Barkley's left arm is consolingly draped over Godzilla's shoulder, and Barkley is saying, "Have you ever thought about wearing shoes?" In another version, the line goes, "The Lakers are looking for a big man."

♦ "We did all sorts of studies and finally accepted the fact that every once in a while Godzilla arrives and fills the channel up to the edge with water. We just did the research and stuck to the facts, and the facts were that communities along the river were suffering, they needed parks and open space and they also need to be protected from floods." Tensho Takemori, working with Frank Gehry to find ways to revitalize the Los Angeles River. Quoted in "Remaking The River That Remade L.A." by Michael Kimmelman, The New York Times Magazine, November 13, 2022. In the first paragraph of that article, Kimmelman mentions an incredible fact: At Long Beach, the 1938 flood exceeded the flow of the Mississippi at St. Louis! Eighty-seven people died. ♦ “The ability to perform so many tests on just a drop or two of blood was something of a Holy Grail in the field of microfluidics. Thousands of researchers around the world in universities and industry had been pursuing this goal for more than two decades, ever since the Swiss scientist Andreas Manz had shown that microfabrication techniques developed by the computer chip industry could be repurposed to make small channels that moved tiny volumes of fluids.” (Bad Blood: Secrets and Lies in a Silicon Valley Startup by John Carreyrou.)

♦ “We have grown up in a society that has always pursued the Holy Grail, the fountain of youth.” (Madeline Di Nonno, president of the Geena Davis Institute on Gender in Media, about ageism, particularly towards older female actors.)

♦ “The transhumanist holy grail is artificial general intelligence.”

♦ This refers to a cup or plate used by Christ at the Last Supper.

♦ A FUNNY CARTOON. Two medieval knights in armor are crossing a bridge, each one on horseback. The one knight is saying to the other, “Wait, the Grail is a cup? We’re looking for a cup?” (The New Yorker, October 11, 2021.)

♦ “This espionage charges are ridiculous.” (White House spokesperson Karine Jean-Pierre.)

♦ “I mean about 9,000 people were just hung, or executed, shot...” (Heard on NPR’s Weekend Edition Saturday.)

♦ The grammar of embedded questions has changed. The following is quite fascinating: “He’s always crying. He needs to remember who is his coach is?” A more typical example follows: “It’s an arms race to define what is antisemitism.” Luckily, academic analysis exists. See “Inversion in embedded questions,” Yale Grammatical Diversity Project English in North America, at ygdp.yale.edu/phenomena/inversion-embedded-questions.

♦ See also Award Abstract # 1423872. “The Microsyntax of Pronouns in North American English.” A four-year Federal grant for $285,951.00.

♦ The “time when” and “place where” distinction no longer seems to apply.

♦ “Want” and “like” are not ordinarily used in the continuous.

♦ The principal parts of verbs have been defenestrated.

♦ “Are you his teacher or wot? I would of thought (sic) that the grammar police had better things to do.” (An online commenter on a BBC HYS about a soccer match. The target of his comment had criticised a poster’s use of “would of” versus “would have.”)

♦ This sort of language has many possible explanations.

local signs ~ (Breaks Interstate Park, U.S.)

♦ “Throng of tourists came to see the men and their iron leviathans at work. They held their children up to see and hear the dynamite blasts. They came day by day to watch the limestone walls appear, running straight and true for miles, and to see great new canyons form in front of them, like one of the huge chasms out west that excited travelers were reporting having seen. This was becoming Chicago's Grand Canyon, and it was made by man. (The Chicago Sanitary and Ship Canal. From The Men Who United The States by Simon Winchester.)

♦ “When someone under the ice shines a flashlight, you see the flashlight in his hand and the spot where the light hits something, but you don't physically see the beam. There's nothing in the water to backscatter light. It's like you put a layer of ice seven feet thick across the top of the Grand Canyon and stepped through it. That's how you feel under Antarctic ice. As if you were hanging in space.” (An ice diver.)

♦ If you are interested in kayaking, see the Wikipedia entry for “Grand Canyon of the Stikine.” A whole book might be written comparing it to the Rhondu Gorge of the Indus in Northern Pakistan.

♦ The “Swiss Grand Canyon” is on the Vorderrhein.

♦ “You may have heard of tightrope walking, but have you heard of a slackline? Well, here it is, it's pretty much what you would expect, a rope that's not tight, but slack. Unsurprisingly, this is American Dean Potter. He is crossing this canyon in central China. It is 1,800 meters above sea level and you may have noticed he does not have a safety line.” (“US slackline walker Dean Potter crosses China canyon,” BBC video, 23 April 2012. Potter walked 40 meters across the Enshi Grand Canyon in China's Hubei Province on a slackline in just over two minutes. Slacklining is much more difficult than tightrope walking. See the Wikipedia article “Enshi Grand Canyon.” Another spectacular Chinese canyon has a Wikipedia entry, “Yarlung Tsangpo Grand Canyon.”)

♦ See Grand Canyon Colossal Mirror: The Term “Grand Canyon” as used in Geographical Nomenclature, Analogy, Metaphor, and Neology with an Appendix on Colorado River Nomenclature, compiled by Earle E. Spamer. It is an absolutely original, remarkable, free-to-all Raven's Perch Digital Production, 2022.)

♦ “1869. “Powell's men slid their four boats into the Green River on Monday, May 24, 1869... and would not emerge from their own unprecedented epic for ninety-eight days of nearly perpetual terror, hunger, cold, and wonder.” (The Men Who United The States by Simon Winchester. Powell was one-armed. He had lost his arm at the Battle of Shiloh, but that did not stop him from serving in battles right to the end of the Civil War.)

♦ “And five years after leaving the waters [the Colorado River] behind, in 1876, John Wesley Powell first wrote out the name Grand Canyon. He appears to have concluded that Big Canyon simply didn't do justice to the almighty crevasse he had seen and journeyed through, so he replaced it with a pair of words soon to be on every American's lips and not much later on the lips of most sentient English-speaking beings on the planet, as one of the great natural wonders of the world.” (The Men Who United The States by Simon Winchester.)

♦ Viva voce is Medieval Latin for "with a living mouth." If you hear something viva voce it means somebody told you. It has come to mean "word of mouth."

♦ Hawaii has the "coconut wireless" or the Coconut Wire. The Philippines have the Bamboo Telegraph. Ghanaians can hear things via "the talking drum." From time immemorial, as Ibrahim al-Koni tells us, the desert winds have brought rumors and reports to the Sahrawis: "I heard it on the wind." Americans can "hear it through the grapevine," or hear a report or account through the rumor mill. Italians say "per sentito dire" which basically means, "heard it said," and they hear gossip "voci di corridoio" which means "hall voice" or "voices in the hall." These systems operate by word-of-mouth, and, nowadays, the Internet.

♦ "From time immemorial, it has been said that desert winds carry with them all kinds of rumor and report—especially stories of scandal and outrage." (Gold Dust by Ibrahim al-Koni.)

♦ "They've got a gallows-bad reputation, but, you know what a place the beach is for talking." / "The beach, if you don't know is the name of the gossip mill of white derelicts and rough customers that hang around your South Sea island ports. You'll find captains and traders too fond of their grog and properly down on their luck. I'll admit, I was fond of the gin myself back then..." (The Beach of Falesa by Robert Louis Stevenson.)

♦ "You may take it for a fact that anything of this kind is not only noticed and discussed by a man's own race but by some hundred and fifty natives as well... [T]he news flew, in the usual mysterious fashion, from mouth to mouth, till Bisesa's duenna heard of it and told Bisesa." (The affecting and horrible story "Beyond the Pale" by Rudyard Kipling.)

♦ "You're sure you've took no 'arm?" cried Mrs. Cloke, who had heard the news by farm-telegraphy, which is older but swifter than Marconi's. / 'No. I'm perfectly well,' Sophie protested." ("An Habitation Enforced" by Rudyard Kipling.)

♦ "But I ain't one to gossip, so you ain't heard that from me." (Kim Wayans as the character Benita Buttrel from the 1990s "In Living Color" TV Series. Hilarious!)

♦ "Word around the campfire for me was...that there was at least speculation, maybe informed speculation, that..." (A sports analyst.)

♦ "The talk around town was that Pacino..." (Film celebrity gossip.)

♦ "When a professional golfer wants to pass along a rumor, he'll tell you that he heard it 'on the range'... The range, the one location where everyone in the sport gathers, is also golf's back room. Pre-round chat may concern course conditions, or who is sleeping with whose wife. Recently, the range has been preoccupied by one topic..." ("Sand Trap: Saudi money and Donald Trump roil 'the gentleman's game'" by Zach Helfand, The New Yorker, October 24, 2022.)

♦ "[The internet] is the modern world's equivalent of those bars in Donegal where rumors about the case used to circulate." (No Body Recovered, BBC Sounds, Episode 6. A missing child.)

♦ "Washington is a small town." (Washington, D.C. and the federal government, politics, etc.)

watery graveyard

Truk Lagoon is a ~ for hundreds of ships

♦ Between 1939 and 1945, 175,000 bells across Europe were taken by Nazi Germany. They were transported to collection points, known as Glockenfriedhofe, or bell cemeteries, the biggest of them in Hamburg. ("The seizing of Europe's bells" by Stephen J. Thorne, in Legion: Canada's Military History Magazine, November 21, 2018.)

♦ Cars, crushed flat and stacked on one another, were used to shore up sections of the riverbank. They can be seen to this day. (On the Tuckaseegee River upstream of Bryson City, North Carolina. And unusual kind of "auto graveyard.")

♦ "Lying on the beach beyond the glacier was wreckage that told of many ill-fated ships. We noticed stanchions of teakwood, liberally carved, that must have come from ships of the older type; iron-bound timbers with the iron almost rusted through; battered barrels and all the usual debris of the ocean. We had difficulties and anxieties of our own, but as we passed that graveyard of the sea we thought of the many tragedies written in the wave-worn fragments of lost vessels. We did not pause, and soon we were ascending a snow-slope heading due east on the last lap of our long trail." (South!: The Story of Shackleton's Last Expedition, 1914-1917 by Ernest Shackleton.)

Schumer could be ~ in claiming... (politics)

♦ The great old-style sports writer Phil Mushnick wrote that the NBA Commissioner Adam Silver was "whistling past the dump" by ignoring the thuggish behavior of NBA athletes. In the same article, he wrote, "Don't rain on his charade." At one time, sportswriters were real writers and masters of the language. This is no longer the case. The internet, which has ruined so many industries with its proud "disruption," has spelled the end of journalism in general and the golden era of sports writers in particular. Nowadays, much sports talk simply relates to sports betting, which seems to have been de-regulated, like drugs. The current zeitgeist seems to be just about money, fame, and diversity. The simple query, "How old is Phil Mushnick?" reveals nothing, nor does his Wikipedia entry, which has problems, answer that basic question. Odd indeed.)

♦ “I’m a romantic. I loved the old harbor with its working tugs, its decaying piers and vague sense of ruin. It was just so beautiful. The new version with all its parks is generic and sanitized—a ‘noose of green.’ It’s as if someone had an idea of how a waterfront should look and came up with a cookie-cutter plan for the whole city.” (Ben Gibberd, author of New York Waters: Profiles from the Edge. Quoted in “Wet and Wild” by Tony Perrottet, photographs by Gina LeVay, Smithsonian, May 2017.)

♦ “The global energy transition is set to trigger a 40-fold increase in lithium demand between now and 2040, per the International Energy Agency, and mining companies are competing to secure supplies. Many fear local communities in the Argentina Puna, home to some 50,000 people, will meet the same fate as those in Chile: seeing their resources pillaged and lands destroyed to serve richer countries—neocolonialism dressed up as a green revolution.” (“Lithium Mining’s Next Frontier” by Ciara Nugent, Antofagasta De La Sierra, Argentina, TIME, August 8/August 15, 2022.)

♦ "Teenage angst and apathy are not some novel social development. Every generation has its own version of hormonal uprising—and yes, the inevitable adult handwringing that goes with it." (Kirsten Fleming, New York Post.)

♦ "And when a relative novice gets put into a coma or worse, the hand wringing will start." (An online commenter on the Tommy Fury-Jake Paul boxing match.)

♦ "I felt no remorse or guilt that I had bombed the city." (Charles W. Sweeney, pilot of plane that dropped an atomic bomb on Nagasaki in World War II.)

♦ "I don't feel any guilt or blame about it. I think my view really is if we hadn't done it someone else would have. And it would be with us in any case." (Lilli S. Hornig, who worked on the Manhattan Project. From "The Bomb," PBS, 2015.)

♦ Edward G. Uhl helped invent the bazooka in 1942. It was devastatingly effective against German tanks, able to penetrate more than 4 inches of a tank's armor plate. General Eisenhower hailed the bazooka as one of the four "tools of victory" that won World War II. The others were the jeep, the C-47 Skytrain, and the atomic bomb.)

♦ "Afterwards, the President [President Truman] was heard to mutter, 'Blood on his hands, dammit, he hasn't half as much blood on his hands as I have. You just don't go around bellyaching about it.' He later told Dean Acheson, 'I don't want to see that son-of-a-bitch in this office ever again.' Even in May 1946, the encounter was still vivid in his mind, he wrote Acheson and described Oppenheimer as a 'cry-baby scientist' who had come to 'my office some five or six months ago and spent most of his time wringing his hands and telling me they had blood on them because of the discovery of atomic energy.'" (American Prometheus: The Triumph And Tragedy Of J. Robert Oppenheimer by Kai Bird and Martin J. Sherwin.)

♦ "In 1945, news reached the camps that the US now possessed the atomic bomb. According to Solzhenitsyn, this unexpected development gave hope to many prisoners, who began to pray for atomic war." ("On The Prison Highway, The gulag's silent remains," by Ian Frazier, The New Yorker, August 30, 2010.)

♦ "The wailing over Hiroshima finds no echo in Japan." (Isidor I. Rabi, in an article in the Atlantic Monthly, criticizing Military and Political Consequences of Atomic Energy by Patrick M. S. Blackett.)

Hannibal (American Hannibal, etc.)

“American Hannibal”

the sheer audacity won Arnold the title of the ~ (Quebec)

♦ According to historian John Julius Norwich, Hannibal led 37 elephants over the Alps, and Norwich notes that the Carthaginians must have had some secret way with elephants, as African elephants are generally considered to be untamable, unlike their Indian counterparts.

♦ David's painting, “Napoleon Crossing the Alps,” shows a rock with Hannibal's name inscribed on it.

♦ Hannibal is also associated with his great military victory over the Romans at the Battle of Cannae, a double envelopment that is still taught at military schools. However, he failed to follow up on his victory, which has become at least one definition of a “Hannibalic victory.”

♦ Hannibal learned of the defeat of his brother's relief force when the Romans delivered his brother's head to his camp. Carthage, of course, would end up being razed to the ground.

♦ The military man praised as the “American Hannibal” for his heroism at Quebec, on Lake Champlain, in the Mohawk River valley, and particularly at the Battle of Saratoga, was none other than Benedict Arnold, who, as the supervisor of West Point, schemed to deliver that stronghold on the Hudson to the British. Unlike other notorious traitors, he lived out his days in relative peace and prosperity, in Canada, and then London, where he died.

♦ The use of the word “harm” often suggests, threatens, or lays the basis for a legal case.

♦ “The assertions are strident, and the vocabulary is esoteric (‘harm,’ ‘insurrection’) as if it were translated from a foreign language. In a sense, it is. The language is legalese, and it is designed to build a foundation upon which a company can be held liable under civil-rights law in an American court. This activist tactic has been widely misunderstood... The word ‘safe’ is carefully chosen. It gestures at certain specific kinds of negligence for which a university could pay dearly in a court of law.” (“The Inequality of ‘Equity,’” by Christopher Caldwell, National Review, May 17, 2021.)

♦ “Family sues Meta alleging teen daughter suffered harm due to Instagram addiction” by Katie Kindelan, GMA, June 9, 2022.)

Czech hedgehogs

~ symbolized "defense at all costs" in the Soviet Union the beaches of Normandy were spiked with ~

♦ "The fox knows many tricks, the hedgehog, one good one." (Archilochus.)

♦ A hedgehog defense involves an isolated stronghold or strongpoint which can be surrounded yet still survive, in modern times, by aerial resupply. The strongpoints are capable of all-around (perimeter) defense. The Battle of Khe Sanh (1968) was such a defense. Hedgehogs or strongpoints can be bypassed but will slow an attacker down and expose the enemy's rear to attack. Problems include the fact that strongpoints can simply be bypassed (as happened to the French at the start of World War II) or that the enemy can prevent aerial resupply, as happened to the 6th Army under Paulus at Stalingrad in 1943 and the French at Dien Bien Phu in 1954. In Vietnam, the hedgehog concept had worked at the Battle of Na San but proved to be a decisive catastrophe for the French at Dien Bien Phu in 1954. Many wondered if the Battle of Khe Sanh in 1968 would be a Dien Bien Phu for the US, but the U.S. Marines somehow managed to hang on.

♦ “Here [in Marble Canyon] the men started to grow restless: the trip was taking too long and was bruising, cold, and dangerous. Major Powell, they complained, was interested only in science—in taking observations, in collecting, in writing. He seemed less concerned with getting the team down to calm waters, to safety, and to home. / There were mutinous rumblings, and they were scarcely mitigated when their leader realized—and promptly told his men—that it was going to get worse and take still longer. For with the cliffs fast rising around them and the outflow of a known river named by the old conquistador explorers the Colorado Chiquita bursting in on their left side, it was clear that the main part of the huge cleft, the hitherto untraveled Big Canyon, as it was then vaguely known—lay now directly in front of them. What had gone before were mere hors d’oeuvres. The main dish lay just ahead. / ‘We are three quarters of a mile in the depths of the earth,’ Powell would later write in his diary.” (The Men Who United The States by Simon Winchester.)

♦ "[Our hosts] gave us some fat pork, corn bread, and a kind of coffee, made, I think, out of burned peas. But it was warm... Hunger made that breakfast the most delicious we had in six months." (Memoirs of Chaplain Life by W. Corby, about his service during the Civil War.)

♦ "Hunger was now torturing us. The Cossacks sat gloomily round the fire and hardly spoke. Hoping to forget their hunger a little, the men tried to sleep. I lay down too, but could not sleep. Anxiety and doubt tormented me. If we did not manage to kill something tomorrow, or reach the Iman, things would be desperate indeed. In the summer a man can carry on without food for several days, but in the winter hunger kills quickly." ("Dersu," by V. K. Arseniev.)

♦ "The mental adjustment took longer. It was a continual surprise to encounter no queues at food shops—'like a man who braces himself to pick up a heavy suitcase,' wrote Ginzburg, 'and finds it empty.' The words 'I'm hungry,' recently so charged with desperation and despair, only slowly reverted to their old function of expressing an ordinary desire for lunch." (Leningrad by the great writer Anna Reid.)

♦ "Man, you eat all the goddamn oranges and all the goddamn bananas you want." (An American merchant-marine sailor in 1947, to Tom Lantos (1928-2008), who was traveling from Europe to the US on a converted troop ship. Lantos, a Holocaust survivor, had discovered a big basket of oranges and a big basket of bananas in the mess and had asked the sailor, 'Should I take an orange or a banana?') On hearing the sailor, Lantos thought, "Then I knew I was in paradise." He went on to become the lone Holocaust survivor to serve in the US Congress. He was admitted to the US because he had been awarded an academic scholarship to study in the US on the basis of an essay he had written about the US president Franklin D. Roosevelt.)

♦ "There is always trouble if meat is not divided by lot. Someone immediately says that he has been given more than his share, and tries to hand a piece to someone else. Then there is much arguing and swearing 'by God!' with everyone insisting that he has been given too much, and finally a deadlock ensues which can only be settled by casting lots for the meat—as should have been done in the first place. I have never heard a man grumble that he has received less than his share. Such behaviour would be inconceivable to the Bedu, for they are careful never to appear greedy, and quick to notice anyone who is. I remember the story of a destitute Bedu boy, who told his mother that he liked dining when there was no moon, for then his companions could not see how much food he took. His mother said, 'Sit with them in the dark and cut at a piece of rope with your knife turned the wrong way round.' The boy did so that very night. There was no moon and it was very dark, but as he picked up the knife a dozen voices called out, 'You have got it the wrong way round!'" (Wilfred Thesiger, "Arabian Sands.")

♦ Bedouins will appoint a man to divide the food into portions. Each man will take a portion, but never one he thinks is larger than the other portions. And so, the last portion goes to the man who divided the food, and if his portion is larger, he will eat shame. And so he is very careful to divide the portions equally.

♦ One third food. One third water. One third empty. (What the stomach is for, according to a Bedouin.)

♦ It is said a Tuareg can survive in the desert for nine days on just three dates, if it is necessary. On the first day, he will eat the skin of one date. On the second day, he will consume the meat of that one date. And on the third day he will suck the stone of that one date. And so on for nine days. On the tenth day, however, he will die.

♦ "He who eats his fill while his neighbor goes without food is not a believer."

(12-Honorable Mention) Xiu-Xiu, the Sent Down Girl (1998 / apple). ("Top Ten Food & Sex Scenes in the Movies," at <http://blogs.houstonpress.com/eating/> 2008.)

