The National Conference of State Legislatures serves the legislators and staffs of the nation's 50 states, its commonwealths, and territories. NCSL was created in January 1975 from the merger of three organizations that served or represented state legislatures. NCSL is a bipartisan organization with three objectives:

- To improve the quality and effectiveness of state legislatures,
- To foster interstate communication and cooperation,
- To ensure states a strong, cohesive voice in the federal system.

The Conference has offices in Denver, Colorado, and Washington, D.C.

About the Author

This report was compiled and written by Kimberly A. Morin, a participant in the Council of Energy Resource Tribes' (CERT) summer internship program working at the National Conference of State Legislatures in Denver, Colorado. The CERT program offers undergraduate and graduate students a chance to spend a summer with a host company working on Native American issues, often on a project in their own field of study. This report on 1994 state-tribal legislation was Kimberly's main project during the course of her internship. She is studying geological engineering at the Colorado School of Mines. Her work was supervised and reviewed by James B. Reed, a program principal in the Energy, Science and Natural Resources Division at NCSL. Judy Zelio, a senior policy specialist at NCSL, provided the list of Native American legislators for the report.

Introduction

The idea of Indian tribal sovereignty has and continues to be confusing to most citizens of the United States. The term "sovereign" means to be completely self-governing and independent in foreign affairs. Although Native American tribes in this country are sovereign entities, the members of those tribes are also citizens of the United States of America and entitled to all the privileges associated with citizenship. Where this dual citizenship creates a problem is in dealing with the states in which the tribal lands are located. The states basically have no power over the tribal governmental entities, but they do have power and responsibility over individual members of the tribe. Because of these confusing and often conflicting powers and duties of the states and tribes, a great deal of legislation is proposed in the states to clarify and improve the relationship and preserve the rights of the states, the tribes, and the people of both.

Three hundred and forty-four bills were introduced in the state legislatures in 1994. Ninety-two of those acts were enacted and 20 are still pending. Hawaii, New Mexico and Minnesota considered the most Native American legislation, examining 84, 61, and 31 bills respectively. Major issues addressed by many of the states include tribal gaming; the preservation of sacred human burial sites; improvements in tribal education and retention programs; and the incorporation of American Indian language, history, and culture programs into all school systems. Several states also examined legislation concerning reservation matters of taxation, housing, civil and criminal jurisdiction, and requests for funding for many tribal improvement and education projects.

Included in this report are state-by-state summaries of 1994 legislation pertaining to Native American affairs, an appendix of all the bills proposed in each state, an appendix listing Native American state legislators, an appendix listing all the federally recognized tribes of each state and a listing of the Native American population by state. Table 1 shows the number of bills introduced in the states in various issues areas.

1994 State Legislation

Alabama

The 1994 legislature examined a bill to clarify and confirm the sovereign relationship between Alabama and the Choctaw Indians. It reaffirmed all federal and state acts and judicial decisions relating to the Choctaw Indians in the state and made all state and county agencies subject to those acts and decisions. This bill died on the Senate calendar.

Alaska

Alaska is unique in that it does not have tribes, but rather it has native corporations. Seven bills were proposed during this session that addressed issues of the corporations. One bill was signed by the governor dealing with the reinstatement of native corporations that had been involuntarily dissolved. It restores the rights, privileges, liabilities, and obligations relevant to a functioning corporation.

Included in the six bills that failed to pass were Senate and House companion bills that would have allowed noncumulative voting by the shareholders of the Native corporations under certain provisions. Two other bills identified the importance of native language, history, and culture programs in the educational system of Alaska. They proposed implementing native education programs that were locally relevant to an area to promote the preservation of native history and traditions.

The remaining two bills incorporate the issues of taxation and shareholders' rights. Shares of stock in native corporations would have been exempt from state and local taxation under provisions of HB 73. Finally, HB 501 would have given shareholders of the corporations the right to petition or mandate a vote concerning a matter of the corporation and established the process to do so.

Arizona

One House and one Senate memorial were adopted by the Legislature. The House memorial urged the United States Postal Commission to commemorate former vice president Charles Curtis with a postage stamp. It praises him for his dedication and service to the country and recognizes him as the first United States Senator of Native American descent. The Senate memorial requests the president of the United States and Congress to instruct the Indian Health Services Agency to fund the construction of the Dilkon Health Center and acknowledges the preparation for and need of the health center for the community.

Another bill that passed set the procedure and regulations for extradition of Indians by the state from tribal jurisdiction and by the tribe for Indians under state jurisdiction. A study committee on the taxation of non-Indian owned lands on tribal territory was formed. It is made up of 16 members representing state and tribal governments as well as the private sector. The committee's duty is to examine the effects of taxation on the non-tribally owned property in addition to the laws, policies, and economic impacts of such taxation. The formation of this committee was proposed in two separate pieces of legislation.

