ABSTRACT

This report summarizes legislative activities in states that enacted bills and resolutions relating to Native Americans in 1991. Conflicts between states and the Indian tribes within their borders were the subject of significant legislation in 1991. In all, 220 bills and resolutions were introduced in state legislatures; 77 passed and 20 are still pending. The bills address a variety of issues and resolutions, including repatriation of Indian burial remains, gaming, taxation, education, the use of peyote in Indian religious ceremonies, organization of Indian commissions and state-tribal committees, water rights, law enforcement, fishing and hunting, land development, housing, economic development, health care, and Indian crafts. Several factors are commanding increasing legislative attention to Native American affairs: (1) the tendency of the Supreme Court in recent years to render decisions unfavorable to tribal interests; (2) an increased number of Native American state legislators; (3) the delegation by Congress of federal regulatory activities to the tribes; and (4) a heightened awareness of the contribution of Native Americans and greater assertiveness by Native Americans to exercise self-determination. Included are a state-by-state description of legislative activity and the number of Native American legislators in each state. The appendix contains summaries of all enacted and pending legislation, by state. (KS)

1991 State Legislation Relating to Native Americans

Conflicts between states and the Indian tribes within their borders were the subject of significant legislation in 1991. States authorized new cooperative agreements between agencies and tribes in a variety of policy areas, including law enforcement, hazardous and solid waste disposal, allocation of tax revenues, economic development, and allocation of water rights. In all, 220 bills and resolutions were introduced in state legislatures in 1991; 77 passed and 20 are still pending. The bills address a diverse variety of issues and resolutions, including repatriation of Indian burial remains, gaming, taxation, education, the use of peyote in Indian religious ceremonies, organization of Indian commissions and state-tribal committees, water rights, law enforcement, fishing and hunting, land development, housing, economic development, health care and Indian crafts.

Native American affairs are commanding increasing legislative attention due to several factors. One is the tendency of the Supreme Court in recent years to render decisions unfavorable to tribal interests. An example is the Duro vs. Reina case, in which the Court ruled that Indian tribes did not have misdemeanor criminal jurisdiction over non-member Indians. Several states, including Montana, Oklahoma and North Dakota, passed resolutions urging Congress to overturn this ruling, which it did in October 1991. Unfavorable court decisions have compelled tribes to turn to the political process and try to influence legislation at the state and federal levels.

Another contributing factor is the increased number of state legislators of Native American descent. At least 30 Native Americans hold office in 13 states (Alaska, Arizona, Georgia, Maine, Minnesota, Montana, New Mexico, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota and Wyoming). These legislators introduced the vast majority of bills and resolutions related to Indian affairs. To increase their visibility and effectiveness in state politics, some of these legislators formed the National Council of Native American Legislators in June 1991.

A third contributing element is the role of the federal government. Congress has explicitly given Indian tribal governments the authority to receive delegation to implement federal regulatory programs, which often puts tribes at odds with state regulators who fear weak enforcement by the tribal authorities. Likewise, the long history of inconsistent federal policy toward Indian people has left a patchwork of laws and treaties that have caused tension between states and tribes over issues of jurisdiction and sovereignty. State legislatures are often the arena for resolution of these disputes.

A final factor (there are no doubt others) is a heightened awareness of the contributions that Native Americans have made over the centuries to the United States, coupled with a greater assertiveness on the part of American Indian tribes to exercise their legitimate right to self-determination. A growing sense is emerging among enlightened policymakers that Indian tribes deserve respect as legitimate partners in the governance of America.

This report summarizes legislative activities in states that enacted bills and resolutions relating to Native Americans. A state-by-state description follows. The Appendix contains summaries of all enacted and pending legislation, by state.

Alaska

A bill extending the deadline for certain provisions of state law that governs the inheritance and transfer of stock in corporations set up under the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act was enacted. Seven other bills failed, including one to require a curriculum for native language education. Alaska has three senators and six representatives of Native Alaskan heritage serving in the Legislature.

Arizona

Arizona considered 15 bills and resolutions on Indian affairs. The seven that passed include new authorization for Arizona tribes to receive state loans for wastewater treatment facilities, authorization for county-tribal agreements for joint exercise of county land use regulations, and deletion of a state certification requirement for tribal peace officers who meet certain standards. Resolutions passed urging Congress to protect tribal religious use of peyote, overturn the effects of Duro vs. Reina, maintain current levels of health service for Indians, and to erect a monument honoring Native Americans. Three Native Americans serve in the Arizona Legislature one senator and two representatives.

