KOREAN LITERATURE, TOPICS AND THEMES.
BY-LEE, PETER H.
AMERICAN COUNCIL OF LEARNED SOCIETIES, NEW YORK
REPORT NUMBER ACLS-PROJ-35
PUB DATE 65
EDRS PRICE MF-$0.27 HC-$6.08 152P.

DESCRIPTORS- #KOREAN, #CHINESE, #LITERATURE, HISTORICAL REVIEWS, ASIAN HISTORY, EUROPEAN HISTORY, #KOREAN CULTURE, COMPARATIVE ANALYSIS, NEW YORK CITY, TUCSON, THE ASSOCIATION FOR ASIAN STUDIES

KOREAN LITERATURE: TOPICS AND THEMES

Peter H. Bell
KOREAN LITERATURE: TOPICS AND THEMES
KOREAN LITERATURE:
TOPICS AND THEMES

Peter H. Lee
To my parents

千歳を為る 万歳を為る 勿論の摂政 故いじめして 今後も御心懸け 皆様方の 喜びと共に
List of Abbreviations

AY: Asea yŏn’gu
CBTN: Chŏnbuk taehakkyo nonmunjip
CGTN: Ch’ŏnggu taehakkyo nonmunjip
CH: Chindan hakpo
CHB: Ch’ŏe Hyŏn-bae sŏnsaeng hwangap kinyŏm nonmunjip
CJTN: Ch’ŏngju taehakkyo nonmunjip
CM: Ch’ŏn munhak
CNTN: Chŏnnam taehakkyo nonmunjip
CTN: Chungang taehakkyo nonmunjip
HG: Han’gŭl
HM: Hyŏndae munhak
KK: Kugŏ kungmunhak
KKY: Kugŏ kungmunhak yŏn’gu (Ch’ŏnggu University)
KTN: Kyŏngbuk taehakkyo nonmunjip
KY: Kugŏ yŏn’gu
MH: Minsok hakpo
PNC: Yongjae Paek Nak-chun paksan hwangap kinyŏm kakhak nonch’ong
PPN: Paek Sŏng-uk paksan songsu kinyŏm pulgyohak nonmunjip
SG: Sasanggye
SGTN: Sŏnggyungwan taehakkyo nonmunjip
SHTN: Sŏnhung taehakkyo nonmunjip
STN: Seoul taehakkyo nonmunjip
SY: Sijo yŏn’gu
TH: Tongbang hakchi
TMY: Taedong munhwa yŏn’gu
YH: Yŏksa hakpo
YHS: Hsŏk Yi Hŭi-sŏng sŏnsaeng songsu kinyŏm nonch’ong
CONTENTS

List of Abbreviations ........................................................................ vi
Preface ......................................................................................... ix
   I The Saenaennorae .................................................................. 1
   II The Changga ....................................................................... 15
   III The Hunmin chŏngŭm ..................................................... 27
IV Early Yi Dynasty Eulogies: the Akchang ............................ 31
   V The Sijo ............................................................................ 37
   VI The Kasa .......................................................................... 51
VII Fiction in Chinese ................................................................. 65
VIII Fiction in Korean ................................................................. 71
IX The Drama ............................................................................ 83
Chart of Vernacular Genres ...................................................... 89
X Writings in Chinese ................................................................. 91
XI Twentieth-Century Literature: Verse ................................. 101
XII Twentieth-Century Literature: Prose ............................... 111
Comparative Chronology ......................................................... 121
Glossary and Index
   I) Personal Names ................................................................. 131
   II) Other Proper Names and Terms ...................................... 136

vii
Preface

THE PURPOSE of this book is to study the vernacular genres of verse and prose in Korea. The sequence of the genres discussed is roughly chronological, and each chapter attempts to trace the birth and growth of the subject based upon both its outer and inner forms. Because of limited space and the intended use of the book, only those authors who contributed to the development of the genre under discussion are mentioned; hosts of minor writers are disregarded. This study attempts to be both factual and critical. Since conclusions on the Saenaennorae and changga are drawn solely from a small number of extant poems, chapters I and II list all Old and Middle Korean poems. Also, chapter X contains an unusually large number of authors because of the long history and bulk of existing writing in Chinese, a type of writing which enjoyed an unbroken popularity up till the end of the nineteenth century among some writers yet contributed little to the development of the Korean language.

The history of Korean literary history is short.¹ It was only after 1945 that Korean literature began to be studied extensively by Koreans themselves. But the accumulated scholarship during the short span of these seventeen years is amazingly vast. There are many controversial points, especially on Old Korean poetry, which have to be further studied and interpreted. Such topics as the drama and the p'ansori are yet to be explored. Every day new evidence is unearthed, and new theories advanced. A literary history of Korea by one author, which is at once comprehensive and authoritative over the entire field, is therefore almost impossible. I have, however, tried to consult the most important studies on each subject. For the convenience of the reader who wishes to pursue further the matters that interest him, I have appended, after each chapter, a select bibliography of the most important books, articles, and translations which have appeared by 1963. The most useful bibliography is the Kukhak yon'gu nonjô ch'ôngnam (1960),² and I ask the reader to turn to this book for further information. The reader is also referred to my Anthology of Korean Poetry from the Earliest Era to the Present (New York: John Day, 1964) which includes most of the poems discussed in this book.

¹For an account of the rise of literary history in Korea see my review of six histories of Korean literature in the Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, XXIII (1963), 172-182.

Dates have been supplied where possible on the first occurrence of an author's name. Characters for Korean names and terms occurring in the text are given in the glossary. Unless otherwise mentioned, all the Korean books are published in Seoul.

Chapters VII and VIII first appeared in Oriens Extremus, VIII (1961), 208-222.

This text was prepared under a grant from the American Council of Learned Societies in pursuance of a contract with the United States Office of Education, and I wish here to express my thanks to the ACLS and its Research Program in Uralic and Altaic Languages for their generous assistance. My thanks are also due Michael C. Rogers, Edward W. Wagner, and Burton Watson, all of whom have read the manuscript and made valuable suggestions.

Honolulu, July, 1964

PETER H. LEE
I. The Saenaennorae

The first notice of Korea appears in various Chinese chronicles: the Chu-shu chi-nien,1 Han shu,2 and Wei chih.3 We are told of nine tribes in continual strife for land and power from the Metal Age up to the beginning of the Christian Era. What strikes us forcibly, however, is not the petty squabbling of these nine tribes, but their essential unity in language and culture, especially in their love of singing and dancing. The Chu-shu chi-nien and Han shu even tell us that Korean music was already introduced to the Hsia courts approximately 2,000 years before Christ.

Be that as it may, the Puyô, Koguryô, and Ye tribes were termed by Chinese historians “the people who enjoy singing and dancing.” It was customary for the Puyô tribe to offer a sacrifice to Heaven during the first moon, and on that occasion the people assembled together and drank and danced for several days in a festival called Majigut (“Welcoming the Drum”). The Koguryô tribe was similar in language and customs to the Puyô. During the tenth moon, the offering of sacrifice to Heaven was made and there took place a major festival called Saebûl (“Dawn”). The East Okchô spoke a language quite similar to that of the Koguryô and had something in common with the Koguryô in their food, housing, clothing, and manners. The Ye, a branch of the Koguryô tribe, spoke the same language and offered a sacrifice to Heaven during the tenth moon; in the festival called Hanbûlch’um (“Dance to Heaven”) the people drank, sang, and danced day and night.

The preceding paragraph based on the Chinese chronicles relates to the life of the northern tribes. Our source, moreover, informs us that in the south, the Mahan, one of the three southern tribes, offered sacrifices to spirits and gods after finishing sowing sometime during the fifth moon. The people flocked together for the occasion and danced and sang far into the night. Their dance was performed in this way: several dozen people stood in rows, stamping the ground; their hands and feet kept time with the music and the rhythm was like that used for the bell-and-clapper dance. They celebrated in the same way when the crop was gathered. The Chinhan tribe, another of the southern tribes, spoke "Bamboo Annals," a chronicle of the state of Wei. Recovered from a grave in the third century A.D., it was subsequently lost, but was partly reconstructed from quotations preserved in other works.

§ §
Korean Literature

had a large horizontal musical instrument somewhat similar in shape to a five-stringed lute.

The first recorded instance in which poems are used as means of incantation occurs as early as the first century A.D. In the section on the Karak state (42-562) in the Samguk yusa ("Remnants of the Three Kingdoms," c. 1285), we are told that during the third moon of the year 42 (the nineteenth year of Yuri, the third king of Silla), nine chiefs and more than 200 men climbed Mount Kuji to greet the sovereign, dug a hole at the summit of the mountain, and sang in joy the Yong sin’gun ka ("Song of Welcome"):

O tortoise, tortoise,
Show your head.
If you do not,
We will roast and eat you.

This is, according to the Samguk yusa, a sacred hymn, incantatory, coercive, and imperative in quality. We may conjecture that it was an extension of the ritual prayer used during the primitive era. The songs of this kind, however, are magic formulations such as make it impossible for us to determine their purpose and tone, even if we can read them in the original. For example, we must take it simply on the authority of the Samguk yusa that the song above is a joyous song of greeting, whereas the same authority declares that the song which follows shortly, though seemingly identical in detail and form, is entirely different in its purpose and tone, and is of secular rather than religious status. During the reign of King Söngdök (702-737), Duke Sunjong’s wife, Suro, was taken out to sea by the Dragon King. The people, following the advice of a certain old man, sang as follows:

Tortoise, tortoise, return the Lady Suro.
Do you know the gravity of your sin?
If you behave against our will,
We will catch you in a net and roast you.

The quality of the earliest Korean poetry was thus religious or magical. We may conjecture that its norm was a few lines of simple language followed by a refrain. The language was incantatory, rich in its associative power and reference—much of which remains unclear to us—and in its rhythm and euphonies. It not only exerted a binding effect upon men, but upon the gods and spirits as well. It was, first of all, a means of communication between gods and men. The magical power of poetry was believed in to such an extent that it was supposed to please gods, help avoid natural calamities, bring rain and stop the winds, and promote recovery from diseases. The Greek equivalent of this idea was manifested in their drama, which was instituted in honor of Dionysus, a fertility god. The ancient Chinese idea of poetry was also essentially similar. A good example is the Emperor Shun’s statement, supposed to have been made by him when he directed one of his men, K’uei, to gather the songs in current use, that spirits and men might be brought into harmony by poetry.
Furthermore, Chinese documents affirm that the same view was held by ancient Koreans as to the function of poetry: the Korean music, with its bright spirit, helped the growth of all relationships between Heaven and Earth. Thus this ancient people realized the magical power and treated it with awe and reverence. Their primitive society was tribal and patriarchal, and primitive life was carried on in terms of communal value and significance. Poetry, music, and dance, the three vital elements in their religious service, were inseparable and indispensable. The love for song and dance was part of their mode of living, rooted firmly in communal belief. We must confess that from a scholarly viewpoint a complete and systematic history of the earliest Korean poetry is all but beyond a modern writer's capacity, owing to the lack of historical records. There are, except for fragmentary references in Chinese histories, no written records to which we may refer. Yet we may conclude that the earliest Korean poetry, insofar as we know it, was closely connected with Korean religion and was mainly composed of sacred hymns. Some scholars attempt to trace the original form of Korean poetry to the two songs mentioned above. But we must realize that these songs were later recorded by the historians for convenience in Chinese, following the Chinese metre and form. We cannot assume that these poems originally possessed their present form. In any case, this Korean poetry was a folk art that grew naturally from the life of the time. The subject matter was limited to praise of the virtue and excellence of gods and goddesses; it was not lyrical, but narrative. It did not deal with personal emotions and experiences, but with communal wishes and prayers. And since the art of writing was not known to these people, it did not have fixed forms.

In Korean histories, the first record of songs of Silla occurs in the Samguk sagi (“Historical Record of the Three Kingdoms,” 1146), though the Samguk yusa has something to say on this subject. When King Yuri (24-57) made a tour of inspection of the country in the eleventh moon, A.D. 28, he happened to see an old woman dying of hunger and cold in the open. He reproached himself, saying that it was his fault, if as king he was unable to feed the people, thus making the old and the young suffer to this extreme. He covered the old woman with his own coat and gave her food. He further ordered the civil authorities to find the widowers, the widows, the destitute, and the old and sick who could not provide for themselves and to give them food and shelter. When they heard this story, many people from the neighboring provinces came to Silla to praise the king. That year the grateful people composed the Tonnorae, which might be translated as “National Song.” The following year the king made another tour of inspection and again saw an old woman in the open. Again he reproached himself, and ordered the civil authorities to care for the widowers, the widows, the destitute, and the old and sick. This time the grateful people composed another song, which may be translated as “National Hymn.”

*This work was presented to the throne on January 25, 1146. For more on the Samguk yusa and Samguk sagi, see chap. vii.

Tonnorae has usually been read “Tosolga.” The term is something of a problem, but the word to or to is conjectured to mean “the people,” “the land,” and by extension “the tribe” and ultimately “the nation.” For a detailed consideration of this term see Peter H. Lee, Studies in the Saenaennorae: Old Korean Poetry, p. 10 and note 45 on p. 132.
Korean Literature

is the beginning of poetry and music in Silla means, of course, not that popular songs in Silla began in this period, but merely that the establishment of standard national songs begins with the Tonnorae. Though this song is communal, it represents in the history of Korean poetry a transitional form in which communal and narrative poetry developed into individualistic and lyric poetry.

Unhappily the earliest flowering of this lyrical poetry is known to us through the chronicles for the most part in terms of individual titles accompanied sometimes by the circumstances which prompted the composition of these poems; the texts in most cases have been lost. We have records of forty-one poems of the Silla period, five poems of the Koguryo period, and four poems of the Paekche period.

The first mention of the Silla songs begins with the time of King Yuri. The Samguk yusa, however, making references to the Tonnorae, further comments that the song had a structure and style called saenae. What is “saenae”? We may gather from many passages in the Samguk yusa and in the Kyunyo chon (“Life of the Great Master Kyunyo,” 1075) that saenae is not a name for a single poem, but rather a comprehensive term covering many poems. It is a genre, the norm of which can perhaps be traced in the existing Silla poems.

The various Chinese characters used to write sae and nae are used not for their original meaning—the combinations of two characters have no meaning in Chinese—but to transliterate a Silla word. We observe that the saenae music composed in the time of King Yuri and that composed in the time of King Naehae (196-230) have the same name, and that the Tonnorae of King Yuri is nothing but the name of a saenae piece of music. Thus saenae is a generic term which covers different songs with different contents composed at different times. Some compilers of histories have considered the various spellings to be entirely different names for different songs and have failed to recognize them as different transcriptions of the same word.

The word itself has been thoroughly investigated by Professor Yang Chu-dong. He concludes that saenae means “eastern river” or “eastern land” and that it came to be used in the sense of “one’s native country.” Thus Saenaennorae means Korean poetry in a broader sense, but when used as a genre term for Old Korean poetry, it covers the poems written from the beginning of the Silla dynasty to the end of the tenth century: fourteen poems in the Samguk yusa and eleven devotional poems in the Kyunyo chon. The name Saenaennorae was translated by scholars when they wrote in Chinese as hyangga, and it is by this name that these poems have subsequently been known. We prefer, however, to revert to the original Korean name.

In the kingdoms of Silla and early Koryo the conditions necessary to produce good poetry existed, and poets said to be of the first class succeeded one after another. But the poems which remain are comparatively few and the reasons for this are not yet quite clear to us. In the year 888, so the Samguk sagi informs us, an anthology of poems, odes, and elegies called Samaemok (“Catalogue of Three Periods”) was compiled by Wi Hong and Taegu by command of Queen Chinsŏng (887-897). But, alas, it was not handed down to posterity, probably because of the havoc of war. Nothing is known as to its form or its classifications; however, there are good reasons to conjecture that it had, from its title, a certain order in its compilation. One scholar even ventures to guess that the number of poems contained in this anthology may have amounted to more than a thousand. And another conjectures that the original texts of fourteen Old Korean poems in the Samguk yusa were probably copied from this anthology.

In the Samguk yusa as well as in the Kyunyŏ chŏn the texts of the poems were transcribed into Chinese logographs used either for their phonetic or logographic values. This system of transcription was called hyangch’al. Historical sources tell us that this system was standardized by a scholar, Sŏl Ch’ong, around 692. Since Chinese characters are logographs, they can be borrowed for their logographic value in their original sense, even though the Chinese pronunciation of the character is not known. In Korea they were also used for their phonetic value to transliterate the Korean language. This was owing to the absence of any other system of writing in Korea until 1443.

Sŏl Ch’ong was a profound scholar, and he used this method of transcription primarily in deciphering the Chinese classics, which were very difficult for beginners to read and interpret. What he did was to insert auxiliary words between the Chinese character and indicate how they should be read in the Korean reading. In short, he made, so to speak, an explication de texte. And during the process of this explication he gave a logical systematization to the Chinese characters thus used. But it is held among specialists of today that this system was the product not of an individual genius, but of many people who used the characters in the same way for different purposes. We can trace this very easily in the texts of the poems themselves where the method of transcription is not uniform.

On the basis of the existing twenty-five poems, we may say that there are three forms: a stanza of four lines, two stanzas of four lines, and two stanzas of four lines plus a stanza of two lines. The first is the simplest form and occurs four times. Many nursery rhymes, children’s songs, and old folk songs retain this form; children’s songs are still written in this form. The primitive religious songs and folk songs must have had a form somewhat similar, as it had the easiest and simplest structure and hence was easy to sing and remember. For this reason we may consider it the first fixed form of Old Korean poetry. The second form shows a middle stage in the structural development, and occurs three times. The third is the perfected and most polished form of all and was the most popular form in Old Korean poetry. It first appeared toward the end of the seventh century. It has two stanzas of four lines, where the main theme is developed, and a stanza of two lines, which is called either a final stanza or a refrain, in which a summary of a thought that has been developed is given in the form of wishes, commands, or suggestions. This last stanza gives, so to speak, a conclusion to the poem, at times in a very sophisticated manner, and has an epigrammatic quality, memorable and quotable. Structurally, the ninth line begins with an interjection, aú (sixteen times) or aúú (once), whose function in the poem is still discussed by scholars. As in other genres of Korean poetry, the number of groups of syllables determines the accent and rhythm in Old Korean poetry. Each line consists of one to five groups of one to seven syllables, and the number of accented syllables generally corresponds to the number of groups of syllables in a line.

Four-Line Poems

The Mattung yo ("Song of Mattung," c. 600) was composed by King Mu of Paekche as a part of the stratagem to win Princess Sŏnhwa, the third daughter of the Silla king, Ch'inpyŏng (579-632).8 The P'ungyo ("Ode to Yangji," c. 635) is an anonymous ode written to praise the virtues of Yangji, a noted priest and calligrapher. According to the Samguk yusa, this song spread among the people when they helped Yangji carve the sixteen-foot-high Buddha statue for the Yongmyo Temple. The Hein Inva ka ("Dedication of the Flower," c. 702-737) was written by a certain old herdsman. When Lady Suro, Duke Sunjong's wife, asked for the azalea blooming on the cliff and nobody dared climb to the top, this old man plucked the flower and dedicated it to the lady with this song.

If you would let me leave
The cattle tethered to the brown rocks,
And feel no shame for me,
I would pluck and dedicate the flower!

The Tonnorae ("Dedication," 760) was written by Master Wolmyŏng, a priest, poet, and member of the hwarang, leaders of the knights in Silla. In the year 760, on the first day of the fourth moon, two suns appeared in the sky and remained for ten days. King Kyŏngdok, on the suggestion of his astronomers, had an altar built to pray to the Buddha and waited for the priest destined to perform this work. At that time Master Wolmyŏng passed by, and in response to a request from the king he began the ceremony with this poem.

Eight-Line Poems

The Mo Taemara ka ("Ode to Knight Taemara," c. 692-702) was written by Siro to praise his master, Taemara, a member of the hwarang.

*This tradition is incorrect historically. See my Studies in the Saenuenmoe, pp. 103-105.
The Saenaennorae

All men sorrow and lament
Over the spring that is past;
Your face once fair and bright,
Where has it gone with deep furrows?

I must glimpse you, Sir,
If I can, for an awesome moment.
My fervent mind cannot rest at night,
Far-off here in the mugwort-covered swamps.

In the first stanza the poet compares the spring to his master and laments that the once fair and bright face of the knight starts to wear "deep furrows." The last two lines achieve the culmination of his intense admiration for his master. Until he sees him again even for a moment, he cannot enjoy peace of mind.

His anxiety for him will torment him even "in the mugwort-covered swamps."

In the Wons'ga ("Regret," 737) Sinch'ung reproaches King Hyosong (731-741) for breaking his promise.

You said you would no more forget me
Than oaks would wither before the fall.
O, that familiar face is there still,
The face I used to see and admire.

The moon in the ancient lake, it seems,
Complains of the transient tide, ebb and flow.
Your face I see no more, no more,
O, the vain world, it hates and harasses me.