A Senate concurrent resolution was proposed to repeal a section of the Arizona Statutes pertaining to gaming activities. Both a House and Senate bill were also proposed on the issue of tribal gaming. One aspect of the bills was to incorporate charitable casino style gaming in the definition of legal gambling and another aspect allowed the governor to negotiate and implement gaming compacts with tribes. It also established a screening and evaluation process for gaming license applicants. The House and Senate bills each became law.

Bills that were not enacted would have repealed most of the 1993 act prohibiting casino gambling on Indian reservations as well as repealing the jurisdiction for enforcing anti-pollution laws on tribal territory. Other pieces of legislation that did not pass addressed using publication funds of the Indian Affairs Commission to commission its workshops and conferences, appropriating money for the San Carlos Apache Tribe for a water rights settlement, and allocating funds to the Navajo Nation. The funds allotted to the Navajo Nation were appropriated to the Department of Economic Security for the Oak Springs and Pine Springs facilities and other programs, to the Division of Emergency Management in the Department of Emergency and Military Affairs for tribal emergencies, to the Arizona Veterans' Service Commission for a cemetery, and to the Department of Water Resources for irrigation projects. All the funds allocated for these projects were to be matched by contributions from the Tribe.

Two Senate concurrent memorials that were not adopted requested Congress to fund crime prevention programs for Indian tribes and requested a promise from the president of the United States and Congress that the Indian Health Service Agencies would meet the health needs of the tribes.

California

The Legislature in California meets throughout the calendar year. As of August 9, 1994, six bills concerning American Indian affairs were being debated. AB 861, which was first introduced during the 1993 session, died in committee. It would have terminated the Native American Heritage Commission and would have reestablished rules and penalties for the use or destruction of sacred Native American sites. It stated that anyone unlawfully tampering with, possessing, or attempting to sell Native American artifacts or human remains was committing a felony punishable by state imprisonment. Moreover, it condemned any interference with the exercise of Native American religion as allowed in the state and federal constitutions.

AB 3775 and its companion bill SB 2009 nominated the governor as the state officer in charge of negotiating state-tribal gaming compacts. They would require the governor to present any proposed compacts to the Joint Committee on Rules for assignment to an appropriate committee and then to consider any comments that committee might have before executing the compact. Another bill is pending in committee that would repeal the Gaming Registration Act and implement the Gambling Control Act. It creates the Division of Gambling Control and the California Gambling Control Commission, which would be in charge of regulating legal gambling in the state.

The fifth bill debated by the Legislature dealt with interstate school attendance compacts. It empowered the Superintendent of Public Instruction to initiate compacts with bordering states that include reservation lands that are, in part, located within the state of California. These compacts would allow students to attend a school located in the bordering state and also set provisions, exceptions, and execution of the compacts. It is currently pending in the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Finally, a bill was introduced recognizing the Gabriellino-Tongva Nation as a historic tribe of the state and urging the president of the United States and Congress to do the same.

Connecticut

Ten bills and resolutions were considered in the state of Connecticut, only one of which passed. It allows the Legislature to approve or reject compacts set up by the governor with an Indian tribe or another state. Within 10 days of the execution of the compact, the House and Senate are required to meet in general assembly and either reject the compact with a majority vote in either house or may accept it by a majority vote in both houses. This bill was vetoed by the governor but was overridden by the Senate and the House and became a public law.

The other Senate bill introduced in this session dealt with the allotment of the Mashantucket Pequot funds. It would have set up the fund allocation process and would have allotted some funds to the Department of Economic Development for use in economic development programs.

The other bills considered identified a number of important matters: establishing a task force on Native American affairs, privileges and limitations associated with state-tribal compacts, and tribal law enforcement and judicial rights. The task force would have reevaluated the duties and funding of the Indian Affairs Council and studied any other matters pertaining to American Indians that may have surfaced. The defendant in Native American land claim cases could have pleaded the statute of limitations if HB 5842 had passed. Another bill relating to Indian land claims stated that tribes had to waive all claims against the state or any property owner before entering into a compact or agreement with the state.

A bill that failed would have allowed the governor to negotiate agreements with a federally recognized tribe in order to set up criminal and civil jurisdictional authority of both the state and the tribe on the reservation. Another House bill would have required the governor to study the impact of the compacts on the affected municipalities and Indian lands, taking into consideration such issues as taxation, education, transportation, public safety, and economic development. Still another House bill would have set aside money for the municipalities to respond to the federal government concerning a tribe's application for land in trust status.

Two joint resolutions were likewise proposed in Connecticut. One specified that a provision for compensation of municipalities that encompass Indian lands used for gaming should be incorporated into every proposal the governor prepares for the state. The compensation would have been for municipal tax revenue loss and other costs incurred by the gambling activities. The other asked the president of the United States and Congress to require the Department of the Interior to consider the impact on communities of the acquisition of land in trust status for a tribe before making any decisions concerning those applications. It requested that they consider the effect on municipal taxation, public safety, roads and highways, environmental concerns, education, and the overall quality of life of those in the community.