California

Seven pieces of legislation were examined by California lawmakers. An important compromise was reached between the state and tribes seeking to site hazardous waste or solid waste treatment and disposal facilities on tribal lands. AB 240 requires that the California secretary for Environmental Protection convene negotiations, on request of a tribe that is considering a proposal to construct a hazardous waste or solid waste facility, in order to reach a cooperative agreement to regulate the facility. The agreement must contain provisions that are functionally equivalent to those provided under applicable state law. Requirements are set forth for the approval and enforcement of such cooperative agreements. The bill seeks to avoid jurisdictional conflicts by giving tribes a chance to adopt regulations that are "at least as protective of public health and safety and the environment as provided under state law."

California also passed a law requiring that all Native American human remains and associated grave artifacts be repatriated. Notable legislation that died in committee would have created a nonvoting position in each house to be held by an indigenous California American Indian representative.

Georgia

A bill held over until the 1992 session would further protect human remains and burial objects through a variety of prohibitions. An Indian Burials Consultation Committee would be established to issue permits for appropriate disturbance of burial grounds of American Indians. Procedures are proposed to ensure compliance with permit requirements. One legislator of Native American heritage sits in the Georgia House of Representatives

Hawaii

Hawaii this session established a process for redressing the claims of individuals affected by the Hawaiian Home Lands Trust and the Native Hawaiian Public Trust. A claims panel was established to evaluate individual claims and issue an advisory opinion regarding such claims. The panel is responsible for disbursing any compensation awarded by the 1993 and 1994 Legislatures.

In addition, a law was passed to provide for repatriation of Native Hawaiian human remains and retrieval of such remains from the Smithsonian Institution and other federal museums. In all, seven of 12 bills and resolutions passed.

Idaho

Idaho asked a joint House-Senate committee to review Indian affairs and address important issues of state-tribal concern in a report to the 1992 session of the Legislature. Native Americans' sacramental use of peyote in religious rites was authorized in law, as was the right of enrolled Indian fisherman lawfully exercising their fishing rights to sell steelhead trout. The Fort Hall Indian Water Rights Agreement of 1990 was also ratified by the legislature.

Kansas

Pending for the 1992 session is legislation in the House Judiciary Committee to permit any recognized Indian nation to petition the Secretary of the Interior for retrocession of all or any part of the federal criminal jurisdiction delegated to the state over certain criminal matters that occur on Indian land. The bill sets forth requirements for tribal assumption of jurisdiction.

Maine

Maine is unique among the states with its longstanding policy of tribal (nonvoting) representation in the House of Representatives by one member each of the Penobscot and Passamaquoddy tribes. The Legislature passed bills to lower license fees for high-stakes bingo in "Indian Territory," to enable Penobscot natural resources staff to make decisions regarding the use of "gill nets," and to extend reciprocity in certain judicial matters to the two tribes relative to activities of the state district court.

Legislation pending for the 1992 session would give the Penobscot Nation greater flexibility and power to manage land within the Penobscot Indian Territory. It would allow certain state review powers over Penobscot territory by the Maine Land Use Regulation Commission and provides for development of remedial measures in land use situations with adverse impacts.

Massachusetts

Two bills are pending in the Massachusetts General Court; one would create public housing authorities for tribes to carry out low-income housing projects and the other relates to fishing and hunting by members of Indian tribes.

Michigan

The Michigan Legislature adopted a resolution commemorating November 1991 as "American Indian Heritage Month."

Minnesota

HF 1125 enables the Mille Lacs Chippewa Band to conduct law enforcement on its original reservation if certain requirements such as tort liability and officer training are met. The bill also requires the band to enter into a mutual-aid cooperative agreement with the Mille Lacs county sheriff.

Nine other bills did not pass, including those dealing with educational assistance, Chippewa rice marketing, family preservation programs, composition of the state gaming negotiators' team, alcohol and drug abuse assistance program, and unemployment compensation. Minnesota has elected one Native American senator.