♦ "The significance of sex and food is reversed between the Sirionos and us Westerners: the Sirionos' strongest anxieties are about food, they have sex virtually whenever they want, and sex compensates for food hunger, while our strongest anxieties are about sex, we have food virtually whenever we want, and eating compensates for sexual frustration." (The Siriono Indians live in Bolivia. From The World Until Yesterday by Jared Diamond.)

♦ "Then started again, and, coming to a small log cabin, entered and asked for something to eat. The poor people seemed to be alarmed and said they had nothing. 'Oh,' we said, 'we do not wish to deprive you, and we are willing to pay.' Then they took courage and gave us some fat pork, corn bread, and a kind of coffee, made, I think, out of burned peas. But it was warm. There were three of us, the two doctors and myself. We gave our hosts five dollars, and they were delighted, and so were we. Hunger made that breakfast the most delicious we had in six months." (Memoirs of Chaplain Life by W. Corby. Corby served during the Civil War.)

♦ "It is a fact that if you are hungry and you see somebody eating something you would like to have your teeth in too, spit will flood to your mouth and you will swallow to make a noise. That noise Shani made as I watched her. Then I saw her eyes, and they were on my can. / 'Why no home for dinner to-day?' I asked her... / Next morning I went to school with my can packed tight... Not a word from my mother, only a little smile. / So Shani and me sat together to have dinner every day in my mother's smile..." (How Green Was My Valley by Richard Llewellyn.)

♦ "We will made do. Everyone will have a little bit." (Abdul Aziz, 63, of Dhaka, Bangladesh, disappointed that his money could not buy more beans and cauliflower for his family.)

♦ "There had been some great sport on offer and some great moments and stories / Why write an article, emphasising how diverse these games are and highlighting the fact there is more womans medals [sic]. / Surely this is irrelevant. Why can't we just celebrate all the athletes and enjoy the sport we have seen across all competitions / It seems this agenda is compulsory in BBC written articles" (A commenter on "Commonwealth Games: Birmingham breathes life into Games" by Mike Henson, BBC Sport, 9 August 2022. Another commenter posted, "Please concentrate on the sport, that is what most watched and will remember it for....not the BBC looking for politics or identity politics in everything." And yet a third person commented, "Typical BBC trying to find something to fit their 'woke' agenda to denigrate." In the last decades it has become common to disparage great sporting events—the Olympics, the FIFA soccer World Cup—with controversies unrelated to sports.)

♦ "But [Bros] also mocks more recent trends like the mass production of LGBTQ-themed entertainment by TV and movie studios once they realized there was a huge audience for it..." (Justin Chang's review of that film for Fresh Air.)

♦ "This film includes discussion of eating disorders, body dysphoria, self-harm, sexual assault, and suicide... Use the resources at the end of the film to find support if you are struggling with any of these topics." (They / Them: One Climber's Story, a film about the trans climber Lor Sabourin.)

♦ The Japanese refer to foreigners as gaijin, literally, "outsider."

♦ "We don't mind people settlin' in the area. Just don't put your house on a ridgetop so you can look down on us, and don't tell us how you did it back home." (A Southern Appalachians woman.)

♦ "Dude should have looked into living there a little better before stepping on locals' toes like that, especially if he took his family—he owed it to

♦ "For Anders, although his newly brown skin is a constant physical reminder that he's no longer who he used to be, the greatest change may be in his psyche. He's now acutely aware of otherness and being observed, how he moves in the world and how he takes up space. When he returns to work...he's both drawn to and repulsed by the only other dark-skinned employee, who, unlike him, has always known what it's like to be treated as both invisible and hypervisible." (Cady Lang's Time review of The Last White Man by Mohsin Hamid, New York Times bestselling author of Exit West. This paragraph deftly weaves together several tropes relating to inclusion and exclusion.)

♦ Black Victorians: Hidden in History by Keshia N. Abraham and John Woolf.

♦ "I had to be nonexistent, invisible." (The 11-year-old Amos Oz, the only child at a tableful of adults discussing literature, politics, etc.)

♦ "I guess I was invisible for so long that it felt good to be noticed." (The film John Tucker Must Die.)

♦ "I can disappear when I get that scared." (Thandie Newton's character from the great film The Journey of August King, based on the book by John Ehle and with Sam Waterston.)

♦ On the 6th of May the Yukon began to rise rapidly, lifting the ice, which, however, remained fast in front of the town... The sight was one to inspire respect. When a big floe, forty feet across, struck the front of the barrier, it half rose out of the water, then dived under, or turned on edge, crunched into the front with a dull roar, and remained there... At four o'clock on the morning of the 8th the cry was raised, 'The ice is going out!' and everybody rushed out in time to see the bridge of ice crack, groan, then slowly push together and stop; then slowly, slowly the whole mass began to move, and in a few minutes there was nothing but a swift river, with cakes of ice as big as cabins strewn along the banks..." ♦ The "British Expedition to Abyssinia" [title of the Wikipedia entry] was a rescue and punitive mission to what is now Ethiopia. Led by Sir Robert Napier and fought by the Bombay Army, it culminated with the British seizure of the fortress of Magdala in 1868 and the suicide of the then leader of Abyssinia, Emperor Tewodros, also known as Emperor Theodore. Harold G. Marcus characterized the whole mission as 'one of the most expensive affairs of honour in history.' It was a triumph of British engineering, and the logistics included over 40,000 animals, among them forty-four trained elephants from India, which carried the heavy artillery on the march into the Ethiopian highlands. In Rudyard Kipling's "Toomai of the Elephants," Kala Nag, the elephant mentioned at the beginning of the short story, was a veteran of the mission: "He had been hoisted into a ship at the end of a steam-crane and taken for days across the water, and made to carry a mortar on his back in a strange and rocky country very far from India, and had seen the Emperor

Theodore lying dead in Magdala, and had come back again in the steamer, entitled, so the soldiers said, to the Abyssinian War medal."

Asaji, the ~... (in Kurosawa's Throne of Blood)

Wallis Simpson, Lady Macbeth, evil character

this ~ who led this man astray (a royal socialite)

♦ The play Macbeth is usually thought of in terms of manipulation, ambition, hate and revenge. On the other hand, the 2015 film Macbeth, directed by Justin Kurzel, portrays a love story. (See "Macbeth Without Evil" by Andrew O'Hagan, The New York Review, December 17, 2015.) And more recently, Naveen Andrews, who plays Sunny Balwani in the Hulu series The Dropout, compared his character to Lady Macbeth, and suggested that the story was about how far his character would go for love! (See "The Dropout's Naveen Andrews Saw Sunny Balwani as Lady Macbeth" by Roxana Hadadi, Vulture.) What an epithet traditionally suggested can completely change as the work is interpreted through the generations.

sized her up as a lamb

he instantly ~ (a predatory direct salesman)

♦ “He instantly sized her up as a lamb.” (A predatory direct salesman. Versus a bull, owl, or tiger. With a bull, the salesman must meet force with force, stand his ground and redirect. Owls are tough sells. Tigers must be reassured they are getting the very latest technology or features. From “The Hard Sell: A door-to-door salesman’s quest to rebrand his profession” by Tad Friend, The New Yorker, August 8, 2022. Products direct salesmen sell door to door nowadays are roofing, pest control, and solar panels.)

wherever we land

~ on that question scientifically (COVID / = decide)

♦ This is often used with wh-question words: how did it land; where will it land; when will it land... It seems to be connected with the idea of something being "up in the air." It is a natural metaphor for people who are accustomed to flying and airports. In Bhutan, I suspect the equivalent expression is, "So, where does this yak stop?"

♦ One meaning of land means arrive. Another means "to affect you." Yet another meaning seems to be "decide."

♦ "Is she alive, is she not, where is she, is she dead, and she couldn't land on any particular... on one of those." (A priest about a bereft mother whose 6-year-old child had vanished.)

♦ "It's become, how do I say customary to say, to thank service members like yourself, for your service. I think that's an acknowledgement that a lot of people who came back from Vietnam in particular that the country did them dirty, you know, did not respect what they had personally sacrificed even if people did not like or agree with the overall mission, right, or the overall conflict, okay, so, I think people want to do better, and, it has been, you know, one thanks people who served like yourself for your service, how does that land with you." (NPR's Michel Martin interviewing Laura Jedeed, author of "Afghanistan Meant Nothing." Jedeed was gentle in her answer.)

♦ "The legal landscape of the past weeks and months has prompted questions of..." (Dull use of the cliché in a "Talk of the Town" article in The New Yorker, a magazine ordinarily known for good writing.)

♦ "The Hollywood landscape is more cautious than ever today." (Very dull use of the cliché.)

♦ "Our political parties are still in the process of working out their positions in this new drug landscape." ("Slowing the Growth of Weed" by Rachel Lu, National Review, December 19, 2022. Much better usage than The New Yorker use cited above.)

♦ "...There appeared glimpses of a landscape now in a state of arboreal undress, much changed from what had gone before. / What Clark glimpsed was a relatively treeless brown-green country, stretching away into a violet horizon that was longer and flatter than any that these hill-born Easterners had ever witnessed or imagined before. It was landscape laid out, flatly undulating, beneath a sky so big it was overwhelming. It was a new kind of prairie, a limitless tableland of grass, a huge grazing-plain, with a wind that soughed near-constantly above the vegetation, the temperature of the drifting air the only clue to the season. Its sky was flecked with mare's tails of clouds, where lightning could be seen a hundred miles distant and you could watch the black storms chewing their way toward you, the sky suddenly darkening overhead as the squalls arrived and smashed down wafting curtains of hail until the earth was quite white and crunched underfoot, though within moments the reappearing sun then melted it away, steam suddenly began to rise from the grass, and you could almost hear the plants bursting upward in the newly made and richly damp sauna of heat... / In these prairie parts one finds people and creatures uniquely suited to the conditions: the Comanche and the prairie dog, the Sioux and the rattlesnake, and all of the other Plains Indians—the Blackfoot, the Cheyenne, the Arapaho and the Crow—together with uncountable millions of the single species of animal that once so dominated and symbolized the grass-covered landscapes here, the American bison. / Generally speaking, the Great Plains extend between the 95th and 105th meridians—with the midline... marking 100 degrees west of Greenwich." (The Men Who United The States: America's Explorers, Inventors, Eccentrics, and Mavericks, and the Creation of One Nation, Indivisible by Simon Winchester.)

♦ "It is rough, steep, mountainous country where we were trekking, covered with dense virgin forest, the famous taigá of Siberia, in places almost impenetrable, especially where the ground is littered with fallen giants smashed down by storms." (Dersu the Trapper by V.K. Arseniev. The country Arseniev describes lies between the Amur and Ussuri Rivers and the Sea of Japan, north of Vladivostok, and includes the Sihoté-Alin mountain range.)

♦ "I shall always remember the next day for one of the most beautiful experiences I have ever had. As we marched forward we caught sight, after a while, of the gleaming golden towers of a monastery in the far distance. Above them, shining superbly in the morning sun, were tremendous walls of ice, and we gradually realized that we were looking at the giant trio Dhaulagiri, Annapurna, and Manaslu. As Tradun and the filigree towers of its monastery lay at the far end of the plain we had many hours in which to enjoy the view of these mighty mountains. Not even the necessity of wading through the icy waters of the Tsachu dampened our exuberance. / It was evening when we marched into Tradun. In the last rays of the setting sun the red monastery with its golden roof looked like a fairy palace on the hillside." (Seven Years in Tibet by Heinrich Harrer, from the chapter "Into Tibet.")

♦ "They call this plain the Nullabor (Nullarbor). If you want water you have to dig for it among the sand dunes along the shore... In this wilderness everything runs to excess; the excessive noonday heat is followed by outrageous cold by night, rainstorms burst with cyclonic force, and when the rain fails the blown sand is suffocating; even the flies and mosquitoes are in mad abundance. There are moments of grace sometimes in the evenings when extravagant sunsets sweep across the sky and then fade slowly behind enormous stars, but in the main the Nullabor has an implacable sterility and the aborigines used to believe that it was inhabited by demons. They would not chase a kangaroo there. / This then was the terrible region into which Eyre plunged..." (The Fatal Impact by Alan Moorehead.)

◆ "EOD handled the bombs. SSTP treated the wounds. PRP processed the bodies. The 08s fired DPICM. The MAW provided CAS. The 03s patrolled the MSR. Me and PFC handled the money... / I will remember that our HMMWV had 5 PX. That the SITREP was 2 KIA, 3 WIA. That KIA means they gave everything. That WIA means I didn't." (From the short story "OIF" in Redeployment by the brilliant Marine writer Phil Klay. OIF stands for Operation Iraqi Freedom.)

◆ "There is jargon, and then there is jargon." (Academic writing.)

◆ "Such language risks destabilizing an already complicated situation." (A Russian diplomat.)

◆ "Well, those phrases that you're referring to used by the [US] ambassador ["immediate ceasefire," "UN-facilitated talks"] have become empty cliches, they have been repeated for months and months, you know, if not years. The same phrases were used last year. People thought the elections were going to be organized. Nothing happened, and the people in power are still in power. So I think US diplomacy and other Western diplomacy should be refreshed, should be renewed, and a new technique should be used because Libyans have learned to ignore everything you said. I mean, this discourse by the internationals is absolutely ignored by Libyans, and foreign states as well." (Jalel Harchaoui, a fellow at the Royal United Services Institute which focuses on Libyan security and politics, speaking to David Gura on NPR.)

◆ "What the f*** is an 'online safety expert'? Do you see how media outlets baptize totally fake expertise industries and titles (like 'disinformation reporter') to launder their highly politicized censorship agenda as scientific, data-based and neutral?" (A thundering Glenn Greenwald.)

◆ "If we could claim marriage, we would be claiming an engine of transformation, a vocabulary of shared values—love, commitment, family, inclusion, dignity, respect—that would help non-gay people better understand who gay people really are, and allow us to share equally, not only in marriage, but in everything." ♦ “Look, I mean voters of color don’t talk about voters of color. Who the hell lives in communities of color? The people I know live in neighborhoods. Right, so there’s this whole you know sort of rhetorical lexicon the left of the Democratic party has become obsessed with and insists on using. Which basically just alienates normie voters, including normie non-white voters. I mean, we have people in and around the Democratic Party talking about how all white people have white privilege, and how this is a white supremacist society, and so on, and I just don’t think this is the way people think about the world, including you know normie non-white voters.” (The political scientist Ruy Teixeira. From “Hispanic and minority voters are increasingly shifting to the Republican party,” NPR, Weekend Edition Saturday, July 23, 2022.)

From “Kyle Rittenhouse’s defense attorney discusses the trial and acquittal,” NPR, All Things Considered, Nov. 19, 2021.)

♦ “The language a writer uses to create a world is that world, and Franzen’s strenuously contemporary and therefore juvenile language is a world in which nothing important can happen. Madame Bovary’s marriage sucked, Heathcliff was into Catherine: these words fail the context not just because they are of our own time. There is no import in things that ‘suck,’ no drama in someone’s being ‘into’ someone else. A writer like Franzen, who describes two lovers as ‘fucking,’ trivializes their relationship. The result is boredom.” (“Smaller Than Life,” by B. R. Myers, The Atlantic Magazine, October, 2010.)

♦ “The prose yo-yoed between Academia.edu and a strained casualness that could inadvertently veer into the Borscht Belt... Barker’s language is a good example of linguistic presentism, using contempo-speak.)

♦ “Meacham’s book, And There Was Light, tells of the anti-slavery politician whose election as president in 1860 triggered the Civil War. Lincoln struck back at the rebel states by ordering freedom for their enslaved workers, the Emancipation Proclamation, but the first Republican president was fiercely criticized by people who wanted less social change.” (Steve Inskeep, presumably reading from a script. From “Lincoln prioritized democracy over his political future. A new biography explains why,” NPR, Morning Edition, October 18, 2022. ♦ "Correct; well said. Glazers = leeches" (A disgruntled Man U fan on a BBC HYS after the latest loss to Liverpool. 282 upvotes. 30 downvotes.)

♦ "This was a victory for boxing, AJ and that blood sucker Hearn out of the race..." (A BBC HYS about the second fight between Oleksandr Usyk and Anthony Joshua.)

♦ "During our excursions we found masses of wild strawberries but where we found the best we also found the most leeches. I knew from my reading that these creatures are the plague of many Himalayan valleys, and now learned from personal experience how helpless one is against them. They drop from trees on men and animals and creep through all the openings in one's clothes, even the eyelets in one's shoes. If one tears them off one loses more blood than if one lets them drink their fill, when they fall off by themselves. Some of the valleys are infested to such a degree by leeches that one simply cannot protect oneself against them. The best way of keeping them out is by wearing socks and trousers steeped in salt." (Seven Years in Tibet by Heinrich Harrer, from the chapter, "The Village of Happiness.")

♦ "Our first day's march lay through patches of forest, clearings, and Malay villages, and was pleasant enough... The next day, the country got wilder... We passed through extensive forests, along paths often up to our knees in mud, and were much annoyed by the leeches for which this district is famous. These little creatures infest the leaves and herbage by the side of the paths, and when a passenger comes along they stretch themselves out at full length, and if they touch any part of his dress or body, quit their leaf and adhere to it. They then creep on to his feet, legs, or other part of his body and suck their fill, the first puncture being rarely felt during the excitement of walking. On bathing in the evening we generally found half a dozen or a dozen on each of us, most frequently on our legs, but sometimes on our bodies, and I had one who sucked his fill from the side of my neck, but who luckily missed the jugular vein. There are many species of these forest leeches. All are small, but some are beautifully marked with stripes of bright yellow. They probably attach themselves to deer or other animals which frequent the forest paths, and have thus acquired the singular habit of stretching themselves out at the sound of a footstep or of rustling foliage..." ♦ This refers to a throw from the left fielder (or center or right fielder) to any of the bases, particularly home plate, surprising the runner. Ordinarily, a throw from the outfield is cut off by the second-baseman. It takes an outfielder with a strong arm to make such a long throw, and it is always a dramatic moment.)

question or debate (Black colleagues') lived experience
don't ~ (Disney World employee training)

◆ "Lived experience" is not listed by the Merriam-Webster online dictionary, although the perfectly comprehensible "life experience" is. Its short Wikipedia entry is categorized as follows: philosophy stubs | phenomenological methodology | qualitative research. Even academics are befuddled by it: see "Exploring what the Notion of 'Lived Experience' Offers for Social Policy Analysis" by Ian McIntosh and Sharon Wright, Urban Studies, School of Social and Political Sciences, University of Glasgow.

◆ "Sullivan is curious what scientists will discover about her lived experience." (Autistic, agender. From "Transgender and non-binary people are up to six times more likely to also have autism" by Lesley McClurg, NPR, Weekend Edition Sunday, January 15, 2023.)

◆ "Don't question or debate Black colleagues' lived experience." (Disney World employee training.)

◆ "[It's] something that Black folks have always known: white people continue to be the biggest threat to American democracy." (Candace McDuffie, The Root.)

◆ "[I]f you're Black, even if you are middle class, there is something about the lived experience of being Black in America that weathers the body. And this is the theory of Dr. Arline Geronimus from the University of Michigan. And she believes that the high-effort coping of dealing with racism in America makes the body prematurely aged. And so if your body is older, then you're more susceptible to every kind of health problem." (Linda Villarosa, from "How Systemic Racism Continues To Determine Black Health and Wealth In Chicago," NPR, Fresh Air, May 6, 2021.)

◆ "Reginald Mobley, a black American countertenor, says that when he was growing up in Florida his family thought of classical music as the music of cross-burners." ("From 'Classical music: Airs and Graces,'" The Economist, November 19th, 2022. "Such notions did not deter Mr Mobley. A professor who heard him singing in a barbershop quartet identified him as countertenor.")

◆ "To question the role of trauma, we are warned, is to oppress: it is 'often nothing but a resistance to movements for social justice,' Melissa Febos writes in her forthcoming book, "Body Work: The Radical Power of Personal Narrative." Those who look askance at trauma memoirs, she says, are replicating the 'classic role of perpetrator: to deny, discredit and dismiss victims in order to avoid being implicated or losing power.'" ("The Key To Me" by Parul Sehgal, The New Yorker, January 3 & 10, 2022.)

◆ "For all of you that want to slap narratives on my words and my experience—one in which I lived for 17 years—you can't do that because you have no clue." (Carli Lloyd, soccer player.)

◆ "You don't understand how sisters move." (Joy Reid supports her fired MSNBC colleague Tiffany Cross. In a completely different context, a Black female middle-schooler texted, "I'm glad my parents stay on me and taught me how to move in situations like this." The "situation" was her videoing her teacher, who was fired.)

◆ "Listen to your kids. They know what's best for them because they're living their experience every single day." (JR Ford. From "Children's book 'Calvin' shows how a community can embrace a trans child's identity," NPR, All Things Considered, Nov 9, 2021.)

◆ "He is versed in a certain kind of performativity, a conspiratorial brandishing of one's Blackness as automatic expertise." ("All Talk: The news, according to Charlamagne tha God and Jon Stewart" by Doreen St. Felix, The New Yorker, October 25, 2021.)