The comparison of nature and man is brought in to emphasize the mutability of man's mind. The contrast is, in the first stanza, between the oak tree and a breach of promise. It is amplified in the second stanza, this time between the moon and the tide or between the moon and the tide and the king. The moon "complains of the transient tide," but the moon itself is changeable. Yet the poet realizes that the moon and the tide, however changeable they may be, are renewed and renewing in their cyclic changes, whereas man, once he has forgotten his promise, will never be reminded of it. Thus the scene of nature described here becomes the symbol not only of the speaker's deploring state of mind, but also of the contrast between his despair and the indifference of nature. In the eighth line, the poet exclaims: "O, the vain world, it hates and harasses me."

The Ch'odyong ka ("Song of Ch'odyong," 879) is probably the most famous of all Silla poems. The author of this poem, Ch'odyong, is one of the seven sons of the Dragon King of the Eastern Sea. He called himself Ch'odyong, so our source informs us, and married a beautiful woman. Seeing that she was extremely beautiful, an evil spirit transformed himself into a man and attacked her in her room while Ch'odyong was away. But Ch'odyong returned and witnessed the scene, and calmly he sang this song, which so moved the evil spirit that it went away.

Having caroused far into the night
    In the moonlit capital,
    I return home and in my bed,
    Behold, four legs.
    Two have been mine;
    Whose are the other two?
    Two had been mine;
    No, no, they are taken.

A dramatic intensity is achieved by the change of tense in the verb form, from "two have been mine" to "two had been mine" in the second stanza. Part of this poem appears again in the choral dance of the Koryo period (lines 34-35 of the Ch'oyong ka of Koryo).

Ten-Line Poems

The Hyesong ka ("Song of the Comet," c. 579-632), written by Master Ch'ungdam, worked a miracle: it cleared away a comet that had appeared in the sky.

There is a castle by the Eastern Sea,
    Where once a mirage used to play.
    Foreign soldiers came to admire this castle,
    Torches were burnt, rockets were fired.
    When knights visited this mountain, and when
    The moon zealously lit her lamp, and a star
    With a long broomstick swept a path,
    Someone said, "Look, there is a comet."
    The moon has already departed.
    Now, where shall we look for the long-tailed star?

In the second line of the first stanza a mirage is referred to, in the original, as "the castle where Gandharva plays." The comet is variously described as "a star with a long broomstick" which sweeps the path (for the moon) and as "the long-tailed star." One commentator interprets the poem as a patriotic song which eulogizes the blessings of peace in Silla.

The Wonwangsang ka ("Prayer to Amitäba," c. 661-681) was written either by Kwangdok or by his wife.

    O Moon, Go to the West, and Pray to Amitäba
    And tell
The Saenaennorae

That there is one who Adores the judicial throne, and Longs for the Pure Land,
Praying before Him with folded hands.
Can the forty-eight vows be met
If this flesh remains unannihilated?

In the first stanza the speaker addresses the moon and asks her to undertake a journey to the West where Amitābha ("the infinite honored one" or "one with boundless infinite life") resides. The second stanza amplifies the praise of the virtues of Amitābha. He not only possesses "boundless life," as his name suggests, but is also judicial. He passes his judgment from his "judicial throne." The last stanza presents a rhetorical question in which the speaker affirms that the flesh, which stands between the promised land and this world, must be annihilated.

The Che mangmae ka ("Requiem," c. 762-765) was written by Master Wolmyong in memory of his sister. The poem is built on a single image of separation through death, in the first stanza on the image of a crossroad (the road of life and death), and in the second on the image of the tree:

We know not where we go,
Leaves blown, scattered.
Though fallen from the same tree,
By the first winds of autumn.

The state of our existence is comparable to the branches of the tree. But the branches come from the same source, the trunk. Leaves which grow on the branches, however, when fallen from the branches, are forever separated from one another. We are, the poet says, like the leaves, and once we die, we are forever separated from our beloved ones. The theme is therefore skillfully developed by the simple figure of a tree—branches separated from the tree, leaves separated from the branch, and finally scattered leaves blown asunder. In the last stanza, the poet, as a devout Buddhist, hopes to meet his sister again "in the Pure Land."

The Ch'ān Kilborang ka ("Ode to Knight Kilbo," c. 742-765) is a eulogy by Master Ch'ungdam written to praise Knight Kilbo, a member of the hwarang. This poem was known for its intense emotion and noble spirit, and King Kyŏngdŏk himself praised it highly. Unlike the other poems, this has no introductory note by Iryŏn, the compiler of the Samguk yusa.

The moon that pushes her way
Through the thickets of clouds,
Is she not pursuing
The white clouds?
Knight Kilbo once stood by the water,
Reflecting his face in the blue.
Henceforth I shall seek and gather
Among pebbles the depth of his mind.
Knight, you are the towering pine,
That scorns frost, ignores snow.

Internally, the first stanza ends with the third line and the second part begins unusually with the fourth line in the first stanza and continues to the end of the second stanza. In the last stanza, the poet's intense admiration for his friend is achieved by a single metaphor, the pine. Kilbo is "the towering pine,/That scorns frost, ignores snow."

Another poem by Ch'ungdam, the Anmin ka ("Statesmanship," 765), is didactic. It is built upon a simple metaphor, an implied comparison of the government and the family. The last stanza, which was suffixed as a disconnected comment on the subject, is reminiscent of the remark of Confucius to Duke Ching of Ch'i when he said, "Let the prince be a prince, the minister a minister, the father a father, and the son a son." (Analects, XII, 11).

The To Ch'onssugwanâm ka ("Hymn to the Thousand-Armed Goddess," c. 762-765) by Hǔmyǒng, shows another instance of a miracle brought about by the power of poetry. This time the poetess implores the Thousand-Armed Merciful Goddess, painted on the north wall of the Left Hall of the Punhwang Temple, on behalf of her son who has lost his eyesight. The child regained his eyesight.

Falling on my knees,
Pressing my hands together,
Thousand-Armed Merciful Goddess,
I implore thee.
Yield me,
Who lack,
One among your thousand eyes,
By your mystery restore me whole.
If you grant me one of your many eyes,
O the bounty, then, of your charity.

Four lines in the first stanza describe in vivid language the external bodily preparation necessary for the prayer. The actual prayer is given in the following stanzas, lines five to ten. The calm and poised effects are achieved by the "if" at the beginning of the ninth line. "One," in "If you grant me one of your many eyes" in the same line, should be taken as an indefinite, rhetorical number.

The Ujok ka ("Meeting with Bandits," c. 785-798), by Priest Yǒnjae, is the most difficult of all Old Korean poems, partly because four words are missing in the text and partly also because the poet's symbolic language is loaded with many layers of meaning.
The Saenaennorae

My mind that knew not its true self,
My mind that wandered in the dark and deep,
Now is started out for bodhi,
Now is awakened to light.

But on my way to the city of light,
I meet with a band of thieves.
Their swords glitter in the bushes—
Things-as-they-are and things-as-they-are-not.
Well, bandits and I both meditate on the Law;
But is that sufficient for tomorrow?

The first stanza, which resembles the beginning of the first canto of the Commedia in theme and imagery, introduces the first theme, that of journey. Night is not only the setting, it is a symbol of the poet's state of mind, which is that of a speaker who has "wandered in the dark and deep," in the world of illusion. After a long wandering in the dark, the poet is awakened to bodhi. He then starts for "the city of light." On the way he meets the bandits who also "wander in the dark and deep." This act of meeting them is, on the other hand, a source of enlightenment for himself and for the bandits. The swords that "glitter in bushes" finally aid the poet to comprehend the relationships between illusion and enlightenment. On the other hand, it is the enlightened poet who in turn enlightens the bandits. Thus the second stanza fully develops the theme of the polarity between illusion and enlightenment, which is already hinted at in the previous stanza. When the poet exclaims "Things-as-they-are and things-as-they-are-not," he has attained bodhi. The last stanza describes the constant harmony with the people, and the mind that is one with the wisdom of Buddha. Thus the poem is a revelation of the process of attaining bodhi, and it is built on the contrasts between night and day, darkness and light, illusion and enlightenment, things-as-they-are and things-as-they-are-not.

The eleven poems by the Great Master Kyunyō (917-973) are religious poems and are written in the Buddhist tradition. Kyunyō entitled his poems after the ten vows of Samantabhadra, with the exception of the eleventh poem, which is the conclusion. The themes of the poems are: (1) worship and veneration of Buddha, (2) praise of Tathāgata, (3) the search for and offerings to Buddha, (4) repentance for sins and retribution in this life for the sins of a previous existence, (5) rejoicing in the welfare of others and in the reward of virtue, (6) entreaty for the turning of the wheel of Law, (7) entreaty for the coming of Buddha among the living, (8) constant following of the way of Buddha, (9) constant harmony with the living, (10) dedication of one's merits for the salvation of all living beings, and (11) conclusion.

Although the eleven poems were inspired by the Bhadra-cari-pranidhāna ("Vows on the Practices of Bodhisattva"), often the imagery is more striking and beautiful than in the Sanskrit original or its Chinese translations by Bud-
The sixth poem, which asks the Buddha to revolve the wheel of the dharma, is the most dramatic and beautiful of all his poems. The poem opens with a fervent prayer for "the sweet rain of truth." The second stanza goes:

Dispel the blight of affliction
Rooted deep in the ignorant soil,
And wet the mind's field
Where the good grass struggles to grow.

The mind is "the ignorant soil" which suffers from "the blight of affliction." It is the dried field "Where the good grass struggles to grow" because of this blight. The metonymic adjective "ignorant" modifying "soil" is the most convincing, because where the temptations of ignorance pervade there cannot but be "ignorant soil," and where ignorance reigns "good grass struggles to grow." If the rain falls over the dried, ignorant soil of the mind, the blight will be dispelled, the grass will grow, and the soil will bear the "gold fruit of knowledge." This harmonious state of the mind is expressed in the last stanza by the single beautiful metaphor of "a moonlit autumn field." The autumn field must be illuminated by the moon, since the bodhi-moon is a symbol for enlightenment. Thus the last stanza achieves a magnificent unity of tone.

Bibliography: the Saenaennorae

The Saenaennorae

Kim Ki-Jong, “Hanguk ēi pulgyomunhak non” (“Buddhist Literature in Korea”), PPN, pp. 171-197.
Pak Chi-hong, “Kuiji yŏng’gu” (“A Study of Kuiji ka”), KK, 16 (1957), 2-17.
Song Ch’ae-ju, “Hyangga ē nat’anan ‘sī’ ē t’aehayo” (“On ‘sī’ in the Hyangga”), KK 17 (1957), 94-104.

Translations
Lee, Peter H., Kranich am Meer: koreanische Gedichte (Munich, 1959), pp. 7-20.
II. The Changga

It is a commonplace among literary historians that a study of Middle Korean poetry is extremely difficult. This is not because there is no lyric poetry in the Koryo dynasty, but rather because there are few written records to which we may refer about its origin and authorship, its form and content. It is therefore regrettable that we cannot systematically survey the literary life of the Koreans during 470 years of the Koryo period.

There are, of course, several inevitable reasons for this difficulty. First of all, there was no proper system of writing the Korean language in the Koryo dynasty. The result is that many poems of native and folk origin were sung or orally transmitted from time to time and were not recorded or preserved for posterity. While the preceding Silla dynasty invented the transcription method of Korean in Chinese, the hyangch'al, and the succeeding Yi dynasty the phonetic alphabet of twenty-eight letters, the Hunmin chôngum (“Correct Sound in Teaching the People,” 1443), the Koryo dynasty neither maintained the use of the hyangch'al nor substituted any other system. The invention of the hyangch'al was an indispensable stimulus which facilitated the rapid development of the polished form of the native poetic genre in Silla, the Saenaen norae, and many poets of genius used and perfected this form. The hyangch'al letters were used until the time of King Kwangjong (925-950-975), when Great Master Kyunyo wrote his eleven devotional poems in them, and as late as 1021 according to the inscription on the tower at the Hyŏnhwa Temple in Kaesŏng. The eleven poems by Kyunyo are, however, for philological and cultural reasons grouped with the fourteen poems written before 900 as Old Korean poetry. Thus, strictly speaking, when we enter the Koryo period, the use of the hyangch'al and of the genre of the Saenaen norae disappears. This is because skill in Chinese, which developed to a considerable degree toward the end of Silla, proved itself really capable of translating the Korean emotions and innermost feelings. The truth is that scholars found the hyangch'al inefficient: they called it a puzzle and abandoned it and the genre of the Saenaen norae that went with it. We see, however, in the Toijang ka (“Dirge,” 1120), which is still written in hyangch'al letters, a transitional period, a period in which the hyangch'al letters still had supremacy. This is, indeed, a piece of Silla poetry, and it occupies an important position in the history of Korean poetry. Much later, in the fourteenth century, we see another example of this type in the two poems by An Ch’uk (1282-1348). Here the hyangch’al letters are used sporadically to transcribe not only connectives, but also refrains. It is evident from these examples that in the beginning of Koryo, where Silla culture still had influence, the recording method of the previous dynasty was still used; but in time Chinese began to infiltrate and was finally used in poetry to the exclusion of the hyangch’al.

The intensive study of Chinese literature and the encouragement of composition only in Chinese, which were responsible for other parts of our difficulty, demand explanation. The Koryo dynasty, which espoused Buddhism as the state religion, nevertheless imitated the fashionable conventions of government which were traditionally Chinese and were based on the principles of Confucianism, and leaned toward a policy of toadyism from the time of the Khitan invasions (993, 1010, 1018). As a result of the adoption of the system of the civil service examination, the two-corps system of government—civil and military—became effective in 958; only the civil officials chosen by this examination were occupied with state affairs. After seventy-five years of peace (1047-1122) Koryo declined gradually and suffered from the following disasters: internally, the opposition between ideas of independence and toadyism and between military and civilian corps; externally, from the invasions of the Khitans, Jurchens, Mongols, and Japanese. On the other hand, during the period of both peace and decline, Confucianism and Buddhism dominated the world of thought. A degenerated hedonism formed the basis of the upper-class culture, which attempted to disguise its troubles and worries and lived a secluded life. Loss of the independent spirit, worship of the powerful (therefore the study of Chinese literature only), and internal disturbances and foreign invasions all made scholars and historians reject the local culture. The government cared little about the cultivation of vernacular poetry and looked down on Korean poetry as “popular songs” or “unrefined language.” Thus even the songs transmitted in hyangch’al letters, if they were not by members of the royal family or by famous officials or literati, and if they did not deal with national administration or current affairs, were not recorded in historical documents. Even the songs collected specifically as references for national customs and government affairs and those selected as materials for moral instruction were handled severely by historians and anthologists, who briefly gave their origins and omitted their texts.

Lastly, a handful of recorded poems were either lost in the course of time or were occasionally expunged by the Yi dynasty annalists and anthologists as “vulgar and obscene.” As soon as the national policy was formulated, the Yi dynasty turned its attention to the poetry and music of the previous kingdom. This was a way to shake off the dust of Koryo and thus to make a new start for the Yi. The fall of Koryo was for this reason ascribed to Buddhism and all the vices accompanying it, and the new dynasty was built on rational ethics and strong political philosophy. But the choice of Confucianism as national policy had a deeper significance. The founders of the new monarchy were anxious to justify their revolution; the change of the dynasty had to be justified and praised. The traditional Confucian or pre-Confucian idea of the "Heavenly mandate" was called in for this purpose; it was Heaven that punished the virtueless Koryo dynasty, and General Yi Sŏng-gye, the founder of the new dynasty, was only its instrument to fulfill the mandate of Heaven; and in order to fulfill this mandate the state had to be based on Confucian principles. What went with this new policy was, however, a blind reverence for China and a respect for Chinese tradition. Thus when the Yi dynasty critics discussed tradition, it was the Chinese tradition which was the criterion for the judging of literature and the arts. Their criterion for Koryo poetry was a code of ethical practice based on Confucianism, and it was according to this interpretation of moral doctrine that one poem was termed "vulgar" and another "classic." During the period of the kings Sejong (1397-1419-1450), Sŏngjong (1457-1470-1494), and Chongjong (1488-1506-1544) the poetry and music of the previous dynasty were regulated and codified, and the critics concerned with this work condemned the popular poems of Koryo under three headings: vulgar, obscene, or Buddhistic. For instance, in the time of King Sejong, the Hŭjon ch'insi (c. 1331-1332) came into question as "obscene" (1419) and Mune (1434) as "Buddhistic and fantastic" (1434). Among the three reigns mentioned, the Koryo poems suffered most during that of King Sŏngjong, when (1488, 1490) six of the existing poems were expunged or revised as injurious to public decency. Scholars described them as "dealing with love between the sexes" or "pleasing men and women." It is true that the six poems dealt primarily with affection between the sexes—probably because people of the lower class, driven to dire poverty and pain by internal disturbances and foreign invasions, became hedonistic praising love for love's sake if they did not become Buddhist's renouncing the worldly life. But if we read these poems with a map of world literature in mind, we feel that they are good examples of the expression of the quality of experience, and we may ask ourselves whether they deserved to be treated contemptuously. It is, however, quite possible that the poems as we have them today are versions which have already been censored by the Yi dynasty scholars. It is therefore difficult for us to pass a definitive judgment on poems whose texts may have been altered by Confucianists of the time. But if the present versions are the same as they were in Koryo times, we are inclined to demand a justification for the patronizing attitude of the Yi dynasty scholars.

1Mune is a translation of the Sanskrit term Apratihata, which means "unshirked, without obstacle, resisless, without resistance, permeating everywhere, all-pervasive, dynamic omnipresence which enters everywhere without hindrance like the light of a candle." See Soothill and Hodous, A Dictionary of Chinese Buddhist Terms (London, 1937), p. 311b.

2Sejong silla (Chejo wongjo silla ed.), III, 1a; LXV, 21b.

3Sŏngjong silla, CCXV, 1a; CCXIX, 4b; CCXL, 18b.
For the above-mentioned reasons, it is easy to comprehend the scarcity of collections of Koryŏ dynasty poems and of reference data compiled about them during the succeeding dynasty. Our only available sources are the section on music in the Koryŏ sa ("History of the Koryŏ Dynasty," 1451), a few scattered remarks in private literary collections, and reference books related to poetry and music compiled during the Yi dynasty (e.g., Sıyong hyang-ak po). With only these materials we will try to investigate the state of Koryŏ lyric poetry. Historical sources record sixty titles of Koryŏ poems: twenty with texts (eleven poems in pure Korean, one in hyangch''al letters, three in hyangch''al and Chinese, two in Chinese translation, three with Korean readings of the Chinese translations and Korean connectives) and forty without texts (ten with a modified version in Chinese translation, eight prophetic songs with Chinese translation, twenty-two with titles only).

We have mentioned that the To iiang ka represents a transitional period between the Saenaennorae and Koryŏ poetry. Even in the Chŏng Kwajŏng ("Regret," c. 1151-1170) we see the aftermath of Old Korean poetry only with regard to the total number of lines, which amounted to ten (some give eleven); we do not see a clear stanzaic division as we do in Silla poems. The characteristic forms of Koryŏ poetry are the changga ("long poem") and the kyŏnggīch'a ku ("kyŏnggi-style poem"). The former is so called because of the refrain recurring at intervals, generally at the end of each stanza. The refrain in the changga has several functions, but it is generally used to help achieve a certain mood in each poem, as in Provençal and Renaissance poetry. This character of the refrain is clear when we consider that the poems of the Koryŏ period were orally transmitted and that their origin lay in folk songs or in popular ballads. These poems were sung to musical accompaniment, and they found their place wherever men and women met together and entertained each other with songs. The refrain serves as a meaningless onomatopoeia of drum sounds or nonsense jingles to carry the tune and spirit of the songs—as in the Tongdong ("Ode on the Seasons"). Sŏgyeong pyŏlgok ("Song of P’yŏngyang"). Ch’ŏngsan pyŏlgok ("Song of Green Mountain"). and Isŏng kok ("Treading Frost"). In the Kasiri ("Would You Go?"). however, it has clearly definable parts—an interjection, an imitation of the sounds of drums or other instruments, and a poetic phrase. Here the refrain seems to have a meaning which grew out of the poem itself, an ironical contrast between the speaker’s distressed state of mind and the peace and prosperity of the time which others seem to enjoy. Some words in the refrains, as is the case with the Kasiri, might once have had a meaning, but in the course of oral transmission they lost their original meaning in the poems and came to be used as meaningless repetitions.

The refrain in the Koryŏ poems is an indispensable element in chain verse like the changga. It is by this refrain, rather than by other devices, such as terza rima in European poetry, that a poem is linked together, sometimes a
The Changga

A poem consisting of several independent parts with different contents. This is the case with the Sŏgyŏng pyŏlgok, which consists of three sections, and the Ch'ŏngsan pyŏlgok, which consists of two sections. Each stanza in most Koryŏ poems can be read or detached as an independent unit apart from the entire poem. Yet, it is the refrain that links the individual units, so that each stanza in each poem can play its role in fully achieving the final effect. Several poems do not have stanzaic divisions, several different units being linked together. The Ch'ŏnyong ka ("Song of Ch'ŏnyong"), which consists of seven parts, including the poem written in 879 to praise Ch'ŏnyong, is a good example of the changga tradition.