Florida

None of the bills relating to Native American issues in the Florida legislature passed. HB 1493 and its companion bill, SB 1220, specified July 1, 1994 as the date on which the current Creek Indian Council members' terms shall expire. It requested the governor to appoint 15 new members, eight to serve until January 3, 1995, and seven to serve until January 1, 1997, to the Council.

Another piece of legislation examined in 1994 addressed changing the election process for the Indian Trace Community Development District's Board of Supervisors. It established the first Tuesday in November as election day. Four-year terms were created with biannual elections starting in November of 1996. It assigned group numbers to the positions and decided which positions would be voted upon in which years. The third House bill presented during this session dealt with tribal access to criminal history records for purposes of tribal criminal investigations. It would have allowed access to records for background checks mandatory for employment by tribal education programs, daycare programs, law enforcement agencies, tribal government, and anyone having financial interest in or employed by a tribal gaming enterprise.

SB 264 would have provided for a written statement of qualification as a Native American in adoption cases. However, this bill, as well as SB 270, SB 506, and SB 2378, died, and a study commission on adoption was formed to review and evaluate adoption regulations and procedures. Before February 1, 1995, the commission must report its findings and suggestions to the governor, the Legislature, and the Supreme Court of Florida. The final bill considered by the Legislature proposed provisions and regulations for the operation of a pari-mutuel gaming facility on a Florida Indian reservation.

Georgia

None of the bills relating to Native American issues passed in the Georgia legislature. A bill to allow state recognition of the Southern Band of Cherokees and Creeks failed in the Senate Special Judiciary Committee; its companion House bill died in the Natural Resources and Environment Committee. The other Senate bill introduced would have created a tribal housing authority and set its duties and terms of office.

The remaining two House bills dealt with American Indian burial artifacts and sites. One specified the punishment for the removal of objects from the burial sites or other disturbance to the site. The other bill transferred the duties concerning American Indians from the Secretary of State and the Department of Archives and History to the Commissioner of Natural Resources and the Council on American Indian Concerns respectively. It also assigned duties to each party in dealing with Native American affairs.

Hawaii

Hawaiian natives are attempting to take back control of ancestral lands; one way this is being accomplished is through legislation addressing Native issues.

Although no House or Senate bills were enacted in Hawaii, several resolutions were approved by the Legislature.

Two resolutions were passed which dealt with the Office of Hawaiian Affairs. One asks the office to examine and improve the early childhood education system and the child care agencies serving native Hawaiians. Another urges trusts and foundations benefitting native Hawaiians to work more closely with the office to better serve its people.

Legislation was also adopted that addressed the incorporation or improvement of Native education programs in the state school systems. One requests the University of Hawaii to establish a Department of Hawaiian Studies and mandate a course in Hawaiian studies for graduation. Other resolutions which were accepted dealt with the Hawaiian Home Lands Trust and the state's trade policy.

A great number of bills presented in the Legislature failed. Issues addressed by those bills include the right of self determination, native land and water rights; traditional ceremonies on public lands; preservation of native Hawaiian language, art, and culture; and several aspects of native education.

Idaho

 An act providing residency status for members of the Coeur d'Alene Tribe, Shoshone-Paiute Tribes, Nez Perce Tribe, Shoshone-Bannock Tribes, and the Kootenai Tribe for state college and university tuition exemptions was signed by the governor on March 21, 1994. A Senate concurrent resolution allowing the state of Idaho and tribes within that state to enter into compacts to share lottery revenues from reservation sales was adopted by the Legislature in this session. However, a House bill addressing the issue of lottery revenues on tribal lands did not pass.

Other acts which were not enacted would have provided tax exemptions for sales on specified tribal lands by tribally owned businesses; transferred civil and criminal jurisdiction over motor vehicle use on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation to the Shoshone-Bannock Tribes and the federal government; and added a non-voting, governor-appointed tribal representative to the Idaho Fish and Game Commission as an advisory member. Companion House and Senate resolutions to approve a sales tax exemption compact between the Kootenai Tribe and the state of Idaho were also not adopted.

Indiana

 When the Legislature met in 1994, only one House bill concerning American Indians was discussed. The bill addressed the application of out-of-state teaching service to the teachers' retirement fund in Indiana. It incorporated service at an educational facility, overseen or run by the United States Bureau of Indian Affairs, in the definition of out-of-state service. This piece of legislation, however, did not allow credit for service as a teacher in an Indian school by the Department of the Interior before January 1, 1954, and it died in the House Ways and Means Committee.