◆ "Her poetry spoke to the lived experience of Black women." (Maya Angelou. According to Wikipedia, some of her work may be considered autobiographical fiction. She certainly made the most of her extraordinary life.)

◆ "We're headed in a direction where we want people to feel more comfortable bringing their lived experiences into the hosts' chairs." (Sarah Gilbert, NPR's vice president over its newsmagazines. From "NPR hosts' departures fuel questions over race. The full story is complex" by David Folkenflik, NPR, media, January 12, 2022.)

◆ "In describing their lived experiences during the pandemic, several participants specifically referenced the movie Groundhog Day remarking that they felt as though they were stuck in some sort of repeating existence."

◆ Mr. Head: What was that? / Nelson: A man. / Mr. Head: What kind of a man? / Nelson: A fat man. / Mr. Head: You don't know what kind? / Nelson: An old man. / Mr. Head: That was a black man. / Nelson: You said they were black. You never said they were tan. How do you expect me to know anything when you don't tell me right? (From a short story by Flannery O'Connor, published in 1955. Nelson, a rural boy, had never seen a Black person before.)

◆ [Scientist] "It is quite clear to me that the legend of the mapinguary (pronounced ma-ping-wahr-EE) is based on human contact with the last of the ground sloths. We know that extinct species can survive as legends for hundreds of years. But whether such animal still exists or not is another question, one we can't answer yet." (Dr. David Oren, a former director of research at the Goeldi Institute in Belem, at the mouth of the Amazon River.) [Indigenous person] "The only way you can kill a mapinguary is by shooting at its head. But that is hard to do because it has the power to make you dizzy and turn day into night. So the best way to do if you see one is climb a tree and hide." (Domingos Parintintin, a tribal leader in Amazonas State, on the mapinguary, a legendary Amazonian beast. From "A Huge Amazon Monster Is Only a Myth. Or Is It?" by Larry Rohter, The New York Times International Sunday, July 8, 2007.)

◆ "The law, in its majestic equality, forbids rich and poor alike to sleep under bridges, to beg in the streets, and to steal their bread. This equality is one of the benefits of the Revolution." (Anatole France, The Red Lilly.)

◆ "We kinda really tried to focus on that lived experience that people have." (Colorado Democratic Governor Jared Polis, explaining his laissez-faire Covid strategy. It is interesting usage by a relatively older, white politician.)

◆ Lol, she seriously used the phrase "lived experience" in her apology for being completely out of touch with her job. (A tweet about the US charge d'affaires Karen Decker of the U.S. Mission to Afghanistan.)

◆ "I felt like books were almost in some passive way, judging me for being who I was, simply by erasing me from the idea, like from the canon in and of itself, right? If I'm not shown or if I don't exist in a story, then that means that somebody doesn't find my life valuable enough to talk about, right? So why would I engage in something that's not engaging with me?" (Jason Reynolds, National Ambassador for Young People's Literature, an award which is presented bi-annually by the Library of Congress.)

◆ "We sell [young people] insultingly short in thinking that they won't read unless the subject is themselves." ("School Shouldn't Be A Battlefield" by George Packer, The Atlantic, April 2022.)

◆ "It is disingenuous, absurd and historically false to argue that a hellish system such as National Socialism sanctifies its victims." (Primo Levi. Quoted in "How Did He Die?: An Exchange" by Tim Parks, The New York Review, December 17, 2015.)

♦ “Whether it’s journalism, fiction or poetry, writing about war is routinely prized for ‘combat gnosticism,’ which is the notion that the ability to comprehend war requires a special knowledge possessed only by a battle-hardened elite.” (“The War of Words” by John Palattella, The Nation, January 2, 2004 issue.)

♦ “The new exclusivity is partly epistemological, claiming that out-group members cannot share in the knowledge possessed by in-group members.” (“How America’s identity politics went from inclusion to division” by Amy Chua, The Guardian, 1 March 2018.)

♦ “This thinking [identity politics] appeals not to reason or universal values but to the authority of identity, the ‘lived experience’ of the oppressed... [This has led some] to believe that words can be a form of violence; to close down a general argument with a personal truth (‘You wouldn’t understand,’ or just ‘I’m offended’); to keep your mouth shut when identity disqualified you from speaking.” (“School Shouldn’t Be A Battlefield” by George Packer, The Atlantic, April 2022.)

♦ “The movie starts off like a sentimental ‘fish out of water’ story, about a young woman’s search for her roots. It quickly becomes clear we are seeing something stranger, and stronger... Freddy is clearly searching for an identity, yet neither she nor the movie defines identity in terms of race, nationality or family, notions that Chou, himself a cultural outsider, thinks too broad to capture the multiplicity of lived experience.” (John Powers brilliant review of the film Return to Seoul on Fresh Air, March 8, 2023.)

♦ A FUNNY JOKE. Question: How many Vietnam veterans does it take to screw in a lightbulb? The twitchy, trembling, quavering answer: How would you know, man? You weren’t there!

♦ A FUNNY STORY. A college-student “reporter” for a free community newspaper in the 1970s interviewed the owner of a porn shop when such things were new and unusual. While interviewing the owner, the youth was startled by a contraption that looked like an octopus, and heard himself blurting out, “What’s that for?” The porn-shop owner narrowed his eyes and growled, “The clientele knows.”

♦ A FUNNY CARTOON. Four Viking types, each clutching a book, are sitting around a fire under a sign that says, “Saga Club.” One of them is speaking, and he is saying, “The endless parade of murder and pillaging really spoke to me.” (The New Yorker, November 22, 2021)

♦ “EXPERIENCE, n. The wisdom that enables us to recognize as an undesirable old acquaintance the folly that we have already embraced.” (The Devil’s Dictionary by Ambrose Bierce.)

♦ "All I carried away from the magic town of Auckland was the face and voice of a woman who sold me beer at a little hotel there. They stayed at the back of my head till ten years later when, in a local train of the Cape Town suburbs, I heard a petty officer from Simon's Town telling a companion about a woman in New Zealand who 'never scrupled to help a lame duck or put her foot on a scorpion.' Then, precisely as the removal of the key-log in a timber-jam starts the whole pile—those words gave me the key to the face and voice at Auckland, and a tale called 'Mrs. Bathurst' slid into my mind, smoothly and orderly as floating timber on a bank-high river." (Something of Myself by Rudyard Kipling.)

♦ "Old man Jinby rode frantically into Grand Rapids, like a second Paul Revere, screaming out that the flood had broken loose. It is impossible to describe the excitement and consternation that reigned in Grand Rapids as the rushing timbers shot down the current past the city. The heavy iron bridges one after the other crumpled up like matchwood and were borne out of sight down stream on the very top of the jam... Five hours later about half of the logs boiled into sight at Grand Haven, fifty miles away... Now [at Grand Haven] for four days and nights ensued a grim struggle for supremacy [to secure its own booms and to keep the logs from floating out into Lake Michigan] that has probably never been equaled in industrial history." ("The Great Log Jam" by Stewart Edward White is a terrific account of an actual log jam. It appeared in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, Vol. LII No. 3 in July, 1901, and it is an account of the Great Log Jam of 1883 on the Grand River in Michigan, perhaps the largest logjam in the history of logging.)

♦ See "Last Log Drive in U.S. Floating to End in Maine" by John Kifner, The New York Times, Sept. 8, 1976. It occurred on the Kennebec River. Logs are transported by trucks and helicopters, even, nowadays, but the old log drive, like so many obsolete practices or technologies, lives on, in the language.

(“Shop Talk”: Was NPR Right To Oust Juan Williams?” NPR, Tell Me More, October 22, 2010.)

♦ “[T]wo [girls]—one white, one black—who were almost exactly the same age and had both witnessed the same lynching. A real lynching, not someone's cheap metaphor... I don't know what image people have of these things to the degree that they think of them at all...” (NPR, “From Martin Luther King Jr., A Burden and Gift,” Tell Me More, Michel Martin, January 13, 2012. Blacks attended lynchings, too.)

♦ “The community is well convinced he was disloyal. The city does not miss him. The lesson of his death has had a wholesome effect on the Germanists of Collinsville [Illinois] and the rest of the nation.” (The report in a local paper on the murder of Robert Prager, a German immigrant, who was lynched in Collinsville, Illinois, now a suburb of St. Louis, on April 4, 1918. He was stripped naked and made to walk down Main Street singing patriotic songs. The drunken mob broke beer bottles at his feet, so that he walked barefoot on glass shards to the tree from which he was hanged. The mob believed him to be a German spy. Eleven men were put on trial for his murder, and all were acquitted. From “During World War I, U.S. Government Propaganda Erased German Culture,” NPR, All Things Considered, April 7, 2017.)

♦ “I mean, his life basically vanished like an Alka-Seltzer tablet.” (Guy Raz and Stacey Vanek Smith dishing about Machiavelli on NPR to promote Stacey’s book, Machiavelli for Women: Defend your Worth, Grow Your Ambition, and Win the Workplace.)

♦ “‘Italy,’ declared Metternich, ‘is a geographical expression.’ He spoke no more than the truth. Never in all its history had the Italian peninsula constituted a single nation; even in the days of imperial Rome it had been merely a part—and usually quite a small part—of the Roman state. Since the early Middle Ages, however—and perhaps even earlier—the concept of Italian nationhood had existed as a distant ideal: Dante and Petrarch had both dreamed of it, as later had Machiavelli.” (The Middle Sea: A History of the Mediterranean by the historian John Julius Norwich.)

♦ “Niccolo Machiavelli’s cool appreciation of expediency, expressed most famously in his slender book The Prince, has made his name a synonym for double-dealing and cynicism. And yet most modern historians who examine his life and work offer a more balanced perspective... [He] was also an Italian patriot who believed that the well-being of his countrymen could only be ensured by a strong ruler who would unify the country...” (National Geographic Almanac of World History by Patricia S. Major Powell, they complained, was interested only in science—in taking observations, in collecting, in writing. He seemed less concerned with getting the team down to calm waters, to safety, and to home. / There were mutinous rumblings, and they were scarcely mitigated when their leader realized—and promptly told his men—that it was going to get worse and take still longer. For with the cliffs fast rising around them and the outflow of a known river named by the old conquistador explorers the Colorado Chiquita bursting in on their left side, it was clear that the main part of the huge cleft, the hitherto untraveled Big Canyon, as it was then vaguely known—lay now directly in front of them. What had gone before were mere hors d'oeuvres. The main dish lay just ahead. / 'We are three quarters of a mile in the depths of the earth,' Powell would later write in his diary." ♦ A similar food is the durian, which has been described as smelling like garbage, moldy cheese, rotting fish, a dead cat, last season's unwashed gym socks, and a mixture of cheese, onions, sherry, rotting meat and drains.

♦ "Most lutefisk is not edible by normal people. It is reminiscent of the afterbirth of a dog or the world's largest chunk of phlegm." (The beloved American humorist Garrison Keillor.)

♦ "The staple food in this region is tsampa. This is how they prepare it. You heat sand to a high temperature in an iron pan and then pour barley corns onto it. They burst with a slight pop, whereupon you put the corns and the sand in a fine meshed sieve through which the sand runs: after this you grind the corn very small. The resulting meal is stirred up into a paste with butter tea or milk or beer and then eaten. The Tibetans make a special cult of tsampa and have many ways of preparing it. We soon got accustomed to it, but never cared much for butter tea, which is usually made with rancid butter and is generally repugnant to Europeans. It is, however, universally drunk and appreciated by the Tibetans, who often drink as many as sixty cups in a day." (Seven Years in Tibet by Heinrich Harrer, from the chapter, "The Village of Happiness.")

♦ "Kangding is a crossroads town, once a terminus for the brick tea trade, now an important rest stop for anyone bound into or out of Tibet—it is the true beginning of ethnic Tibet or, for someone coming from the far side, the true beginning of the real China. The little cafes here serve Tibetan tea—a powerful decoction brewed from tea dust and twigs, with copious amounts of salt added to impart extra flavor and with large globules of rancid, hairy yak-butter floating on top. It is an acquired taste that I was not to acquire—finding it even less attractive a comestible than tsampa, the principal food of the Tibetan peasantry, which consists merely of flour worked with water and yak-butter, and which is eaten raw and has a taste like rotten dough." (The River at the Center of the World: A Journey Up the Yangtze, and Back in Chinese Time by the wonderful writer Simon Winchester.)

♦ "Walrus flippers with sea cabbage. It's delicious food." (Ludmilla Ainana, a 66-year-old woman, reminiscing about the food she ate at coastal camps as a child.)

♦ "Squirrel soup with a lot of hot peppers is very popular." (A Hmong in the US who maintains the Hmong hunting tradition.)

♦ "Grow your own dope—plant a man." (A bumper sticker for a female landscaping company, seen at the Ingles parking lot in East Oteen, Asheville, North Carolina, USA.)

♦ A FUNNY STORY. One day Abu Nuas and the Caliph Haroon Rashid were talking about marriage. "Tell me, great Caliph, speaking about the men you rule over, who has the upper hand in the relationship, the man or the woman?" Abu Nuas asked innocently. The Caliph snorted at such a stupid question and became angry. He berated Abu Nuas. He laughed at him and mocked him and abused him! / Abu Nuas just smiled a little smile. He knew that he had netted a great fish. And not just the greatest fish in the Tigris, or the Euphrates, or the Nile, but the greatest fish in all the seas and oceans in the world! And so he made his wager... (To be continued in tomorrow's class. The bell has rung.)

“Art and Race Matters [sic]
~: The Career of Robert Colescott”

♦ “Why does ‘Black Lives Matter’ trigger so many people?”

♦ “The slogan [White Lives Matter]... is considered hate speech by the Anti-Defamation League and has been attributed to white supremacist groups...” (“The fashion world embraced Ye. After his ‘White Lives Matter’ shirts, that may change” by Michel Martin, NPR, All Things Considered, October 9, 2022.)

♦ “When you’re not able to recognize Black lives, you just don’t get to [sic] all lives.” (Celeste Hodge Growden, president of the Alaska Black Caucus. Presumably, she is referring to “Black Lives Matter” versus “All Lives Matter.” From “Anchorage police investigated in White Privilege card photo” by Mark Thiessen, AP, July 13, 2022.)

♦ “You have to be authentic, I want you to be authentic, your story matters.” (Maimouna Youssef to young artists about social-justice music and the new Grammy merit award for “Best Song for Social Change.”)

♦ The Matter of Black Lives: Writing from The New Yorker, Edited by Jelani Cobb and David Remnick, with a foreword by Jelani Cobb.

♦ “Black Lives Matter. History Matters. John Hope Franklin showed us how much they matter to each other.” (“John Hope Franklin: Race and the Meaning of America” by the historian Drew Gilpin Faust, The New York Review, December 17, 2015. History framed in contempo-speak.)

♦ “As the historian Eric Foner phrased it, for all its shortcomings, the Midwest ‘recognized black humanity.’ One might even say that with Lincoln and the region’s ardent abolitionists, black lives, for the first time, mattered.” (“Recovering The Heartland” by Hendrik Meijer, National Review, December 19, 2022. History framed in contempo-speak.)

♦ “Institutions matter... The church as an institution matters. Ask John Wesley. The government as an institution matters. Ask John Lewis. The post office as an institution matters. Ask Benjamin Franklin. The CDC as an institution matters. Ask Anthony Fauci. The EU and Nato as institutions matter. Ask Vladimir Zelensky. And one more...Marsh Chapel, as an institution, matters.” (From the live broadcast of the Marsh Chapel Service at Boston University on May 1, 2022. “Ask” is a fine rhetorical device, as is “matters.”)

♦ “If we truly believe that all lives matter, and Black lives matter and brown lives matter and the lives of poor people matter, it’s time for us to make sure...” (US Senator Dick Durbin of Illinois, who is seeking to end federal capital punishment.)

♦ “If we believe that the lives of incarcerated people matter, she maintains, we have a legal and moral obligation to make these conditions less inhumane." ("Dying Behind Bars" by Eyal Press, The New Yorker, August 23, 2021.)

♦ "We are sending a strong message to young girls who dream... Your service matters, your contribution to the Coast Guard and to the country matters. And yes, you too can be Commandant someday." (U.S. Senator Maria Cantwell praising Admiral Linda Fagan, the first female commandant of the U.S. Coast Guard. Military recruitment matters...)

♦ "[The parents] want to make their [children's] loss of life matter." (Uvalde school shooting.)

♦ The phrase "Black Lives Matter" has achieved the status of a meme, along with online meme generators (often with vile results), and variations on porn sites. Not only that, but it now tinges any use of "something matters" whether or not there is a direct link to Black Lives Matters, to include usages before the term was coined in 2003, excluding only basic usages such as, "Don't worry, it doesn't matter."

♦ "We need to stop with the delusions. Science matters. Biology matters. Truth matters." (Trans women are trans women, not women.)

♦ "Why don't you guys talk about something that matters? I'm happy to answer a question that matters." (President Joe Biden, criticizing reporters asking him if he regretted fist-bumping Saudi Arabia's Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman in 2022.)

♦ "I like living someplace where a horse matters... I like being a person to whom a horse matters... I like living a life where a horse matters..." ("Baxter Black's final column: A horse matters," The Las Cruces Bulletin, posted Jan. 5, 2022. Baxter Black wrote the article in November 2017, and it was reprinted after his death on June 10, 2022.)

♦ "Hope. Hope and just the fact that we actually matter. Like Kansas City's on the map, I mean, we're like the center of the NFL World right now, so, like yeah, he brought us hope, he brought us meaning, he brought us purpose." (A happy football fan about what Patrick Mahomes means to Kansas City, Missouri, in 2023.)

♦ "Being personal with each other, it's valuable, it matters..." ("Warm human connections.")

♦ Variations of the trope serve as categories on Pornhub.

♦ "Last week meant something"; "Positions are important (in basketball)"; "Every decision I make counts..." (Conventional language to express that something "matters.")

♦ "The war had made it obvious by the most cruel of all arguments, that science is of the most immediate and direct importance to everybody. This had changed the character of physics." (The physicist Victor Weisskopf. If he were alive today, he probably would simply write, "Physics matter," and expect everyone to understand and agree.)

- ◆ “You can’t be what you can’t see.”
- ◆ “I was welcomed by so many amazing Black students who look just like me, who have the same dreams and aspirations as me as well.” (Daya Brown about Duke University. From “Teen accepted to more than 50 colleges, receives over $1.3 million in scholarships.” She wants to study mass communications or film, and she created her own production company while in high school. “I think a lot of people think that if you’re smart, you can’t be cool. So I found a way to showcase brilliance [and] still have fun while you’re doing it.”)
- ◆ “He had to deal with being the only young person of color in Narcotics Anonymous meetings.”
- ◆ “I was exhausted with the culture of country music not creating space for people who look like me.” (This short sentence combines three tropes relating to inclusion and exclusion: physical malaise; the idea of spaces; and “look like me.”)
- ◆ “Let’s face it, America is getting bigger, and women want to see themselves instead of the image of what society says they should be.” (Plus-size model Ashley Graham.)
- ◆ “Not everyone feels safe and comfortable in nature. People who didn’t grow up camping or who might not recognize themselves in a hiking-gear catalogue may experience stress or anxiety instead. To make green spaces more inviting to everyone, start by evaluating your own actions and following this advice from Latino Outdoors founder Jose G. Gonzalez.” (“The Nature Antidote” by Jill U. Adams, Audubon magazine, Winter, 2019.)
- ◆ “It does open up a conversation because it’s her using her voice and her platform to really call out systemic change, which she has done before. I think she can show other girls and women who look like her how to empower them to stand up for themselves in ways that I think we haven’t always been able to see.” (C. Vaile Wright, PhD, a clinical psychologist and the American Psychological Association’s Senior Director of Health Care Innovation, about Naomi Osaka and her struggles with mental health.)
- ◆ “Yeah, absolutely. You know, I was a typical sort of nineties alternative person [upspeak] you know like I really prized the clothes I wore sort of my unusual taste in music and when I arrived at Berkeley in 1995 I was seeking out people who were exactly like me [light upspeak]. And Ken was very different. You know, he was really confident, sort of conventionally handsome... He was in a frat.” (The New Yorker writer Hua Hsu, speaking to Scott Simon on NPR. Sixty-eight percent of tweets between journalist who work at The Washington Post, NPR, and The New York Times... are to each other.)
- ◆ “I am Puerto Rican, from the Bronx, and I was raised in the 50s, loved television, never saw anybody who looked like me, I began to feel on some level that I was invisible. I didn’t know what I would contribute to a society that was determined not to see me...” (Sonia Manzano, actor, screenwriter, author, speaker, TV series creator, producer, etc., who played Maria on Sesame Street for 44 years. According to her Wikipedia entry, she attended the High School of Performing Arts, then Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh on scholarship.)
- ◆ “If you’ve not seen yourself on screen before, why would you ever want to go for that role? You’ve suddenly got representation from not one, but two South Asian women and it’s a period drama which traditionally you’d only see white cast members in.” (Laraib Waheed, an actor, about on-screen representation of people of South Asian heritage in the hit period drama Bridgerton. From “Bridgerton: South Asian faces on TV ‘makes me happy’” by Paige Neal-Holder and Steffan Powell, BBC, March 22, 2022.)
- ◆ “This is not just for me, this is for every little girl that looks like me... We want to be seen. We want to be heard.” (Michelle Yeoh touting herself on Instagram for an Academy Award.)
- ◆ “[Deaf people] want to see someone like themselves use their language on TV. We’re always used to reading captions on TV, and all the shows. But when you have a chance to see someone who looks like yourself, who used the same language as you, we’ve got many people that were so excited to see themselves on screen.” (Raven Sutton, the first deaf contestant on Netflix’s “The Circle.”)
- ◆ “Solving a crossword puzzle, there’s a lot of joy in that moment when you see something you know reflected back to you in the newspaper grid. And so for me, it became a project of bringing that moment of recognition to more and more people who look and sound like me and consume the same sort of cultural artefacts that I do.” (Anna Shectman, crossword constructor. A clue that she constructed that she likes best is: Grande Dame of music. (Answer: Ariana.) From “The ‘real outlier’ in the crossword puzzle-making community” by Lucy Wallis, BBC News, April 3, 2022.)