Upon scrutiny we distinguish two forms of the changga:

I 1) Each group (foot) in a line has two or three or four syllables, but most commonly three syllables.
   2) Generally each line consists of three groups, but four groups are also possible.
   3) There is no set number of stanzas in a poem.
   4) The refrain occurs either in the middle or at the end of each stanza.

II 1) Each group in a line has two or three syllables, but most commonly four syllables.
   2) Generally each line consists of alternating three or four groups, but four groups seem to be predominant.
   3) There is no set number of stanzas in a poem.
   4) The refrain tends to disappear from a poem.

Most of the long poems belong to the first class, but two poems, the Isang kok and Manjŏnch'ŏn ("Spring Overflows the Pavilion"), belonging to the second class, already demonstrate the stage in which the changga gradually loses its fixed form and opens the way for the birth of a new genre, the sijo, in the Yi dynasty.

Strictly speaking, the To ijang ka, the Ch'ŏng Kwajŏng, and the Samo kok ("Maternal Love") cannot be called changga, but they are traditionally grouped under this genre because of their dates and vocabulary. The To ijang ka is a royal poem of eight lines written by King Yejong. He praises the heroism of Generals Sin Sung-gyŏm and Kim Nak, who once saved the life of the founder of the Koryŏ dynasty in a battle against Chinhwon (892-935) of the Later Paekche dynasty. The Ch'ŏng Kwajŏng is a poem of ten or eleven lines describing the bitter disappointment of a rejected courtier. During the Yi dynasty this poem, which was subsequently known by its musical tunes, samjinjak, was praised as an expression of loyalty to the sovereign. It was established as court music and was a requisite for all musicians.

The Ch'ŏnyong ka is a dramatic poem of forty-five lines consisting of seven parts: prologue (1-6); the first chorus, praising Ch'ŏnyong (7-24); the second chorus, describing the making of the mask (25-28); the confession of the demon (31-33); the second chorus, singing part of the Silla song of Ch'ŏnyong (34-35); a dialogue between the people and Ch'ŏyong (36-42); and the flight of the demon (43-45). This choral dance was performed at court on New Year's Eve to exorcise the evil spirits and demons from the country.

The Ssanghwajaem ("The Turkish Bakery") purports to be by a kisaeng and dates from the time of King Ch'ungnyol (1236-1275-1308). This was the time when popular songs and music flourished, with the encouragement of the king himself, who gathered musicians and dancers from all parts of the country for his entertainment. From the content of the poem, critics prefer to see it as a folk song of the day in the capital rather than as a poem of definite authorship.

I go to the Turkish shop, buy a bun,
An old Turk grasps me by the hand.
If this story is spread abroad,
You alone are to blame, little doll on the shelf.
I will go, yes, go to his bower:
A narrow place, sultry and dark.
I go to the Samjang Temple, light the lantern,
A chief priest grasps me by the hand.
If this story is spread abroad,
You alone are to blame, little altar boy.
I will go, yes, go to his bower:
A narrow place, sultry and dark.
I go to the village well, draw the water,
A dragon within grasps me by the hand.
If this story is spread abroad,
You alone are to blame, O pitcher.
I will go, yes, go to his bower:
A narrow place, sultry and dark.
I go to the tavern, buy the wine,
An innkeeper grasps me by the hand.
If this story is spread abroad,
You alone are to blame, O wine jug.
I will go, yes, go to his bower:
A narrow place, sultry and dark.

The poem consists of four eight line stanzas, the last two lines being a refrain occurring at the end of each stanza. Parts of the fourth and fifth and seventh lines in each stanza are an imitation of drum sounds carrying no definite meaning. (The translation uses a six-line stanza, because the drum sounds have been omitted.) The poem is in the first person throughout and the speaker narrates her adventures in four different circumstances. She uses the direct

I have used the word "Turkish" somewhat freely here. Historically, the term hoehoe at this period denoted simply a Moslem, many of whom accompanied the Mongols into Korea in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. The kisaeng were female entertainers, comparable to Greek hetairae.
language typical of the time, and her determination finds expression in the last two lines: "I will go, yes, go to his bower:/A narrow place, sultry and dark."

The Tongdong is an anonymous long poem of sixty-five lines, divided into thirteen four-line stanzas with a line of refrain at the end of each stanza.

With virtue in one hand
And happiness in the other,
Come, come you gods,
With virtue and happiness.

The river in January
Now freezes, now melts.
The changing skies.
I live alone.

You burn like a lantern
In the February moon.
Burn like the bright lantern
That shines upon the world.

In the last day of March
Plums are in full bloom.
O magnificent blossoms,
How I envy you!

In April the orioles
Come singing in pairs.
My love, my bold knight,
You forget bygone days.

On the feast of the irises
I brew healing herbs.
I offer you this drink—
May you live a thousand years.

On a June day I bathe
And comb my hair, and entice you
Toward me like a pretty comb
Floating just out of reach.

For the feast of the dead,
I prepare dainties of land and sea,
And pray in this midyear day,
That we may be always together.

Under the full moon
Of the midautumn festival
I am lucky to be near you
In the rippling light.
O season of chrysanthemums
In the ninth day of the ninth moon,
Drunk from wine, drunk from flowers,
Take care, my love, be well and strong.
In frosty October
You are handsome as the laden tree.
But once the tree is cut down,
What will become of my love?
On a long November night
I lie in an empty room
With a cold pillow and quilt.
O troubled heart, night without you.
In December I carve for you
Chopsticks from pepper wood:
An unknown guest holds them.
O bitter December!

The first stanza is a panegyric prologue and the following twelve stanzas are devoted to each of the twelve months of the year. Its traditional form of monthly division and its romantic content make it clear that it is a folk song of the time. The song was loved even in the Yi dynasty, and the annalist reports that the “Tongdong dance,” together with the choral dance of Ch’oyong, was performed on New Year’s Eve in the beginning of the Yi period.

The Sogyong pye’gok is a dramatic lyric spoken by a kisaeng, consisting of fourteen two-line stanzas. The second line in each stanza serves to keep the text to the musical tune and goes: “Wi tuOrOngsyOng tuOrOngsyOng taring-diri.” The fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth stanzas seem to have been popular in themselves, apart from the entire poem, and recur as the final stanza of the Chongsok ka (“Song of the Gong”). Stanzas nine to fourteen are most intense, with the speaker’s plea to a boatman on the Taedong River not to allow her lover to cross the water, for “Once he has crossed that awesome water,/He will pluck another flower, alas.” The poem became a political issue during the reign of King Sŏngjong and was officially condemned as “vulgar.”

The Ch’ongsan pyŏgok is an anonymous poem in which a lost lover takes a pessimistic view of life and tries every means to unburden himself of sorrow. He comes to the conclusion that wine is the best anodyne, and the poem ends, therefore, with an invocation and lines in praise of wine.

Let us live in the green mountain,
With wild grapes and wild thyme,
Let us live in the green mountain.
The Changga

With cry and moan
The birds fly overhead.
Tremendous sorrow nests in me
And cries and moans after I wake.
The birds fly over,
My p'ough is blunt.
The birds fly crying
Across the water.
I have spent the day.
But in this deserted place
Where no man comes or goes
How am I to pass the night?
At what place is this stone thrown?
At what person is this stone thrown?
Here where no man loves or hates,
What if I stumble on the stone!
Let us live by the loud sea,
With seaweeds and cowries,
Let us live by the neighing sea.
While you are turning the corner,
While you are going to a kitchen,
Listen to the Tartar violin of birds
Perched on young antlers.
On the way to the sea I brew
Strong wine in a round jar.
A gourd-shaped leaven chases me and Begs me to stay here; what now?

The text was not mentioned in any historical sources, but the Akchang kasa⁵ ("Words for Music") records its text. The poem is written in eight four-line stanzas with the refrain at the end of each stanza: "Yalli yalli yallasyong yallari yalla."

The Chongsok ka is an anonymous hymn which sings of an unbroken line of kings and prays that the life of kings be coeval with Heaven and Earth. The poem begins with a three-line stanza of introduction and continues in five six-line stanzas. The poem offers a series of impossibilities, and then declares that, if these are ever resolved, "Then we part from the virtuous Lord," as the refrain in the third, fourth, and fifth stanza states.

The Isang kok is an anonymous love poem of thirteen lines with no stanzaic division, of which the third line is a refrain. This poem, together with the ⁵For this oldest extant anthology of Korean poetry see Peter H. Lee, "Popular Poems in the Koryo Dynasty as Described in the Koryo sa and Akchang kasa," Oriens Extremus, V (1958), 208.

Ssanghwajöm, was mentioned in the “Songjong Annals” (CCXL, 18b) as vulgar in content and as being that which pleases men and women.

The Samo kok is an anonymous short poem of five lines in all. Despite the scarcity of references, its vocabulary and syntax would seem to indicate Koryŏ origin. The poem is simple in structure and compares the difference between paternal and maternal love to that of sharpness between sickle and spade.

The Kasiri is another love poem spoken by a kisaeng. The poem consists of four two-line stanzas with a refrain at the end of each stanza. It is grouped with the other poems here for the same reasons as the Samo kok. This poem has much literary merit; its language is simple but intense, and it is filled with tender sentiments for the parting lover.

The Manjŏnch'un is an anonymous love poem of eighteen lines (four three-line stanzas, one five-line stanza, and a concluding line).

Were I to build a bamboo-hut on the ice,
Were I to die of cold with him on the ice,
O night, run slow, till our love is spent.
When I lie alone, restless, vigilant,
Only peach blossoms wave over the west window.
You have no grief, welcome the spring breeze.
I have believed those who vowed to each other:
“My soul will follow yours forever.”
Who, who persuaded me this was true?
“O duck, beautiful duck, why do you come
To the swamp, instead of the shoal?”
“If the swamp freezes, the shoal will do.”
A bed on Mount South, a jade pillow, gold brocade,
And beside me a girl sweeter than musk,
Let us press our hearts together, our magic hearts.

The speaker is perhaps a kisaeng, abandoned by her lover and forced to spend long spring nights alone. She tries to console herself and, at the end of the poem, reveals her strong desire to follow him and possess him. The tone is frank and outspoken, and this is probably the reason for the condemnation of the poem by the Yi dynasty annalists.

In addition, historical sources list five titles as Koryŏ products whose texts are recorded in Chinese. One short poem by Yi Pang-wŏn (T'aejong, 1367-1410-1418-1422), the Hayŏ ka (“Song of Carefree Life,” 1392), and one by Chŏng Mong-ju (1337-1392), the Tansim ka (“Song of Constancy,” 1392), are commonly known not by their Chinese translations but by their Korean versions. The Ch'ŏnggu yŏngŏn (“The Eternal Language of Green Hills,” 1728) gives a Korean version of the Hayŏ ka in the sijo form; it is difficult to determine how much of the original is retained in its Chinese translation or its Korean version. The Chahadong ("Grotto of Purple Mist") was written by Ch'ae Hong-ch'ol (1262-1340), who lived in Chahadong and named his room the Chonghwag Hall. One day he invited an old man to his hall, composed this poem in Chinese, and had it sung by a servant. The Yasim sa ("Song of Deep Night") is an anonymous poem in Chinese which deals with the joy shared by the king and his subjects. The last poem, the P'ungipsong ("Wind among the Pines"), is an anonymous eulogy recorded in Chinese.3
The Changga

The kyönggi-e'ka, or kyönggi-style poem, is so called because of the refrain that begins "kui ottøhanikk?" and comes in the fourth and sixth lines of each stanza. The basic form is as follows:

3 3 4
3 3 4
4 4 4
4 4 4 4
3 3 4

When we compare and analyze the poems written in this form during the Koryo period and later imitations written in the subsequent dynasty, we note the following characteristics:

1. Generally each group (foot) in a line has three or four syllables.
2. Generally each line consists of three groups, but one four-group line occurs in each stanza.
3. Each stanza always consists of six lines.
4. Each stanza can be divided into two parts.
5. Generally each poem consists of five to eight stanzas.7

We have three poems of this type as Koryo products, the Hallim pyöl'gok ("Song of Confucian Scholars," c. 1214-1259), by Confucian scholars, and the Kwandong pyöl'gok ("Song of the Diamond Mountains," c. 1330) and Chukkye pyöl'gok, by An Ch'uk. Texts are either in hyangch'al and Chinese (Kwandong and Chukkye pyöl'gok) or in Korean and Chinese (Hallim pyöl'gok), and are characterized by the cataloguing of things. These poems are products of a mature period of aristocratic culture and reflect the leisurely life of scholars hidden in the mountains far from internal disturbances or foreign invasions. The contents of the poems are therefore Epicurean or Taoist, and their tone is dignified and quiet, composed and learned. Later imitations during the Yi dynasty by Confucianists—the last of which is by Kwon Ho-mun (1532-1587)—are mostly finger-exercises loaded with dense allusiveness and have little literary merit.

6In addition, in the fourth chapter of the I ñok nan'go (1363), a collection of writings of Yi Che-hyon (1287-1367), eleven poems are translated into Chinese in a four-line stanza of seven-word verse. Among the eleven, outline translations of seven poems are copied in the Koryo sa; one poem is a translation of part of the "Song of P'yongyang"; and three are translations of unknown poems of folk origin. See Ikehae nan'go, in the YOgye,nyOnhrOn chip (1959), IV, 12a-14a.

7Some poems, however, demonstrate the following characteristics: (1) generally each line consists of four groups, (2) there is no set number of lines in a stanza, (3) division in the stanza tends to disappear, and (4) generally each poem consists of several stanzas.
Bibliography: the Changga

(1956), pp. 94-115

Ch'ŏng Pyŏng-uk, Kungmunhak san'go (1960), pp. 149-159.

Kim Tong-uk, “Siyŏng hyangak po kasa u peaq'yŏngjŏk yŏng'gu” (“The Background of the Texts in the Siyŏng hyangak po”), CH, 17 (1955), 103-186.

Translations

III. The Hunmin chŏngŭm

The Korean alphabet, the Hunmin chŏngŭm, was invented by the great King Sejong himself. He was the first Korean ruler to realize that the art of writing should be accessible to the common people. The thought of devising a new alphabet to meet the needs of the people was in his mind from the time of his enthronement. In the second year of his reign, therefore, the king called together the leading scholars in the Hall of Scholars (Chiphyŏnchŏn) and ordered them to study the phonetics of Chinese and other oriental languages. Finally, in the twelfth moon of the year 1443, the king succeeded in inventing a phonetic script consisting of seventeen consonants and eleven vowels. The Preface to the Hunmin chŏngŭm by the king reads: "Since our national language differs from Chinese and has no affinity with written Chinese, our people are unable to express what they wish. Having compassion upon our people in this situation, we have, therefore, devised a new writing of twenty-eight letters so that our people may readily learn it and use it in their daily affairs." The motive of the invention was therefore the king's great love of the common people and his wish to provide them with a means of expressing their speech and thoughts in writing. Indeed, Koreans were in great need of letters with which to write their own language.

Study was, however, continued for a further three years before the new alphabet was published as we have it today. King Sejong not only had his officials learn the new alphabet in order to test its practicability, but ordered Ch'oe Hang (1409-1474) and others in the Hall of Scholars to translate the Ku-ch'in yün-hui into Korean, using the new letters. Also, he ordered Kwon Che (1387-1445) and others to compose the Yongbi och'on ka ("Hymns to Flying Dragons in Heaven"), the first literary work in the new alphabet. This great eulogy-cycle, consisting of 125 cantos, was completed and presented to the 1King Sejong was born May 7, 1397; he ascended the throne September 7, 1418, and died March 30, 1450.

2"Hall of Scholars" or "Hall of Academicians," the Chipyŏnchŏn existed, under different names, in the three kingdoms and Koryŏ. In 1420 King Sejong made it the center of learning and compilation. It was abolished in 1456 by tyrant Sejo. The members of the Hall prepared the royal lectures, compiled the "verbatim records," drafted royal decrees, and made research into the ancient institutions of China and Korea. See Ch'ŏngbi muhak pigo, CCXXI, la ff, 26a-b; esp. 3a; Koryŏ (Tongbanghak yŏng'gu ed., 1935), LXXVI, 27b-30a; Sejong sillok, VII, 30a.

3The Sejong sillok, which is the only source for this information, reads: "During this moon (i.e., the twelfth moon) the king invented the Korean alphabet consisting of twenty-eight letters" (Cheosa wangbi sillok ed., CI, 42a). The twelfth moon of 1443 corresponds in the Western calendar to the period between December 21, 1443 and January 19, 1444.

§ 27 §
Korean Literature

throne on May 11, 1445. After nearly three years of testing of the practicability of the Hunmin ch'ong`um did the king allow its publication, in the autumn of 1446.4

There are altogether six versions of the Hunmin ch'ong`um. An authentic copy of the original edition was discovered in 1940 in North Kyongsang province. This copy was owned by the late Ch`on Hy`ong-p`il. The Ch`on text consists of thirty-three sheets arranged as follows:

1. Preface, by King Sejong..........................(la)
2. The Yeui, by King Sejong
   1) Values of sounds .................................(la-3b)
   2) Usage of the letters ............................(3b-4a)
3. The Haerye ("Explanatory Notes and Examples of Usage"), by Ch`ong In-ji, Ch'oe Hang and others ............(5a-30b)
   1) Formation of the letters ........................(5a-18b)
   2) Initial sounds ..................................(18b-19b)
   3) Medial sounds ..................................(19b-21b)
   4) Final sounds ................................... (21b-24b)
   5) Compound letters ................................(24b-28b)
   6) Examples of usage .................................(28b-30b)
4. Postface, by Ch`ong In-ji ..........................(30b-33b)

The Haerye states that the letters are shaped according to the forms of the organs of speech. While the seventeen consonants are designed to represent the shapes and movements of the organs of speech, the eleven vowels are said to represent Heaven, Earth, and Man, and their combinations and relationships. Among the twenty-eight letters, four letters disappeared in the course of time: Λ (bilabial fricative) became obsolete between 1420 and 1450; Ω (alveolar fricative) began to be obsolete by the middle of the sixteenth century; Ω (glottal) disappeared in the time of King Sejong; Ω (nasal velar) merged with the consonant 0 and disappeared in the seventeenth century.

The han'g`ul ("The Korean Alphabet") is "intricate and simple, mystical and effective" and "perhaps the most scientific system of writing in general use in any country," say Reischauer and Fairbank.5 This system of writing is so scientific and easy to learn that it has remained virtually unchanged for five centuries. It has been proven to be the most adequate system of transcribing the Korean language. Ch`ong In-ji (1397-1478) was right when he said in his Postface (32a) that "the han'g`ul is able to make a clear distinction between surd and sonant and to record music and song. It is good for any practical use and can even describe exactly the sound of the wind, the whoop of cranes, the crowing of cocks, and the barking of dogs." It is for this reason that Der Grosse Herder (V, 685) calls the han'g`ul "the easiest script in the world and the only alphabet in the Far East."

4Sejong sillok, CXIII, 36b-37b.
Bibliography: the Hunmin chǒngum

Hong Ki-rim, Ch’ongum paltal sa (“History of the Korean Alphabet”) (2 vols.; 1946).
Kim Min-su, Ch’ubae Hunmin Ch’ongum (“Annotated Hunmin ch’ongum”) (1957).
Pang Ch’ung-hyon, Hunmin ch’ongum sŏngsa (“History of the Hunmin ch’ongum”) (1948).
Yi Sang-bae, Han’gul t’ŏ klŏn (“The Origin of the Korean Alphabet”) (1957).
Yi Sung-nyo, “Sejong ŏi ŏn chongch’ae k e kwanhan yŏn’gu: t’ŏkki unsŏ p’yŏnch’an kwa Hunmin ch’ongum chejong kwaiŭi kwan’gye rŭl chungsim tŏo hayŏ” (“King Sejong’s Policy on the Korean Language, Especially with Regard to the Relations between the Compilation of Rhyming Dictionaries and the Hunmin ch’ongum”), KY, 1/2 (1958), 29-81.
IV. Early Yi Dynasty Eulogies: the Akchang

According to the Confucian canon, rites and music are the two indispensable means by which a virtuous ruler administers his state. Rites teach the people the patterned sense of community, order, and coherence in the hierarchies of society; music cultivates moral virtue in, and regulates the feelings of, the people. Rulers of Korean kingdoms, as in China, laid a due emphasis on both rites and music, mainly for their didactic function. It is no wonder, then, that the Yi dynasty, which rejected Buddhism and Taoism as subversive of public morality and adopted Confucianism as its official political philosophy, should re-examine the ritual and official music of the previous kingdom.

We have already discussed the activities of the first rulers of the Yi in their attempt to regulate and codify the existing songs and music according to Confucian principles. The popular Koryŏ songs which began to be used as court music from the time of King Ch'ungnyŏl—chiefly to entertain the court and foreign envoys on official occasions—became the objects of this literary inquisition. The new dynasty also directed the composition of court music clearly patterned after the Chinese models. The texts of the new court music written for use in the ancestral temple and official ceremonies were called akchang. The aims of composing such akchang were twofold: to justify the revolution and to emphasize the legitimacy of the new dynasty; and to praise the virtues and merits of its founder. As might be expected, the authors were all meritorious subjects who assisted in the revolution and who framed and executed the policy of the new government. Their eulogies remained a literature of the privileged class, and the forms they used for their composition disappeared soon after the end of the fifteenth century.