Iowa

 An act pertaining to tribal gaming employee information passed the Senate but died in the House Judiciary and Law Enforcement Committee. This bill would have allowed tribal officials, tribal gaming commission members, and tribal regulatory agency members of federally recognized tribes to access employee background investigation data if the information was used for tribal gaming investigations and the tribe had laws or regulations that maintain the confidentiality of the employee information obtained.

Kansas

 HB 2142, first introduced in the 1993 session, was killed on January 14, 1994, by the House Committee on Federal and State Affairs. This bill provided definitions of several gaming terms, clarified what constitutes Indian gaming activities, authorized the governor to negotiate gaming compacts with tribes of the state of Kansas, and designated the Kansas lottery as the state gaming agency. Furthermore, it charged the state gaming agency with the duties of implementation, administration, and enforcement of the compacts.

Maine

 The Legislature enacted a law which establishes the Maine Indian Tribal-State Commission as part of the Maine Indian Claims Settlement. Also passed was an act amending the Passamaquoddy Tribe's territory. The act allots up to 100 acres of approved land in the City of Calais for the tribe, if the acquisition is confirmed by the city's legislative body and a gaming compact is agreed upon by the tribe and the state or if a court orders the state to negotiate.

The three bills that failed would have set rules for a gaming license for the Passamaquoddy Tribe to construct, own, and operate a casino in the City of Calais. Additionally, the bills would set up an excise tax to fund regulatory costs, law enforcement, infrastructure improvements and regional development.

Massachusetts

 The Massachusetts legislative session runs throughout the year; therefore, some Native American legislation is still pending in committees. One such piece of legislation would allow teachers who worked for VISTA or the Indian Bureau to apply that time as credible service in the teachers' retirement system. Another would empower the Deputy Commissioner of Capital Planning to obtain lands in the city of Quincy and the town of Milton. These lands are to be obtained either through eminent domain or by purchase of the land and will be used for the purpose of reservations and preservation of open space. In addition, it sets up the process of payment for the property acquired.

One bill concerning American Indian affairs presented during this session was placed into a House study order. It mandated a majority vote in both houses for tribal gaming compacts to be implemented and was placed in a study order for the Government Regulations Committee to examine. SB 503 was redrafted as SB 1684 and is currently in committee. It would create Indian housing authorities for the Mashpee Wampanoag Tribe and the Nipmuc Tribe to carry out low income housing projects for Native Americans. It establishes the governor as the liaison between the state and the housing authority and federal government, sets the areas of operation for each party, and creates the duties of those parties.

Two other pieces of legislation introduced during the 1994 legislative session have been placed in the Senate calendar for the next legislative session. They address exempting Indian housing authorities from environmental permitting and compliance fees and designating a section of State Highway Route 2 as the Gateway to the Mohawk Trail and erecting a marker.

Michigan

A resolution was adopted by the House of Representatives during the 1994 legislative session. The resolution acknowledges the Burt Lake Band of Ottawa and Chippewa Indians, also known as the Cheboygan Band, as a Michigan historic Indian tribe and realizes the tribe's importance in the history and culture of the state. It requests the United States Congress to reaffirm the Burt Lake Band of Ottawa and Chippewa Indians' status as a federally recognized tribe, thereby providing them with the same services as those available to all federally recognized tribes.

The other piece of legislation presented during this session set the minimum requirements for employment of law enforcement officers of an Indian tribe in the state. It sets up police officer certification under the Michigan Law Enforcement Officers Training Council Act of 1965 for tribal law officers in certain situations. These situations include deputization by the sheriff of a county in which the trust lands of the tribe employing the officer are located or that border the trust lands; appointment by an authorized state, city, township, charter township, or village as a police officer; or if the deputization or appointment is made pursuant to a self-determination contract. This legislation was enacted on June 12, 1994.

Minnesota

Many of the bills introduced in the Minnesota legislature have companion bills or are combined in Senate or House files with other pieces of related legislation for a committee to examine. A total of 31 bills, including companion bills, relating to American Indians were presented in the 1994 legislative session. Twenty-two of these bills were incorporated into eight files which became public law.

The first of those amended the law providing loans for Indian housing projects to disregard household income in their review and determination of a loan application. The second guaranteed any individual or government agency the right to file charges against persons disturbing burial sites within a two-year limitations period. The incorporation of American Indian tribal governments into the definition of municipality for the purposes of state fire aid programs was adopted in another piece of legislation. The fourth bill that was passed defined American Indian as a person "who is a member of an Indian tribe." This definition was used in the determination of an American Indian for tribally licensed program's eligibility for medical health care grants. Another set of companion bills that became law concerns individuals, estates, trusts, and corporations claiming the Indian employment credit. It negates salary expenses, not allowed because of the claims, from federal income tax returns.

An act providing the Minnesota Historical Society with funds to construct an American Indian history center and museum at an institution of post secondary education was also passed. It will allow the State to sell bonds for up to $2 million for the project if those funds are matched by $500,000 in nonpublic sources.