- ◆ “A young man, that looks like everyone in this room right now...” (Was murdered nearby. From “Raising Kings: A Year Of Love And Struggle At Ron Brown College Prep. Episode 1: A Year Of Love And Struggle In A New High School,” NPR, Code Switch, October 18, 2017.)
- ◆ “Someone went out of their way to target and kill children who look like our children, teachers who look like our teachers—and did it for no other reason than to hurt them.” (Psychologist and consultant John Van Dreal.)
- ◆ “These kids look like me, this could have been me, or this could have been my family or this could have been us.” (Maria Maldonado Morales, a clinical social worker at Texas Children’s Hospital in Houston. From “What the shooting in Uvalde has meant for the Latino community” by Mary Louise Kelly, Alejandra Marquez Janse, and Roberta Rampton, NPR, June 4, 2022.)
- ◆ “Critics have complained the police department doesn’t look enough like the city its serves.” (Boston.)
- ◆ “The Cosby Show, the Huxtables, were meant to inspire us. Be like them, everyone seemed to be saying...” (A discussion on Bill Cosby’s legacy.)
- ◆ “Parents share their children’s joy at seeing a Disney princess who looks like them,” Michel Martin, NPR, All Things Considered, September 17, 2022. Halle Bailey as The Little Mermaid.)
- ◆ “Hello there, I’m Jennifer and welcome to Simply + Fiercely... I’m passionate about helping other women just like me.”
- ◆ “Hello, I am a queer, mad and neurodivergent higher education researcher and I am looking to explore the lived experiences of queer MMIND (mad, mentally ill, neurodivergent and disabled) college students and their experiences on college campuses...” (reddit.)

♦ In many of the examples above and below, “mental health” can be substituted with “mental illness.”

*** groups (autistics, women, Blacks, etc.)

♦ “Too many times we think of things like ‘this is racism’ and ‘this is mental health,’ and they’re separate. But in reality, it’s really complex and they inform one another.” (Kristi Oshiro, an assistant professor at Belmont University who has studied racism and its impact on athletes. From “Why mental health matters for athletes—even as they give their all to win” by Leah Asmelash, CNN, July 26, 2022. Consider also “Dumped NBA Star Goes After Team Therapist Who Exposed Him” by Josh Fiallo, Daily Beast, Nov. 04, 2022, about the NBA player Joshua Primo. At one time Primo’s lawyer accused the therapist of trading in “racial stereotypes.”)

♦ “The intersection of policing, race, and autism has the potential to result in tragic outcomes.” (“Parents of Black autistic sons share their stories after tragic encounters with police,” ABC News, April 28, 2023.)

♦ Dylann Roof, who murdered nine in “The Charleston church shooting,” is autistic. So was Adam Lanza, the “Sandy Hook Elementary School shooting” shooter. As was the U.K.’s Jake Davison (“Plymouth shooting”), who shot his mother and four passers-by.

♦ “Transgender and non-binary people are up to six times more likely to also have autism” by Lesley McClurg, NPR, Weekend Edition Sunday, January 15, 2023.

♦ “My brain is poison and I’m searchin’ for the antidote / but every time I find it, my defenses scream ‘Oh no you don’t! woah...’” (YouTube gabbie hanna tik tok compilation.)

♦ “Famous American ‘OnlyFans’ star has been charged with murder for stabbing her Nigerian-American lover to death.”

♦ “Even before her teens [the blond actress Tuesday] Weld had claimed a nervous breakdown at nine, heavy drinking at ten and a suicide attempt at twelve. ‘As a teenager I was a wreck,’ she admits. ‘I drank so much I can’t remember anything. My teens passed by in drink.’ She had brawled publicly with an early Hollywood beau, John Barrymore, Jr., and tried to run down another, Gary Lockwood, speeding down Sunset Boulevard with him clinging to the hood. ‘Tuesday’s done some wild, wild things,’ said one longtime friend, ‘and screwed up many, many guys. She’s highly sexual.’” (Al Pacino: A Life On The Wire by Andrew Yule.)

♦ “The same formula again and again. I want to post pictures of myself in bathing suits. When I get criticized I’ll say I want to do it for others and for body positivity. When I get criticized for that, I will show sadness that the world doesn’t support mental health and I’m a victim, and finally I’ll get praised for being so brave for living my own truth.” (Bob Loblaw. ### *** language

♦ “We...develop new knowledge and language [italics mine] around mental distress.” (Project LETS.)

♦ “On Saturday, July 16, 2022, at 2:am, Officers responded to an armed mental consumer [italics mine] call in the 200 Block of South Main Street.” (A tweet by Memphis Police. The “armed mental consumer” was threatening to commit a mass shooting outside an arena.)

♦ DEPARTMENT OF BEHAVIORAL HEALTH AND / DEVELOPMENTAL SERVICES / CENTRAL STATE HOSPITAL / HIRAM W. DAVIS MEDICAL CENTER. (Signage for Virginia State’s “mental health” facility.)

♦ “Our perhaps understandable modern need to dull the sawtooth edges of so many of the afflictions we are heir to has led us to banish the harsh old-fashioned words: madhouse, asylum, insanity, melancholia, lunatic, madness. But never let it be doubted that depression, in its extreme form, is madness.” (Darkness Visible: A Memoir of Madness by William Styron.)

♦ “When I was first aware that I had been laid low by the disease, I felt a need, among other things, to register a strong protest against the word ‘depression.’ Depression, most people know, used to be termed ‘melancholia,’ a word which appears in English as early as the year 1303 and crops up more than once in Chaucer, who in his usage seemed to be aware of its pathological nuances. ‘Melancholia’ would still appear to be a far more apt and evocative word for the blacker forms of the disorder, but it was usurped by a noun with a bland tonality and lacking any magisterial presence, used indifferently to describe an economic decline or a rut in the ground, a true wimp of a word for such a major illness. It may be that the scientist generally held responsible for its currency in modern times, a Johns Hopkins Medical School faculty member justly venerated—the Swiss-born psychiatrist Adolf Meyer—had a tin ear for the finer rhythms of English and therefore was unaware of the semantic damage he had inflicted by offering ‘depression’ as a descriptive noun for such a dreadful and raging disease. Nonetheless, for over seventy-five years the word has slithered innocuously through the language like a slug, leaving little trace of its intrinsic malevolence and preventing, by its very insipidity, a general awareness of the horrible intensity of the disease when out of control. / As one who has suffered from the malady in extremis yet returned to tell the tale, I would lobby for a truly arresting designation. ‘Brainstorm,’ for instance, has unfortunately been preempted to describe, somewhat jocularly, intellectual inspiration. But something along these lines is needed...” (Darkness Visible: A Memoir of Madness by William Styron.)

***the bright side

♦ “Living a life of mental illness, they call it—I like to say mental superpowers—you know, basketball was always my escape.” (Former NBA player Delonte West about bipolar disorder.)

♦ “Autistic people who create new universes...”

♦ “For all the little kids who have autism, it’s validating to see characters like themselves on television, instead of feeling invisible.” (Rose Jochum of the Autism Society of America, about the Sesame Street character Julia.)

♦ “People use the term neurodiverse to recognize the rich differences...”

♦ “If we can just free them to think that they can do anything, I really think they can. They need support. We should support them.” (Debbie Mielewski, whose son has autism spectrum disorder (ASD). From “U. Michigan study to help those with autism improve driving” by Mike Householder, AP, August 23, 2022. In phase 1 of the study, researchers found drivers with ASD detected fewer hazards. They also tended to stop short at stop signs. For further consideration, read “She was a respected nurse. Now she’s accused of killing 5 in horrific Windsor Hills crash” by Richard Winton, Noah Goldberg, Nathan Solis, Los Angeles Times, Aug. 12, 2022. Nicole Lorraine Linton had “mental health issues” and had been “involved in up to 13 wrecks before the Windsor Hills crash.”)

♦ Brendan Depa was one of the “so-called exceptional students.” The special help they are given at school is called exceptional student education. (Video shows 6-foot-6 student beat teacher unconscious, Matanzas High School, Palm Coast, Florida.)

♦ “According to the Clay Center for Young Healthy Minds [italics mine], 73% of college students experience some sort of mental health crisis during college.”

♦ “I’m not crazy. But it’s a crazy life. I was raised in a crazy family and it took 31 years to get the crazy out of me.” (Anne Heche, speaking to ABC News. Her 2001 memoir is called Call Me Crazy. Sadly, she died in 2022 in Los Angeles, age 53, having run her car into another person’s house and destroyed it, and leaving behind two children.)

***doing nothing...

♦ “When the paramedics arrived and tried to hospitalize Flack, she refused to go, telling the EMTs that she was just stressed and trying to sleep. / The following day...Flack took her own life.” (“Trouble in Paradise” by Anna Peele, Vanity Fair, July / August 2022.)

♦ “Joanna Hartigan, 54, from Hereford, was found dead in Nov. 2021 after medics decided she did not pose a serious risk.”

♦ “She was found asleep in a doorway in Croydon on the 6th of July, but told police officers she didn’t need help, and left.” (Student nurse Owami Davies. Subsequently five men were arrested for her disappearance, police trawled through 50,000 hours of CCTV, and Great Britain was put on alert. Five weeks later, she was found in Hampshire “in good health and not in a vulnerable state.” From BBC Six O’Clock News, August 23, 2022.)

♦ “His parents assured police he was getting help from mental health professionals.” (Robert E. Crimo III.)

♦ “So this nurse was psychotic, but allowed to be in the medical field???? If she was in jumping out of windows, on police cars but a licensed medical professional. Hmmm now that is insane.” (A commenter about “Nicole Linton Was Involuntarily Committed Multiple Times Before LA Crash, Attorneys Said” by Kui Mwai, Yahoo news, August 16, 2022.)

***the police, caught in the middle...

♦ “Jason had a medication meltdown where he was very, very violent. And I had to call the ambulance. The fire department called the police. And they came in with guns drawn. I’m telling them all the time, ‘There’s no weapons. My son has autism.’ They weren’t hearing anything. So, we want to make sure that the first responders are trained...” (Debra Vines. From CNN health. To donate to Vines’ group The Answer Inc. via GoFundMe, click here.)

♦ “He trusted the police to come and help him. Instead, they attacked and killed him.” (Simon and Sally Glass, the parents of Christian Glass. Christian had self-inflicted wounds from stabbing himself. Suicide by police is becoming more and more common in the United States.)

♦ “St. Louis officer shot during mental health welfare check.”

***parents love their children...

♦ “We choose to remember Jonathan as the thoughtful and intelligent young man we knew and loved.” (Family of man who shot and killed three strangers at a shopping mall and who himself was killed by an armed citizen who prevented an even worse massacre.)

♦ “It’s so terrible when someone is a good person but they do something like this and then all the good is erased and they only see the bad.” (Sylvia Brogdon, ex-mother-in-law of Amy Brogdon Anderson.)

♦ “He was crazy silly, crazy happy. He just loved everybody, he loved life.” (The mother of a 20-year-old man shot by police who had come to arrest him for domestic violence, assault, and improper handling of a firearm. The mother is suing.)

♦ “He was just a great kid... He’d walk in a room and he’d have this infectious smile... I had a false expectation that if law enforcement...knew that he just [italics mine] had a mental health condition...that he wouldn’t be gunned down in the middle of the street on a bright sunny day.” (The mother of a mentally ill man. She herself was the one who called the police, who ended up shooting and killing her son.)

♦ “He was the peacemaker [with his siblings]. He was the one that would make sure that they didn’t fight and they get along very well.” (A family member about Osaze Osagie, a schizophrenic, killed by police.)

♦ “Crumbley’s parents, James and Jennifer Crumbley, were charged with involuntary manslaughter and have pleaded not guilty. / Prosecutors accuse the couple of failing to keep the gun used in the shooting secure at home and failing to reasonably care for their son when he showed signs of mental distress [italics mine].” (“Lawyer: Teen a worry months before Michigan school shooting” by Corey Williams, AP, Sept. 22, 2022.)

***Simon Biles, Naomi Osaka, etc.

♦ “[Her case] is opening up this space to have these conversations where people can you know choose mental health over you know necessarily you know showing up to work when they’re feeling miserable.” (ABC, “Naomi Osaka Steps Away.”)

♦ “It does open up a conversation because it’s her using her voice and her platform to really call out systemic change, which she has done before. I think she can show other girls and women who look like her how to empower them to stand up for themselves in ways that I think we haven’t always been able to see.” (C. Vaile Wright, PhD, a clinical psychologist and the American Psychological Association’s Senior Director of Health Care Innovation, about Naomi Osaka and mental health.)

♦ “This is the new breed of ‘sporting achievement.’ The loser reveling in their own narrative of ‘poor me’ and ‘victimhood...’ [A] troubled past, a difficult childhood from nothing, and then of course the trump card: ‘My mental health issues.’ Serena W., Naomi O., Anthony J.” (A BBC HYS commenter about Anthony Joshua’s “bizarre post-fight antics” after his second loss to Oleksandr Usyk.)

See also “NBA suspends Warriors’ Draymond Green for stomping on Kings’ Domantas Sabonis” by Jeff Zillgitt, USA Today, April 18, 2023.)

♦ “Rapper Designer said he is seeking mental health treatment after he exposed himself on flight.”

♦ “I know that you all are surprised by today’s announcement. I’ve been seeking help to deal with previous trauma I suffered and will now take this time to focus on my mental health treatment more fully.” (A statement by NBA player Joshua Primo. According to Primo’s lawyer, Primo “never intentionally exposed himself [to Cauthen] or anyone else.”)

♦ “I’m thankful to my dad, who has been with me through this whole period and I’m glad this nightmare is coming to an end for the sake of our combined mental health.” (A statement by Conor Benn, who failed two drug tests, resulting in the cancellation of his scheduled fight with Chris Eubank Jr.)

♦ “The minute you give up is the minute your mental health wins. You’ve just got to keep on going.” (The boxer Anthony Joshua prior to his latest fight. His statement is interesting because he seems to consider his demons, his insecurities, his criminal past, and his execrable sportsmanship to be his “mental health.”)

♦ “Actor Ezra Miller seeking treatment for ‘complex mental health issues’ after period of ‘intense crisis.’” (Accused of abuse, arrested for bizarre acts...)

♦ “The Grammy Award winner cited past struggles with alcohol and depression.” (Accused of sexual misconduct.)

♦ “At the time of the offence, Cadman-Smith was a mentor responsible for supporting pupils’ ‘behaviour, mental health and learning difficulties.’ / But, now aged 24, she suffers from ‘extreme anxiety’ and was deemed ‘not mentally fit enough’ to enter a plea or stand trial.” (Daily Mail, about the mother-of-one’s sexual relation with a 15-year-old school boy.)

***Social media

♦ “A new group of social media stars are surging on TikTok: Mental health influencers. Most of them are teen girls and young women who...” (“How TikTok has become a dangerous breeding ground for mental disorders” by Rikki Schlott, New York Post, March 12, 2022.)

♦ “Gone are the days of showing the highlight reel of your best life on Instagram. Now, it’s trendy to celebrate your worst moments. What attracts eyeballs in today’s social media market is tears, and content creators are incentivized to be vulnerable for views.” (“How TikTok has become a dangerous breeding ground for mental disorders” by Rikki Schlott, New York Post, March 12, 2022.)

♦ “Instagram pushed her down a dangerous rabbit hole.” (An eating disorder leads to teen suicide.)

♦ “‘I find Instagram and Twitter to be overstimulating, to be overwhelming,’ he said in a video posted Saturday. ‘I get caught up and I spiral when I read things about me online, and ultimately it’s very detrimental to my mental state. So I decided to take a step back and delete the app." ("Spider-Man" actor Tom Holland says he is taking a social media break for his mental health" by Mirna Alsharif, NBC News, August 15, 2022. He has 67.7 million Instagram followers.)

***paranoid schizophrenia, etc.

♦ "Moore's mother, Rachel Crisp, spoke to Louisville news station WHAS11 about her son's mental health [italics mine] leading up to the incident. 'He was talking about vampires following him home. Just crazy nonsense stuff like that, it doesn't make any sense' she told the news station, adding that her son believed he was a werewolf and that most of his family, including his own child, were vampires." ("Man Killed Firefighter Who Came to His Aid, Thought Vampires Were After Him" by Gerrard Kaonga, Newsweek, 5/1/22.)

♦ "The assailant had mental health issues." (Ran into a family with truck, got out, and with a shotgun murdered a man and a baby held in her mother's arms...)

♦ "Sgt. Matthew Fishman of the Wayne County Sheriff's Office was killed last week. He was one of three deputies shot while trying to serve involuntary commitment papers at a home south of Goldsboro on Aug. 1." (The 23-year-old who shot the officers committed suicide after a 9-hour standoff.)

♦ "Major manic episodes; antisocial personality disorder (sociopath); anxiety disorders; bipolar disorder; schizo-affective disorder; schizophrenia; paranoid delusions; delusional disorder; dissociative disorders; "D.I.D., a complex mental health condition (dissociative identity disorder); "He felt like he was being surveilled and then accusing me of conspiring with the government" (a mother, about her son); borderline personality disorder; histrionic personality disorder; (THC-induced) psychosis; "How to spot the difference between a narcissist, psychopath, or sociopath"; hallucinations; hearing voices...; auditory hallucinations... (Mental illness terms, some scientific, some lay, some relatively innocuous, some incredibly dangerous, all commonly referred to as "mental health.")

***jumping on the bandwagon, etc.

♦ "The field is starting to build momentum right now. Evidence is there to support the conclusion that contact with nature benefits our mood, our psychological well-being, our mental health, and our cognitive functioning." (University of Washington environmental psychologist Gregory Bratman. Quoted in "The Nature Antidote" by Jill U. Adams, Audubon magazine, Winter 2019.)

♦ "A recent study in the journal Scientific Reports found that hearing or seeing birds can have a positive benefit on one's mental health." ("Feeling down? Step outside for a bird walk," Scott Simon, NPR, Mental Health, Weekend Edition Saturday, Nov. 12, 2022. A 1-minute listen. Thanks! That's helpful! See the Wikipedia entry "Scientific Reports.")

♦ "We want teachers to be able to understand what mental health concerns may be in your classroom." (Psychologist Dr. Janice Beal, who works with schools in the Houston area. "Have everybody share how they're feeling.")

♦ "People found they got remarkable feedback when they talked about their mental health." (Dan Roth, Editor in Chief at LinkedIn, about LinkedIn's "new emotional tone.")

♦ "Even five years ago people didn't open up so much. Now there's greater awareness of people's vulnerabilities, such as mental health and LinkedIn has magnified this." (Douglas Rode of the recruitment giant Page Group in the U.K and Ireland about LinkedIn's "new emotional tone.")

♦ "Heather has a BS in Psychology and an MS in Criminal Forensic Studies. She aims to use her gifts, talents, experiences, education, and authentic self to help others feel empowered to live as their authentic selves. She wants to normalize mental health struggles and addiction, and let people know that they are not alone. There is help and support just around the corner." ♦ "Barbie launches first ever Barbie doll with Down Syndrome. (Mattel. The doll is shorter, with smaller features.)

***an international perspective...

♦ "For more than a generation now, we in the West have aggressively spread our modern knowledge of mental illness around the world. We have done this in the name of science... There is now good evidence to suggest that in the process of teaching the rest of the world to think like us, we've been exporting our Western 'symptom repertoire' as well. Indeed, a handful of mental-health disorders—depression, post-traumatic stress disorder and anorexia among them—now appear to be spreading across cultures with the speed of contagious diseases. These symptom clusters are becoming the lingua franca of human suffering, replacing indigenous forms of mental illness..." ("The Americanization of Mental Illness," by Ethan Watters, NYT, January 10, 2010. In addition, the western idea that mental illness is a disease, and not a spiritual sickness or temporary possession, has led to greater stigmatization for sufferers, not less. Studies show that schizophrenics fare better over time in less developed countries in such aspects as relapses, and social acceptance.)