Mississippi

Mississippi added legislative members and a Department of Wildlife appointee to the Dancing Rabbit Creek Treaty Advisory Committee. Also, money was appropriated to the Department of Education for the Chickasaw cession counties for lands they lost through sale by the state. A bill to require consistency with the state capacity assurance plan for hazardous waste facility siting on Indian lands did not pass.

Montana

Montana, with three Native American legislators (one senator and two representatives), considered 31 bills and resolutions and adopted 23 of them. The Legislature ratified the water rights compact between the state and the Northern Cheyenne tribe. It also passed HB 1012, which requires negotiations between the state and tribal governments for collection of cigarette sales tax from non-Indian purchasers of cigarettes on Indian reservations. The goal is to avoid dual taxation through a revenue-sharing arrangement. Another bill, HB 819, promotes state-tribal cooperation in economic development through appointment of one tribal representative to the governor's Tourism Advisory Council. SB 428 provides for negotiation of cooperative agreements between the state and tribal governments for the allocation of motor fuel taxes to tribes that set tax rates the same as the state's. An interim study of taxation issues is to be conducted by the Revenue Oversight Committee. (HJR 53)

Other enacted legislation includes funding to enhance the success of American Indians in higher education, new procedures for appropriate and respectful treatment of human remains, new rules governing imitation Indian arts and crafts, a monument at the state capitol honoring Native Americans, a voter referendum on of requiring the appointment of one Native American to the state Board of Regents, and hiring preferences for Indians for state projects on reservations.

Resolutions urged Congress to change the name of the Custer Battlefield to Little Bighorn National Monument, called for congressional reversal of the Duro vs. Reina ruling and recognized Native American contributions during the Quincentennial celebration.

Nebraska

The Unicameral Legislature changed the membership of the Commission on Indian Affairs and altered the per diem and term length. Pending for 1992 is funding for the Nebraska Indian Community College and legislation to authorize the governor to negotiate state-tribal compacts on gambling. Federal law requires such compacts when Class III gaming is undertaken by tribes.

Nevada

AB 507 allows Indian tribal governments to tax non-cigarette tobacco products and prohibits the state Department of Taxation from taxing the same products sold on an Indian reservation. Two resolutions passed, one commending Congress for temporarily overturning Duro vs. Reina, and another calling for the return of certain artifacts from the Museum of the American Indian in New York City.

Three bills that did not pass included one to allow tribes to tax motor fuels in lieu of state and local taxation another to authorize cooperative agreements between state agencies and Indian tribes on the regulation of hunting, fishing and water-based recreation; and a third to relinquish state claims to portions of the bed and banks of the Truckee River within the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation, and to certain land under and surrounding Pyramid Lake.

New Jersey

A bill pending in the New Jersey Senate would create the New Jersey Commission on Indian Affairs.

New Mexico

Twenty-seven bills and resolutions were considered in New Mexico in 1991. However, only three became law. HB 595 appropriates $300,000 for the state to contract with the Institute of American Indian Arts to promote Indian arts and culture. HB 742 allows the state treasurer, if authorized by a joint powers agreement, to make short-term investments on behalf of Indian nations or tribes. SB 567 clarifies what are genuine Indian-made articles and makes other changes to the Indian Arts and Crafts Sales Act.

Legislation that did not pass addressed Indian tourism development, liquor control regulations, money for at-risk Navajo students, law enforcement funding assistance, corrections counseling, a study of revenues and services relative to Indians and Indian lands, educational opportunities, peyote usage in Indian religious rites, the impact of Duro vs. Reina, road construction for the Navajo Nation, a monument honoring Native American Vietnam veterans, and increased interstate and international trade for Indian tribes and pueblos. New Mexico has one Native American senator and six representatives.

New York

Native American affairs are addressed by 11 bills pending in the New York Legislature. Six of these are significant to state-tribal relations. A 4413 would set up an independent Office of Indian Relations to facilitate coordination of state programs that provide services to Indian people and to improve relations between the state and Indian nations and tribes. The governor of New York established by executive order an Office of Indian Affairs reporting to the governor with functions similar to those contained in A 4413. A 3737 would provide authority for the Shinnecock Tribe to enter into an agreement with a fire protection company in South Hampton. A 4789 allows enrolled members of an Indian tribe located wholly within the state to fish, hunt and trap off the reservation.

A 5021 authorizes the state, without admitting liability, to hold harmless from damages property owners who have lost property interest as a result of a successful claim of an Indian tribe. A 7468 establishes a process for reporting discovery of human remains and determining if they are of Native American origin. A 8497 provides funds for the Seneca Nation lease settlement for Salamanca.

