher Education

INTRODUCTION

The Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program has been developed and implemented by the New Jersey Department of Higher Education in cooperation with the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation and the American Council on Education. Initial support for the program was secured from the Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education. The program is designed to identify Hispanic faculty and administrators, currently employed by postsecondary institutions in selected states, who demonstrate the potential and the desire to move into middle or top administrative positions in higher education.

The first program of its kind in the nation, on its third year of conception, the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program is a year-long program that offers intensive training in specific areas of higher education administration such as management, budgeting, communication and decision-making, with special emphasis on cross-cultural dimensions of administration. In addition to the formal training, the fellows are able to tailor their fellowship year, not only to their own needs but also to those of their home institutions. The fellows serve as interns, for at least two weeks, under top-level administrators at host institutions. The fellows also submit written projects that address particular areas or issues in higher education administration. The fellows' mentors assist in selecting the topics for the internships and the projects and, aside from serving as role models, provide the fellows with both the opportunities and the means to seek out professional development at their home institutions. The mentors help their fellows realize their full potential as leaders in the higher education community.

On the basis of their qualifications, professional experience and career aspirations as detailed in their application packets and personal interviews, 22 fellows were selected for the 1986 fellowship class. The members of this year's class are faculty and administrators from public and private, two- and four-year colleges and universities in New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Florida. These Hispanic Leadership Fellows come from diverse backgrounds and represent such varied fields as student services, humanities, education, social work, and health sciences.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The planning and implementation of the Hispanic Leadership Fellows Program is the result of the collaborative efforts of many people. The time and expertise which these individuals so willingly gave to help plan the program and/or select the fellows are greatly appreciated.