***institutionalization, commitment

♦ "New Hampshire Hospital was established, in 1842, as a kind of utopian community, a reprieve from the disorder of the outside world. The hospital's early leaders tried to help patients regain their common sense... by immersing them in a model society. The hospital was situated on a hundred and seventeen acres, and patients lived in a stately, red-brick Colonial building with a steeple and a tiered white porch, surrounded by trees. They farmed, gardened, and cooked together; there was a golf course, an orchestra, a monthly newspaper, dances, and boating on the hospital's pond... / As the patient population expanded, though, the hospital couldn't maintain its early idealism. Psychiatrists no longer had time for the benevolent form of care known as "moral treatment." ("God Knows Where I Am," by Rachel Aviv, The New Yorker, May 30, 2011.)

♦ "It's concerning how easily the courts and the clinicians presume danger in individuals who may be having extreme mental experiences." (Laurie Coker, a psychiatric nurse once diagnosed with bipolar disorder. Her son committed suicide. She has opened the Green Tree Peer Center, "a peer-operated wellness center that empowers people to live more fully through peer support, self-help education, and great social connections! Click to donate online.")

♦ "Care Court as it's written right now is unconstitutionally vague and it violates the civil rights of our clients with mental health disabilities who are homeless." (Christian Abasto, legal director of Disability Rights California.)

♦ "California governor OKs mental health courts for homeless" by Janie Har and Adam Beam, ABC/AP, Sept. 14, 2022. The ACLU of California, Human Rights Watch, Disability Rights California, and numerous other organizations that work with homeless people, minority communities and people with disabilities, all claim the new program will violate civil rights.)

♦ "There was a 91% increase in involuntary commitment petitions in North Carolina between 2009 and 2018."

♦ "Dear has refused to take medication." ("Planned Parenthood shooting suspect can be forcibly medicated" by Abigail Beckman, KRCC. In a 2015 attack on a Colorado Springs Planned Parenthood, Robert Lewis Dear Jr. murdered three people and injured nine others.)

♦ "He's in that dark hole right now, and if you could force treatment there's a chance he could possibly crawl out of it... He's never been diagnosed. He doesn't want any help. He refuses to think of himself as ill, at all... It's okay to kill himself. He can stay on the streets, and he can die there, but he's going to die with his rights. The only rights I have as a mother is to go claim him in the morgue." (The mother of a mentally ill homeless drug addict who refuses treatment and is in and out of crisis police holds, emergency rooms, jails, and homeless shelters.)

♦ A "Ulysses pact" (contract) allows a mentally ill person to stipulate in advance that he be hospitalized during a mental illness crisis, thus circumventing a legal requirement that he give permission. Ulysses wished to hear the sirens, but understood their voices would lead him, and his men, to his doom. So he ordered his men to tie him to the mast, block their own ears with beeswax, and under no circumstance untie him until the danger was past.

♦ "I, _____, being an adult of sound mind, willfully and voluntarily make this advance instruction for mental health treatment to be followed if it is determined by a physician or eligible psychologist that my ability to receive and evaluate information or communicate decisions is impaired to such an extent that I lack the capacity to refuse or consent to mental health treatment." (A psychiatric advance directive (PAD), or advance instruction.)

♦ "Why wasn't I in a hospital?... / I'm convinced I should have been in the hospital weeks before. For, in fact, the hospital was my salvation [where] I found the repose, the assuagement of the tempest in my brain... This is partly the result of sequestration, of safety, of being removed to a world in which the urge to pick up a knife and plunge it into one's own breast disappears... [T]he hospital also offers the mild, oddly gratifying trauma of sudden stabilization—a transfer out of the too familiar surroundings of home, where all is anxiety and discord, into an orderly and benign detention where one's only duty is to try to get well. For me the real healers were seclusion and time... [I] began to get well, gradually but steadily. I was amazed to discover that the fantasies of self-destruction all but disappeared within a few days after I checked in, and this again is testimony to the pacifying effect that the hospital can create, its immediate value as a sanctuary where peace can return to the mind." (Darkness Visible: A Memoir of Madness by William Styron.)

♦ "The fatal beating of a hospital psychiatrist, allegedly by a former patient, has sparked calls in Italy to improve mental health." (From "Fatal Beating of psychiatrist in Italy sparks reform outcry," AP, April 24, 2023. According to the article, "Under a 1978 law, Italy closed down psychiatric hospitals and made all psychiatric treatment voluntary, with very few exceptions. Critics say the legislation envisioned a network of neighborhood public health facilities to deliver mental health care, but that never fully developed." The victim, Dr. Barbara Capovani, 55, was the mother of three children. She was beaten to death while unlocking her bicycle by a man who had previously beaten a doctor.)

***perceptions of the majority...

- ♦ "The clinical varieties of what used to be called 'madness' keep rising, especially among the young."
- ♦ "I am a retired senior citizen, but I do not recall any era in my lifetime of such an overload of patients seeking mental health services." (An online commenter.)
- ♦ "Growing up in the 70s and 80s we never heard much about "mental health." (An online commenter.)
- ♦ "Seems many of these wellness checks involve mental health issues." (A commenter about the case involving Amy Brogdon Anderson and her daughter.)

***a funny cartoon

***the military...

- ♦ "Just admitted a gunner suffering from shock alone—no wound—completely knocked out; he can't tell you his name, or stand, or even sit up, but just shivers and shudders. Now he is warm in bed, he can say 'Thank you.' I wonder what exactly did it." (Diary of a Nursing Sister on the Western Front: 1914-1915 by Kate (Katherine) Evelyn Luard.)
- ♦ "HYSTERICAL MONOPLÉGIA, Case D5.—FLACCID FOOT DROP / PRIVATE, 21 YEARS OF AGE. DURATION, 9 MONTHS / During the advance on Loos this private was "blown up" with his platoon and taken prisoner. He escaped the same evening and returned to the trenches, but walked with difficulty. The following evening when making an attack he was wounded in the left arm by shrapnel. The arm fell lifeless and he was dazed. An officer gave the warning that the Prussian Guards were advancing; he got up and made his way to a communication trench, where he began shaking; the left leg went "dead" and powerless and he became deaf. Hearing came back in about an hour. A fortnight later he was sent to England, where he received electrical treatment to the left arm and leg. / Nine months later there was no power whatever in the left foot. Anaesthesia was noted over the leg to a line drawn round the knee." (Hysterical Disorders of Warfare by Lewis Ralph Yealland, M.D., Resident Medical Officer, National Hospital for the Paralyzed and Epileptic, Queen Square, London, with preface by E. Farquhar Buzzard, M.D., F.R.C.P., Lieut.-Colonel, R.A.M.C., 1918.)

♦ Zhivago: There are three points. First, the court-martial of the vodka brewers; second, the reorganization of the field ambulance and the pharmacy; and third, my proposal for the treatment of mental illnesses. I don't know whether you agree with me, my dear Lajos, but from what I observe we are going mad, and modern forms of insanity spread like an epidemic... / Lajos: ...I am not surprised at your suggestion for preventive psychiatry. I believe in it myself. We are faced with the rise and spread of a form of psychic illness that is typical of our time and is directly related to the contemporary upheavals. We have a case of it in the camp—Pamphil Palykh... / Zhivago: I know Palykh very well... All right, I'll see what I can do about it." (Dr. Zhivago by Boris Pasternak, from "The Forest Brotherhood." Palykh would end up murdering his wife and children with an ax to prevent them from falling into the hands of the enemy.)

♦ "One agency that seized upon Freeman's work was the Veterans Administration. Faced with an influx of shell-shocked World War II GIs that flooded its mental wards, the VA issued a directive in 1943 requesting its neurosurgeons to study and use the Freeman and Watts lobotomy technique. By 1951, nearly 3,000 lobotomies had been performed at VA hospitals, according to agency records." ("D.C. Neurosurgeon Pioneered 'Operation Icepick' Technique" by Glenn Frankel, the Washington Post, April 7, 1980.)

♦ It is impossible to understand what "mental health" means nowadays. Having a bad day? Female hormones? Bad behavior? A personality disorder? An excuse for bad behavior? An aspect of the for-profit and clicks "wellness" industry? Criminal behavior? An excuse for criminal behavior? Drug addiction or alcoholism? Simple anxiety? Paranoid schizophrenia? All of these things seem to be expressed by the term, "mental health." Mental illness is even considered as a "gift," "wonderful," and the mentally ill person is considered "amazing" and "exceptional" right up until the time he or "they" commits a horrible mass shooting, and then the person becomes "pure evil." This phrase is one of the best to illustrate the notion that when something means everything, it means nothing.

(Kidnapped by Robert Louis Stevenson.)

♦ Before 1910, more than 90 percent of blacks lived in the South. In 1940, 77 percent of black Americans still lived in the South—40 percent in the rural South. By the end of the migration, black America was only half Southern, and less than a quarter rural; "urban" had become a euphemism for "black." The black migration was one of the largest and most rapid mass internal movements of people in history—perhaps the greatest not caused by the immediate threat of execution or starvation. In sheer numbers it outranks the migration of any other ethnic group—Italians or Irish or Jews or Poles—to this country." (The Promised Land: The Great Black Migration and How It Changed America by Nicholas Lemann.)

♦ 1947. August 15, 1947. "Months of violence sharpened the divisions, highlighted Jinnah's arguments, achieved partition. On August 15, 1947... a bleeding Pakistan was carved out of the body of a bleeding India." (Halfway to Freedom by Margaret Bourke-White.)

♦ 1939-1946. "Between 1939 and 1946 an unprecedented number of people living between the Baltic and the Black Sea were uprooted from their homes. Over 20 million people were forced by fear, or by compulsion, to leave their homes, and to seek new, and mostly permanent sanctuary elsewhere." (Atlas of Russian History by Martin Gilbert.)

♦ Viva voce is Medieval Latin for "with a living mouth." If you hear something viva voce it means somebody told you. It has come to mean "word of mouth."

♦ Hawaii has the "coconut wireless" or the Coconut Wire. The Philippines have the Bamboo Telegraph. Ghanaians can hear things via "the talking drum." From time immemorial, as Ibrahim al-Koni tells us, the desert winds have brought rumors and reports to the Saharawis: "I heard it on the wind." Americans can "hear it through the grapevine," or hear a report or account through the rumor mill. Italians say "per sentito dire" which basically means, "heard it said," and they hear gossip "voci di corridoio" which means "hall voice" or "voices in the hall." These systems operate by word-of-mouth, or, nowadays, the Internet.

♦ "The next person I came across was a dapper little man in a beautiful white wig, whom I saw to be a barber on his rounds; and knowing well that barbers were great gossips, I asked him plainly what sort of a man was Mr. Balfour of the Shaws." (Kidnapped by Robert Louis Stevenson.)

♦ "They've got a gallows-bad reputation, but, you know what a place the beach is for talking." / "The beach, if you don't know is the name of the gossip mill of white derelicts and rough customers that hang around your South Sea island ports. You'll find captains and traders too fond of their grog and properly down on their luck. I'll admit, I was fond of the gin myself back then..." (The Beach of Falesa by Robert Louis Stevenson.)

♦ "You may take it for a fact that anything of this kind is not only noticed and discussed by a man's own race but by some hundred and fifty natives as well... [T]he news flew, in the usual mysterious fashion, from mouth to mouth, till Bisesa's duenna heard of it and told Bisesa." (The affecting and horrible "Beyond the Pale" by Rudyard Kipling.)

♦ "You're sure you've took no 'arm?" cried Mrs. Cloke, who had heard the news by farm-telegraphy, which is older but swifter than Marconi's. / "No. I'm perfectly well," Sophie protested." ("An Habitation Enforced" by Rudyard Kipling.)

♦ "Word around the campfire for me was...that there was at least speculation, maybe informed speculation, that..." (A sports analyst.)

♦ "[The internet] is the modern world's equivalent of those bars in Donegal where rumors about the case used to circulate." (No Body Recovered, BBC Sounds, Episode 6. A missing child.)

♦ "Gossip is a fearful thing"—this phrase was found in the note left by the film star Ruan Langyu after she took her own life. ("On 'Gossip Is a Fearful Thing' by Lu Xun, from Jottings under Lamplight, edited by Eileen J. Cheng and Kirk A. Denton.)

♦ "In crossing the desert, I perceived, at a distance, immense tracts, which had the appearance of rivers or lakes, with islands of sand rising in the midst of them; they presented themselves to the eye, in the horizon of the desert, as places where one might quench one's thirst... This illusion only rendered my situation more dreadful, when I was consumed with thirst, and saw the sea receding before me as by enchantment. It is impossible to form any correct idea of a mirage without have seen one." (Travels Through Central Africa To Timbuctoo; and Across The Great Desert, to Morocco; Performed in the Years 1824-1828 by Rene Caillie.)

♦ "The mirages in the Antarctic had a clarity that was almost beyond belief, and made it difficult for an explorer to know whether he was seeing land or not. Second ranges of mountains appeared to be built up on top of the real mountains lying below, and these false ranges were immensely high and clear in outline. They hung there in the pale sky for a few minutes and then vanished only to re-form themselves again, so that the sailing ships drifted about in an atmosphere of ghostly fantasy. It was both awe-inspiring and wonderfully beautiful." (The Fatal Impact by Alan Moorehead.)

♦ "Some of the things you could see from a Great Lakes steamer were not really there... In certain lights the lakes could produce mirages. A freighter on the skyline would suddenly break up, midships section vanishing altogether, pilothouse and after cabins becoming extremely tall, reaching up like lighthouses in the deep water; then, after a minute or two, the lighthouses would disappear and there would be a steamboat again, prosaic as any other cargo carrier. On the north shore of Lake Superior the Canadian cities of Fort William and Port Arthur lie at the end of a broad bay, and on the seaward side of this bay there are islands; and if you sail from one of these cities late in the day these islands suddenly multiply so that each one is accompanied by a twin, each rock and tree perfectly duplicated, and no matter how hard you look you cannot tell which island is real and which is not... After a while the imitation islands rise into the air, get all streaky and distorted, and then go away entirely, and the lake is clear once more. I feel sorry for people who have never cruised the Great Lakes by steamboat." (Waiting for the Morning Train: An American Boyhood by Bruce Catton.)

♦ "One of...my experiences with the magicians of the air occurred near the forks of the Platte. There had been a tremendous thunder-storm, lasting all night. In the morning my party set forward over the soaked prairie under a cloudless sky intensely blue. I was riding in advance... Looking forward I beheld a truly terrifying spectacle. Immediately in front, at a distance, apparently, of not more than a quarter-mile, was a long line of the most formidable looking monsters that the imagination ever conceived. They were taller than trees...and partook of the triple character of animals, houses and machines. Legs they had, that an army of elephants could have marched among; bodies that ships might have sailed beneath; heads about which eagles might have delighted to soar, and ears—they were singularly well gifted with ears. But wheels also they were endowed with, and vast sides of blank wall; the wheels as large as the ring of a circus, the walls white and high as cliffs of chalk along an English coast. Among them, on them, beneath, in and a part of them, were figures and fragments of figures of gigantic men. All were inextricably interblended and superposed—a man's head and shoulders blazoned on the side of an animal; a wheel with legs for spokes rolling along the creature's back; a vast section of wall, having no contact with the earth, but (with a tail hanging from its rear, like a note of admiration), moving along the line... [O]ur tongues were loosened only when it began rapidly to diminish and recede, and at last was resolved into a train of mules and wagons, barely visible on the horizon. They were miles away and outlined against the blue sky. / This pageant had appeared to move along parallel to the foot of a slope extending upward and backward to an immense height, intersected with rivers and presenting all the features of a prairie landscape. The mirage had in effect contracted the entire space between us and the train to a pistol-shot in breadth, and had made a background...by lifting into view Heaven knows how great an extent of country below our horizon. Does refraction account for all this?" ("Mirage" by Ambrose Bierce. Early Cubism?)

moral injury Olympics

the ~ (disparagement of term)

PTSD or moral injury

veterans dealing with ~

♦ According to the Wikipedia entry for "moral injury," the term "moral distress" originated in the 1980s in reference to health-care workers. Through "concept inflation" or "co-option," the construct has since been applied to soldiers, police, firefighters, EMTs, legal defenders and lawyers, people in child and adult protective services, and even to veterinarians, leading inevitably to the construct's disparagement: "moral injury Olympics."

♦ "A lot of these guys and gals are really really hurting, because of what they saw, and what they went through, and then when you add on top of that, the criticism, like I said, the moral injury..." (Andy Carrier, clinical social worker, who counseled Uvalde school shooting officers.)

♦ "With the moral injury, that was going on with the officers, because of the scrutiny from the public, umm, uhh... I'm sure you've heard of the term compassion fatigue and secondary trauma, we felt it..." (Andy Carrier, clinical social worker, who counseled Uvalde school-shooting officers.)

♦ [A quiet card game in the rear was disturbed by the shots of a sniper in a tree. A soldier from the West, a crack shot, dealt with the problem.] "That gray squirrel is pretty frisky, and I must stop his fun to stop him spoiling ours." He drew a bead on the man in the tree and fired. As the Confederate sharpshooter came crashing through the branches to the ground, the Westerner sat down and asked: 'What's trumps?' He seemed as unconcerned as if he had killed a mosquito that had been annoying him. / ...[B]ehind all this was constantly present to our eyes and mind the scene of a great stream, a procession, so to speak of human souls on their way to eternity." (Memoirs of Chaplain Life by W. Corby.)

the ~ had command of the lake (Champlain, 1776)

♦ "Most of the 25,000 soldiers that Napoleon sent to Haiti to quash the slave rebellion died of malaria. Napoleon had planned to transfer his army from Haiti to New Orleans but he had to abandon that strategy, and sold the Louisiana Territory to the US instead." (The Invention of Nature: Alexander Von Humboldt's New World by Andrea Wulf.)

♦ "Anopheles claviger! This became the slogan of Battista Grassi. You can see him, shuffling along behind lovers in the dusk, making fists of his fingers to keep himself from pouncing on the zanzarone who made meals off their regardless necks... You can see this Grassi, sitting in a stagecoach with no springs, oblivious to bumps, deaf to the chatter of his fellow-passengers, with absent eyes counting the Anopheles claviger he had discovered—with delight—riding on the ceiling of the wagon in which he journeyed from one utterly terrible little malarious village to another still more cursed." (Grassi did what Ross and Koch couldn't: prove that malaria is passed from man to man by the bite of a mosquito that the locals called zanzarone and that naturalists called Anopheles claviger. From Microbe Hunters by Paul De Kruif.)

♦ "A Japanese man burned his house down while trying to kill a mosquito."

Round it admired the Arabs, saying, 'Indeed and at last they have sent us THE aeroplane, of which these things were foals.'" (Seven Pillars of Wisdom, Book X, Chapter CXIV, by T.E. Lawrence.)

♦ "All were on foot, with the exception of a few gentlemen, about fifty in number; and they possessed but one piece of artillery—an old iron cannon, drawn by a string of ponies. For any military purposes it was useless, and it was only employed as a signal gun; but it accompanied the march in deference to the superstitious ideas of the Highlanders, who, being but little accustomed to cannon, attached great importance to the possession of 'the musket's mother,' as they called it. Many of the Highlanders were armed only with scythes or pitchforks." (Prestonpans. From British Battles on Land and Sea by James Grant.)

♦ "Enjoy [your unbeaten streak]—the emotion of getting to the top of the mountain—because you can't duplicate that. It's a lot tougher to stay on the mountain than it is to climb it." (Ara Parseghian's advice to Tyrone Willingham.)

♦ "After the Roc Noir, I had the feeling of closing a door behind me. I was entering another world. I was far from the world of the living. I had never had this feeling on any other mountain." (Jean-Christophe Lafaille on the east ridge of Annapurna in 2002.)

♦ "We can control our heartbeat, which in cold, drawn-out bivouacs is preferably as slow as possible. It is necessary to disconnect the arms and the legs and draw most of one's blood into the core of the body and the head. We switch to other dimensions. We become insensitive to pain, cold, wind, homesickness, thirst, hunger. Instead of having dinner we separate from the physical world. But the further you go into the world where there are no reasons or consequences, points of the compass, time points like yesterday or today, where you only are—the harder it is to return. The reentry into the body is usually accompanied by pain." (No Impossible Ways by the great Slovenian climber Tomaz Humar.)

♦ "Don't take a camera, and don't post about it on Facebook—just climb a hill or do a walk, and keep the experience for yourself." (Stein P Aasheim, Norway. In 1985 he climbed with Sir Chris Bonington to the top of Everest. From "Finding 'friluftsliv' in Norway, by Tim Moore, BBC, 23 August 2011.)

♦ "Burn your TV, fill your pockets with chocolate and ham, and go for a big walk." (A Norwegian.)

♦ "Y/N" is used with the meaning of "Your Name." (Fanfiction, fandom.)

♦ "Readers can Mad Lib themselves into the narrative." (Use their own names for a character.)

♦ "Jeremy's not a nut. He doesn't make people call him by his name on set." (Playwright, screenwriter and film director Aaron Sorkin about the great actor Jeremy Strong.)