The next file contains three sets of companion bills dealing with Native American issues. One authorizes the Indian Affairs Council to nominate the state archaeologist, supervise his/her actions, and receive funds for those purposes. It also specifies the duties of the state archaeologist as a state agent responsible for the enforcement of the Field Archaeology Act. Another pair of bills in this file administers $300,000 to the Minnesota Amateur Sports Commission. The funds are to help offset the Minnesota Chippewa Tribe's expenses associated with hosting the 1995 Indigenous Games and are available for use only if matched by other non-public sources. The final Native American legislation in this file mandates the electric public utility company with overhead power lines in Indian Mounds Park in St. Paul to remove, relocate, or bury its power lines.

The last file enacted included two companion bill sets. The first requests the State Board of Teaching to decide whether to incorporate the study of anthropology, specifically the study of indigenous people of the Midwest and the Minnesota area in precolonial times, into the curriculum for preparing beginning social studies teachers. The curriculum of the teacher preparation program would include components of American Indian language, history, and culture. It also requires the Board of Teaching to develop learner outcomes on the language and tradition programs for graduates, in conjunction with Indian groups of the state. The second allows eleventh and twelfth grade students attending tribal contract or grant schools to apply and be eligible for post-secondary enrollment options program aid.

Bills that did not pass would have given the Indian Affairs Council the authority and funding to hire or contract with a professional archaeologist for the study and retrieval of Indian burial lands, funded investigations and background checks conducted under Indian gambling compacts, created an Indian elders position for the Minnesota Board on Aging, and established the Fond du Lac Community College in Cloquet to work with the tribal representatives in serving the education needs of Native Americans.

Finally, a companion bill set that was rolled into HF 3210 was vetoed by the governor. It would have allowed for the establishment of a 40-bed facility to house chronic stage chemically dependent American Indians as part of the comprehensive services plan for homeless American Indian people. It would have been established in coordination with affected neighborhood groups.

Mississippi

 Four bills were examined by the Legislature and none of them were enacted. An act failed which would have created a committee to evaluate the practicality of using a room in the New Capitol Improvements Complex to exhibit state contributions made by Native and African Americans to educate the people of the state about these traditions and cultures. It formed a six-member bipartisan committee to study and report on the feasibility of such a project. Other legislation that did not pass included removing Chickasaw school fund appropriations from the provisions for local revenue sources in equity funding of students.

Only one Senate bill during this session addressed Native American affairs and it was not enacted. It would have granted credit towards public employees' retirement for persons who taught at a tribal school on the Choctaw Reservation under specific certification and compensation regulations. A House concurrent resolution dealing with state-tribal gaming compact negotiations was not adopted by the Legislature either. It would have suspended deadlines for the drafting, examination and execution of state-tribal compacts.

Missouri

 Two House bills, neither of which passed, were presented in the Missouri legislature. One would have provided jurisdiction over and proper procedure for dealing with unmarked human burial sites. It established local law enforcement jurisdiction over remains that may have been involved in a legal investigation and state historic preservation responsibility otherwise. The bill set forth the procedure for trying to locate persons who can establish lineage from the individual whose remains are disturbed. If this process does not produce any results, the state historic preservation officer can investigate whether the remains have ethnic affinity or are of scientific importance. Finally, this bill would have set penalties for defacing, removing, or otherwise disturbing any unmarked human burial sites.

The second bill created the Missouri Indian Affairs Commission, a nine member, governor appointed commission, to serve as a liaison between the Indian people and the tribal, state, and federal government agencies. It established the length of terms; work requirements in terms of reports and research projects; and the goal of the commission to promote unity, purpose and understanding among the American Indian people in Missouri.

Nebraska

 Five legislative bills and resolutions concerning Native American affairs were presented in Nebraska. An act allotting $101,000 for purposes of law enforcement and jail operations for the benefit of American Indians was enacted. These funds are available for use by any county with federal government land held in trust for Indian people and will be equally divided between the areas of law enforcement and jail operations.

A bill establishing tribal government jurisdiction over wildlife resources on all reservation lands was postponed indefinitely in committee. It would have allowed the tribal government to set up its own regulatory and penalty provisions with respect to wildlife resources. However, the Government, Military and Veterans Affairs Committee of the Legislature will conduct an interim study on the sufficiency of the game and wildlife law enforcement provisions in several different situations. These include a study of non-Indian, nontribally owned lands on a reservation; of those same lands with which the state has no jurisdictional agreement, and of reservation lands in other states that have adopted policies concerning game and wildlife law jurisdiction. The committee will then propose ways to improve the game and wildlife law enforcement on reservations in the state.