North Carolina

Legislation was passed in North Carolina to add a member to the Commission on Indian Affairs from the Meherrin tribe. Also considered was a bill providing membership to the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians on the Regional Solid Waste Management Authority and making tribes eligible for loans from the North Carolina Solid Waste Management Capital Projects Financing Authority.

North Dakota

The Legislature appropriated funds to the Indian Affairs Commission and, among other changes, gave the commission authority to encourage and propose agreements between the federal, state and local agencies and the several Indian tribal governments. Specifically authorized were state-tribal agreements to perform administrative services. Also passed was a resolution encouraging Congress to give Indian tribes jurisdiction over criminal misdemeanors of all Indians on Indian reservations (overturning Duro vs. Reina) and to review the Indian Civil Rights Act to ensure that the constitutional rights of all Indians are protected. North Dakota has a senator of Native American descent.

Oklahoma

Bills were enacted in Oklahoma to fund the Indian Affairs Commission and to establish procedures for officer designations for the Joint Committee on State-Tribal Relations. A resolution commended Congress for temporarily affirming that tribes do retain criminal misdemeanor jurisdiction over all Indians in Indian country. Bills that did not pass addressed religious use of peyote, Indian arts and crafts, and Native American tourism. One senator is an enrolled tribal member.

Oregon

Oregon appropriated funds for its Commission on Indian Services and increased the number of members from 12 to 13. Also enacted was HB 3039 that allows for an affirmative defense for the crime of manufacture, possession or delivery of peyote if used in bona fide religious practices. A bill calling for negotiations with the Confederated Tribes of the Umatilla Indian Reservation over upstream storage on the Umatilla River did not pass. One legislator of Native American descent serves in the Oregon General Assembly.

Pennsylvania

The Legislature passed a resolution to make the last week of August 1991 Native American Awareness Week.

Rhode Island

Rhode Island is examining two bills to authorize Indian housing authorities.

South Dakota

Three pieces of legislation passed in South Dakota during 1991. HB 1402 provides for special motor vehicle license plates to identify tribes located in the state. SB 262 gives authority to the State Department of Revenue to enter into cooperative agreements with Indian tribes for the collection of taxes and fees. SCR 13 declares the commitment of the Legislature to the reconciliation process between Indians and non-Indians. Two Native Americans serve in the South Dakota Legislature--one in each house.

Utah

The Division of Indian Affairs in the Department of Community and Economic Development was restructured. Also set up were the Utah Indian Cooperative Council and the Utah Dineh Committee. The Dineh Committee will direct expenditures of federal money received by the state on behalf of Navajo Indians living in San Juan County. The former Task Force on Indian Affairs was repealed.

Washington

Washington examined 12 bills and resolutions during the 1991 session, one of which passed. HB 1940 authorizes the appointment of a local Indian child welfare advisory committee to serve as the required citizen review board in foster care cases involving an Indian child. A bill pending for 1992 would revise the criteria for selecting recipients for the American Indian Endowed Scholarship and appropriates funds for the award. Legislation that did not pass concerned hunting and fishing privileges, legislative review of gaming compacts, water resource management and higher education. Also not passed was a bill providing for four non-voting Indian delegates in the state Legislature to represent tribes.

West Virginia

The Legislature passed a bill requiring the governor to declare the week before Thanksgiving as Native American Indian Heritage Week.

Wisconsin

Wisconsin considered a package of five bills relating to Native American affairs. Included in the package were bills to set up a comprehensive economic development program on Indian reservations, to acknowledge Indian sovereignty and to set up protocols for state-tribal interaction, to recognize the legitimacy of tribal court proceedings and the acts of tribal legislatures, to pay for the distribution of educational materials on the Chippewa Indians' hunting and fishing rights and to increase the amount of Indian student assistance grants to $2,200 per year. The governor vetoed the package except for the bill addressing tribal court and tribal legislative proceedings.

Wyoming

One bill passed in Wyoming that continues the assignment of $500,000 from interest earned on funds in an oil and gas tax protest account to the Bureau of Indian Affairs school on the Wind River Reservation. Another bill addressing priority water rights on the Wind River Reservation failed to pass. One Native American currently serves in the Legislature.