♦ "Names come into and fall out of fashion much as clothing styles, musical genres, and haircuts do. None of the top five girls' names from 1912—Mary, Helen, Dorothy, Margaret, and Ruth—ranked in the top 40 in 2010, when the leaders were Emma, Olivia, Sophia, Isabella, and Ava."

♦ "From an Internet search I learned that boys' names beginning in N were relatively rare, appearing only once in the top one hundred names of the 1930s and '40..." (I'll Be Gone In The Dark: One Woman's Obsessive Search For The Golden State Killer by Michelle McNamara.)

♦ "She connects the popularity, ten years ago, of four-letter names (Ruby, Luna, Levi) with the rise of such instant-gratification apps as Seamless and Tinder. Now longer names are making a comeback—the result, Humphrey believes, of the lockdown-related return to leisurely pursuits like gardening, cooking, and crafting. Waiting for the sourdough to rise has given people the patience to enunciate multisyllable names like Genevieve, Josephine, and Theodore." ("Dept. Of Monikers: Would Smell As Sweet?" The Talk Of The Town, The New Yorker, April 18, 2022. A delightful talk with Taylor A. Humphrey, a professional baby namer and doula.)

♦ "Women are flocking to TikTok in droves to complain and commiserate about the perils of dating people named Ben in videos amassing millions of views online." ("What is the 'Ben Stage'? Women warned about dating men named Ben" by Ben Cost, Viral Trends, New York Post, February 23, 2023.)

♦ "My great-grandmother [Queen Victoria] was always very particular about the names of her descendants. When I was born she wrote to my mother, in the rather shaky handwriting of an octogenarian: 'There is one thing that would give me great pleasure if you and Louis approve of it, viz. if you would add the name Albert to the four others.' So I was christened Louis Francis Albert Victor Nicholas—but all my life people have called me Dickie." (Lord Mountbatten on his name, in his forward to The Life and Times of Lord Mountbatten by John Terraine.)

♦ "[My name is] Kittredge McPherson Printer-John Vine Terhune... Kittredge was a senator our folks allers voted for... Then McPherson, he was the preacher married Pa and Ma. Printer-John—well, they was three John Vines: Long-John, Sick-John and Printer-John who run the paper, oncet, in Kittuwa. Vine was Ma's name afore she married... [But you can call me] Kit." (Smoky Mountain Magic, by Horace Kephart.)

♦ Muhammad Ali famously taunted Ernie Terrell in the ring with calls of "What's my name?" Before the fight, Terrell had referred to Ali as Cassius Clay, and Ali had said, "Why don't you call me my name, man?" Ali made Terrell pay in the ring, which went all 15 rounds. Terrell wasn't the only person who had trouble accepting Ali's name change. Ali's father had trouble accepting it, too.

♦ "Muslims serving in the US military in Iraq and Afghanistan often use fake names on their uniforms to avoid being singled out by insurgents as traitors and to prevent reprisals against their families back home." (The Week, November 20, 2009.)

♦ "We're Muslims. Now there's no limiting. Before, there were no mosques. Now there are many." (A Tajik mother of three, waiting at the airport for her father to return on a Haj flight. Islam was suppressed under the Soviets. Now Medina has become a popular name for girls.)

♦ "Roma children are given three names. The first is a secret name, which is whispered by the mother during christening. Its role is to hide the real identity of the child from evil spirits. The second is a Roma name that is used by the community. The third is the official Christian name, for use in relations with those outside the community." (Delia Grigore, University of Bucharest, on a naming tradition among some groups of Roma.)

♦ The 9/11 memorial features a list of names.

♦ The Vietnam Veterans memorial features a list of names.

- ◆ "Narratives tend to get generated by various events. And newspapers and television programs and pundits tend to coalesce around these narratives. The main storyline was 'This is what boxing does. This is the goal of boxing. We've got to get rid of boxing.'" (The historian Neal Gabler. From the emotionally wrenching documentary movie Ring of Fire: The Emile Griffith Story 2005.)
- ◆ "The story delves deep into what Bret sees as the performance of everyday life; the way everything is a narrative, a 'pantomime,' a 'script.'" ("Bret Easton Ellis' first novel in more than a decade, 'The Shards,' is worth the wait" by Gabino Iglesias, NPR, Review, Books, January 19, 2023.)
- ◆ This word has its own, huge Wikipedia entry.
- ◆ Narrative (count noun): (a) Your personal view and set of beliefs, which conflict with mine. (b) A codeword for, "I completely disagree with you." (Collocation) You do your very best to control / frame the narrative and attack the other person's narrative. My narrative is right. Your narrative is wrong. (See belief, polemic)... (A definition written in the spirit of Ambrose Bierce's The Devil's Dictionary. A more concise definition could be, "What you believe and I don't.")

Ecosystem? Who's in Batchelor Nation, is it like everybody who watches the show, who was a part of it, what does that mean?" (Michele Martin wants to know. From "Racism Controversy Rocks 'Bachelor' Nation, NPR, All Things Considered, Feb 20, 2021.)

◆ "Citizens of vaccination nation, all those shots in the arm, gave a shot in the arm to the box office this weekend..." (Chris Connelly promoting filmgoing on ABC. This is a good example of recontextualization of an old cliché in the age of COVID.)

◆ "I'm so grateful to Bachelor Nation for all of the memories we've made together." (Chris Harrison. Canceled.)

◆ "Chiefs Kingdom was not enthused by the call." (A NFL commentator about fans booing a roughing-the-passer penalty.)

◆ "We thought this was a fun way to invite Vol Nation to continue in the celebration. We had heard before and during the game that the fans would support a celebration, no matter the cost, so we leaned into that enthusiasm." (Athletic Director Danny White at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville, Tennessee, seeking donations from fans to replace the goalposts that fans tore down after a victory over Alabama. Chase McGrath hit a 40-yard field goal with no time remaining to win the game, and fans stormed the field. The suggested contributions were: (1) $16 (# of years since Vols beat Alabama) (2) $52.49 (the final score) and (3) $1,019.15 (# of sold-out crowd at Neyland Stadium). Members of the Vol Nation donated $50,000 almost immediately, 35% of the goal of about $143,000. In addition, Tennessee faces a $100,000 fine for allowing fans to rush onto the field. Now, that's a nation!)

♦ "How people are navigating this New Year's Eve amid this variant." (Omicron. NPR.)

♦ "A Black family in Maryland is navigating the economic strain." (NPR. By Alana Wise.)

♦ "Clever comedians can navigate cancel culture."

♦ "Pedestrians navigate a snow-covered sidewalk in Chicago." (The caption of a picture, showing two people walking side-by-side down a sidewalk that is covered by a light dusting of snow. The picture was underwhelming, to say the least. The caption might just have well as been captioned, "Two people walk along a sidewalk in Chicago.")

♦ Navigate is one of the most popular clichés in "contempo-speak." Literally anything can be navigated and is, nowadays. Oftentimes it can be replaced with the old but less trendy "deal with."

♦ "Two Swedish tourists headed for the Italian resort of Capri misspelled the name in the GPS device and ended up in the industrial town of Carpi, 400 miles away, where they were very puzzled by the absence of a beach." (The Week, August 7, 2009.)

♦ "Triple A suggested that drivers who use GPS still carry a good old-fashioned map."

♦ "Tired of stumbling off curbs or bumping into other pedestrians while consulting a map on your smartphone? When you wear Lechal Insoles, a gentle vibration in one shoe or the other will tell you when and in which direction to turn. Just enter your destination into Lechal's GPS app, and let your phone do the navigating. The batteries for the vibrating pads last about 15 days on a charge. Besides steering you from place to place, the insoles can also act as activity trackers, monitoring distances traveled, steps taken, calories burned, and more. $150, amazon.com."

♦ The great captain James Cook learned cartographic trigonometry from Lt. Samuel Holland in the year prior to the 1759 Siege of Quebec. Cook, in turn, transmitted his knowledge to Captain William Bligh, who taught Captain Matthew Flinders. Cook, Bligh, and Flinders were famous for their voyages of exploration and discovery.

♦ William Bligh, Ernest Shackleton... (Two men associated with extraordinary feats of open-boat navigation.)

♦ "...the Englishmen were treated to an astonishing spectacle, a review in which no fewer than 330 canoes took part, some of them almost as long as the Resolution herself... The painting by Hodges now in Admiralty House gives one an idea of the scope of this display..." (The Resolution's second visit to Tahiti. From The Fatal Impact by Alan Moorehead. Pacific Islanders performed great feats of navigation.)

♦ A FUNNY CARTOON. A gridlocked 5-lane urban highway. In the very center of the mass of anonymous cars, two people can be seen behind their windshield. The driver is saying to his passenger, "The navigation says that we're wasting our time and should never have left home." (The New Yorker, July 4, 2022.)

♦ A FUNNY STORY. A rich city man stopped his limousine next to a field in the countryside and waved a farmer over. "Where's Centerville?" the rich man demanded. "Never heard of it," said the farmer. "Well, where is Nearville?" the rich man spluttered. "Couldn't say," said the farmer. "Well, you're pretty goddamn stupid, ain't you, boy," the rich man said. "I ain't lost," said the farmer.

New Deal (Green New Deal, etc.)

Green New Deal
a ~, a sweeping agenda (jobs, energy, infrastructure)

this generation’s New Deal
the relief programs could become ~ (politics)

♦ President Roosevelt’s Rural Electrification Administration (REA), founded in 1935, began to bring electricity to the quarter of the population that lived on farmlands. “Sign up and get the REA” was the slogan. At the start, 90 percent of farmers were without electricity. By 1942, half of all American farms were connected to the grid: by 1952, they almost all were. Rural families typically made the radio their second electric purchase, after the clothes iron.

♦ “I wanted to be at my parents’ house when the electricity came. It was in 1940. We’d all go around flipping the switch, to make sure it hadn’t come on yet. When they finally came on the lights just barely glowed. I remember my mother smiling. When they came on full, tears started to run down her cheeks.” (A farm family that got electricity from the Rural Electrification Administration.)

♦ In “A Summer Breather” and “Poverty” by the Russian writer Mikhail Zoshchenko, “early adopters” of technology got electricity in their apartment building for the first time. / The problem was, the electric bill was communal. A man appointed himself to ensure that people didn’t waste electricity, and for a while the bill was low and everyone was quite happy. Everyone used the light sparingly, say, only to undress before going to bed. But the enforcer took his job too zealously, stayed up every night checking on people, never slept, and finally went mad. Once he was gone, people started to use the electricity more, say, to heat a room. The communal bill went up, which in turn unleashed an orgy of use: if other people are profligate, than I will be too! People began to do such outlandish things as to re-warm their food on their hotplates, and turn on lights to read at night. The electric bill became astronomical. In the end, the people decided to have the electricity cut off, and went back to kerosene and candles. / Stories like these went against the grain of Soviet pride in their technological accomplishments—huge dams and electrification—and got Zoshchenko denounced personally in the Zhdanov decree of 1946. He died in poverty.

Nile (America's Nile, etc.)

America's Nile

the Colorado River has been referred to as “~”

♦ According to Dr. Jack C. Schmidt of Utah State University, the Colorado River is similar to the Nile River for the following reasons: (1) original development was in its downstream end (lower basin) (2) water comes from distant headwaters (3) while it flows mostly north to south, it is an “upside down version of the Nile” (4) dams and water diversion in its upstream end (upper basin) are greatly affecting its lower reaches (lower basin). Almost needless to say, it also flows at certain points through arid places and its waters are the lifeblood of those places. (“Spring 2022 GES Seminar Series with Dr. Jack Schmidt” on YouTube. His wonderful presentation might make a young person consider a career in hydrography! Of course, there are many ways that the two rivers are completely different.)

Huckleberry was cordially hated and dreaded by all the mothers of the town, because he was idle and lawless and vulgar and bad—and because all their children admired him so, and delighted in his forbidden society, and wished they dared to be like him. Tom was like the rest of the respectable boys, in that he envied Huckleberry his gaudy outcast condition, and was under strict orders not to play with him. So he played with him every time he got a chance..." (Tom Sawyer by Mark Twain.)

♦ "Frankie was...a wild figure... I had come to join his gang through clause number two (the threat of torture), and had stayed with it for profitable reasons of fun and adventure... When the women of our street could think of no more bad names to call Frankie Buller for leading their children into fights that resulted in black eyes, torn clothes, and split heads, they called him a Zulu, a label that Frankie came to accept as a tribute." ("The Decline and Fall of Frankie Buller" by the great writer Alan Sillitoe.)

♦ "It was an absolutely scary experience. We called up our friends, and they said they didn't know us." (The physicist Victor Weisskopf, speaking to Robert Oppenheimer about his recent experience in the Soviet Union, following the arrest of one of Weisskopf's friends.)

♦ "Lyuda, from now on our contact with people has to be one-sided. If a man's been arrested, his wife can only visit people who've invited her. She doesn't have the right to say: 'I want to come round.' That would be humiliating for both her and her husband. You and I have entered a new epoch. We can no longer write to anyone ourselves; we can only reply to letters. We can no longer phone anyone; we can only pick up the receiver when it rings. We don't even have the right to greet acquaintances—they may prefer not to notice us. And if someone does greet me, I don't have the right to speak first. He might consider it possible to give me a nod of the head, but not to talk to me. I can only answer if he speaks first. You and I are pariahs." (Life and Fate by Vasily Grossman.)

(The Beauty and the Sorrow by Peter England.)

♦ "Pamphil was devoted to [his wife] and loved his children to distraction... With the arrival of his family he had cheered up and begun to recover... But now the news had got about that... [the families] were going to be sent... to winter quarters... Pamphil's spirits fell and his hallucinations came back... / A bleeding stump of a man [lay] on the ground. His right arm and left leg had been chopped off. It was inconceivable how, with his remaining arm and leg, he had crawled to the camp... Fainting repeatedly from loss of blood, the dying man told him ... of the tortures and atrocities perpetrated by Vitsyn's squads. 'As for the children and women—O God!' / Pamphil had been in the crowd surrounding the dying man. He had seen him, heard his words, and read the threatening inscription on the board. His constant fear for his family in the event of his own death rose to a new climax... In his imagination he saw them handed over to slow torture... / In his desperate anguish he killed them himself, felling his wife and three children with that same, razor-sharp ax that he had used to carve toys for the two small girls and the boy... / The astonishing thing was that he did not kill himself immediately afterward. What could he be thinking of? It was a clear case of insanity... / While Liberius, the doctor, and the members of the army soviet debated what to do with him, he roamed freely about the camp... An obtuse vague grimace of inhuman, unconquerable suffering never left his face. / No one was sorry for him. Everyone avoided him, some people said he should be lynched, but they were not heeded. / There was nothing in the world left for him to do. At dawn he vanished from the camp, fleeing from himself like a dog with rabies." (Doctor Zhivago by Boris Pasternak.)

♦ "Partisan detachments must be formed in areas occupied by the enemy, to stir up guerilla war everywhere, to blow up bridges and roads, sabotage telephone and telegraph lines, and to burn forests, stores and transports. We shall create intolerable conditions for the enemy and his supporters, they must be pursued and eliminated at every step." (Stalin's radio broadcast to the Soviet People 3 July 1941. From "Soviet Storm: WW2 in the East.")

♦ "Naturally, the grownups tried hard not to talk about these horrors in the presence of children, at any rate not in Hebrew... But sometime a word slipped through... I could hear the whispering... Nazis, Vilna, partisans, death camps, death trains, Uncle David and Aunt Malka, and little cousin Daniel, who was the same age as me. Somehow the fear got into me..." ♦ According to Wilfred Funk, Litt. D., passion originally meant suffering: the passion of Christ. Then it morphed in the late 14th century (the time of Chaucer) to mean powerful emotions like hatred and rage, including the tender passion of love. In Funk's day, it came to relate to the powerful emotion of sex. Today it commonly means enthusiasm. Compassion comes from the same root and literally means, "with suffering," or "I feel your suffering."

♦ "It was hard for family conversations. You couldn't exactly talk about it over Thanksgiving dinner." (Dr. Mark Siddall, who studies and is passionate about leeches.)

♦ "Reporting from France for Beardsley is the fulfillment of a lifelong passion for the French language and culture. At the age of ten she began learning French by reading the Asterix The Gaul comic book series with her father." (The brilliant National Public Radio correspondent Eleanor Beardsley, raised in Columbia, South Carolina. From her biography, "Eleanor Beardsley, Correspondent, Paris," at NPR.)

♦ "Some people may say that passion is folly. I think if you haven't followed your passions, you haven't lived. If you haven't lived, you haven't evolved." (John Chao, photographer and founder, publisher and editor in 1993 of the magazine American Windsurfer. In December 2016 he drove a panel truck full of firewood and propane from The Dalles, Oregon, to North Dakota to support the Standing Rock Dakota Access Pipeline activists in their winter camps.)

♦ "Playing video games for a living is a dream for many." (Amazon's Twitch, etc., and online streamers.)

♦ "What if somebody came up with some kind of French term for dodging traffic?" (An unhappy Captain Jerry Miner, with the Indiana University police, after IU's daily paper ran a photo of a traceur standing on top of a school arch.)

♦ "The website portrays his work as an innocent and earnest passion." (Rockstar Cheer's Scott Foster, who committed suicide as a tsunami of sexual abuse accusations formed up the bay.)

♦ “I don’t want to hear one more peep out of them about diversity, equity, and inclusion. I don’t wanna see any more of our C-suite execs recommend books for women’s history month. There were tangible actions they could’ve taken and they chose to perform these values. No thank you.” (An underpaid employee with an Asian name who was repeatedly turned down for a raise. She finally applied for her job as a new hire at a higher salary, and her posts went viral.)

♦ “Knausgard’s creation...reduces the entire world to the size of the author. This is happening everywhere now—as the writer himself, with characteristic insight, recognizes in a long passage about the ways in which the Internet and social media, by forcing us endlessly to perform our own lives, threaten to trivialize the very notion of selfhood... What work more than his deserves to become the great new classic of the age of the blog?” (“Knausgard” by Daniel Mendelsohn, The New York Times Book Review, September 24, 2018.)

♦ “[Ashley] Kim concurred. ‘When I first joined the English department, I felt seen, but I also felt, Maybe I don’t belong,’ she said. She’d gone to a magnet public school in New Jersey and felt a step behind the sanguine private-school kids in knowing how to perform her interest in the classroom.” (Harvard. From “The End Of The English Major” by Nathan Heller, The New Yorker, March 6, 2023. The conventional verb collocations would be “show” or “display” interest.)

♦ "There was a certain level of performative nature that came from it because I didn't want to be there... I found myself dealing with my own internalized homophobia." (Jussie Smollett, who is Black and gay, about an interview he gave.)

♦ "What resonates is that the female orgasm somehow has to be performative. Because the female orgasm is there to convince the man that he's managed it, he's achieved it, he's done the thing he's supposed to do for the woman." ("Emma Thompson on her new film—and the idea the female orgasm has to be performative," NPR, All Things Considered, June 17, 2022.)

♦ "He couldn't WAIT to pull it out his pocket at the red carpet. This is gross and performative and no matter how well this movie does or doesn't do, him proudly displaying his ownership of a photo of an enslaved man unrelated to him will always be disgusting." / "What a colossally inappropriate thing to do on every level. He shouldn't own it. Shouldn't use the wrong name for it. And definitely should not bring it to show and tell." ("‘Emancipation’ producer slammed for bringing slavery photo to premiere" by Samantha Ibrahim, New York Post, December 2, 2022.)

♦ "Indigenous leaders and activists have mixed feelings about land acknowledgments. While some say they are a waste of time, others are working to make the well-meaning but often empty speeches more useful... They've been parodied on TV, in series like Reservation Dogs..." ("So you began your event with an indigenous land acknowledgement. Now what?" by Chloe Veltman, NPR, All Things Considered, March 15, 2023.)

♦ "If it becomes routine, or worse yet, is strictly performative, then it has no meaning at all. It goes in one ear and out the other." (Kevin Gover, about indigenous land acknowledgments.)

♦ "The land acknowledgment gets you to that start. Now it's time to think about what that actually means for you or your institution. What are the concrete actions you're gonna take? What are the ways you're gonna assist indigenous people in uplifting and upholding their sovereignty and self-determination?" (Cutcha Risling Baldy, quoted in "So you began your event with an indigenous land acknowledgement. Now what?" by Chloe Veltman, NPR, All Things Considered, March 15, 2023.)

♦ A plan by four churches on the Cherokee Indian Reservation to apologize to the tribe for a historical failure to recognize traditional Cherokee religion or culture has been greeted with surprise by tribal leaders. / "I don't see what they need to apologize for," said Tribal Council Chairman Bob Blankenship. "But if they feel they've offended us in any way, we'll accept it." / The majority of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians' 13,000 members belong to mainstream Christian churches... / As far as I'm concerned, it's a waste of time," said the Rev. Bo Parris of Big Cove Baptist Church. "There's nothing to apologize for." / Patty Grant, a member of the Eastern Band and one of the event organizers, said understanding intergenerational grief and trauma is an important part of what the churches are trying to do by making the apology. She said trauma from centuries of oppression often manifests itself in drug abuse, domestic violence and depression. / Pastor Steven Phillip...said, "From my perspective as a white male, I see a need for the white church to apologize for the oppression by Christian missionaries of Native American people," he said. "We thought we had to Europeanize them to evangelize. I am not apologizing for the Gospel. But I do apologize for how we perverted the Gospel in the name of Jesus and oppressed God's people. / Principal Chief Leon Jones, the top elected leader of the Eastern Band, doesn't think an apology is necessary. / "Personally, I think the past is history and I don't hold present-day people responsible," he said. "All we can do is live today's life and do the best we can today." ("Churches to offer apology to Cherokee" by Jon Ostendoff and Quintin Ellison in the Asheville Citizen-Times, July 22, 2002 A1.)

scientific Phoenix

he was a ~, rising from the ashes of his mistakes (Pasteur)

♦ In Greek mythology, the Phoenix was a bird that periodically was consumed by fire and then regenerated itself from the ashes.

