INTRODUCTION

In today's society, understanding of law and the legal system have become more and more important in the operation of the education system and in social studies curriculum. This has led to an increase in law-related education programs developed, at all levels, for teacher information, and instruction of students.

This bibliography is designed to provide a partial list of material currently available in the Curriculum Resources Center (CRC) to enhance such programs. Materials listed include those books, curriculum guides, and media kits which deal directly with the various laws impacting upon education and/or the operation of the general legal system itself. Not included are materials which deal with the "structures" of the system, i.e. the various legislative branches of government, except for the court system which is covered.

The main index includes a full bibliographic listing of curriculum guides, media kits, student texts and workbooks and professional texts. The main index functions as an author index; items filed by title in this index have no identified author. An annotation is provided for each entry. The alphabetical publisher, subject or title indexes should be used to access items in the main index by source, topic or generic title.

Each entry in the main index is labeled with a shelf call label and an Index Code Number and used in the publisher, subject and title indexes of this guide.

This bibliography is divided into five (5) parts:

1. Main Index (Author/Title)
2. Publisher/Corporate Source Index
3. Subject Index
4. Title Index
5. Resource Organizations and Libraries

Facilities

The Curriculum Resources Center makes available a number of retrieval, research, and demonstration facilities. A recently added feature is the Microcomputer Demonstration Room. This facility affords Center users the opportunity to examine a sampling of microcomputer software available for use at the elementary and secondary school levels, as well as a variety of word processing and administrative packages.

Other facilities include: microfiche readers, study carrels, audiovisual preview equipment, computer terminal, card catalog, periodical index, topical bibliographies in education, and photocopy machine.

Use of the Center

All Rhode Island educators, as well as graduate and undergraduate students at Rhode Island College, may use the Center facilities and borrow items from the circulating collection for a two-week period. Selected materials, however, are restricted to on-site use.

The Collection

The Curriculum Resources Center houses a sampling of K-12 instructional materials which may be found in schools in Rhode Island, as well as a cross section of instructional material utilized in New England, other sections of the United States, and other English speaking countries. Professional literature in all teaching fields, related periodicals, and a small reference section are also available.

While the core of the collection focuses on subjects normally included in elementary and secondary school curricula, special collections representing area of current concern have been developed. The Center also contains a selection of textbooks of historical interest, dating from the mid-nineteenth century to the twentieth century.

In addition, the Curriculum Resources Center maintains extensive catalog files produced by publishers, manufacturers, professional associations, school departments, universities, and curriculum projects. These files provide patrons with information regarding media beyond that housed in the Curriculum Resources Center.

Services

The Curriculum Resources Center staff provides a wide variety of services to its patrons, including:

- Orientation to the collection and instruction in information retrieval.
- Consultation in curriculum development and IMC organization.
- Circulation of a major part of the collection for use by Rhode Island educators and pre-service teachers.
- Evaluation of instructional media through cooperative arrangements with schools and teachers.
- Referral service in information retrieval.
- Bibliographies of current acquisitions.
- Annotated bibliographies of new curriculum areas and topics of current concern in education.