The first compositions of this kind, the Mongginch-Ok ("Dream of the Golden Ruler") and Suborok ("Upon Receiving the Auspicious Diagram"), were presented to the throne by Ch'ŏng To-jŏn (d. 1398) in 1393. The former is in irregular meters, in the Ch'u tz'u style; the latter consists of fourteen four-word lines. Ch'ŏng further wrote four poems to praise the cultural accomplishments of King T'aejo and three to hymn his military genius. Among the military poems, the Napssi ka ("Song of Nayaçu," 1393) has as its theme the repulse of Nayaçu (1362) and the Ch'ong tongbang kok ("Pacification of the

§31 §
The texts of both hymns are recorded in the T'aejo sillok ("T'aejo Annals," 1413).

Kwŏn Kŭn (1352-1409), Pyŏn Kye-ryang (1369-1430), Ha Yun, and Yun Hoe (1380-1436) exerted their energy to celebrate the deeds and lofty virtues of the founder, to praise the new institutions, and to sing of the peace and prosperity they were enjoying.

The first in a series of poems which describe the beauty of Seoul, the new capital, is the Sindo ka ("Song of the New Capital," 1394), by Chŏng To-jŏn. In 1398 Chŏng wrote another hymn, the Sindo p'alg'yŏng si ("Eight Scenes of the New Capital"), in four stanzas of six-word verse. Kwŏn Kŭn and Ha Yun joined in the praise of Seoul, but a better poem in this vein is the Hwasan pyŏlgok ("Song of Mount Hwa," 1425), by Pyŏn Kye-ryang, which praises the capital and the king's benevolent government in eight stanzas.

Early Yi dynasty eulogies are written in three forms: in the traditional Chinese verse forms; in the Chinese verse forms and Korean connectives; and in the kyŏnggi-style form (see chap. ii). The poems belonging to the first class adopted the forms used in the dynastic hymns in the Book of Songs. The Napssi ka, Ponghwang ūm ("Hymn to the Phoenix," c. 1401-1446), and Pukchŏn ("North Hall," revised in 1490) are examples of the second type. The Hwasan pyŏlgok, Oryun ka ("Song of the Five Relationships," 1419), Yun hyŏngje kok ("Brothers at the Feast," 1432), and Saengdae pyŏlgok ("Song of the Censorate," 1419) are written in the kyŏnggi-style form. A variant of the kyŏnggi-style form is used in such poems as the Chŏng tongbang kok, Sindo ka, Yurim ka ("Song of Confucian Scholars," 1419), Sŏngdok ka ("Song of August Virtue," 1420), Ch'ŭksŏngsu ("Long Live the King," 1420), and Kam kunun ("Song of Royal Favor," c. 1450).

The compilation of the Yongbi och'ŏn ka (see chap. iii) was the culmination of literary activities in the early Yi Dynasty. This anthology, consisting of 125 cantos, was compiled and edited by the leading philologists in the Hall of Scholars and presented to the throne in 1445. The objectives of the compilation were fourfold: (1) to recount the difficulty of the vast royal works of the founders and their ancestors as well as the circumstances of the founding of the dynasty; (2) to remind future monarchs of the difficulty of royal works and thereby to admonish them to preserve and continue the dynasty; (3) to inform the people that General Yi Sŏng-gye founded the new kingdom because he had the mandate of Heaven and therefore did not usurp the throne; and (4) to institute the use of the compilation as court music in the ancestral temple and on official occasions and thereby to transmit it for myriads of years. There were a number of serious preparations at court and elsewhere for the compilation. On April 11, 1442, King Sejong ordered the governors of Kyŏngsang and Chŏlla provinces to gather from local elders facts and anecdotes concerning the exploits of T'aejo during his campaign against the Japanese pirates at Unbong.
Further, on April 12, he ordered An Chi (d. 1464) and Nam Su-mun (1408-1442) to collect the tales of T'aejo's heroism which were not recorded in the official annals and to confirm the authenticity of those tales by checking with the surviving friends and followers of T'aejo. By this means both deeds preserved in the annals and popular traditions circulating among the people were assembled as materials for the compilation of this great eulogy-cycle. The Yongbi och'on ka is, therefore, a repository of fluid heroic tales and anecdotes connected with T'aejo and T'aejong, along with those concerning four royal ancestors of the founder. It also throws brilliant light, otherwise unavailable, on the Korean-Jurchen relationship of the same period (cantos 4, 53, 57, and 75).

The greatest importance of the Yongbi och'on ka lies in its philological aspect. The poems in this cycle are the first experimental use in verse of the new alphabet invented in 1443. The new phonetic letters were thus tested and revised before they were finally promulgated in 1446. It is therefore in the Korean verses of the Yongbi och'on ka that we can glimpse the Urform of the new alphabet. The texts still preserve such characteristics of the Late Middle Korean as the occurrence of letters that became obsolete before the eighteenth century, the use of initial consonantal clusters, the strong sense of vowel harmony, and the indication of tonemes. As the first document using the new alphabet, the Yongbi och'on ka furnishes us with the vocabulary and syntax of the Korean language in the fifteenth century and stands as one of the most important documents dating from the Middle Korean period.

The first canto, which is an introduction, clearly sets forth the theme of the book: praise of the four ancestors and the first and third kings of the Yi dynasty. The six dragons flying high in the land of the Eastern Sea are Mokcho, Tojo, Hwanjo, T'aejo (1335-1392-1398), and T'aejong. The central part of the book covers cantos 3-124, subdivided into two sections. The first section, cantos 3-109, praises the cultural and military accomplishments of the six kings; the second section, cantos 110-124, consists of admonitions to future monarchs. Canto 125 is a conclusion. Each canto, except cantos 1, 2, and 125, consists of two poems, the first relating generally the great deeds of Chinese sovereigns and the second those of the Yi kings. Both poems in cantos 110-124 deal with the Yi kings. In cantos 86-89, which are exceptions to the general scheme, both poems in each canto celebrate the deeds of Yi T'aejo. Cantos 108 and 109, the only cantos assigned to women, praise the heroic deeds of the consort of King Wen: Queen Shinye of Wang K'on (877-918-943), the founder of Koryo; and Queen Won'gyong (1365-1420), the consort of Yi T'aejong. The compilers assigned five cantos to Mokcho, eight cantos to Ikcho, four cantos to Tojo, six cantos to Hwanjo, eighty-one cantos to T'aejo, and twenty-three cantos to T'aejong.

We cannot compare the Yongbi och'on ka with the Western epic; the motives of the compilers are too transparent. On the other hand, in literary art, in beauty and simplicity of language, in balanced and coherent structure, the anthology certainly occupies the highest position in the history of Yi dynasty poetry. There are moments of great dramatic intensity, and the poems are not without pathos and lyrical beauty (e.g., cantos 109 and 125). The Yongbi och'ón ka mirrors the ideas not only of the new government, but also of the entire people. The compilers, as they state in the Preface, selected words and expressions from the popular language which were neither vulgar nor inadequate. Ideas of loyalty and nobility, of kingly virtue, of the foundation of a dynasty as the fruit of vast and difficult royal work, of "joy after sorrow" — all this is the kernel of the thinking of that time and culture. As the compilers state again, these poems "will be ineffaceable from the memory of man."

The first poem in canto 83 deals with the founder of Koryo.

The Wörin ch'ón'gang chigok ("Songs of the Moon’s Reflection on a Thousand Rivers"), composed by King Sejong, is another invaluable classic written in the new alphabet. Upon the death of Queen Soh On in 1446, the king ordered his second son, Prince Suyang (later Sejo), to compile a life of Buddha. The prince gathered the existing materials on the subject and compiled the Sokpo sangjol, with emphasis on the eight aspects of the Buddha’s life. The Preface is dated September 4, 1447; the book was published sometime later in the same year. The Sokpo sangjol is believed to have consisted of more than 200 sections, published in twenty-four volumes. Today only volumes 6, 9, 11, 13, and 19 are extant. After reading the melodic and simple prose of the Sokpo sangjol, the king was moved and composed the poems praising the life of Sakyamuni that are known under the title of Wörin ch'ón'gang chigok. These were completed probably in 1448 and were published about 1449. The number extant is 328 poems out of a total of 585, a figure established by recent scholarship. Later King Sejo (1417-1456-1468) published the Sokpo sangjol and Wörin ch'ón'gang chigok together under the title of Wörin sokpo in 1459. The Wörin sokpo originally consisted of more than twenty volumes, but today only volumes 1, 2, 7, 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 17, 18, 21, and 23 are extant.

The form of the Wörin ch'ón'gang chigok is similar to that of the Yongbi och'ón ka. Each canto consists generally of two poems, and the number of syllables in a poem fluctuates commonly between twenty-one and twenty-four. In style as well as in matter the Wörin ch'ón'gang chigok stands closer to the cult of devotional verse in Korea. The motive of this royal composition was both literary and devotional: the king’s unending desire to experiment and disseminate the new alphabet, and his strong religious fervor to spread the wonderful law of Buddha among the people. The language is sublime and elegant, commensurate with the theme, and brocaded with rich imagery. It is more smooth and natural than that of the Yongbi och'ón ka and is free from artificial parallelism and empty rhetoric. The section describing the birth of Siddhārtha, 3The queen died April 19, 1446.

---

The Akchang

in particular, has Longinian sublimity in tone and expression. It is indeed unusual for any sovereign to pour out his religious fervor and literary talent in such a voluminous and great work of art. It is no wonder, then, that literary historians should rank Sejong as the greatest poet-king of Korea.

Bibliography: the Akchang

A. Yongbi och'on ka

Hô Ung, ed., Yongbi och'on ka (1956).

Yi Sang-ch'ŭn, Chuhae Yongbi och'on ka (1946).

B. Wŏrin ch'ŏngang chigok and Sokpo sangjol

Wŏrin sokpo, Vols. 7, 8, 17, 18 (1957).

Ch'ŏng-hyon, "Yongbi och'on ka" (n.d.).

Chuhae Sokpo sangjol ("Annotated Sokpo sangjol") (1959).

Kang Sin-hang, "Yongbi ch'ŏngang chigok wa kwan'gye pulgyong ui koch'al" ("A Study of the Wŏrin sokpo and Related Buddhist Scriptures"), PPN, pp. 731-748.
V. The Sijo

The form of short lyric poem known as “sijo” existed at least 400 years before the name of its genre was invented by Yi Se-ch’un in the middle of the eighteenth century. Yi Se-ch’un, one of the most inventive musicians and singers of the day, composed a new tune that was known as a sijol kajo (“popular musical tune”) and was a departure from the existing kagok tunes. The term sijo is a later abridgement of sijol kajo. Before being used to designate a definite poetic genre, it first came into being as a term for a new musical tune. The poetic form known today as sijo was formerly called by various names, tan’ga (“short lyric poem”), sijo or sinbon, changdan’ga, and sinjo. Soon the existing song words for the kagok tunes came to be sung to the new tune Yi had composed, and new poems were subsequently written directly for the sijo tune.

The origin of this form of short lyric verse, sijo, is still disputed among scholars. One theory attempts to find it in the Saenuenmorae forms in Silla; another tries to find its origin in the Buddhistic poems imported from the Ming dynasty; a third conjectures that this was a form of poetry discovered in the process of translating Chinese poetry into Korean; a fourth says that it may be a modification of short-poem forms of the Koryo dynasty; a fifth traces its origin to the hymns chanted by shaman priests and priestesses. The sijo form is differentiated by its inner form—its attitude, emotional tone, and view of life—and by its audience.

Generally speaking, the sijo is a short, polished poem—more personal, specific, and local than the proverb—ending with a graceful, profound, and witty turn of thought. Yet the soul of the sijo is not wit, but sensibility. In Korea, the sijo was an art for the many, and every educated man and woman used this form for almost any purpose. Every topic, every mood, every style was possible. It was, as a Renaissance critic classified the epigram, “sweet, sour, bitter, and salt.” A writer was not only familiar with its tradition and with its concentrated art, but was so deeply versed in it that he did not have to struggle to conform to its strict rules. In consequence, many sijo were composed extempore, ordinarily to be sung to a lute accompaniment. But the marvel is that they still show the marks of tradition and discipline, of grace and harmony. Thus the sijo, to the writers of the Yi dynasty, was an art in... which words and music formed a single unit. A great body of the sijo was gathered in anthologies during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. The norm consists of a stanza of three lines with fourteen to sixteen syllables in a line; the total number of syllables never more than forty-five. Internally this triplet is again divided into three sections: beginning, middle, and end. Each line has generally four syllable groups, but internally it can be divided into two groups of several syllables. A pause, equivalent to a caesura, comes after the second group of syllables in each line. In other words, it is a poem consisting of a three-line stanza, four feet (better described as a “breath group”) in a line, and three to four syllables in a foot. Thus the basic form is as follows:

- First line: 3 4 4 4/3
- Second line: 3 4 4 4/3
- Third line: 3 5 4 3

We note here the following characteristics:
1) In the first and second lines, each group can have three or four syllables, sometimes fluctuating between two and six syllables.
2) The first group in the third line has invariably three syllables.
3) The second group in the third line should never have fewer than five syllables.

We have seen, therefore, that the first, second, third, fourth and sixth groups have more freedom as to the number of syllables they can carry, but the fifth group is the key to the technique of the sijo and must have three and five syllables.

The form just described is known as p'yŏng sijo (“standard” or “common” sijo). The first variation of the standard form, chunghyŏng or ot sijo, has one or more syllables in one of the five groups except the fifth group. In the second variation, known as chunghyŏng or sasŏl sijo, two of the five groups (except the fifth group) can be expanded, sometimes to several dozen syllables. The sasŏl sijo occupies an important place in the history not only of Korean poetry but also of Korean Geistesgeschichte. The birth of this form coincides with the time when the so-called “practical learning” was substituted for the stagnant Neo-Confucianist ideology and when the novel started to be written. This form scorned the traditional exclamation or scenery sketch and took as its favorite theme the diverse aspects of daily life of the common people. It also drew much of its vocabulary from the common speech; its tone became more and more realistic, and its expression bold and direct.

We can see that the sijo in its form has several characteristics in common with other forms of Korean poetry and that in sijo, as in other forms, it is the number of groups of syllables that determines the basis of its concentrated art. As several scholars suggest, we may conjecture that the norm of the sijo was already present in religious or shamanistic hymns or in folk songs, that it survived throughout the ages, and that the form in due time became detached from religious hymns or folk songs and gradually crystallized into its present state. In consequence, the evolution of this genre was a slow one. Its origin may lie in ancient times, but it only came to be considered as an independent genre sometime during the Koryo dynasty. We cannot, however, assume that this occurred in the beginning or middle of the Koryo dynasty. If so, there must have been a considerable body of works in this form. Unfortunately until 1446 the Koreans did not have their own system of writing, and the sijo that might have existed in Koryo times were not handed down to us. The ones which are known to us today had all been translated into Chinese before 1446 and were later retranslated into the new alphabet, or had been orally transmitted until the invention of the new letters in which eventually they were recorded. Thus, during the Koryo dynasty, historical sources record some ten sijo by as many different poets, and these were necessarily all from near the end of the dynasty. At the same time, historical records attribute several sijo to the Paekche dynasty and the early Koryo, but the uncertainty of this chronology makes impossible a serious consideration of them. They are suspect for the literary historian, but we are safe in considering the earliest examples attributed to U T'ak (1262-1342) to be the starting point.
The Sijo

The sijo written toward the end of Koryo and the beginning of Choson were often occasional pieces. They were either retrospective or panegyric: retrospective ones written by the surviving retainers of Koryo (Kil Chae [1353-1419] and Wón Ch'ón-sŏk [fl. 1370-1395]) and panegyric ones by meritorious subjects of the new kingdom (Pyón Kye-ryang) upon the vastness of the royal works. Many political changes also inspired writers to lament disorder in the country (Sŏng Sam-mun, 1418-1456), and to display both their command of pathos and their versatility of style. On one occasion, a general sang of the victory of his army over the Jurchens (Kim Chong-so, 1405-1453). Among the soldier-poets Yi Sun-sin (1545-1598), a famous admiral whose victories turned the tide of war during the Japanese invasion (1592-1598), left several sijo of high literary merit. On other occasions kings and subjects sang of constancy and loyalty (King Sŏngjong and Yu Ho-in [1445-1494], King Chungjong and Kim Ku [1488-1534], and King Mŏngjong and Song Sun [1493-1582]). The same period produced many social and political satires which were neither blunt nor unpolished, and were sufficiently brilliant and refined to be read as poetry.

In the sixteenth century, from the time of King Chungsong, scholar-poets came to be active on the literary scene. The first of these poets was Yi Hyŏn-ho (1467-1555), who rewrote a current sijo cycle of twelve poems into a cycle of nine poems (1548). The two most famous Neo-Confucianists, Yi Hwang (1502-1571) and Yi I (1536-1584), wrote similar sijo cycles in which they showed a keen appreciation of the beauties of nature. What they desired was to live in a hermitage among the mountains far from the din and bustle of the world. There were, however, two kinds of scholar-poets: those who had tried the official world and tasted bitter disappointment, and those aging government officials who intended to spend their later days in retirement. Their motives might be different, but they were one in their search for a quiet life among the settings of nature. When they met by the fountain or near the lake, they either devoted themselves to reading, or made friends with the morning flower or evening moon among the streams and stone. Thus their works were either learned and didactic, inculcating the teachings of ancient sages (e.g., Yi Hwang), or sentimental and escapist, singing of the hills and waters (e.g., Yi I). The influence of the scholar-poets on the academic world was not slight. Encouraged by their nature poetry and by their use of the sijo form instead of conventional Chinese verse-forms, students of Neo-Confucianism began to take a serious interest in this art.

The essence of the glorious tradition of the sijo was preserved and continued by Hwang Chin-i (fl. 1506-1544), the greatest Korean poetess of all periods. She was a famous kisaeng at Songdo (modern Kaesong), and her fame in poetry and music was widespread in the capital. She was a master technician and knew how to develop the chosen image on a dramatic plane. Her images were always simple and sensuous, generally drawn from nature, but they were always chosen for analogy and double vision. Not only is natural imagery used as a metaphor of the speaker’s emotion; nature herself is personified and allegorized to produce many levels of meaning. From this kind of symbolism comes a unique intensity.

Blue mountains speak of my desire,
Green waters reflect my Lover’s love:
The mountains unchanging,
The waters flowing by.
Sometimes it seems the waters cannot forget me,
They part in tears, regretting, running away.

Here allegory is tinged with metaphysical and even religious overtones. Hwang Chin-i’s perception and intuition of the great theme of mutability and the relationship between transcendence and immanence is rendered into sensuous visual images. Here she approximates, mutatis mutandis, the technique of the English Metaphysical poets. Her poetry is characterized by a wealth of symbolism, a metrical orchestration, a harmonious order of words, and finally a mastery and flawless development of theme.

Ch'ong Ch'ol (1536-1593) stands out from among a host of writers in the sixteenth century. He is more famous for his discursive poems than for his sijo; but he was not an ignoble writer in the sijo form. Among the seventy-nine poems contained in the Songgang kasa (“Pine River Anthology”), five poems (nos. 44, 45, 64, 70, and 77) are wrongly attributed to him. Unlike his kasa poems (see chap. vi) Ch'ong’s sijo drew much of their vocabulary from common words and phrases, digging deeply into native stores rather than taking inspira-
The Sijo poems are simple in syntax and vocabulary, but he was subtle in weaving words together and relied for effect on a cunning juxtaposition which "gave back a familiar word as new." He was skilled in the treatment of obvious themes, and in general, his poems are free from dense figures of speech or obscure allusions. The first sixteen poems (1580) in the Songgung kasa are finger-exercises showing his discipleship to the cult of moral verse of the Yi period. His favorite theme is his bitter resentment of court intrigue and the royal folly of which he was a victim. Following the tradition of the Ch' u tz'u poems, the poet, despite the maltreatment he had suffered from the sovereign, still longs and searches for his "lord" (nos. 18, 19, 20, 23, 28, 29, 30, 32, 34, 60, 71, 74, and 78). Poem 42 is a vigorous poem containing a stern warning to the king not to succumb to slander. The poems in another group are allegorical or symbolic, and the south pole star (no. 33) and the crane (nos. 35 and 37) are compared to the speaker's state of mind.

33. Upon the familiar Sorigyong Arbor,
   The south pole star shines; even when Mulberry gardens have changed into a sea
   And everything has trembled and overturned—
   The star shines the brighter;
   Ah, it ignores the dark world.

35. O white crane that soars high
   Beyond the clouds in the blue sky.
   For whose sake do you alight?
   Do you long for the human world?
   The wing, noble bird, fly away,
   Until your long wings shed feathers.

37. You wheel around, noble bird,
   Until you shed your white feathers.
   And soaring high in the blue vault,
   You speak in solemn syllables:
   "I shall soar and soar again Until I have glimpsed the cosmos."