Two other interim study resolutions were proposed. The Education Committee will study the need for a teacher preparation requirement of coursework on the history and traditions of American Indians and the tribes of Nebraska. The remaining study is over tribal gaming in the state and will be handled by the General Affairs Committee. Its goal is to assess the economic and social impact of gaming on the reservation and bordering communities, to examine the rights of the tribes regarding gaming, and to determine the amount of community support for such activities.

New Hampshire

A House Joint Resolution was adopted requesting the president of the United States and Congress to ask France to return the remains of certain Native Americans that were exhumed by Dr. Peter P. Woodbury and Dr. Freeman Riddle in 1821 and sent to the Museum of Natural History in Paris. It restated the possibility that part of the remains found were those of the great Chief Passaconaway, Sagamore of Penacook and praises the important contributions he made in creating strong tribal government and peace among all people. It also addressed the law which requires Native American remains to be removed from display and reburied, therefore urging the federal government to solicit the remains from France.

New Jersey

Designating the fourth Friday in September as Native American Day was proposed by Senate Joint Resolution 13. This pending resolution expresses the state's appreciation of the contributions made by Native Americans in its history; therefore, setting aside that day to honor and observe those contributions.

AB 1134 and its counterpart SB 398 deal with the formation of the New Jersey Commission on Indian Affairs. This commission would consist of the secretary of state and six bipartisan, public members appointed by the governor. It sets a two-year term length and mandates quarterly commission meetings. Some of the duties of the New Jersey Commission on Indian Affairs include implementing American Indian history and culture programs, serving as a resource center to the public on Native American heritage, assisting Indian groups in obtaining recognition from state and federal governments, and acting as a liaison between tribal, state and federal governments and cultural institutions. The commission members would not receive a salary but would receive compensation for expenses incurred from work for the commission.

All three of these pieces of legislation introduced in the 1994 New Jersey session are still pending. They are currently in the Senate State Government Committee.

New Mexico

The New Mexico Legislature examined more Native American legislation than any other state in 1994. A law was enacted creating a dual taxation task force and determining its membership terms, duties, and funding available to perform those duties. Another act that became law deals with providing funds to coordinate and update the DWI process among the local, state and tribal governmental agencies.

Several House memorials were adopted by the state. They include requests to the president of the United States and Congress for funding for projects such as an elementary school on the Mescalero Apache reservation, an agricultural science center on the Jicarilla Apache reservation, a new campus for the Institute of American Indian Arts, economic development on tribal lands, and for funding of tribal public safety programs. They also include requests for statewide recognition and support of the Native American election information program, for inclusion of tribal health care provisions in federal and state health care reform bills, for complete compliance of all federal agencies with the provisions of the Treaty of 1868, and for an intergovernmental accord strengthening state tribal relationships.

Although no Senate bills were passed by the Legislature, several Senate memorials were adopted. One urges the president of the United States and Congress to allocate money for the construction of the Navajo Indian irrigation project and for canal operations. Another memorial asks the federal, state, and tribal agencies to share their health care services in order to better serve all the needs of the citizens of New Mexico. The third memorial adopted requests the coordination of the state's and Navajo Nation's election days and polling places in order to accommodate more people and therefore promote greater voter participation in both.

Sixteen Senate bills concerning Native American affairs failed in the Legislature. Many of the bills were soliciting state funding for various tribal programs and projects. They include a water system for the Pueblo of Zuni, economic development activities among tribes of the state, a senior citizen meal center for the Navajo Red Rock Chapter, Indian mental health services, and development of a plan for the Eight Northern Pueblo Council. Money was also requested for tribal education needs such as recruitment and retention of Native Americans at the University of New Mexico, state agency internship opportunities, two liaison positions between the state education system and that of the individual tribes, and overall improvements to the tribal education system.

Funding of tribal projects was also the focus of several House bills which were not enacted. Requests for financial support of the Navajo emergency management service, medical investigations of deaths on tribal lands, home improvements, technical assistance services, implementation of a tourism and economic development feasibility study of Sheep Springs community, and American Indian retention programs at New Mexico institutions of post secondary education.

New York

 The New York Legislature meets throughout the year; only two bills addressing Native American issues have become law to date. One allows banks and trust companies the same extent of service authorized for national banks in relation to collateral to secure tribal deposits. The other allows eligible Native American students in post secondary education to receive financial assistance when their schooling extends beyond the normal period of study.

Two bills concerning American Indians are currently pending in the Assembly Codes Committee. The first bill empowers the police force of the Seneca Nation of Indians to make arrests for state law violations and then deliver the defendant into the custody of a state police officer; the second bill grants those same powers to the police officers of the Oneida Indian Nation of New York.

An act allocating a portion of the excess community services block grant funds of the state to Indian tribes and tribal organizations is still in its original committee. Other legislation that is pending in committee deals with more stringent regulations and care over Indian burial grounds and artifacts and addresses using an affidavit, signed by the chief of the Ramapough Mountain Tribe acknowledging membership in the tribe, as proof to correct a state birth certificate.