♦ In his notes to Canto XXIV of The Inferno, John Ciardi describes the Phoenix thusly: "The fabulous Phoenix of Arabia was the only one of its kind in the world. Every five hundred years it built a nest of spices and incense which took fire from the heat of the sun and the beating of the Phoenix's wings. The Phoenix was thereupon cremated and was then re-born from its ashes." This is close to the story the Egyptians told Herodotus in the 5th century BC.)

♦ In Atlanta, Georgia (USA), a bronze monument of the Phoenix rescuing a woman from a fire commemorates that city's rise from the ashes of the Civil War. Atlanta prides itself on its motto, "The city too busy to hate." Pretty much true today, except for the rappers.

♦ "In the evening I sat by the fire and discussed with Dersu the rest of our journey down the Lefu. I very much wanted to have a look at Lake Hanka, discovered by N.M. Przewalski... /// [The old man] stopped and pointed out an old track overgrown with grass and shrubs. That was the old route, he told us, by which the Ussurians used to go through to Olga Bay. It was by that route that, in the sixties of the last century, Budishchev and Maximovich had come, and at the thought their portraits rose before my eyes and their description of their journey... /// The Tadusha! It was this very river that L. Veniukov was the first to explore, but the Chinese had stopped him and compelled him to turn back. That was in 1857 when he put up a big wooden cross to mark his farthest point, but I could find no trace of it. No doubt the Chinese had destroyed it as soon as the Russians had left. Later there came Maximovich, Budishchev, and Przewalski, all famous men of science... /// The climb up the ridge is stiff near the crest. The pass itself is in the form of a broad saddle, boggy, and covered with burnt-out forest. The altitude is 1584 ft., and it ought really to be named after the pioneer, M. Veniukov, who passed this way in 1857, breaking the way for the men who followed... /// September 27 was given up to a reconnaissance of the Bay of Terney, discovered by the famous La Perouse on 23 July 1767, who then and there gave it its name..." ♦ "Not far from the rock there is a big pitfall. This is in the form of a stout fence to keep animals away from their watering-place, built up partly of fallen logs and partly of growing trees. Big stakes had been driven in to hold it firmly and prevent the animals from trampling it down. In a few places openings were left with pits dug underneath them, hidden by grass and dry twigs spread over the top. When the deer come down to the water at night, they come up against the fence, and in trying to find a way round, come to the holes and fall into the pits. There are fences like that stretching over a distance of thirty miles and more, with a couple of hundred pitfalls. / This pitfall on the Vangou had been abandoned... / Dersu abused the Chinese terribly for abandoning the pits without filling them in." (Dersu Uzala by V.K. Arseniev.)

♦ 27 Nov. To Replee 11 miles. This was formerly an Ass Patrol's Post. It is now broken up and the nearest post is Odha 7 miles further—in this neighbourhood Mr Conway kills immense numbers of deer in pitfalls behind the line hedge—sometimes 19 or 20 are taken in one night in a single pitfall both Antelope and Ravine Deer—the place at which they usually jump the hedge is soon seen & a pitfall is dug just where they alight." ♦ "Swarms of mosquitoes plagued the travelers. Jack's diary is dotted with such entries as 'mosquitoes thick,' 'Mosquitos make a demonstration in force,' 'Put up netting and fooled mosquitoes,' 'John driven out of bed by mosquitos,' 'Evening burned smudges' (smoky fires to drive the insects away), 'Bite me through overalls and heavy underwear.' The men smeared their faces with clay for protection. (Gold Diggers: Striking It Rich in the Klondike by Charlotte Gray. "Jack" is the great writer Jack London.)

♦ "Dense swarms of mosquitoes set in immediately after sunset... a nuisance that can hardly be imagined. No breath of air incommodes those light-winged tormentors. It is quite impossible, for the European at least, to close an eye without the shelter of a mosquito net. Our Indians slept with no covering, only occasionally brushing away the most obtrusive of the little fiends." (The Amazon and Madeira Rivers by Franz Keller.)

♦ "Before evening that day there put in its first appearance the curse of the taiga, flies. The settlers call them gnus, horror or abomination, and they are indeed the plague of the forest. Their bite draws blood and the wound itches desperately, and the more it is scratched the worse it becomes. When there are many biting flies about, it is impossible to expose the head for an instant. The flies blind your eyes, become entangled in the hair and ears, crawl up your sleeve, and savagely bite your neck. Your face swells up as though with erysipelas." (Dersu Uzala by V.K. Arseniev.)

♦ "Oh, where I was born, everyone had this. First, a fly bit you, then you got a sore. After a while it healed and never came back." (A grandfather, originally from southern Turkey, explaining to his American grandson how he got a shallow scar—a papery depression—on his cheek. Cutaneous leishmaniasis is also known as "Oriental sore," "Baghdad boil," and Aleppo evil." In India it is known as kala azar, or black fever.)

♦ "One day I was called into the room of our hostess's younger sister. The room was dark, and only when hot hands gripped mine did I realize that I was standing near her. When my eyes had got accustomed to the darkness, I looked toward the bed and recoiled in a horror which I could hardly conceal. There lay completely transformed by sickness one who two days before had been a pretty healthy girl. Though a layman, I instantly saw that she had smallpox. Her larynx and tongue were already attacked and she could only cry out with thick articulation that she was dying. I tried to tell her that it was not so, and then escaped from the room as quickly as possible to have a thorough wash. There was nothing to be done and one could only hope that an epidemic would not break out. Aufschnaiter also visited her and agreed with my diagnosis... (Seven Years in Tibet by Heinrich Harrer, Chapter 4, "The Village of Happiness.")

♦ "For survivors, smallpox was a cruelly fickle disease, leaving many of its survivors blinded or dreadfully scarred, but others unscathed. It had existed for millennia, but didn't become common in Europe until the early sixteenth century. Its first recorded appearance in England was 1518." (At Home: A Short History of Private Life by Bill Bryson.)

♦ "I had lots of things to carry me across the river. Sometimes I could use a camel, sometimes I could get a boat. But if I knew there was critical timing involved... I would try to arrange in advance for the elephant. The elephant rides pretty smoothly and it's pretty tall. Usually I got on with a ladder, but you could step on its trunk and it would put you on its back. I was always a little nervous about that." (May Guinan, sent to Uttar Pradesh from the CDC in the campaign to eradicate smallpox, on how she would cross a river to get to her headquarters in Lucknow. Another method involved mounting a bicycle, which was then carried on the shoulders of two men. From The Invisible Fire by Joel N. Shurkin.)

♦ The point man is the lead man in a column of soldiers. He goes a bit ahead of the column and must look for snipers, mines, and booby traps. He may shoot first and discover to his horror that he has shot a noncombatant or a child, even. The enemy might shoot him dead, or he might set off a trap that kills him outright. Or, the enemy might shoot to wound him and then pick off anyone trying to come to his aid. Or, the enemy may let him pass and shoot up the main column of men, leaving the point man terrified, cut off, and isolated without support...

♦ "Lopinto was a tough mother. Shirtless beneath his flak jacket and slung with an especially heavy load of grenades and ammunition, he moved down the dirt cart trail they called Route 561." From the affecting history Operation Buffalo: USMC Fight for the DMZ by Keith William Nolan.)

♦ "There was another AK47 burst and, instantly, an inhuman scream, followed by shouts to Herbert that one of their guys was hit. Herbert sent his superficially wounded corpsman in that direction, but he was shot in the legs as he ran and sent sprawling. / The next shot was to his head. KIA. / There was a shout to Herbert that it was the point man Lopinto who had screamed. That was Herbert's best friend, and he shouted back to ask how bad he was hit. The return shout was that he was dead. KIA." (From the affecting history Operation Buffalo: USMC Fight for the DMZ by Keith William Nolan. "Lance Corporal Herbert, the intelligent, articulate, and very able leader of the 2d Squad of Bravo Two, was right behind the monster erupting around Bravo Three...")

♦ "Bringing up the rear as tail-end-charlie was almost as bad as walking point." (The Vietnam War. In Vietnam, the Vietnam War is known as the American war.)

♦ "All gave some. Some gave all."

♦ Nowadays the "point person" is usually a female who mindlessly parrots the administration or company line, reading from a script.

♦ In Vietnam, the Vietnam War is called the American War. (Point of view and war.)

♦ The French blamed the pestilence on the Neapolitans. The English, Germans and Italians called it the morbus gallicus or the 'French disease.' The Polish labeled it the 'Russian disease.' To the Turks it was the 'Christian disease.' It was called the 'Chinese pox' by the Japanese and the 'Portuguese disease' in India and Japan. The Tahitians referred to venereal disease as 'the British disease.' (Names for syphilis, from Disease, The Extraordinary Stories Behind History's Deadliest Killers by Mary Dobson. Point of view and public health.)

♦ "I have a special hatred for ice cream trucks. I think they should be outlawed. I have so many traumas from them, and the children hit by ice cream trucks are usually on the small side, so they get head traumas." (Gracie Dinkins, a trauma surgeon. From "Flesh & Blood" by Gracie Dinkins as told to Matthew Segal, Los Angeles magazine. A purely personal point of view, based on occupation.)

♦ "People say it's a peaceful demonstration but I would say that a huge 18-wheeler is not a peaceful thing to have in the middle of your city." ("Health care workers in Ottawa are being harassed protesters [sic] against COVID-19 mandates," NPR, Weekend Edition, Saturday, Feb. 12, 2022.)

♦ "Yeah, they have these belts on with like all these extra bullets and they're like dressed for war." (Leah talking to her Brit producer, Georgia, for their podcast about the militia movement.)

♦ "Next morning I awoke, looked out the window, and nearly died of fright. My screams brought Atticus from his bathroom half shaven. 'The world's ended, Atticus. Please do something.' I dragged him to the window and pointed. 'No it's not,' he said. 'It's snowing.'" (The beloved American novel To Kill a Mockingbird by Harper Lee. This is an example of the point of view of a child.)

♦ The Turkana have few food taboos and will even eat fish.

♦ A FUNNY STORY. A city man grew weary of the hustle and bustle, the hubbub and din, of city life, and he decided to visit his relative in the quiet and peaceful countryside. He made a sign that said, "Gone to the countryside," posted it on his door, and set off. He drove through the desert until the road ended. Then he drove off road, following tracks in the sands, until the tracks ended at the edge of a steep valley. He abandoned his truck there, crossed the valley on foot, and then walked for miles over a flat barren empty gravel desert. Finally, in the distance, he saw his relative's stone hut, next to a single tree. In great joy and anticipation he hurried to it, only to find, posted on the door, a note that read... "Gone to the countryside."

("So you began your event with an indigenous land acknowledgement. Now what?" by Chloe Veltman, NPR, All Things Considered, March 15, 2023.)

♦ "There have been 393 homicides in Philadelphia so far this year, but Dana Pico at First Street Journal notes the 'white privilege' in this case: Philadelphia media seldom name the murder victims in the city, the vast majority of whom are black." ("A Death in Killadelphia" by Robert Stacy McCain, Sept. 24, 2022. The post is about the murder of Everett Beauregard, age 23.)

♦ "You are white privilege. Sit down. You are not my boss. You don't have privilege over me. You have white privilege and it's not here, it's over with. It's 2020. Wake up... You don't have white privilege anymore." (Video: Passenger taken away by police after racial rant on plane in US, Daily Mail, Sept 14, 2020.)

♦ "She frequently mentions her position of privilege. 'I get it—white women are the worst,' she recently said on LeBron James's podcast 'Uninterrupted.' 'I hate myself. Trust me.' Depending on your point of view, this is either a welcome emphasis on the structural inequities inherent in American life or a grating form of virtue signalling from a member of the elite." ("Mom Com: Amy Schumer's second act" by Ariel Levy, The New Yorker, September 5, 2022.)

♦ "Bowen also calls out the classism and cultural biases even within Black media circles where so many of her colleagues come from privilege and 'have had to untangle their Blackness from the web of whiteness they were socialized in.' ♦ "White privilege, male privilege, cisprivilege... (Terms popularized on Tumblr. From the brilliant podcast "The Witch Trials of J.K. Rowling," Chapter 3: A New Pyre.)

♦ "The stately pace of the motorcade, a royal prerogative..."

♦ Driving is a privilege, not a right. (What most Americans heard growing up.)

♦ Rank has its privilege. (Typical American understanding of the word, which accepts the fact that you earn your rank and deserve whatever privileges that come with it. A better and bigger office with a view. A driver / chauffeur. Not having to wait in line at a club; a VIP room. Same for the airport. Company or military perks. The list goes on and on.)

♦ "Privilege is vile." (A traditional American way to remember how to spell the word correctly that also expresses the traditional, historic, and ingrained American view that undeserved [italics mine] privilege is wrong.)

♦ "USC was one of the universities embroiled in an admissions cheating scandal in which wealthy parents sought to get their undeserving [italics mine] offspring into college by falsely portraying them as star athletes." ("Former USC dean pleads guilty in political bribery case," AP, September 19, 2022.)

♦ Almost all Americans instinctively despise favoritism, nepotism (nepo babies), and cronyism, unless, of course, those things apply to their own families.

♦ "The way we talk about white privilege is eerily consonant with the way one talks about original sin." (John McWhorter, author of Woke Racism: How a New Religion Has Betrayed Black America.)

♦ "Harlem's most opulent apartment house, the Dunbar—honoring the Dayton, O., Negro poet Paul Laurence Dunbar—houses some of the most celebrated of the colored folk. It is an impressive structure, a Rockefeller creation, with all the white folk appointments, even to uniformed elevator operators and hot-cha door flunkies. Bob Robinson lives there. Also Duke Ellington, Cab Calloway, Adelaide Hall and the colored cartoonist E. Simms Campbell." ("New York Day by Day" by O. O. McIntyre, from The Day, New London, CONN., Thursday Afternoon, April 1, 1937.)

♦ First he built a fire against a fallen tree trunk... Then he cut a branch of dogwood that forked into three tines, leaving the stem for a handle. On the fork he laid a chunk of his hard corn bread and fastened it in place with limber twigs woven crosswise. He impaled a slice of fat salt pork, on a sharpened stick, broiled it over the coals, and held his bread under it to catch the dripping grease and get warmed through. / Youlus ate as voraciously as a hound, meantime drinking his black coffee without sugar and getting supreme enjoyment from it... If some well-meaning but misguided genii had carried him off on a magic carpet and set him to feast at a king's table, Youlus would have sniffed and growled at every dish placed before him and would have bragged about his 'old corn bread and sow-belly.'" (Smoky Mountain Magic by Horace Kephart.)

♦ "Life is very precious and I was lucky enough to be given a second chance and I'm trying to make the most of it now." (Ex-Royal Marine Toby Gutteridge from Poole, Dorset. Shot in the neck in Afghanistan in 2009, spinal cord severed at the C2 level, quadriplegic. White male privilege.)

♦ "Responsibility, not privilege, would be the keyword for battalion leadership when the Second Raiders formed up." (The Wikipedia entry "Evans Carlson," the legendary leader of Carlson's Raiders. His biography is extraordinary.)

♦ In his Devil's Dictionary, Ambrose Bierce did not see fit to create an entry for "privilege." A pity! But if he had, it might have been: "Privilege (noun). Every man has the privilege to lay his head down and sleep each night wherever he lies, no matter his circumstances or station in life."

♦ This word refers to at least 4 things: (1) great creativity and originality, especially, now, new technology (2) "gifting" something of great benefit to others (3) defiance of authority and disobedience (4) great suffering.

♦ In Greek mythology, the myth of Prometheus and the story of Pandora are intertwined.

♦ "Prometheus unframed: A new type of camera could prove valuable on robots, drones and driverless cars," The Economist, January 29th, 2022.

♦ "Their father worked on the Manhattan Project, and for his Promethean sins the next generation was punished." (Graeme Wood's review of Cormac McCarthy's two latest books—The Passenger and Stella Maris—in The Atlantic. Wood does not mention J. Robert Oppenheimer in his review.)

♦ "Paine is the preeminent spokesman of a new class of people who are emerging at just that time. We used to call them the artisans, self-educated working men with a skill... They've taught themselves to read or they've become literate.. And they develop political ambitions. And Paine is the perfect spokesman of this group of people who meet in taverns and coffeehouses and public squares to discuss self-improvement and the improvement of society. And that's why—it's Promethean, I suppose, is the word I'm looking for. It's the desire to share the fire, not just with the gods but with the whole of humanity, so everyone can warm themselves by the flame and see by it, too." ("Hitchens: How Paine's 'Rights' Changed the World," NPR, October 23, 2007. From the special series, "Books That Changed the World.")

♦ “In Greek Mythology, Prometheus was a Titan who loved humans too much. He gave them the gift of fire, and at the banquet with the gods, he would save them the best pieces of meat. That kind of generosity upset Zeus, who condemned him to be chained to a mountain and have his liver eaten by an eagle. Every night the liver would grow again, ready to be devoured the next day. This torment...is the punishment for wanting to outsmart the gods. Giving men fire, Prometheus provided the first important tool, the very first step towards technology, science, and the dominance of humans over nature... It didn't end well.” (BBC, “The curious case of the man with a hole in his stomach,” 17 May 2022. Ambition... Playing God... )

♦ Mary Shelley's 1818 novel was titled Frankenstein, or The Modern Prometheus. Frankenstein was Victor Frankenstein, the young scientist who created the monster.)

♦ “At this point if you chained [Erling] Haaland to a rock he would just pick up the rock and score like before. Amazing.” (The online commenter Kalista about the great Norwegian soccer player.)

Zip hole
~ (actually Zip Poll)

♦ At the Quora site, years ago, Joan B wrote, “Mostly millennials, using glottal stops in place of ‘t’s. First time it caught my ear was Kate Hudson advertising her exercise-wear... Every younger HGTV host is redecorating their ‘t’s.”

♦ Wolf Blitzer of CNN was probably responsible for popularizing the pronunciation of “Qatar” as “CUT-er” during his coverage of the Gulf War.

♦ Tyler Adams, the USMNT captain, graciously apologized to an Iranian journalist for pronouncing Iran as EYE-ran at the FIFA World Cup in Qatar, and it is to his great credit. (“USMNT captain Tyler Adams apologizes for mispronunciation of Iran; addresses issue of discrimination in the US” by Ben Morse and Wayne Sterling, CNN, November 28, 2022.)

♦ Britain; certain; Dayton; didn’t; hundred (hun•nert); important; Martin; mountains; not only; Peyton; pollutant; presented; Putin (with a whooping glottal); put in; reportedly; threatened; uncertain; uncertainty; united; what is; written... (Words pronounced with affected glottal stops, all heard on NPR by employees or guests.)

♦ The BBC, and English people in general, tend to retain the anglicization of foreign names. A BBC news reader might pronounce Cape Verde as “Cape Vurd.” To paraphrase Winston Churchill, “Do we really want NPR pronouncing Paris Pareae?” Sir Winston’s French pronunciation was not good, but he did not have to rule them.)

♦ “There is still much resistance to the use of the pinyin name Beijing for the current Chinese capital. Not only are very few outsiders able to pronounce the word accurately; its use also flies in the face of the more general use in English of ‘English’ names or pronunciations for distant cities or countries. Roma is called Rome, Deutschland is called Germany, Suomi is called Finland, and Zhongguo is called China. Many who accept this logic would like Peking returned to common currency, but doubt that it will ever happen.” (Footnote 47. From The Man Who Loved China by Simon Winchester.)

♦ “You can take the boy out of the Bronx,’ murmured one technician as the dubbing proceeded, ‘but you can’t take the Bronx out of the boy!’ In view of the critical notices Pacino’s Scottish/cockney-with-a-dash-of-the-Bronx accent was to receive, it was an auspicious remark.” (Al Pacino: A Life On The Wire by Andrew Yule, about the 1985 film Revolution, which was savaged by most critics.)

♦ “I’d listen to him read the phone book!” (An admiring comment about the wonderful voice and diction of the great American actor James Earl Jones, who has dealt with a stutter his entire life.)

♦ This sort of language has many possible explanations.

♦ From Hindi pandit, "a learned man or scholar."

♦ In a very nice opinion piece, Scott Simon of NPR rightly characterizes this word as a buzzword. ("Politics, Pundits And The Problem With The Word 'Pivot,'" NPR, Weekend Edition Saturday, June 11, 2016.)