The poet is like the south pole star or the crane up in the sky that scorns the dusty world below. In poem 48 the movement of sycophants and corrupt courtiers is compared with carpenters running about with "ink-cup and measure." In a third group are strongly autobiographical poems that

---

Horace, Ars Poetica, 46-48: "In veris etiam tenue cautusque serendis,/ Dixeris egregie notum si callida verbum/ Reddiderit iunctura novum."

Often translated as the "Elegies of Ch'u," the Ch' u tz'u is an anthology of poems attributed to Ch'i Yuan, a statesman of Ch'u under King Hau (r. 328-299 B.C.), along with a number of works by his disciples or later imitators. See Burton Watson, Early Chinese Literature (New York, 1962), pp. 231-254. For a complete translation of this anthology see David Hawkes, Ch' u Tzu: The Songs of the South (Oxford, 1959). deal with wine, the Black Lute, and the hermit life. The poet’s love of wine is well revealed in many poems (nos. 21, 22, 24, 25, 26, 50, 54, 56, and 58) in which he holds an imaginary dialogue with wine in the form of question and answer. Poems 36 and 65 deal with Ch’ong’s profound understanding of the techniques of the Black Lute.

36. The third string on the Black Lute
Softens and soothes my spirit.
I pluck the gallant note,
Play a pizzicato with vigor.
Don’t feel sad, sombre string,
I shall return and pluck you shortly.

65. I pluck the second note on the third string
Of the Lute of the Black Crane.
The sound surges like a stream broken forth from the ice,
Rushing toward the sea.
Distant raindrops too play in concert;
They beat lightly on the lotus leaves.

He was not a love poet primarily, but poems 57, 66, 67, 75, and 79 demonstrate his skill in conventional love songs.

The perfection of the sijo form was attained in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Scholar-poets again played an important role in bringing this form of verse close to the public. When scholars raised their goblets, they were either “romantic” or philosophical. In the bamboo groves they lay, perceiving the final harmony of the world and the mystery of all created things. Their topics were often traditional, and they repeated familiar themes and moods: angling under the moon, “plowing with the clouds,” sensuous contemplation of nature, praise of wine, ecstasy of love, sorrow of parting, complaint of desertion, beauty of friendship, fear of death, simplicity of country life, evanescence of life, and the like. At times they also took inspiration from foreign writers, such as Tao Ch’ien (365-427), Li Po (701-762), Tu Fu (713-770), and the Sung dynasty poets. Themes may have been conventional, but their treatment and technique vary with each poet.

The seventeenth century produced a number of first-class poets. Among them were Pak In-no (1561-1643), Cho Chon-sŏng (1554-1629), Yi Hang-bok (1556-1618), Kim Sang-yông (1561-1637), Kim Sang-hŏn (1570-1652), and Yi Myŏng-han (1595-1645); but the master during this century was without doubt Yun Son-do (1587-1671), who was one of the most versatile and inventive of all sijo writers. His lyrics are diverse in mood and method, and his mature poems abound in exquisite felicities. His vocabulary is simple yet forceful, common yet noble, and his masterly choice of the right word is 3Komungo (“Black Lute”) or Hyŏnhak kim (“Lute of the Black Crane”) is a six-stringed instrument, said to have been imported from China through Koguryŏ.

unparalleled. Graceful yet delicately varied rhythm was native with him, and every poem demonstrates new techniques and new tone. His poems number seventy-five altogether. Yun has been credited as a discoverer of the beauty of the Korean language. The hidden potentialities of the genre were thoroughly exploited by him, and certainly he brought not only progress, but perfection to the sijo art.

A group of six poems entitled Kyŏnhoe yo (“Expelling Gloom,” 1618) was written by Yun in Kyŏngwŏn, during his first banishment. They are the earliest poems that we know of the poet, and have a tendency toward abstraction and the pathetic fallacy. Here the young poet expresses his pure longing for the king and for his parents, and declares that his sins were nothing but expressions of his loyalty and love. In “After the Rain” Yun echoes a famous Chinese poem, traditionally attributed to Ch’ū Yüan, in which a fisherman admonishes Ch’ū Yüan with the words: “When the Ts’ang-lang’s waters are clear, I can wash my hat-strings in them: when the Ts’ang-lang’s waters are muddy, I can wash my feet in them.” Eighteen poems grouped under the heading “New Songs in the Mountain” (1642-1645) were written at the Grotto of Golden Chains. This group contains the immortal “Songs of Five Friends”, addressed to water, stone, pine, bamboo, and the moon. Let me quote all six poems in the group, for they mark the highest achievement in the Korean language.

How many friends have I? Count them:
Water and stone, pine and bamboo –
The rising moon on the east mountain,
Welcome, it too is my friend.
What need is there, I say,
To have more friends than five?
They say clouds are fine; I mean the color.
But, alas, they often darken.
They say winds are clear; I mean the sound.
But, alas, they often cease to blow.
It is only the water, then,
That is perpetual and good.
Why do flowers fade so soon
Once they are in their glory?
Why do grasses yellow so soon
Once they have grown tall?
Perhaps it is the stone, then,
That is constant and good.
Flowers bloom when it is warm;
Leaves fall when days are cool.
But, O pine, how is it
That you scorn frost, ignore snow?
Yun's "New Songs in the Mountain Continued" (eight poems altogether) contain "At the Beginning of the Feast" and "At the End of the Feast" (1645), consisting of two poems each. These were written with a clear didactic intent in mind and are admonitions to the king, but it is uncertain whether they are impromptu poems composed at an actual feast or simple admonitions. In the first poem, "a house" alludes to the ideal state, and "the straight tree" to benevolent government. "The work of the artisan" in the second line implies that the king should follow the way of the ancient sage-kings. In the second poem "wine" and "broth" allude to the virtues of the king, and "yeast" and "herbs" to the wise ministers who assist in state affairs. Another of the poems sings of moderation in pleasure. Perhaps the poet had in mind the 114th poem in the Book of Songs, in the first stanza of which the monitor says: "Do not be so riotous / As to forget your home. / Amuse yourselves, but no wildness! / Good men are always on their guard."4

Yun's Ŭbu sasi sa ("The Angler's Calendar," 1651), a sijo cycle consisting of forty poems, is his masterpiece. The poems cover the four seasons of the year and are products of his leisurely life at his favorite retreat, the Fairy Grotto; but they are, at the same time, a criticism of life and of his time. Here the peaceful pastoral life is strongly contrasted with the hypocrisies and injustices of court life. Structurally, the poems differ from the common sijo form, and the general pattern is as follows:

First line:  3 4 3 4
Refrain:  4 4
Second line:  3 4 3 4
Refrain:  3 3 3
Third line:  3 4 3 4

Therefore a pair of four syllables is added after the first line, and a refrain of three three-syllable onomatopoetic words after the second line, thus making the total number of syllables fifty-nine. The fortieth poem in this series has an unusual form in which the total number of syllables is seventy-two. The following are the first ten poems on spring from this famous cycle.

The fog lifts in the stream before me
And the sun lances the back hills.
The night tide neaps, and now
The high water rushes upon the shore.
Heave away, ho, scull the boat,
Distant hills and waters swell my heart.
Welcoming day is fresh and fervent,
Fishes leisurely float in the blue.
Weigh anchor, friends, heave it up,
Gulls appear, wing upon wing.
Heave away, ho, I have a rod;
Have you loaded a flagon of wine?
A puff of east wind ruffles
The surface of the stream into ripples.
Hoist sail, friends, spread the sail,
Let's go to West Lake by the East.
Heave away, ho, scull the boat,
Hills pass by, and more hills greet us.
Is it a cuckoo that cries?
Is it the willow that is blue?
Several roofs in a far fishing village
Swim in the dusk, magnificent.
Boy, fetch an old net!
Fishes are climbing against the stream.
The sun's lanceheads are shining,
Water is calm, calm as oil.
Should we cast a net at all, friends,
Should we drop a line on such a day?
The poem of Ch'ii Yüan stirs my fancy;
I have forgotten all about fishing.
Let's return to our grass sill,
Twilight trails in the pious west.
Lower sail and scan the riverbank,
Willows and flowers are supple and sweet,
Who would envy three dukes?
Who would now think of caps and gowns?
Let us tread on fragrant grasses
And pick orchids and irises.
Stopping the boat small as a leaf,
I ask what I have taken aboard.
Nothing except myself when I set sail,
When I row back, the moon is my tenant.
Drunk I will lie asleep,
And leave the boat only before the shoal.
Moor the boat, friends, Arcadia is near,
Crimson petals leap on the stream.
O sweet joy of the angler’s life—
Can the dusty world last long?
Let’s stop angling and salute
The moon framed in raspberry canes.
Drop anchor, friends, night settles,
The cuckoo too sings a sweet song.
The heart shouts its peak of joy,
I have lost my way in the dark.
Tomorrow, tomorrow, we have tomorrow,
A spring night will soon see the day.
Boat ashore and rod for a cane,
Let’s find our brushwood door.
Spring stirs the joy in my veins.
O how many sweet days, sheer content!

A last group of three poems, entitled Mongch’ŏn yo (“The Disappointing Journey,” 1652), was written when Yun entered the capital after seventeen years of absence and, owing to courtly intrigue, had to retire to his retreat after a month’s stay. Here the “Jade Emperor” is King Hyojong (1619-1659), and a “host of fairies” are Yun’s opponents. In the last poem, he laments the absence of wise ministers who could repair the “pavilion of white jade” — that is, who could save the state from the evils of the times.

From the eighteenth century on, the sijo entered a new phase of development. This era corresponds to the period of the rise of the novel and of a middle class. In poetry it meant the retreat of the aristocracy who had dominated the literary scene for centuries, and the appearance of writers from the middle and lower classes. These new writers composed the sijo extemporé, improvising freely to the existing tunes. Their language is simple and direct, and does not refrain from using rustic and unrefined vocabulary. Their tone is often hedonistic and their works are rich in realism and humor. Chu Ui-sik (1675-1720), Yi Ch’ŏng-bo (1692-1766), Kim Yu-gi (fl. 1675-1700), Kim Ch’ŏn-t’aek (c. 1725-1766), Kim Su-jang (b. 1690), and Kim U-gyu (c. 1740) are some of the important poets of this period. The famous anthologists Kim Ch’ŏn-t’aek and Kim Su-jang merit special mention not only as sijo poets, but as important musicians of the day. They stressed the musical quality of the sijo, composed both words and tunes, and sang their works to musical accompaniment before large audiences. Two poets who emerged toward the end of the nineteenth century, Pak Hyo-gwan (fl. 1850) and An Min-yong (c. 1870), have a singular place in the history of the sijo. They gave, so to speak, the final touch to this form of verse before the fall of the Yi dynasty.

The sijo is still the favorite classical form of verse, and the twentieth century has produced many first-class poets in this genre. They have written individual sijo and sijo cycles as well as the sasol sijo. It is interesting to note that the better poets have excelled in sijo cycles. The classical form is kept in every respect except the number of lines. The traditional sijo is, as we have seen, a poem of three lines consisting of six syllable groups (or twelve when subdivided). Modern poets, influenced by Western versification, have often extended the number of lines to five or as many as ten lines; the number of syllables is still forty-five, as in the traditional sijo. The first modern sijo cycle of importance was produced in 1926 by the late Ch'oe Nam-sŏn (1890-1957). In or about 1925, Yi Kwang-su (b. 1892) also wrote many cycles. Both in output and quality, Ch'ong la-bo (b. 1892), Yi Pyŏng-gi (b. 1892), Yi Un-sang (b. 1903), and Kim Sang-ok (b. 1915) should be mentioned. But the sijo is no more sung to musical accompaniment; it is generally meant to be read.

Bibliography: the Sijo

Chosŏn sīgu i sŏng'gu (1948), pp. 131-200.
Ch'oe Nam-sŏn, Sijo yuch'w'i ("Anthology of Sijo") (1929).
Ch'ong Ch'ol, Songgang kasa, ed. Pak Sŏng-ŭi (1956).
Ch'ong Chu-dong and Yu Ch'ang-sik, Ch'ŏnggu yŏngbŏn chusŏk ("Annotated Ch'ŏnggu yŏngbŏn") (1957).
Pak Hyo-gwan and An Min-yŏng, Kayok wŏl'yu (1952).
Yi Chae-su, Yun Kosan yŏng'gu ("A Study of Yun Kosan") (1955).
Yi Ch'ang-bae, Ch'ŏnggu kayo chipsŏng ("A Collection of Korean Songs") (1959).
Yi Chu-hwan, Kogŏm sŏn ("A Selection of Sijo, Ancient and Modern") (1958).

Yu Chang-don, Ko sijo e na' Satan shinmin t'orul saenggwol inyem ("Korean Modes of Life as Revealed in Classical Sijo") (1952).

... "Maehwajum changdan ko" ("The Rhythm of Maehwajum"), YHS, pp. 583-611.

Kim Nong-song, "Ko sijo chongjang yon'gu" ("A Study of the Third Line of Sijo"), CN1, VII (1962), 133-155.

Ku Cha-gyun, "Nogye ui kasa wa sijo ui kyojo" ("The Kasa and Sijo of Pak In-no, with Annotations"), in Fiftieth Anniversary Volume of Korea University (1955), pp. 555-596.

Pak Chun-gyu, "Yijo wangson t'orui sijo munhak yon'gu" ("Sijo by Members of the Yi Royal Family"), Chonnam University Kungmunhak po, 3 (1962), 95-188.

Sim Chae-wan, "Ps'ongwa kagok chip u yon'gu" ("A Study of the P'songwa kagok chip"), in Tenth Anniversary Volume of Ch'ongwag University (1958), pp. 139-202.

... "Kumok ch'ongbu (Chuang manp'il) yon'gu" ("A Study of the Kumok ch'ongbu"), CGTN, IV (1961), 37-61.

Sok Yong-su, "Yijo yoryu sijo chakp'um non" ("On the Sijo of Women Poets during the Yi Dynasty"), KKY, 2 (1958), 173-199.

Tada Masatomo, "Ch'onggu sogsan to Kagok wollyu" ("Ch'onggu yongsin and Kagok wollyu"), Oda sensai shijuku kiro Choson ronshu (1934), pp. 545-598.

Yi Nang-ru, "Yijo siga mood ui saekch'il" ("An Inquiry into the Poetic Moods of the Sijo"), YHS, pp. 409-430.

Yi Tae-guk, "Sijo ui yonhyongch'e mit kisa hyongsik" ("The Linking Style and Stanzastic Forms of Sijo"), YHS, pp. 531-555.

Yu Ch'ang-sont, "Nongam ui siojagwan" ("The View of Poetry of Nongam [Yi Hyo'nbol"), Omunhak, 4 (1959), 60-76.
The Sijo

Translations

VI. The Kasa

The kasa can best be defined as a new form of verse originating as song words written to prevailing kasa tunes. Such tunes are numerous both in number and kind, and performance of a kasa poem to such tunes is extremely complicated. The kasa poem, sung by both men and women, is divided into five sections, with a set number of drum beats, hand clappings, and elaborate regulations governing the phrasings. The musical aspect of the kasa properly belongs to the domain of music; we are concerned here with its literary aspects, the texts of the poems written for kasa tunes. Since song words thus written had to conform closely to the existing tunes, in the process of “fitting words to a tune” a pattern of composition was established for the poet, and this pattern was soon regarded as a definite verse form. Today the kasa are chiefly known by the titles of the song words written for the tunes rather than by the names of the tunes themselves.

As a new genre of vernacular verse, the kasa appeared first toward the middle of the fifteenth century. It is regarded as the modified form of the long poems of Koryo, and some scholars maintain that the norm of this form was already visible in the poems written in the twelfth century and thereafter.\(^1\) What differentiates it from the changga is that it has no stanzaic division, but continues on like a chain, and has a tendency toward description and exposition rather than subjective lyricism. The earlier examples of this kind are, however, rich in subjective lyricism, sometimes even in the outburst of emotion; the latter examples tend to be more realistic and, often, “journalistic.”

The kasa has such characteristics as the use of accentuation and rhythm, of the caesure, and of balanced parallel phrases, verbal and grammatical parallelism in particular. This is why one theory attempts to compare it with the fu (prose poetry). The norm of this new genre is a group of two four-syllable words which forms a single unit and is repeated in parallel form. The kasa varies in length from a poem longer than the changga of Koryo to several thousand lines.

The earliest extant poem of this type is the Sangch’un kok (“Hymn to the Spring,” c. 1455-1480), by Chŏng Kug-in (1401-1481). This poem, forty lines

---

\(^1\)Strictly speaking, however, the kasa is a development from the second variant form of the hyonggi-style verse as it passed through the transitional period of the ak-ch'oa form. The kasa, therefore, inherited from these two forms of verse their two special characteristics—from the first its aristocratic and escapist nature and from the second its typically Confucian element.
altogether, sings of the beauty of pastoral life and is divided into four parts: introduction, spring scenery, the poet’s pleasure among hills and waters, and a conclusion. This form of verse was perfected in the end of the sixteenth and the first two quarters of the seventeenth century by Ch'ong Ch'ol, Ho Nam-sorhôn (1563-1589), and Pak In-no (1561-1643). Ch'ong left five kasa, and his contemporaries ranked him as first among the poets of the Yi dynasty. The first kasa, the Kwandong pyolgok (“The Wanderings,” 1580), is a poem of 146 lines, divided into four parts, describing the eight famous scenes in the Diamond Mountains. The poet begins with his appointment as governor of Kangwŏn province and an account of his journey from Seoul to the entrance of the Inner Diamond Mountains. He fondly describes waterfalls, ravines, high peaks, famous temples, pavilions, and arbors in brilliant and majestic passages; the poem ends with a dream in which the poet holds an imaginary dialogue with a fairy. The Su miin kok (“Hymn of Constancy,” c. 1585-1587) and Sok miin kok (“Another Hymn of Constancy,” c. 1585-1587) are allegorical poems in the Li sacs tradition. They were written when the poet, because of factional strife, had to retire from the court and spend several years in country villages. In both poems he compares his constancy to King Šonjo (1522-1568-1608) to that of a distant wife longing for her husband. The first poem (sixty-three lines) is a monologue; the second (forty-eight lines) is a dialogue held by two court ladies. After a moving description of the miseries of the deserted wife, the poems end with her strong desire for transformation—in the first poem into a butterfly and the second into rain. The latter is generally preferred over the former for its sustained tone and beauty of diction. The following is a complete translation of the latter poem, using the text found in the Songju edition of the Songgang kasa.

"Lady, whose face I know, lady walking alone, tell me, why did you leave the royal palace, whom are you seeking as the sun goes down?"

"Hear then my story.
My face and ways do not deserve his royal love, I know; yet when he sees, he deigns to recognize me, smiles with the same smile, welcomes me as of old.
I cannot believe him changed.
I lie and think, sit and measure, my sins heap up like mountains.
I do not quarrel with Heaven or with men.
Untie this sadness, undo this sorrow?
No, it seems it is my ordained fate."
The Kasa

"Don't fret, my dear. There's something eating his heart out, too. I've served him, I know him. He has had little enough of peace these days, God knows. Spring cold and summer heat, long autumn and rueful winter days, how did he spend them? Who served him? Morning gruel and daily rice, did he get enough? Has he slept well, think you, these long nights?"

"Ah, I want his news—but day is gone. Would someone come tomorrow—restless thought! Where shall I go, led or pushed?

The clouds gather on solemn peaks, a mist bewraps the world.

How then, lady, can I see the brightness, the brightness of sun and moon? What's there—within a foot, within an inch? A thousand miles is far, so far... I'll go down to the sea and wait a boat.

O, winds and waves are furious—I'm stunned—the boatman's gone—only the empty ship—

Now darkness creeps under the eaves of a hut. For whom does that lamp burn on the wall there? Up hill and down I go, or pace the shore. At last my prayer is answered, and I see Milord in dreams.

But time has stolen away his jade face.

I want to tell him all, all, to my heart's content, but tears choke me, words stick in my throat. I cannot speak my love or melt my grief. A cock crows. Everything was a mocking dream.

I open the window; only the shadows hover. O, to be the moon and shine on his window."
"Lady, the moon, say you?
Rather a weeping rain!"

The Sôngsan pyûlgok ("Little Odes of Mount Star," c. 1585-1587) was written by Chông to praise the elegant life of Kim Sông-wôn centering around the Sôha Hall and Sigyong Arbor below Mount Star in South Cholla province. I shall quote this poem in full, because it is one of the finest kasa poems dating from the Yi dynasty, definite numerous learned allusions to both Chinese and Korean poetry and personalities.

*An unknown guest in passing stopped on Mount Star and said:
"Listen, Master of the Sôha Hall, despite the many pleasures life held, why did you prefer to them all this mountain, this water?
What made you choose the solitude of hills and streams?"