Oklahoma

 Nine pieces of legislation pertaining to Native Americans were introduced in the Legislature. SB 746 adds two non-voting members to the Indian Affairs Commission and modifies its annual meeting schedule and membership. It also creates the Native American Cultural and Educational Authority of Oklahoma and authorizes it to construct, maintain, repair, and operate a Native American cultural center, museum and theme park. The legislation contains provisions for the issuance of revenue bonds and for carrying liability insurance, as well as providing membership terms and employee compensation. It was approved by the governor on June 11, 1994.

Two House bills were enacted during this legislative session. The first bill addressed the issue of custody, foster care and adoptive care of Indian children. It requires the Department of Human Services to use the services of the Indian child's tribe and sets definite requirements and conditions relating to time periods and proper notification of the parties involved in adoption proceedings. The second piece of House legislation that was enacted amended Section 77 of Enrolled Senate Bill 896, which relates to the Indian Affairs Commission's appropriation from the state treasury to perform its duties. HB 2737 changes the allotment of monies from $182,056 to $172,262.

House bills that did not pass included making the Oklahoma State Bureau of Investigation responsible for monitoring and overseeing compacts pertaining to Indian gaming, reporting of tribal member vehicle registrations to the Oklahoma Tax Commission, appropriating $1,194 to the Indian Affairs Commission for personal services and $177,047 to function, as well as providing duties, employee compensation, and budgetary limitations for the commission. Senate measures that failed contained penalty and interest waivers by the Oklahoma Employment Security Commission for an employer which is a federally recognized tribe or nation, and providing reinstatement and compensation to tribes regardless of delinquent contributions.

Pennsylvania

The legislature in Pennsylvania is in session all year. Senate Bill 1636 is the only piece of legislation presented so far that relates to American Indians. This bill explicitly defines Indian organizations and Native American tribes indigenous to Pennsylvania. It sets up the process by which a group could petition for formal recognition as an indigenous tribe of the state or for certification as an American Indian institution. Furthermore, it confers powers and assigns duties to the Pennsylvania Heritage Affairs Commission in its reviewing of petitions for formal recognition or certification and delivery of their recommendation to the governor. Finally, this piece of legislation sets up the appeals process for the decisions made by the commission. It is currently pending in the Senate State Government Committee.

Rhode Island

Three resolutions were introduced in the 1994 legislative session in Rhode Island. The first requested the United States Assistant Secretary of Indian Affairs in Washington, D.C., and the Acting Chief, Division of Trust Services at the Eastern Area Office of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, to mandate compliance with all state and local laws by any entity which obtains federal land and requests "trust status." This resolution included Indian tribes and encompasses such issues as comprehensive land use plans and zoning laws and ordinances.

The other House resolution (8190) never made it out of the Committee on Finance; however, its companion bill, SR 2911, was enacted on February 17, 1994. These resolutions request the federal court of appeals to quickly make decision on the Rhode Island appeal of the district court decision which upheld the Narragansett Nation's right, as a sovereign entity, to construct and operate a casino.

South Dakota

Three acts were passed in the South Dakota legislature. The first of these acts appropriates $50,000 to the Board of Regents to fund the state Indian scholarship program. The second defines the terms "Indian" and "Indian handcrafted" for use in monitoring the authenticity of Indian arts and craft sales. The third act designates two working holidays in the state as well as setting aside funds to be used as memorial education grants for Native American students under specific terms. The working holidays designated by this act are Little Big Horn Recognition Day on June 25th and Wounded Knee Day of Reflection on December 29th.

One bill presented in this session failed to pass the House. It would have provided tuition waivers for members of Indian tribes of the state who were accepted into the University of South Dakota's school of law. The final bill introduced in the 1994 session that dealt with Native American affairs failed in the House State Affairs Committee. This bill reaffirmed the sovereignty of the tribes and the states and would have worked to improve the government to government relations of those sovereign entities. It would have established a stronger network and working relationship between the parties to deal with issues facing them both.

Tennessee

Five companion bill sets were examined by the Tennessee legislature, four of which became law. The first set requires placement of a "Native American Indian" box or blank on employment forms, education applications, or other documents requesting or demanding specification of ethnic origin. The second grants Native Americans eligibility for minority scholarships, grants and other benefits at any school system in the state. The third set of bills enacted designates the fourth Monday in September as American Indian Day and urges state and local participation in its celebration and observation. The final pair of companion bills permits the creation and use of Native American Indian cultural license plates as long as they meet state rules and regulations.

The bills not passed would have authorized the formation of a housing authority for Native Americans and set forth its duties and terms of office.