♦ "But what do we know about what that actually means now he actually owns the company? Do we know anything about how he..." / "Yeah, I mean he says he thinks..." (NPR punditry.)

♦ "How much do these 'pundits' get paid for spouting all these clichés and stating the obvious?" / "Well, all the pundits are saying either Brazil or Argentina, so it's obviously going to be either Belgium or the Netherlands." / "I don't need the pundits, build up, half time twaddle or the inarticulate trip over their words, the Aitches and 'he wot done it, like' phrasing—they don't add value, they detract." / "We only need a few pundits, preferably that can speak good English with proper grammar." / "Oh yeah and don't forget the Alex Scott sob story sympathisers..." (Commenters about the BBC commentators at the Qatar World Cup.)

♦ It would be better perhaps if pundits and commentators had term limits: perhaps one time on air only would be best.

♦ "He was criticized—and praised—earlier this year after he had issued a fatwa saying it was permissible for women to have reconstructive hymen surgery before marriage to conceal that they were no longer virgins. He said that since it was impossible to tell whether a man was a virgin, women should have the same option." (Egypt's grand mufti, Sheik Ali Gomaa, "A Compass That Can Clash With Modern Life," by Michael Slackman, NYT, June 12, 2007.)

♦ "Virginity is a very real issue for Egyptian women, as illustrated in the popular film "The Wedding." It tells the story of Abdullah and Gamila, a young couple who signed their marriage contracts years ago but couldn't afford the marriage ceremony that would, by tradition, allow the union to be consummated. But the couple has been having sex all along..." ("Artificial Virginity Device Sparks Backlash In Egypt," by Peter Kenyon, NPR, Oct. 13, 2009.)

♦ "If they think they can get a pure-hearted girl this way they are really mistaken. To me, the way people are taking virginity as a commodity these days is such a sad thing." (A Chinese woman, on the practice of very rich Chinese businessmen advertising for virgin brides, and then interviewing them.)

♦ "She can be in danger because sometimes it's a matter of traditions and family. I believe we as doctors have no right to decide for her or judge her." (An Arab doctor in Paris who performs hymenoplasty two or three times a week. The operation takes about 30 minutes under local anesthetic and costs 2,000 euros.)

♦ "The editor of Morocco's Al-Ahdath Al-Maghribia daily newspaper, Moktar el-Ghzioui, is living in fear for his life after he expressed support for pre-marital sex during a local television debate. / 'The next thing there was a cleric from Oujda releasing a fatwa that I should die,' he says. / According to article 490 of the penal code, Moroccans can be jailed for having sexual relations outside marriage. / This is based on Islamic law, which bans unmarried people from engaging in sexual activity... / A sociologist at the University of Mohammed V, Abdessamad Dialmy, argues that article 490 needs to be removed because human beings have the right to sex. / He says more and more unmarried couples are having sex because they are getting married much later... / Imam Hassan Ait Belaid who preaches at a mosque in the commercial capital Casablanca says article 490 is part of the culture of a non-Western society. / 'If the code is removed, we will become wild savages. ♦ “Having language disputes was an interesting part of working on this story. A big argument I had, in fact-checking and copyediting, was like, ‘Are we allowed to call Ben’s penis a dick? Can I call it a dick, or is only Ben allowed to call it a dick? How many times can we say dick? When is saying dick serving the accuracy of someone’s experience, versus being crass for the sake of being crass? / I err on the side of saying ‘dick’ as much as you want, because it’s funny, and it’s just how people talk. But the magazine said, ‘Okay, you’re going to get a certain number of ‘dicks’—how are you going to deploy them accurately?’” (“Jamie Lauren Keiles Follows the Surgical and Philosophical Journey of Phalloplasty” by Celia Ford, July 26, 2022. Jamie Lauren Keiles’ article, “How Ben Got His Penis,” appeared in The New York Times Magazine.)

♦ “She looks like Elizabeth Olsen slash Amanda Seyfried, and she’s very pretty, and she’s like a little bit psychotic and mean, and you’re just like, I don’t know for other people, but I was like, I’m in love.” (Alex Abad-Santos, a self-professed “flagrant homosexual.” From “M3GAN, murder, and mass queer appeal,” NPR, It’s Been A Minute, January 17, 2023.)

♦ “We called ourselves the Gay Liberation Front, the word ‘front’ designed to be offensive. And that was our mood... This was a time when the American Psychiatric Association had just stopped listing homosexuality as a disease.” (My Own Country: A Doctor’s Story by Abraham Verghese.)

♦ “I think part of the reason why [Lil Nas X’s] queerness was easier for some audiences to swallow is because his project was ‘queer’ in and of itself: This was a Black guy making a country hip-hop song. I’m talking queer here not in the sexuality context, but taking the literal definition of queer—something that is strange and unusual.” (Author and scholar Mark Anthony Neal. (From the beloved film of To Kill a Mockingbird starring Gregory Peck. In a very dramatic scene, Mr. Finch shoots the mad dog and Jem learns something about his father that he hadn't known.)

♦ "On a day in October in 1831, a nine-year-old boy ran frightened away from the edge of a crowd that blocked the door of the blacksmith shop of a village in the mountains of eastern France. Above the awed excited whispers of the people at the door this boy had heard the crackling "s-s-s-z" of a white hot iron on human flesh, and this terrifying sizzling had been followed by a groan of pain. The victim was the farmer Nicole. He had just been mangled by a mad wolf that charged howling, jaws dripping poison foam, through the streets of the village. The boy who ran away was Louis Pasteur, son of a tanner of Arbois and great-grandson of a serf of the Count of Udressier... (Microbe Hunters by Paul De Kruif. The Japanese considered themselves at war with all the white races... Measures were merely to emphasize the racial superiority of the Japanese... British and American prisoners were treated so abominably that their plight aroused the pity of the Germans... German and Dutch women had been herded into a camp without any means of subsistence [in the hope that] they would eventually agree to enter Japanese brothels... It was the hope of every Japanese officer to keep a Dutch or German mistress so that he might satisfy his race-consciousness... White women and half-castes were reserved for the Japanese [while] visiting Germans had to be content with native girls... The First Mate, a loyal German, [said] he was bitterly ashamed that they were the Allies of his country." ♦ "We need you to talk. We need you to stop sitting around the dinner table acting like everything's great because it's not. Just because you aren't experiencing it doesn't mean it's not happening. Your role in this is to help change the system." (Jillian Hanesworth's advice to white people about systemic racism. From "Buffalo's poet laureate calls for change" by Raquel Maria Dillon, NPR, Race, May 17, 2022.)

♦ "John James Audubon's racism is the albatross rotting around the necks of those who would hold him in reverence. It is past smelling foul and beginning to reek." ("What Do We Do About John James Audubon?" by J. Drew Lanham. Which begs the question...)

♦ "The husband of a Black woman who died hours after childbirth in 2016 sued Cedars-Sinai Medical Center on Wednesday, saying she bled to death because of a culture of racism at the renowned Los Angeles hospital." ("Lawsuit says a Black patient bled to death because of a hospital's culture of racism," NPR, Health, by the AP, May 5, 2022.)

♦ A relatively recent trope about racism in the US is the idea of "weathering." That's the idea that racism "weathers" people, affecting their health, etc., in ways that are not equitable. Black Americans "live sicker and die quicker." Arline Geronimus of the University of Michigan coined the term for chronic stress.)

♦ "She doesn't have the complexion for protection." (Black criticism of media coverage of victims of crime.)

♦ John McWhorter's article, titled "The Dictionary Definition of Racism Has to Change" (The Atlantic, June 22, 2020), is interesting. In it he says we need a "3.0 definition of racism based on "sociopolitics" and "a usage...that one often acquires in college classes in the social sciences." This raises at least three points. (1) There is absolutely nothing in a dictionary that prevents McWhorter or anyone else from expressing ideas about racism; his use of the combining form "socio" with "politics" to coin "sociopolitics" proves it. My computer spellchecker marks "sociopolitics" as an error. "Sociopolitics" is not recognized by Merriam-Webster or the online Oxford Learner's Dictionaries. If you type "sociopolitics" into search at Wikipedia, you are directed to a long article at "Political sociology." (2) If such a 3.0 definition is included at Merriam-Webster as a new sense, it should be identified as "aggrieved group," just as lexicographers tag certain words or senses as "biology," "archaic," "colloquial," "substandard," "slang," etc. (3) No person interested in words has failed to note that all the dictionary publishers seem to be in competition to add contemporary, trendy, and often controversial updated senses to new words; the attendant publicity is simply good business.

♦ "E news posted offset [sic] instead of Takeoff when they first reported his death and instead of apologizing they just deleted it. Black people do not all look alike [sic]! Incredibly tacky AF [as fuck]! If you hired educated black people that never would've happened." (Offset and Takeoff are the names of two members of the hip-hop group Migos. Offset's real name is Kiari Kendrell Cephus. Takeoff's real name is Kirshnik Khari Ball or Kirsnick Khari Ball. "Takeoff" was shot and killed at 2:40 a.m. after a dice game outside of Billiards & Bowling in Houston, Texas. Because of the stigma of "snitching," few witnesses have come forward with information.)

♦ "Bad from the Mirror, but they corrected their error over two hours before Kwasi Kwarteng tweeted about it." (The Mirror published a picture of Kwasi Kwarteng that was a different Black man. The Mirror put out the following statement: "This morning a picture in a story about Kwasi Kwarteng was wrongly captioned on the Mirror website. This was a terrible error and we apologise to Mr. Kwarteng and all our readers. The Mirror has a long history of working against racism and we will redouble our efforts on this." Did the Mirror commit an act of racism or was it just a mistake, quickly corrected? You be the judge.)

♦ "Recently, Google processed images of a trio of happy young African Americans and its automatic photo-tagging service labeled them as gorillas. The company apologized profusely, but in systems like Google's, errors are inevitable. It was most likely faulty machine learning (and probably not a racist running loose in the Googleplex) that led the computer to confuse Homo sapiens with our close cousin, the gorilla. The software itself had flipped through billions of images of primates and had made its own distinctions. It focused on everything from shades of color to the distance between eyes and the shape of the ear. Apparently, though, it wasn't thoroughly tested before being released." (Weapons of Math Destruction by the remarkable Cathy O'Neil.)

♦ "Racism is not just a netball problem." (Donnell Wallam / Australia.)

♦ "Ex-Virginia Tech soccer player who refused BLM Kneel gets $100K in settlement." (Kiersten Hening / USA.)

♦ If you search NPR for "historical racism," you will get 10 hits. Search "racism," and you get 16,673 hits (and counting).

♦ "A lot of black people today are wringing their hands and pointing accusing fingers at white doctors from the public health service." (Janie Taylor, "Origins of the Infamous Tuskegee Syphilis Study," NPR, August 7, 1972. It's a seven-part series that was once available in its entirety at NPR.)

♦ "Some people don't want to watch movies about enslaved people..." (The film critic Eric Deggans, about the 2022 film Emancipation featuring Will Smith.)

♦ The spin bowler Azeem Rafiq has charged the Yorkshire Cricket Club with "institutional racism." In 2021, Rafiq himself had to apologize for using anti-Semitic language in Facebook messages and a meme relating to African people.

♦ "Racism, at the individual level, can be seen as a predictive model whirring away in billions of human minds around the world. It is built from faulty, incomplete, or generalized data. Whether it comes from experience or hearsay, the data indicates that certain types of people have behaved badly. That generates a binary prediction that all people of that race will behave that same way." (Weapons Of Math Destruction by the remarkable Cathy O'Neil.)

◆ "The first casualty of war is the truth."

◆ "When the first detachment of American soldiers was sent to France on transports the troopships went under convoy of cruisers and destroyers. The day they landed in France the newspapers carried a thrilling story... of an attempt by submarines to sink the transports in mid-ocean... It was a splendid story, but there was not a word of it true... Naval officers who had gone over with the transports read it in Parisian newspapers and marveled at the generous gifts of publicity agents..." (A New American History by W. E. Woodward.)

◆ "They get awfully sick at the big-print headlines in some of the papers—"The Hill 60 Thrill! 'Thrill, indeed! There's nothing thrilling about ploughing over parapets into a machinegun, with high explosives bursting round you,—it's merely beastly,' said a boy this evening, who is all over shrapnel splinters." (Diary of a Nursing Sister on the Western Front: 1914-1915 by Kate (Katherine) Evelyn Luard.)

◆ "Not only did the Belgian baby whose hands had been cut off by the Germans travel through the towns and villages of Great Britain, but it went through Western Europe and America... Everyone wanted to believe the story, and many went so far as to say they had seen the baby... / [The Times Correspondent in Paris reported in an article of August 27, 1914 that] 'One man whom I did not see told an official of the Catholic Society that he had seen with his own eyes German soldiery chop off the arms of a baby which clung to its mother's skirts.' / On September 2, 1914, The Times Correspondent quotes French refugees declaring: 'They cut the hands off the little boys so that there shall be no more soldiers for France.' / Babies not only had their hands cut off, but they were impaled on bayonets, and in one case nailed to a door. But everyone will remember the handless Belgian baby. It was loudly spoken of in buses and other public places, had been seen in a hospital, was now in the next parish, etc., and it was paraded, not as an isolated instance of an atrocity, but as a typical instance of a common practice. / In Parliament there was the usual evasion, which suggested the story was true, although the only evidence given was 'seen by witnesses.' / But the most harrowing and artistically dressed version of the handless child story appeared in the Sunday Chronicle on May 2, 1915. / 'Some days ago a charitable great lady was visiting a building in Paris where have been housed for several months a number of Belgian refugees. During her visit she noticed a child, a girl of ten, who, though the room was hot rather than otherwise, kept her hands in a pitiful little worn muff. Suddenly the child said to the mother: 'Mamma, please blow my nose for me.' / 'Shocking,' said the charitable lady, half-laughing, half-severe, 'A big girl like you, who can't use her own handkerchief.' / The child said nothing, and the mother spoke in a dull, matter-of-fact tone. 'She has not any hands now, ma'am,' she said. The grand dame looked, shuddered, understood. 'Can it be,' she said, 'that the Germans--?' The mother burst into tears. That was her answer.' / Signor Nitti, who was Italian Prime Minister during the war, states in his memoirs: / 'To bring the truth of the present European crisis home to the world it is necessary to destroy again and again the vicious legends created by war propaganda. During the war France, in common with other Allies, including our own Government in Italy, circulated the most absurd inventions to arouse the fighting spirit of our people. The cruelties attributed to the Germans were such as to curdle our blood. We heard the story of poor little Belgian children whose hands were cut off by the Huns... Mr. Lloyd George and myself, when at the head of the Italian Government, carried on extensive investigations as to the truth of these horrible accusations, some of which, at least, were told specifically as to names and places. Every case investigated proved to be a myth.'" (Falsehood in War-time: Propaganda Lies of the First World War by Arthur Ponsonby.)

◆ "The story of babies torn from their incubators was repeated over and over again. President Bush told the story. It was recited as fact in Congressional testimony, on TV and radio talk shows, and the UN Security Council... Following the war, human rights investigators attempted to confirm Nayirah's story and could find no witnesses or other evidence to support it. Amnesty International, which had fallen for the story, was forced to issue an embarrassing retraction." (The 1991 Gulf War.)

♦ The rearguard action of a group of British soldiers at the village of Khig, following the British disaster in the Battle of Maiwand (27 July 1880) during the Second Anglo-Afghan War, was one of the most courageous last stands in military history. It helped allow the bulk of the British troops to safely withdraw to Kandahar. The only survivor of the last stand was Bobbie, a terrier attached to the Berkshires, who made it all the way back to England. Bobbie visited Queen Victoria, who awarded him with a medal. No doubt he got treats, too.

courting rebellion by pushing ahead

he is ~ with his plan (political party)

♦ 1850-1864. The Taiping Rebellion. Led by Hong Xiuquan, who believed he was Jesus' younger brother. A rebellion against the Qing ("Ching") dynasty and its Manchu elite. Ultimately 20-30 million died, most from plague and famine. Sixteen of 18 provinces were affected and at least 600 cities destroyed. It was during this same time period that the Susquehanna bore the U.S. flag up the Yangtze to Wuhu (1854), and the side-wheeler Saginaw steamed into Tung Ting Lake, 700 miles from that river's mouth (1861). If the Saginaw had been a Chinese warship on the Mississippi River, it would have reached the vicinity of Memphis, Tennessee. And it was also during this time that the British and French forced the Second Opium War upon China (1856-1860). / Amazingly, when the rebels tried to take Shanghai in 1860, they were repulsed by a Qing army led and supported by European officers that included Charles George Gordon (Chinese Gordan, Pasha Gordan, Gordan of Khartoum). Frederick Townsend Ward also assisted, a US sailor and soldier of fortune. / The Third Battle of Nanking (Nanjing) in 1864, which ended the Taiping Rebellion, was perhaps the bloodiest battle up to that point in human history. In three days, over 100,000 died. The rebels fought to their deaths or committed suicide rather than be captured. / The Qing Dynasty would last into the 20th century, but essentially the rebellion finished them off. One result of the rebellion was that it made the dynasty realize that it had to Westernize and modernize its military. This is but a part of China's long history that shapes Chinese attitudes to the West to this very day.

♦ "Two roads diverged in a yellow wood, / And sorry I could not travel both / And be one traveler..." ("The Road Not Taken" by Robert Frost.)

♦ "Finally, sometimes metaphoric mappings are so conventional that they force themselves on readers or listeners even without any overt specification of mappings. In such a case, the author can afford the apparent luxury of underspecification, exactly because it is only apparent. We cannot really call these minimalist—they don't give the reader any special sense of discovery or active participation in the reading. An example is Robert Frost's 'The Road not taken' which says, 'Two roads diverged in a yellow wood / and sorry I could not travel both... I took the one less traveled by / and that has made all the difference.' Despite Frost's own insistence that this poem was about actual choices of paths during country walks (poking fun at a friend who treated these choices too seriously), generations of readers have consistently and automatically understood it as being about LIFE AS A JOURNEY (within which LIFE CHOICES ARE CROSSROADS). This makes us realize that mappings which are not explicitly labeled may or may not be genuinely left open to the reader." (Figurative Language by Barbara Dancygier and Eve Sweetser.)

He had been on the Island four Years and four Months... His name was Alexander Selkirk a Scotch Man..." (A Cruising Voyage round the World by Woodes Rogers.)

♦ In The Last Place on Earth, Roland Huntford tells the tragic story of Hjalmar Johansen. After surviving the "Robinson Crusoe winter" with Nansen in the Arctic, he took to drink, separated from his wife and children, resigned from the army, went bankrupt, and became destitute. Nansen, wishing to help his old companion who had saved his life, convinced Amundsen to take Johansen on his expedition, which Amundsen did, against his better judgement. In Antarctica, Johansen rubbed Amundsen the wrong way. The result was that Johansen fell out of the party that went to the South Pole. Back home, Johansen resumed drinking and ended up committing suicide. He was a man who withstood and overcame harshest nature, but not society.

♦ "At eleven, they saw St. Alban's Head, a mile and a half to the leeward, upon which they took in sail immediately, and let go the small bower anchor, which brought up the ship at a whole cable, and she rode for about an hour, and then drove. They now let go the sheet anchor, and wore away a whole cable; the ship rode about two hours longer when she drove again. / In this situation the captain sent for Mr. Meriton, the chief officer, and asked his opinion concerning the probability of saving their lives. He replied with equal candor and calmness, that he apprehended there was very little hope, as they were then driving fast on shore, and might expect every moment to strike." (The Halsewell went on the rocks near Seacombe, on the Isle of Purbeck (a peninsula), South Dorset, in 1786. Rescuers on the cliff above managed to pull seventy-four to safety. ♦ "Grit of Women" by Jack London is one of the greatest love stories ever written.

♦ "One dollar and eighty-seven cents. That was all. And sixty cents of it was in pennies. Pennies saved one and two at a time by bulldozing the grocer and the vegetable man and the butcher until one's cheeks burned with the silent imputation of parsimony that such close dealing implied." (The beginning of "The Gift of the Magi" by O. Henry. One of the greatest love stories ever written. To this day people put pennies on the grave of its author in Riverside Cemetery, Asheville, North Carolina, USA.)

♦ "If the story of Daphnis and Chloe still touches people's hearts, it is not simply because their love was born in the shade of vines and under a blue sky. That story is repeated everywhere—in a stuffy basement smelling of fried cod, in a concentration-camp bunker, to the click of an accountant's abacus, in the dust-laden air of a cotton mill. / And now the story was being played out again to the accompaniment of the howl of dive-bombers—in a building where people nourished their filthy sweat-encrusted bodies on rotten potatoes and water from an ancient boiler, where instead of honey and dream-filled silence there was only noise, stench and rubble." ♦ "In the South Shetlands a single ship would expect to take as many as 9,000 seals in three weeks, and there is a record of two ships and sixty men demolishing 45,000 in one season. And since every pelt was worth a guinea—in some markets like Canton in China very much more—there was every inducement for the slaughter to go on to the bitter end. An end, however, there had to be; and by the eighteen-thirties fur seals in the southern ocean were virtually extinct, and sea-lions and sea-elephants were dying out as well. / The main attack was now diverted to the whales..."