Sweeping away the pine needles, setting a cushion on a bamboo couch
I casually climb into the seat and view the Four Corners.
Floating clouds come and go over the Sosok Terrace; their flying motion and gentle gestures resemble the mind and courtesy of the noble Master of Sôha.
The fresh stream, gold and silver, flows past the Arbor;
as if the Weaver{\textsuperscript{2}} Star had come to earth the water rushes in endless patterns, like cloud brocade, scissored and spread before us.
In the city, without a calendar who would know the year's cycle? But here every subtle change of the seasons unrolls like a screen before us.
This is truly the land of the Immortals.

---

{\textsuperscript{2}}The star Vega in the constellation of Lyra. These two lines allude to the beauty of the stream.
Sun at the window caresses the plum tree;
the fragrance of blossoms wakes me.
Who says there is nothing to keep an old hermit busy?
I sow melon, tend them, support them;
when the rain nurtures the young plants,
I think of the old tale of the Blue Gate.3
In straw sandals, with a bamboo cane,
I follow the plum-snowed causeway over to Pangch’o Islet.
As I stroll by the West Brook the stone screen accompanies me in the water mirror, painted there, as if polished.
Where is Arcadia? Wu-ling is here.

The casual south wind disperses the tree shade, makes way for a faithful cuckoo—where has he flown from?
I wake from a doze on the pillow of ancient worthies and see the reflected balcony floting among the clouds in the lake.
With my arrowroot hat aslant and my smock tucked into my belt,
I go nearer, and watch the drunken fishes after the rainy night.
Here and there, red and white lotus:
their fragrance rises into the windless sky and passes over the hills.
As though I had met with Chou Tun-yi4 and supped on the Ultimate Secret—or as if a faery had shown me the Jade Letters5—

3The Blue Gate is the southeast gate of Ch’ang-an. In the time of Ch’in, Shao P’ing was enfeoffed as the Marquis of Tung-ling. But when the Han destroyed the Ch’in he had to abandon his post and live by raising melons. The melons he raised were called either Tung-ling or Ch’ing-men melons.
4Chou Tun-yi (1017-1073), one of the great Sung philosopher, the author of the Diagram of the Supreme Ultimate Explained.
5A fairy illustrated the Canon of Jade, supposed to be written by the legendary Yellow Emperor. See Wu-Yieh ch’un-ch’in (Siu-pu pei-yao ed.) VI, 1b-2a.
I glance toward Noja Rock by Chami shore, letting a tall pine screen the sun, sitting at ease on the stone path.

In the bitter world of man it is June, month of humid exhausting heat;
here in Elysium the air has the feel of autumn, zestful and light.
A duck afloat on the stream moves in to the white sand bar, makes friends with the gulls.
Free and leisure-y, it resembles our host, the noble Master of Sôha.

At the fourth watch the moon rises, cold, over the paulownia trees.
Thousand cliffs, ten thousand ravines—could they be brighter by daylight?
Who moved the Palace of Crystal from Huchou?
Did I cross the Milky Way?
Have I reached the Moon Palace?
Setting out from the twin pines,
I let the boat drift downstream passing the floating duckweed.
My friend, when did we reach the cataract before Hwanbyök Hall?
Cowherds in the riverside pastures were joyfully playing their pipes in the sunset light.
Do not awaken the sleeping dragon, do not let cranes abandon their nests and take wing into the smoky twilight.
Su Shih in his poem on Red Cliff praises the seventh moon above all; but let us not underestimate the August moon.

*Cannot locate this palace.

"Su Shih (1036-1101) says, in his preface to the Red Cliff, that it was written in the seventh moon. See Cyril Drummond le Gros Clark, The Prose-Poetry of Su Tung-P'o (Shanghai, 1935), p. 126: "In the autumn of the year Jen-hsi, when the seventh moon was on the wane, I, Su, was drifting with friends in a boat below the Red Cliff."
The Kasa

When the clouds part and water grows still, the rising moon anchors herself in a pine branch.
They say Li Po drowned because of her.

vi

North winds sweep away the heaped leaves on the wild mountains, marshal the clouds, attack us with snow.
The Creator, He who loves to fashion the things of nature, makes snowflowers of white jade, devises myriad new forms for the forests:
The foreshore freezes over, dazzles the eye.
Over the one-logged bridge goes an old priest, a stick on his shoulder, head on one side, sadly.
Where do you head for, friend? What temple is richer in beauty than what you see here in this world of the moon,
Mount Star in a fresh snowfall?

vii

Alone in the deep mountain with no friend but the classics, pile on pile,
I think of the men of all times:
many were sages, many were heroes.
Heavenly intention goes into the making of men.
Yet fortunes rise and fall, and what is unknowable seems to be chance. And sadness is deep.
Why did Hsii Yu on Mount Chi cleanse his innocent ears?8

viii

The mind of the Master of Sôha Hall smiles like his face;
his friendship is new and fresh each day.
Let us not think of worldly affairs.

8Hsii Yu was a princely man in the time of the Emperor Yao. Knowing of his virtue and integrity, the Emperor suggested to him the possibility of leaving him the throne. Hsii Yu was too pure a man to listen to such an offer and went to the river to cleanse his ears. Kao-shih chuan (Sin-pu pei-yao ed.), 1, 2b-3a.
The wine brewed yesterday must be ready;
Let's drink, passing the cup back and forth, pouring more wine till we are tired of it.
Then our hearts will be open, the net of sorrow unraveled to nothing.
String the black lute and sing,
Who is host, who is guest?
The flying crane is the true Immortal
I met once in the Moon Palace.
The guest addresses the host with a word:
“You, sir, you alone are immortal.”

His last poem, Changjinju sa (“A Time to Drink”), is Anacreontic, stressing Epicureanism and the emptiness of life without wine.

The kasa found its greatest poetesses in Hŏ Nansŏrhŏn, sister of Hŏ Kyun, the author of the Hong Kiljong chŏn (see chap. viii). She left two poems, the Pongsŏnhwa (“Balsam,”) and Kyuŏn ka (“A Woman’s Sorrow”). The former evokes in delicate and graceful language the beauty of the balsam, which is the favorite summer flower among young girls in Korea, who have their fingers dyed with balsam pounded in alum. The poem suggests, at the end, the fleetiness of the seasons and of human affairs, contrasting that with the permanence of the world of art. The Kyuŏn ka is a dramatic narrative in which a lost lover reveals her miseries and longings in most vivid and convincing language. The tone and mood of the poem is set by the opening: “Yesterday I fancied I was young; / But already, alas, I am aging.” The beauties and wonders of nature only worsen her sorrow and cause her to recall her happy childhood and girlhood. She finally takes out a green lute and plays a song of Blue Lotus, but her room is empty except for the lotus-brocaded curtains. The poem ends with the lines: “Think, love, you caused me this grief; / I know not whether I shall live or die.”

After an unproductive period in the sixteenth century, the kasa found another poet in Pak In- no (1561-1643), the master of this form in the seventeenth century. Between 1598 and 1636 Pak produced seven major kasa, in quantity certainly unsurpassed, and in quality next only to those of Chŏng Ch'ot. He developed a style of his own which combines learnedness and lyricism. An ordered structure, virtuoso techniques, and rich vocabulary are some of the features of his works. The first poem, the Taep'yŏng sa (“Song of Peace,” 1598), was written during the Japanese invasion when the poet fought in the navy at Pusan. The battle was successful for the defenders, and the Japanese army was destroyed overnight. The poet returned to headquarters after ten days and, in recognition of the service rendered by the navy, composed this poem which praised the seamen. The poem begins with the confusion caused by the unexpected invasion of the Japanese, proceeds to praise the desperate fight and subsequent victory won by the allied armies of Ming and Korea, describes the joy of victorious homecoming and ends with a prayer to heaven and earth: "That there be no more war, myriads of years, / That people sing in the field and by the well, / That they strike drums on the fertile soil, / That we always have a beloved king above us, / And that He and we share the joy of peace." Like the Taejong sa, his Sosang'tan ("Lament on the Water," 1605) took inspiration from the Japanese invasion. The poem digresses for several lines on the origin of ships. The poet holds the Yellow Emperor, the First Emperor, and Hsi Shih responsible for this invention which is now causing Korea much trouble, but soon returns to a description of his determined loyalty at the moment of national crisis. The poem ends with a prayer that the invaders will soon surrender and peace reign again; only then can he enjoy again the autumn moon and the spring breeze, rowing on moving waters. The Saje kok ("Song of the Sedge Bank," 1611) was written on the occasion of his visit to the summer resort of Yi T'ok-hyong (1561-1613) at Saje ("Sedge Bank"), five leagues east of the Yongjin River. The poem describes the beautiful spots in Saje and Yi's idle life in that setting. When asked by the host about his life, the poet composed his famous Nuhang sa ("In Praise of Poverty"), a kasa which asserts the joy and contentment of a life of poverty and declares that the virtue of a gentleman is "to be poor and yet not resent his poverty" (Analects, XIV, 11).
The Kasa

59

The Tongnak'gang ("The Hall of Solitary Bliss") was written by Pak on the occasion of his visit to the Tongnak Hall, a retreat of Yi On-jok (1491-1553), his former teacher, at Mount Jade in Kyongju. The poem praises the scenic beauty surrounding this hall, and reveals the poet's deep admiration for his teacher and recalls many memories. The Yongnam ka ("Song of the South," 1635) was written to praise Yi K'un-won's good administration as governor of Kyongsang province. The Nogye ka ("Song of the Reedy Stream," 1636) deals with the scenic beauty of the Reedy Stream, a retreat of the poet, and describes his idyllic life.

In the times of Kings Yongjo and Chongjo (1725-1800) the kasa became predominantly a popular form of poetry among women and common folk. This change was partly owing to the rise of the novel about the same time and the decline of verse genres. The kasa occupied, as it were, a middle position between prose and verse, and the rise of prose and of the middle class brought about changes in the inner form of the kasa, its subject matter, its audience, and its tone. Whereas the previous kasa dealt chiefly with elegant pleasures among nature, the beauties of the four seasons, the praise of civilization, and the like, the subject matter of the new kasa was daily life itself, life of both men and women of the middle and lower classes. The new poets and poetesses rejected the empty and idealistic world which the poet-philosopher or scholar-statesman had once created; they relied solely on colloquial diction and conversational rhythm for effect and welded written and spoken language into one.
One feature of this period is that the kasa was mostly developed by women, particularly in the southeastern part of the peninsula. These women authors considered the study of the kasa the most important part of their education, and each woman, so we are told, knew by heart both the texts and tunes of several dozens of poems. Many kasa were composed extempore either to teach their friends and children or to entertain themselves and their friends with songs. Thus the kasa spread rapidly from the eighteenth century on, and the number of anonymous works dating from that period attests to the popularity of this genre at that time.

The kasa of definite authorship dating from the middle of the eighteenth century are mostly travel diaries. The Iljong changyu ka ("Song of a Journey to Japan," 1764), consisting of more than 4,000 lines, is a travel description by Kim In-gyım, who accompanied the Korean envoy to Edo (modern Tokyo). The journey started on September 9, 1763 and ended on August 5, 1764. The poem depicts in smooth and rhythmic language Kim's journey from Seoul to Pusan, the voyage from Pusan to Tsushima, his arrival in Edo, and his meeting with the Japanese men of letters. Upon his return to Seoul, Kim reported to the throne that he had composed several thousands of impromptu poems which he had distributed to the Japanese on their request as farewell gifts.

There are two verse records of travel to Peking, one anonymous (1798) and another (1866) by Hong San-hak. The latter is a long poem of 1,962 lines, covering the period of his departure from and return to Seoul (May 22 to September 23, 1866). The section on his meeting with the Chinese literati is of special interest.

The Hanyang ka ("Song of Seoul," 1844) is anonymous and consists of 812 lines. The poem, a eulogy on the institutions of the Yi dynasty, opens with the description of the beauty of the capital and then praises in succession the geographical features of Seoul, its palaces and pavilions, its offices and bureaus, its markets and merchants, and the manners and customs of the courtiers. It also has a vivid description of the scene of a civil service examination.

The Pukch'On ka ("Song of a Northern Exile"), consisting of 607 lines, is by Kim Chin-hyong (b. 1801), Fifth Counselor in the Office of Special Counsellors. Kim was banished to Myöngch'on in the seventh moon of 1853, and the poem covers the period from his trip to Myöngch'on until his return to his birthplace, Andong, after the expiration of the term of banishment. The governor of Myöngch'on was a benevolent and broad-minded man and granted Kim maximum freedom. Kim was allowed not only to read and to teach children of the place, but also to explore the beauties of Mount Ch'ilbo, the famous beauty spot in Myöngch'on. There he met a kisaeng, Kun San-wol, who relieved his loneliness in exile. When released and returned to Andong, he could not bear to sever his ties with Kun San-wol, and the poem reaches its climax in the description of his intense love for his companion. Another poem of this type worthy of mention is the Kwandong changyu ka ("Song of the Diamond Mountains"), consisting of more than 700 lines. Like the Kwandong pyölgok of Ch'ông Ch'61, the subject matter of this poem is the Diamond Mountains.

We have discussed poems of definite date and authorship; but there are volumes of anonymous poems, among which the Ch'unmyOn kok ("Spring Sleep," c. 1725) and Kwandring ka ("Song of the Lantern Feast," c. 1725) are outstanding examples. Only the first five sections of the Kwandsing ka are preserved:

On the day of the first full moon,
The children play, enjoying the moon,
They play, stamping on the bridge.⁹
But where is he, ah, where is my Love?
Alas, he is not on the bridge.

On the day of the Clear and Bright,
The lusty sap stirs the trees;
Young buds spring among the grass;
Everything grows in harmony—
But where is he, ah, where is my Love?
He knows not, alas, that spring is here.

On the third day of the 3rd moon,
Swallows come, come from the south;
And the wild geese from the Hsiao and Hsiang,
They say they must bid us farewell.
Plum and peach trees are in bloom,
Apricot petals fall on the grass,
They are scattered, whispering and falling.
But where is he, ah, where is my Love?
He knows not this is the season of flowers.

On the eighth day of the fourth moon
I climb the terrace to see the lanterns, Lit at sundown, far and near.
Fish lanterns and dragon lanterns,
Phoenix lanterns and crane lanterns,
A heron and the southern star;
Fairy lanterns and drum lanterns,
Watermelon and garlic lanterns,
A fairy messenger in the lotus,

⁹The people in Seoul, having heard the evening bell in the Chongno Square on the fifteenth day of the first moon, would leave off whatever they were doing and go to the bridges in the capital and stamp on them. This was supposed to prevent a sickness of the feet.
A celestial nymph on a fabulous bird,
Ship lanterns and house lanterns,
Egg lanterns and bottle lanterns,
Mask-play lanterns and shadow lanterns,
Closet, sedan, and rail lanterns,
A masked hero riding a lion,
Straw puppets on wolves and tigers—
And the sun lanterns and moon lanterns.
Shine on the lanterns that roll on the ground,
And beyond the arch of the plough lanterns
Rises the moon over East Mountain,
And below, windows are lit here and there.
But where is he, ah, where is my Love?
He knows not how the lanterns shine.
On the fifth day of the fifth moon,
Other folks' children install a swing.
Gaily they play on the swings, up and down,
Hurtling downwards, zooming upwards—
But where is he, ah, where is my Love?
He knows not it is the season of swings.

This form of verse was no longer popular after the fall of the Yi dynasty.

Bibliography: The Kasa

Ch'ong Chu-dong, "Kwansujae Hong Kye-yong kwa k'uai kasa Huisol" ("The Huisol, a Kasa Poem by Hong Kye-yong"), KK, 17 (1957), 29-42.
Hong Chae-hyo, "Udam Ch'ae Tuk-ki wa Ch'ondaes pyolgok e tehayo" ("On the Ch'ondaes pyolgok by Ch'ae Tuk-ki"), KK, 22 (1960), 50-56.
The Kasa

“Towards the View of Poetry Held by Confucian Writers,” KTN, 1 (1956), 1-41.

Mun Chu-sok, “Hanbang ka yon’gu” (“A Study of the Song of Seoul”), Suktase hakpo, 1 (1955), 239-244.

Yi Pyong-gi, “Pyol samin kok kwa Sok samin kok e taehayo” (“On the Pyol samin kok and Sok samin kok”), KK, 15 (1956), 116-123.

Yi Sang-bo, “Kwanso pyolgok yon’gu” (“A Study of the Kwanso pyolgok”), KK, 26 (1963), 54-76.

Translations

Lee, Peter H., Kranich am Meer, pp. 91-103.

VII. Fiction in Chinese

Although the novel in the modern sense began only in the second quarter of the seventeenth century in Korea, its ancestors—legends, anecdotal narratives, and tales—are as old as human history itself. In Korea, however, where Chinese literature had a strong hold among the literati and where the proper system of writing in Korean developed only in the fifteenth century, it is not surprising that earlier surviving examples of fiction were strongly influenced by Chinese fiction and used the Chinese language as their medium.

There is a rich collection of folk tales in Korea in the form of fairy tales, novellas, hero tales, sagas, pourquoi stories, myths, fables, legends, and jests. The oldest surviving examples of such tales are preserved in the Samguk sagi and Samguk yusa (see chap. i). The Samguk yusa, a collection of popular stories and folk tales, records a number of examples, foundation myths of Tangun, Puyo, and Karak and other unusual Buddhist and Shamanistic stories. The book narrates the miraculous birth of the founders of ancient states (i.e., Chu Mong, Pak Hyokkoe, and Kings T’arhae and Suro), generally from an egg, and their marriages (Tangun, Aryong, T’arhae, and Tohwanyo); hero tales (T’arhae, Suro, Hogong); and other etiological tales. The Samguk sagi, though an official dynastic history, contains many such stories in the section on biographies (chaps. 41-50), especially in chapters 45, 47, and 48—stories of fictitious figures or the adventures and superhuman deeds of historical personages. Collections of unusual stories of folk origin, such as the Hwarang segi (“Chronicle of the Hwarang”), by Kim Tae-mun (fl. 702-737) and Sui chon (“Strange Stories”), by Pak Il-lyang (d. 1096), are no longer extant in their entirety, but nine stories have survived, finding their way into several other books.

In the Koryo dynasty, story collectors were lower governmental officials (p’agwan) who were hired by the court to gather anecdotes and strange stories circulating among the people to be used as reference materials for administration. Collectors of such stories not only gleaned the stories from among the people, but also added a personal touch to the stories to make them more entertaining or didactic. In the Koryo dynasty, from the middle of the thirteenth century, story collecting became a vogue. First, with the importation of the Six Dynasties tales, T'ang ch'uan-ch'i (tales of the marvelous), and Suang and Yüan collections of stories, collectors were encouraged to gather the new material from among their own people for new stories.

---

2 In Korea, they were lower officials. For the origin of the p’agwan (pai-kuan in Chinese) and their function see Han sulação, XXX, 0415d.
Korean Literature

Second was the intention of story collectors to write down the great body of oral tradition handed down from the previous kingdom. Third, the literati away from the court recorded or invented such stories as a pastime, and their books are primary sources for our study. Collections of essays by famous scholar-statesmen contain such current popular stories in Chinese, of which the first example is the Paegun sosol ("Stories of White Cloud"), by Yi Kyu-bo (1168-1241). The Pahan chip (1214), by Yi In-no (1152-1220), friend of Yi Kyu-bo, is primarily a collection of Chinese verse by scholars, but also records poetic tales, diaries, Silla anecdotes, and the current scenes and manners of Kaesong and P'yongyang. The third is the Pohan chip (1254), by Ch'oe Cha (1188-1260), which contains popular stories current in towns, interesting historical incidents, stories of kisaeng and the like. The Yogong p'aeсол (1342), by Yi Che-hyon, also records strange and humorous stories and character sketches.

Another type of story which shows a definite advance in the development of fiction, is the "personified story," in which the writer speaks through the lips of a person already deceased or endows inanimate objects (wine, coin, paper) and living things (bamboo, tadpole, turtle) with human attributes or feelings. Stories belonging to this class occupy a transitional period in which anecdotes and legends paved the way for real fiction. These stories used the technique of personification chiefly as a vehicle of social criticism. The Kuksun ch'on ("Story of Wine") of Im Ch'un (d. 1170) has as its theme the rise and fall of the household of Kuk Sun ("Mr. Yeast Good Wine"). The story is strongly autobiographical and contains a satire on the current political instability. It also admonishes persons given to wine, and the hero's downfall owing to the odor of his breath from wine and his subsequent illness and death are clearly didactic. His second book, the Kongbang ch'on ("Story of Coins"), personifies coins and deals with their mintage and usage, while indirectly criticizing the current economic conditions in the country. Yi Kyu-bo wrote two books in this tradition. One, the Kuk sônsaeng ch'on ("Story of Mr. Yeast"), is similar in form and content to the Kuksun ch'on. The other personifies a turtle and praises a scholar's integrity and loftiness in his refusal to accept an offer from the court. The story is didactic and recommends moral cultivation above all. The Chuk puin ch'on ("Story of Bamboo") is by Yi Kok (1298-1351),

The importation of Chinese books dates back to the beginning of our history. The Shan-hai ching ("Book of the Mountains and Rivers") was introduced to Pakche sometime in the third century, and Sen-kung ching ("History of the Three Kingdoms") to Koguryo sometime later. The Sou-shen chi ("Reports on Spiritual Manifestations") was imported to Koryo before 1091, and ch'ing t'an (pure discussions) literature at or about the same time. The T'ai-p'ing kung-chi ("Extensive Records made in the Period of Great Peace") was already a popular book among the Koreans of the early twelfth century, and one exact Koryo poem sings of this book. father of Yi Saek (1328-1396), who was one of the most famous scholars of Koryo. The book is again didactic and praises the virtue of woman and satirizes the disorderly sexual relations of the time. Yi Ch'om's Chosaeng chon ("Story of Paper") personifies paper and recommends honest admonitions to officials and encourages good administration. The Chong sija chon ("Tadpole Story"), written by a monk, Sigyongam, personifies a tadpole and is a satire on Buddhism and its clergy. This book introduces dialogue and current personages.

