ABSTRACT

This guide contains two checklists for evaluating educational materials and classroom activities to ensure that they meet requirements for equity for all students. The first checklist is for teachers and administrators to use when evaluating instructional materials. It asks questions about the depiction of men and women, diverse cultural and racial groups, and the disabled and whether or not the materials avoid stereotypes. The second checklist is aimed at teaching strategies, asking a series of questions about the equity of teaching methods and teacher attitudes. (SLD)

Introduction

It is important that all students see themselves positively reflected in their curriculum, regardless of their gender, race, cultural background, or disability. Students who often feel alienated from the educational process, may soon question their own worth.

The educational program which reflects both genders, diverse cultural/racial groups and the disabled is one in which all citizens can see themselves and other groups. This educational equity concept applies to all areas of the school curriculum. The classroom provides unique opportunities for helping develop understanding for building trust and appreciation among students of different races, gender, abilities, and cultural backgrounds.

The North Carolina Board of Education is aligned with the federal legislation dealing with the prohibition of all types of discrimination. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 prohibits discrimination based on race, creed, color, gender, and national origin. The purpose of this document is to inform and guide school administrators and faculty when reviewing educational materials and classroom activities.

The intent of the equity evaluation/checklist is to provide a quality educational program for all students so as to achieve high student performance. This checklist for evaluating instructional materials and teaching strategies can be used by educational administrators and classroom teachers. The evaluation is applicable for current and projected materials/strategies throughout the school year.

Equity Evaluation for Instructional Materials

Yes

No

1. Are illustrations in textbooks, supplementary materials, audio-visual aids, and on the bulletin boards representative of the cultural/racial diversity in the United States as well as the roles open to men and women in today's society? Are disabled persons represented?

2. Are both women and men, diverse cultural/racial groups and the disabled shown in both active and passive roles?

3. Are the contributions and perspectives of both men and women, diverse cultural/racial groups, and the disabled included in all texts?

4. Is the information about men and women, the various cultural/racial groups and the disabled accurate?

5. Do the materials avoid reinforcing stereotypes about cultural/racial groups, men and women or the disabled?

6. Are members of diverse cultural/racial groups, both women and men and the disabled shown engaged in a broad range of social and occupational activities?

7. Are points of view concerning issues completely included? (Or, are only Anglo points of view or only those of one gender emphasized?)

8. Does the material include the contributions and involvement of women and men as well as cultural/racial groups at all points where it is appropriate and meaningful to do so?

9. Have multicultural, non gender bias criteria been integrated into the textbooks adoption process at the LEA?