Utah

Three House bills were considered during the 1994 legislative session in Utah. A bill that dealt with the expenses of the Utah Navajo Trust Fund Board was enacted. It amended sections of Utah law to allow certain expenditures from the trust fund. The trust administrator may now apportion trust monies for per diem and expense reimbursement to the members of the Dineh Committee.

A health bill, proposed to amend the law that prohibits smoking in public places, did not pass. Its aim was to allow Native Americans involved in a religious ceremony of the tribe to smoke tobacco in their traditional pipe. Another bill that failed related to public education in the state. It would have held the State Board of Education responsible for the education of all persons under the age of 21 who were in the custody of an agency of a federally recognized Indian tribe. The Legislature would have been required to establish an education budget for the youth and the Board of Education would have appointed a coordinating council to set up the education program.

Virginia

A House Joint Resolution was adopted requesting the United States Congress to grant federal recognition to seven American Indian tribes in Virginia. The Chickahominy; the Chickahominy, Eastern Division; the Upper Mattaponi; the Rappahannock; the Pamunkey; the Nansemond; and the Monacan tribes have each been acknowledged by the Virginia Council on Indians and want greater autonomy and local authority to take care of their own affairs, as well as preserving their tribal cultures. Therefore, the Virginia House requested federal recognition status for these seven tribes in the state.

An act placing the Council on Indians under the direction of the Secretary of Health and Human Resources was approved on April 11, 1994. This act also made provisions for the council members to receive travel expenses to council meetings and for the appointment, by the governor, of a Native American council member as chairman.

Washington

Five of the 18 proposed bills in the state of Washington were enacted. The House bills that passed involved criminal jurisdiction on Indian lands, housing trust fund appropriations, and treatment of sexually aggressive youth.

HB 2159 grants the state authority to issue the Skokomish Tribe criminal jurisdiction over Native Americans for crimes on their tribal territory and trust status lands. The second House bill allows the state to assist federally recognized tribes in Washington with housing projects. The tribe must comply with the revenue and taxation laws applicable to them in order to receive funding. The third House bill enacted permits sexually aggressive youth in the custody of a tribe or subject to a tribal court within the state to receive funding for treatment. However, the funding is available to the tribe only if it uses equivalent definitions and standards for determination of the youth's sexual aggressive behavior and if the department solicits federal funding for youth treatment.

A Senate bill amending the residency status requirements for Native Americans for post secondary education tuition purposes became law. Another Senate bill incorporating tribal authorities into the mental health care systems also passed.

Two other House bills that failed would have allowed tribes to request the designation of special protection areas for groundwater in the state and would deny public access to tribal financial and commercial information under provisions of a tribal-state compact, except in specified instances.

A House concurrent resolution creating a 10-member joint committee on Indian affairs in the state was not adopted. Five members from each party, three representing the majority party, were to be nominated by the president of the Senate and the speaker of the House of Representatives respectively. Its purpose was to study the state-tribal relationship and methods of improving it, to educate the legislators and tribal leaders about each other's laws and governing systems, and to investigate the potential role of the Legislature in oversight and policy recommendations relating to the Centennial Accord.

Other bills that were not enacted during the 1994 legislative session addressed water resource planning, management and funding; recreational fishing, hatchery, and fishery matters; and clarification of the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act of 1988.

Wisconsin

An act giving tribal law enforcement officers the authority to enforce state laws and regulations concerning all people on the reservation became law. It also set forth the provisions and requirements necessary for obtaining and executing these powers.

The two other Assembly bills examined in this session each died in committee. The first appropriated $25,000 for a feasibility study of a visitor center, walking tour, or educational exhibit, in Vernon County, on the Black Hawk War. The second bill repealed medical coverage benefits provided under the Relief of Needy Indian Persons (RNIP) and required those people to apply for coverage under the new Health Security Plan proposed in the bill.

Two joint resolutions were also studied by the Legislature, but neither was adopted. One requested the public school systems of the state to examine their portrayal of Native Americans in team logos, mascots, and nicknames and get rid of any discriminatory or demeaning terms or names used. The other resolution recognized the environmental problems facing many Indian reservations and urged Congress to finance tribal environmental protection programs by implementing SB 654, which allocates money for that purpose.

Wyoming

The Legislature addressed only two bills in 1994 concerning American Indians, both of which became law. The first creates exemptions from motor vehicle county registration fees for the Eastern Shoshone and Northern Arapahoe Tribe members on the Wind River Indian Reservation or other specified Indian Country in the state. It also allocates $60,000 from the general fund to the state treasurer to reimburse the county treasurers for the exemptions. It was signed by the governor on March 22, 1994, and was effective on April 1, 1994. The other act extends full faith and credit to tribal laws and judicial decisions in the Wyoming state courts that meet explicit conditions. Those conditions are that the tribal documents meet specific authentication requirements, that the court judgement is valid and that the court is a court of record. This act became effective on July 1, 1994.