Buddhism, which flourished from the sixth to the fourteenth century as the state religion, gave rise to religious tales and lives of famous priests and their miracles. Among the best known is the anonymous Wangnang panhon chon ("Reincarnation of Mr. Wang"), believed to have been compiled in its present form sometime during the reign of King Sukchong (1661-1675-1720). The book reveals in realistic language the power of the Buddha and urges living beings to become devout believers in the religion. In plot and technique this is a short story. Woodblocks used for printing it are preserved in the Toughwa and Haein Temples.

In the Yi dynasty, collections of tales and anecdotes (p'aegwan mun) continued to be produced. O Suk-kwŏn (fl. 1554) in his P'aegwan chon ("Miscellaneous Notes of a Storyteller") lists books of this kind, including the Yongjae ch'onghwa, by Song Hyŏn (1439-1504). This famous collection of literary essays, historical tales, and character sketches, excellent in style and narrative technique, is especially admired for brilliance of characterization and for criticism of past and contemporary artistic circles. So Kö-jŏng's Taep'yong hanhwa kogye chon ("Peaceful Leisure Stories of Humor") was written in 1477 and published in or about 1482. A collection of "risqué" stories, the Kogum soch'ong ("Humorous Stories, Ancient and Modern"), believed to have been compiled by Song In (1517-1584), contains three separate books written from the time of King Songjong to that of King Injo (1595-1623-1649).

The Lieh-nü chuan ("Stories of Famous Women") was imported to Korea in 1404 and translated into Korean in 1543. But the Chinese fiction which exercised most influence in fifteenth-century Korea was the Chien-teng hsin-yü, by Chü Yü (d. 1433), imported sometime between 1421 and 1465. Kim Si-sŭp (1435-1493), the first significant writer of imaginative narrative, wrote his immortal Kumo sinkwa ("New Stories of the Golden Turtle") influenced by the Chien-teng 'isin-yü. Only the first book, containing five stories, survives. This book enjoyed a great popularity in Korea as well as in Japan, where it was reprinted in 1653 and 1884. The stories in this book differ from those of Koryo in two respects: first, the scenes are set in Korea, whereas the older stories chose invariably China and Chinese characters; second, the endings are tragic, in contrast to the happy endings of stories produced previously. The Kumo sinkwa, unparalleled in beauty of expression and richness of local color, is indeed a masterpiece in the tradition of the tales of the marvelous.
Korean Literature

In the category of personified stories, Im Che (1549-1587) was an outstanding writer. His Hwasa ("Story of Flowers") satirizes party strife at court. In the kingdom of flowers, he takes the role of a historian to recount the Confucian view of the virtuous sovereign and his loyal subjects. Im's Susong chi ("Story of Grievance Castle") expresses the discontent and pent-up grievances of a man who has to live in a society which does not promote people according to their qualifications. The fall of Grievance Castle and the subsequent reappearance of a happy world at the end of the story reflect the author's wishes for improving the political situation of his day. Here Im Che wishes to cleanse society of its evils, to reject treacherous retainers and to give opportunity to loyal subjects for a better government. The last work of this kind worthy of mention is the Ch'odon gun yonii ("Romance of the Heavenly Lord"), by Ch'ong T'ae-je (1612-1669). The book, consisting of thirty-one chapters, is an allegory on the working of the mind, based on the idealism of Chu Hsi.

A third class of stories consists of satirical tales. The Hosaeng chon ("Story of Mr. Ho"), by Pak Chi-won (1737-1805), is a satire on the impracticality and useless book-learning of scholars. Hosaeng, Mr. Ho, a lover of books, made his wife starve for seven years as a result of his preparation for the civil service examination. But one day, admonished by his wife, he changes his mind, becomes a good businessman, and soon monopolizes the fruit and horsehair trade. Thieves attack him to rob him of his wealth, but he advises them to join him and make money. He then buys ships and transports the poor to a remote desert island where he builds a classless Utopia. He also monopolizes overseas trade and finally returns to the capital in triumph. His friend, who once made him a loan for his business, introduces him to a general who is searching for an able statesman. Mr. Ho gives him a series of lectures concerning administration, but disappears without trace on the day when the general and his friend come to his home to confer rank upon him.

The author, Pak Chi-won, was one of the great champions of practical learning in the eighteenth century, and we can trace in this story the plans for social and economic improvements he had outlined for Korea. First he severely satirizes the literati class which indulges in empty talk. The monopoly of fruit and horsehair is significant. Fruit was used by the upper class as offerings in ancestor worship and on ceremonial occasions, and horsehair for making the caps they wore. Mr. Ho of the story empties the pockets of the literati and redistributes the contents among the poor. Here the author is attacking empty etiquette and ceremonies and the imposing of heavy, unjust taxes on the lower classes. Mr. Ho's motto to the thieves, "Get rich first, study later," implies that one must first deal with economic distress realistically in order to relieve the poor and save the country from hardships. He also stresses the importance of overseas trade as a measure for enriching the country. Finally his horror of the exploitation of the poor by the rich in the rigid Yi society is expressed in his creation of a Utopia. The book also advocates studies abroad as a measure for importing Western learning, the abolition of white clothes, and the cutting of hair. Pak's other stories which have as their theme the hypocrisies of the upper class are the Hojil ("Tiger's Rebuke") and Yangban chön ("Story of the Literati"). Two short stories, the Kwangmun chön ("Kwangmun the Beggar") and Yedŏk sŏnsaeng chön ("Story of Mr. Yedŏk") deal with lower-class people. The hero of the former story is a young beggar boy living by the Chʻonggye River in the capital who, after many hardships, finally wins recognition and becomes a faithful employee in an apothecary shop. The latter is in the form of a conte, dealing with the true friendship between a scholar, Sŏngyulcha, and an old man of lower birth, Mr. Om, a night-soil man. The story praises the righteous and virtuous deeds of Mr. Om and condemns the hypocritical life of the upper class. Our author has to his credit several other stories, but they are variations on the same theme, satires on upper-class life. Pak was himself from the upper class. In his stories he was not so much interested in advocating the overthrow of his class as in appealing to its members for self-examination and for criticism of their blind resistance to practical learning. What he satirizes is, therefore, not the yangban class itself, but the yangban's obstinate conservatism and exploitation of the lower classes. Though his stories are in Chinese, the plot and scenes are laid in Korea and materials are derived from the real life of the time.

Stories and novels bearing in their titles the Chinese logograph for "dream" ("mong" in Korean) were among the most popular love stories in the Yi dynasty. The first novel of this type, the Kuun mong ("Cloud Dream of the Nine"), written in pure Korean, will be discussed in the next chapter. The second such novel, the Ongnu mong ("Dream of the Jade Chamber"), was written probably by Nam Yong-no in Chinese in the time of King Sukchong. It is a long work of sixty-four chapters. The hero, Mun Chʻang-sŏng, in the celestial world is condemned to the earth for playing with five angels in the Jade Chamber. Born as a mortal with the name Yang Chʻang-gok, the hero meets a famous kisaeng, Kang Nam-hong, who is one of the five angels also condemned to earthly life. They fall in love and vow marriage, but fate decrees otherwise. Yang passes the civil service examination and obtains the coveted chinsa4 degree. But he marries the virgin Yun, another of the five condemned angels, and then is exiled on a false charge to a remote place where he meets yet another angel. When the country is invaded by barbarians, Yang leads his troops to repulse the enemy, which is led by no other than the hero's mistress. The invasion force is defeated, and during the course of the combat, one of the enemy general's daughters, also a fallen angel, falls in love with the hero. The hero takes her to the capital on his triumphant return to the court. After leading a prosperous life with his two legally married wives and three concubines, the hero is finally reinstated in heaven with the five fallen angels. In its plot and scenes, which are laid in southern China, the Ongnu mong owes much to the Kwun mong.

Another love story written in Chinese, the Hongbaekhwag chon (“Story of Pink and White Flowers”), is by an anonymous hand. In the Ming dynasty there lived two close friends, Kye Tong-yong and Sun Kyong-hwa. Kye had a son, Ilchi; Sun had a daughter, Chikso. The parents arranged for their marriage in their childhood. But upon the death of Mr. Kye, Mr. Sun changed his mind and promised his daughter to a son of Minister Yo. Chikso then set out to search for her former fiancé, disguised as a man. She wandered about for many thousands of miles and came to live in the household of a certain Mr. Sol, with whose daughter she vowed matrimony. Chikso went to the capital under the pretext of taking the civil service examination and met the most successful candidate, Ilchi, her fiancé. But the emperor had already decided to wed his daughter to Ilchi. Chikso visited the princess and revealed her whole story, whereupon the princess consented to marry the son of Minister Yo instead. Chikso and Ilchi were married and lived a hundred years.
VIII. Fiction in Korean

We have mentioned that the Kumo sinhwa marks the first stage of the novel in the literary history of Korea, besides being an outstanding example of the tales of the marvelous (ch'uan-ch'i) tradition. Although stories and novels continued to be written in Chinese, it was not until the seventeenth century that the novel attained a distinct form as a genre. At about the same time writers began to write novels in pure Korean, using the new alphabet, evidently to meet the taste of the growing public. Historically, the second and third stages of the novel during its period of growth coincide with political and social changes in the country. After the Japanese and Manchu invasions, the middle class began to awake. The upper-class literati had betrayed their inefficiency in handling national affairs, and the middle- and lower-class people began to re-evaluate the past and look to the future with fresh perspectives. A new literary movement liberated writers from the restrictions of Neo-Confucianism, which had stifled emotional development and spontaneous expressions of life. New novelists were driven to reveal their innermost experiences in native rhythm adequate to encompass the richness and complexities of indigenous culture. Changes in form and emphasis in the novel were, therefore, related to changes in attitude toward “man” and his manners and destiny. The rise of the novel coincides with the diffusion of education, the increased social and economic consciousness of the middle class, and the rise of practical learning. Nevertheless, the development of plot, characterization, setting, and tone was also made possible by a constant flow of Chinese novels, among which the most influential were the Shui hu chuan (“Water Margin”) and San-kuo-chih yen-i (“Romance of the Three Kingdoms”).

The second landmark in the Korean novel was achieved by Hoh Kyun (1569-1618), author of the Hong Kiltong chon1 (“Life of Hong Kiltong”), perhaps the first novel written in Korean, which is reminiscent of the picaresque2 novel in Europe, especially the German Räuberroman. As an illegitimate son of Minister Hoh Yop, the author was keenly aware of his inferior status and from his childhood displayed an interest in social revolution. As an active organizer of reform movements, he was captured and executed on a charge of treason. The hero of the story, Hong Kiltong, an illegitimate son of Minister Hong, has aspirations similar to those of the author, and the setting is laid in contemporary society, the time of King Sejong. Hong suffers all manners of maltreatment from members of his family, including his father's concubine Ch'onan. In a fit of jealousy over the minister's love for Kiltong's mother and his growing interest in the child, Ch'onan bribes a fortune-teller and a shaman priestess to inform the minister that Kiltong will commit fratricide if allowed to grow up, and she also hires an assassin to kill him. Upon hearing the croaking of a crow during his study of the Book of Changes in his mountain retreat, Kiltong divines the imminent danger, transforms himself into a boy riding on donkey, and punishes the assassin and the fortune-teller. After reporting to his father the evil scheme against his life and its outcome, he sets out on a roving journey. Deep in the mountains he encounters a band of thieves, passes their test of strength by lifting and hurling a huge rock, and thereby becomes their leader. He then leads the thieves in an attack on Haein Temple, which has become an asylum for wicked officials and corrupt monks. By an ingenious trick played upon the monks, Kiltong and his men seize the treasures hidden in the Temple. After this exploit, Hong calls his band the Hwalbindang, whose aim is the deliverance of the poor, and mocks every sanctity of bureaucracy and of the authoritarian world.

---

1A basic text is the Kyongju edition printed in woodblocks, consisting of twenty-four sheets; a photolithographic edition was published by Ewha Woman University in 1961. There are also several woodblock editions, a manuscript copy, and a number of modern reprints. See Chung Chong-long, Hong Kiltong chon yon'gu (Taegu, 1961), pp. 141-147, reviewed in Kim Yong-ik in AS, VII (1962), 205-209. For summaries, paraphrases, or extracts of the Kiltong story in English see: H. N. Allen, Korean Tales (New York and London, 1899), pp. 170-193; Berta Metzger, Tales Told in Korea (New York, 1932), pp. 49-74; Zong In-ah, Folk Tales from Korea (London, 1952), pp. 207-223.

He then tours the eight provinces of the country, seizes wealth unjustly exacted by rapacious officials, and distributes it among the poor. His expedition reaches a climax when he humiliates the greedy governor of Hamgyong province and escapes with grain and weapons. With the government forces in hot pursuit, he makes seven straw figures, infuses spirit into them, and dispatches them to the eight provinces. After each province has brought its captured "Kiltong" to the court, it is found that all eight men look alike in every respect. Kiltong explains to the king the evil practice of discrimination against illegitimate children and promises to leave Korea in ten years, if the king does not arrest him. At that moment, the eight men fall flat on the ground, turning out to be eight straw puppets. Shortly thereafter, Kiltong posts a notice on the four gates of the capital to the effect that if the government made him Minister of War he would surrender. Upon appointment to the post, Kiltong appears in person, thanks the king, soars high up among the clouds, and goes striding upon the wind. The king, deeply moved by his talent, pardons him.

Kiltong then sails off for an island near Nanking. After an adventure on Mangdang Mountain on Che Island, he conquers Yul Island in the South and builds a classless Utopia. After reigning thirty years he dies at the age of seventy-two, leaving behind three sons and two daughters.

---

\(^a\)Seventy-two is a mystic number in Chinese thought. For example, Confucius is said to have had seventy-two disciples, and Liu Pang, the founder of the Han dynasty, seventy-two black moles on his left thigh.
This work is clearly a "problem" novel. Though inspired by the Shui hu chuan, it is inferior to its Chinese model in plot and characterization. There still are elements of the ch'uan-ch'i in such episodes as the miraculous removal of grain from government granaries. It is also strongly autobiographical, and the hero is the ideal of the author. The Hong Kiltong chon advances the following ideas; abolition of the class system, especially as it includes discrimination against illegitimate sons; eradication of the contradictions inherent in contemporary society; liquidation of wealth unjustly amassed by avaricious officials and underlings; overseas emigration of the Korean people; anti-Buddhism, as implied in the hero's attack on and plundering of the Haein Temple. Another sociological novel is the anonymous Ch'on Uch'il chon ("Life of Ch'on Uch'i").

The historical novel, chiefly dealing with the personages and events during the Japanese and Manchu invasions, is a distinct type of fiction in the Yi period. Most of the historical novels are anonymous, and can be divided into the historical romance and the historical novel proper. Historical romances are mostly influenced by the San-kuo-chih yen-i and are invariably set in China. Even their narrative technique, especially the beginning and end of each chapter, is strongly reminiscent of the Chinese model. Hyperbolical descriptions appearing in the Chinese model reappear in their character sketches. Description of the hero is often limited to that of physical appearance, seldom given to the psychological aspect. Heroes are often masters in astronomy, military tactics, and magic. and their rise is mostly foretold by children's songs. Buddhism, Taoism, and Confucianism underlie the thought of these romances—especially Taoism.

In the Imjin nok ("Record of the Year 1592"), by an anonymous hand, famous generals who fought against the Japanese become heroes of the book. Events related to them are often not historical. The Yu Ch'ungnyol chon ("Exploits of Yu Ch'ungnyol"), Cho Ung chon ("Story of Cho Ung"), Chang Kukchin chon ("Story of Chang Kukchin"), and Kwôn Ikchung chon ("Story of Kwôn Ikchung") are some of the representative works of this type. Structurally, the last two consist of two parts, the first part dealing with the love or marriage of the hero, and the second with his military exploits.

The Im Kyôngôp chon ("Story of Im Kyôngôp") and Pakssi chon ("Life of Lady Pak"), on the other hand, are examples of historical fiction proper. The former is a story of General Im, who repulsed the Manchu invaders but was murdered by a villainous retainer, Kim Cha-jôm. The latter deals with Yi Sibaek (1592-1660) and his wife, née Pak, who distinguished themselves during the Manchu invasion. This book lays stress on the wife's accomplishment in magic. A woman who saves the state in a great crisis later becomes a type 47. Zong, pp. 224-234. in such historical fiction. This was a technique to attract women, who were the novel-reading public of the day.6

---

The court novels belong to historical fiction proper. The Kyech'uk ilgi ("Kyech'uk Diary") is a court diary written by an anonymous court lady. The book, consisting of two parts, records in realistic language the political upheavals and court intrigues between the years 1609 and 1623, especially the tyrant Kwanghae's misgovernment and his massacre of the family of Queen Mother Inmok. The heroine of the novel is the queen mother herself (1584-1632), and the persecutions she suffered and her secluded life are the main themes. The Hanjung nok ("A Record of Sorrowful Days," ?795-1805) is actually a book of court diaries, but is sufficiently artistic to be read as a novel. The author is Princess Hyegeyo (1735-1815), née Hong, the consort of Prince Sado (1735-1762), son of King Yongjo. The king was estranged from his son, who, owing to the king's persecution, became insane and died a cruel death at the age of twenty-eight. Princess Hyegeyo, who had to spend the rest of her life in seclusion and sorrow, wrote down her memories in epistolary form, the first part in 1795, in her sixty-first year, and second and third parts in 1805 for the reading of King Sunjo (1790-1801-1834). The book records in simple but moving language the cause of the death of Prince Sado, her secluded life after his death, and the persecutions she suffered at the hands of treacherous slanderers. Contemporary court life is vividly described in court language which abounds in graceful turns of speech and honorifics. The InhyOn wanghu chOn ("Tale of Queen InhyOn") is an anonymous story of court intrigue involving two queens. After the death of the first queen, King Sukchong marries Queen InhyOn (1667). Being unable to bear an heir, the queen asks the king to take a certain lady, Chang, as a concubine. After bearing a son, Lady Chang intrigues to advance herself to the position of queen, and finally succeeds and expels Queen InhyOn. The king feels remorse, and when Lady Chang's faction murders most of the deposed queen's supporters, he reinstates InhyOn as queen and kills Lady Chang.

The period of the maturity of the novel is marked by Kim Man-jung (1637-1692) and his two extant novels. His Kuun mong ("Cloud Dream of the Niue," 1687-1688), the third landmark in the Korean novel, was written at the place of his exile, Sooch'on, to console his ailing mother. Kim was an archpriest of the movement to keep the Korean language undefiled and to use Korean instead of Chinese in literary works. The plot of the Kuunmong is laid in T'ang China, and the novel is a romantic tale of the Buddhist idea of resignation, that all fame and glories of the human world are but a dream. A Buddhist saint, Taeyo (Great Master Yukkwan), sends out his best disciple, Songjin, on an errand to the Dragon King of Tungting Lake. At the same time a fairy matron sends her eight fairies to the master to inquire after his health. On the way home, Songjin meets the eight fairies, with whom he frolics till sunset. As a punishment he is sent to the Ruler of the Underworld, who takes pity on him and causes him to be born in a certain Yang family in Suju, with the name Yang So-yu. The eight fairies, too, are condemned to earth as human beings. They are born beautiful girls and grow up to be either famous kisaeng or daughters of respectable families. The hero establishes himself as a man of fame, securing a high position at court after passing the civil service examination. Various romances develop one after another as the hero meets all of the eight women. Thus, the hero who was reborn in the human world enjoys the pleasures of man with eight fairies who were condemned to the human world. One September afternoon, he climbs the hill west of his palace with his wives, each of whom wears a spray of chrysanthemum in her hair. They enjoy the autumn scenery, passing a cup back and forth among them. When the sun casts a shadow on the mountains and the clouds spread darkness over the plains, he takes out a jade flute and begins to play. Overcome with sorrow by the plaintive tune, the two wives turn to him and ask him why he looks so dejected. So-yu answers:

---

6The role played by women readers in the rise of vernacular fiction has been little studied. For a parallel phenomenon taking place in eighteenth-century England Addison remarks in the Guardian, No. 155 (Tuesday, September 8, 1713), a periodical started by Steele in March 1713 and discontinued in October of the same year: "There are some reasons why learning seems more adapted to the female world than to the male. As, in the first place, because they have more spare time upon their hands, and lead a more sedentary life . . . . A second reason why women should apply themselves to useful knowledge rather than men, is, because they have the natural gift of speech in greater perfection . . . . There is another reason why those especially who are women of quality should apply themselves to letters; namely, because their husbands are generally strangers to them."

7There are three woodblock editions, one in Chinese (1803) and two in Korean (1862, 1920); seven manuscript copies of which three are dated (1846, 1885, 1907); two editions printed in movable type, one in Chinese with Korean connectives (1911) and another in pure Korean (1913). The manuscript copy owned by Yi Ka-wOn is considered to be the best in Korean, other copies being derivations from it. James S. Gale, in preparing his English translation, used the 1803 edition and a Korean edition, conjectured to have been the source for the Yi Ka-wOn copy. There are also a Japanese interlinear edition (1916) and a Japanese translation, as well as numerous modern editions printed after 1913. In view of the lack of any convincing evidence that the work was written originally in Korean, the 1803 edition in Chinese is generally considered to be a basic text, perhaps derived from an authentic text no longer extant.

To the north I see a lonely peak standing amid a stretch of wide plains and the A-fang Palace of the First Emperor which stands amid the glow of twilight and entangled weeds; to the west a dreary wind stirs the forest as the evening clouds descend on the Mou Tomb of the Warrior Emperor of Han; to the east I see the painted walls mirrored in the sky and red roofs soaring skyward. The moon comes and goes over the deserted, jade railings of the Palace of Splendor and Purity where once Emperor Hsian-tsung frolicked with his Precious Consort Yang. All were once sovereigns of great renown; but where are they now? I, So-yu, a small scholar from the land of Ch'ü, have received great favors from the throne and I have risen to the rank of a general and of a minister. Moreover, the members of my family have lived together in harmony, and our deep affection increases as we advance in age. How could this have been here but for the affinity of a former existence? Once we die, however, lofty towers will crumble, crystal lakes will go dry, and our palace where we sing and dance today will be covered with weeds and lapped by the cold mist. Woodcutters and cow-herds will, then, tell our mournful story, saying, 'This is where Master Yang frolicked with his eight wives. His wealth and elegance, the jade faces and flowery bearings of his wives are gone, gone forever.' Those woodcutters and cow-herds will look upon this place just as I look upon the palaces and tombs of the ancient emperors. When I think of it, a man's life is nothing but the span of a moment.
He then comprehends the essence of the three religions (Confucianism, Buddhism, and Taoism) and chooses Buddhism as the path to his salvation. He returns with the eight fairies to his master, becomes a bodhisattva, and enters the Promised Land. The tenets of the three religions are incorporated into the texture of this novel, which can be said to afford an interesting indication of the current social attitude toward three ways of thought. Confucian bureaucracy was mainly identified with realistic and utilitarian pursuits, Taoism with Epicureanism, and Buddhism with quietism and the renunciation of the world. Buddhism is, however, predominant, especially the workings of karma. The three worlds in Buddhism—past, present, and future—are well linked together to achieve coherence and artistic integrity. One critic offers another view: the book is a reflection of man's ideal Weltanschauung in authoritarian society.

Another novel by Kim, the Sassi namjŏng ki ("Story of Lady Sa," c. 1689-1692), is a satirical remonstrance against the institution of concubinage, allegedly against King Sukchong who gave ear to his concubine and banished Queen Inhyŏn, as recorded in the Inhyŏn wanghu chŏn. The setting is laid in Ming China, but the story is an exact parallel to that of Queen Inhyŏn. When one considers that the author was banished from the court for his opposition to the king's move to degrade the queen, the motive of the novel becomes transparent. This novel is inferior in plot and narration to the Kuon mong, but as a first domestic novel it set up a pattern for such later novels as the Changhwa hongnyŏn chŏn ("Tale of Rose Flower and Pink Lotus.")

Written by an anonymous hand, the Changhwa hongnyŏn chŏn is a story of a cruel stepmother who maltreats the two daughters of the flower names. The stepmother, in an attempt to slander her stepdaughters, hides a large skinned rat in their bed at night. Next morning the stepmother accuses one of having a miscarriage, and has the girl, Rose Flower, drowned in the river. The other girl, Pink Lotus, is informed of her sister's death in a dream, and following a blue bird, goes to the scene of the murder, where, in great grief, she plunges into the waters. The spirits of the two virgins then become malicious ghosts and frighten the magistrate of the province. The ghosts harass the people so much that a renowned warrior, Chŏng Tong-u (real name: Chŏng Tong-ho), is dispatched from the capital. When he meets them, the ghosts appeal to the warrior to punish their stepmother and cleanse their names. The stepmother is executed for her crime, and the bodies of the two daughters are reclaimed from the river and given a decent burial. Satisfied, the malicious ghosts are reborn again as two daughters to the father, who has married a virtuous woman. The parents and daughters live happily ever after.

The action of the kongan novel, as it is called, always takes place in a law court. The term means "public cases," covering stories of crime and detection, wherein an upright and wise magistrate, a guardian of the law and champion of the people, solves a crime or settles a dispute. The Changhwa hongnyŏn chŏn can be considered to be an example of this type, when the court investigates the petition of the ghosts of the two girls and decides to avenge the stepmother on their behalf. The Chin Taebang chŏn ("Story of Chin Taebang"), Pak Munṣu chŏn ("Pak Munṣu, The Royal Inspector"), and Ongnangja chŏn ("Ongnang the Virtuous Wife") belong to this group. These novels are chiefly didactic in tone, and the reproval of vice and promotion of virtue is a recurrent theme. The magistrate's sermon generally emphasizes the five principles of human conduct. Yet these novels are rich in description of the family life of the common people.

The masterpiece of the Korean novel is unequivocally the Ch'unhyang chŏn ("Life of Spring Fragrance"), by an anonymous hand, the most popular novel in Korea. Written sometime in the eighteenth century, the novel was expanded with new parts added during the course of reprints so that the original version is difficult to trace. The novel is the story of a romance between the son of an upper-class family and the daughter of a socially despised kisaeng. A male servant of the hero is cast in the important role of spokesman for the common people of the time. During the reign of King Injo, Yi Toryŏng (Yŏng), the son of a yangban, falls in love with Spring Fragrance, the kisaeng daughter, on a spring day in the Kwanghan Pavilion. After turning down the repeated overtures of the hero through his cunning and comical servant Pangja, Spring Fragrance finally yields. The hero, however, is soon ordered to accompany his father, who has been nominated Minister of Personnel, to the capital. After a tearful scene of farewell in which they exchange tokens of remembrance, a mirror and a jade ring, the couple pledge eternal love, the girl promising that she will wait forever for Yŏng's return. After the hero's departure for Seoul, the provincial governor, enraptured by the beauty of Spring Fragrance, commands the mother of the girl to deliver her up as his concubine. The proposal firmly refused, the governor imprisons Spring Fragrance and subjects her to sadistic torture, which she endures with amazing fortitude. In the meantime, in the guise of a beggar, the hero returns to town to serve as the Secret Royal Inspector (amhaeng &a) of the provincial administration. Discovering the tragic fate of his beloved, he reveals his identity and hands out stern punishment to the governor and rescues the girl. They live happily ever after.

---

9Compare, for example, plays and stories centering around Pao Cheng (999-1062), a Sung official, including a Yulan play Huïan chi ("Circle of Chalk") and a Ming story Pao-kung an ("The Case of Lord Pao") or Lung-t'ư kung-an ("Cases of the Scholar of the Lung-t'ư Pavilion"). In some cases, however, crimes solved by the magistrate are not always closely related to the central plot of the kongan stories.

10In the Wanp'an edition the events of the plot take place during the time of King Sukchong.

11In the Wanp'an edition he is nominated Sixth Royal Secretary.

12This episode is omitted in the Wanp'an edition.

13The Wang'an edition identifies him as Pyŏh Hak-to.

14In the Kyŏngp'an edition Yong petitions for this role, while in the Wanp'an edition he is appointed by the king.

15According to the Wang'an edition, Mongnyong rose to be Chief State Counselor and had three sons and two daughters, all of whom emulated the accomplishments of their father.
There are four editions printed in block letters, of which the Kyŏngp'ăn (printed in Seoul under the title of Ch'unhyang chŏn) and Wanp'ăn (printed in Chŏngju under the title of Yŏllyŏ Ch'unhyang sujŏl ka) editions are our reliable sources for this novel. Besides, there are more than ten manuscript copies and some thirty printed editions. The Wanp'ăn edition shows a later stage in the development of the novel than the Kyŏngp'ăn edition, differing from the latter in the following details: Spring Fragrance is not a kisaeng daughter but a girl from a middle-class family; Yi Toryŏng's name is changed from Yong to Mongnyong, the name used in all subsequent editions; Yi is engaged to Spring Fragrance only with the consent of her mother; Hyangdan, a servant girl, always accompanies Spring Fragrance; on the way to Namwon, Mongnyong meets a messenger dispatched by Spring Fragrance with a letter and learns of his beloved's imprisonment; and in the prison Spring Fragrance has an encouraging dream in which some of the virtuous and heroic women of China appear and console her. Furthermore, the Kyŏngp'ăn edition is in prose, and the Wanp'ăn edition is in verse, in the kasa form, chiefly meant to be sung or recited.

People of all classes hold that the Ch'unhyang chŏn is the ripest production of the Korean novel. It is. The Ch'unhyang story enjoyed a long evolution in the course of its development, and its "matter" is the property of all the people. Its source might have been a simple story current among the people about love and feminine virtue. But when an anonymous writer wrote it down in the eighteenth century, it became a book which epitomized the Korean people's manners and customs, dreams and beliefs of the time. The novel contains brilliant characters, who live in every reader's memory, and abounds in human and humorous action. Beautiful and virtuous Spring Fragrance and her devoted and shrewd kisaeng mother (Wŏlmae), passionate and upright Yi Toryŏng and his cunning yet loyal servant are masterly inventions. Yet Spring Fragrance's chastity and virtue suffuse the entire novel, giving a special reality and poignancy to the work. The people delight to see in Spring Fragrance a paragon of chastity and a model of the virtuous wife; but others also read the book for its protest against the privileged class and defense of human rights.

Except for a few imitations of the Ch'unhyang chŏn and some minor works, the classical novel entered its period of decline in the nineteenth century. One of the notable works of this period, however, is probably the anonymous Imhwa Chŏngyŏn. It presents altogether several hundred characters, of whom seventy are cast in important roles. The leading roles belong to four women, Im, Hwa, Chŏng, and Yŏn, all of whom are at the center of a human panorama of immense scope around the hero, Imsaeng. Other noteworthy titles are the Ch'ae-bong kimbyŏl kok ("The Lament of Ch'ae-bong") and Pae paejang chŏn ("Story of Subcommander Pae"). The former is a mixture of novel and ballads; the latter employs much dramatic dialogue. The germ of the former was a dramatic narrative sung by a ballad singer. When written down in its present form as a novel, it became a satirical and humorous piece of literature.
Fiction in Korean

We have omitted discussion of fables, children’s stories (e.g., K’ongjwi p’atchwi16, and legends turned into novels (e.g., Simch’ŏng chŏn17 and Hŭngbu chŏn18).

With the importation of Western civilization and culture toward the end of the Yi dynasty, traditional verse and prose forms rapidly gave way to new. Yi In-jik, the first writer of the new novel modeled after the Western style, will be discussed later.

Bibliography: Fiction in Chinese and in Korean

Kim Ki-dong, Hanguk kodae sosŏl kaeron ("Outline of Classical Korean Novels") (1956).

Kim T’a-e-jun, Yŏjo sidoesosŏl non ("Essays in Yi Dynasty Novels") (1959).

Studies in the Novel

Chŏng Pyŏng-uk, Kungmunhak san go (1960), pp. 212-221.
Kim Ham-dik, "Eun kung’ŏng sosŏl t’i sŏngkyŏk myosa sŏgo" ("The Character Sketch in the Court Novel"), Suktas munhak, 2 (1958), 204-218.
"Hanguk sosŏl paltae tan’gye e issŏsŏi Chungsuk sosŏl t’i yŏnghyang" ("The Influence of Chinese Novels on the Development of the Korean Novel"), KTN, I (1956), 43-89.
Korean Literature

Studies on Individual Works

Pak Chi-won, Togang nok, tr. Yi Yun-jae (1946).
Pak Song-oi "Kwangmunja chon yon'gu" (A Study of the Kwangmunja chon), Immun kwahak, 7 (1962), 25-52.
Pak Chi-won, Togang nok, tr. Yi Yun-jae (1946).
Pak Song-oi "Kwangmunja chon yon'gu" (A Study of the Kwangmunja chon), Immun kwahak, 7 (1962), 25-52.
Pak Chi-won, Togang nok, tr. Yi Yun-jae (1946).
Pak Song-oi "Kwangmunja chon yon'gu" (A Study of the Kwangmunja chon), Immun kwahak, 7 (1962), 25-52.

Legends, Narratives, and Tales

Ch'oe Sang-su, Choson chimonyong chonsol chip ("Tales Connected with Place Names") (1947).
Choson min'gan chonsol chip ("A Collection of Korean Folk Tales") (1947).
Kyongju ui kojok kwa chonsol ("Historic Remains and Legends of Kyongju") (1946).
Hong Sa-yong, Paekche ui chonsol ("Legends of Paekche") (1959).
Pak Kyong-won, Kyongnam ui kojok kwa munhwa ("Historic Remains and Culture of South Kyongsang Province") (1955).
Son Chin-tae, Choson minjok munhwa ui yon'gu ("Studies in Korean National Culture") (1948).
Choson minjok sdrhw aui yon'gu ("Studies in the Folklore of Korea") (1947).
Kim Si-sop

"Kim Si-sop yon'gu" ("The Life and Thought of Kim Si-sop"), STN, VII (1958), 153-196.
Yi Ka-won, tr., Komo sinhw (1953).
Fiction in Korean

Hoh Kyun

Chong Chu-dong, Hong Kil tong chon yon'gu ("Studies in the Life of Hong Kil tong") (Taegu, 1961).

Kim Man-jung

Chong Kyu-bok, "Kau·mung ibon ko" ("Different Editions of the Kuan mong"), AY, IV/2 (1961), 41-3; V/1 (1962), 133-159.

Pak Song-ki, tr., Kuan mong, Sanli namyong ki (1959).

Yi Ka-won, tr., Kuan mong (1955).

Ch'unhyang chon

Cho Yun-je, ed., Ch'unhyang chon pu Ch'unhyang chon ibon ko ("Ch'unhyang chon, with an Appendix on its Different Editions") (1962).

Yi Ka-won, ed., Ch'unhyang chon (1957).

Yi In-mo, "Ch'unhyang chon bi munjang sŏngkyŏkhakhok sigo" ("Masculine and Feminine Styles of Speech in the Ch'unhyang chon"), Mulli nonjip, V (1962), 49-88.

Translations

Anonymous, Fragrance of Spring, tr. Chai Hong Sim (1962).

Griffis, William Elliott, The Unmannered Tiger and Other Korean Tales (New York, 1911).

Im Pang and Yi Yuk, Korean Folk Tales, tr. James S. Gale (Rutland and Tokyo, 1963).

Kotschubej, Nikolay V., Koreanische Märchen (Zürich, 1948).

Metzger, Berta, Tales Told in Korea (New York, 1932).

Zong In-soo, Folk Tales from Korea (London, 1952); reviewed by Peter H. Lee in Comparative Literature, VII (1955), 162-164.
IX. The Drama

Korean drama has its origin in the agricultural festivals of the primitive era. During such festivals as the Majigut, Saebulk, and Hanbukch'um among the northern tribes and on similar occasions in the fifth and tenth moons among the southern tribes, the people drank, sang, and danced. The dances were performed to the rhythmic accompaniment of chorus or drums and other musical instruments. There is speculation that the people on such occasions may have worn masks to threaten wild animals or masks of famous generals who distinguished themselves in tribal wars. We may see remnants of such mask dances in the lion dance of Pukch'ong, mask dance of Pongsan, and "five-actor play" (Ogwangdae) of Tongnyong, Pusan, Tongnae, Kosong, and Chinju. On the fifteenth day of the first moon the people in Pukch'ong, wearing masks of different animals, march in a procession, headed by the lion. Accompanied by music they go through the village and gather money and rice which become communal property to be used later on occasions of marriage, funeral, famine, and flood. This dance is, however, conjectured to be of foreign origin.

Lack of records prevents a detailed study of ritual dances in Koguryo and Paekche. It is, however, established that among the three kingdoms Koguryo was the first to import Central Asian instruments. Koguryo music and dances were famous in Sui and T'ang as well as in Japan. The earliest record of the performance of "a hundred shows" by mimes, acrobats, jugglers, singers, and dancers in Silla occurs in the year A.D. 32. Another recorded instance of such festivals with dances and theatrical performances occurred in the year 551, in conjunction with the establishment of the harvest festival (p'agwanhoe) by King Chinthong.

A ritual symbolizing the conflict between the forces of life and death in Silla was a sword dance instituted in honor of their national hero, Knight Kwan Ch'ang, a hwang. At the age of sixteen, Kwan Ch'ang, son of P'umil, participated in the invasion of Paekche as vice-commander of the Silla army, but was killed (660) by the equally famous Paekche general Kyu Paek. In order to praise his heroism and loyalty, the people initiated this dance lamenting the premature death of the knight. This dance seems to have been popular in the Koryo and Yi dynasties. The Chungbo munhon pigo ("Korean Encyclopaedia") adds that the sword dance was performed together with the Ch'oyong dance in later times.

The Ch'oyong was another famous dance in Silla. Ch'oyong, son of the Dragon King of the Eastern Sea, exorcised evil spirits by song and dance (879). After this event the Ch'oyong mask was used by the people for exorcising demons. Views differ as to the origin of Ch'oyong, but it is safe to consider his dance a dance of folk origin dating from the ninth century. The thirteenth-century text of the choral dance of Ch'oyong attests to the popularity of Ch'oyong and his power in the Koryo period. In the early fifteenth century, this dance was thoroughly revised by King Sejong as the most important court dance in the Yi dynasty. Together with other court dances, it was performed at court on New Year's Eve, at the fifth watch (see chap. ii).2

Puzzling yet characteristic mask dances in Silla are the "Five Shows" (ogi), as recorded in Ch'oe Ch'i-won's poems. They are, in the Korean reading of the logographs, the kumhwan, wolchon (from Khotan), taemyon, soktok (from Sogdiana), and sanye and are thought all to be of Central Asian origin.

The most famous mask play in Korea is sandae, which originated toward the end of Koryo.3 It was performed on a stage by masked actors following a script which presents a story with spoken lines and intermittent dances and songs. The sandae was further developed in the fifteenth century, when it became one of the important official observances of the Yi dynasty. The court protected and encouraged this play in order to present it before the Chinese envoy as a chief entertainment upon his arrival in Korea on yearly official missions. Actors and musicians gathered together on this occasion, and the foreign dignitaries were entertained at the outskirts of Seoul just before they entered the capital. The sandae, under court auspices, became the repository of all mask plays of folk origin; it even incorporated the Ch'oyong dance as well as the narye4 of Koryo.

The play opens with a shamanist offering to the spirits of the land, and consists of ten scenes or acts, each named for a character in that act, such as "The High Priest," "The Pock-Marked Priest," "The Dark-Faced Priest," "The Priest of the Blinking Eyes," and the like.5 In the Kkoktakaksi puppet 2The particulars of this elaborate ritual are recorded in the section on "Hangnyounsawade Ch'byongmu hapol" in the Akhak kwebbm ("Canon of Music," 1493), V, 11b-16a.

---

3Also called sandae sagum kik. The word sandae (or sandi) has been studied by scholars, but no one knows its origin or meaning. The sandae, as we have it today, originated in Kyonggi province: pon sandae in the western sub-rbs of Seoul, and pyol (or Yangju) sandae in the old village of Yungu. Pon sandae, however, disappeared, and only pyol sandae survives today.

4A court ceremony held on New Year's Eve to exorcise evil spirits.
The Drama

The play, the theme is the triangular affair of a yangban, his wife, and his concubine. The play, in its later version, pours scorn upon the Yi nobility as well as on the apostate priests. The sandae has an all-male cast, and its performance is accompanied by drums, strings, and brass instruments. Besides official occasions, it was performed on a makeshift stage in open air in the village square on festival occasions such as on the eighth day of the fourth moon, the fifth day of the fifth moon, and the fifteenth day of the eighth moon. The sandae still survives today.

The Haesŏ (also called Pongsan mask dance) and Hahoe⁵ are other representative mask plays originating from Hwanghae and North Kyŏngsang provinces respectively. In the Haesŏ,⁶ a seven-act play, the roles vary slightly according to the locality in which it is performed. It is presented in the village square, without a stage, and at the conclusion the masks and costumes are thrown into a bonfire in the belief that they are possessed of evil spirits. The Hahoe, a five-act play, is presented as part of a shamanist service intended to cleanse the village of evil spirits. It is performed on the second and fifteenth days of the first lunar month in honor of two female tutelary deities who are worshipped annually, although the mask play is performed only in a large-scale decennial ceremony. The moderator of the ceremony, usually a village elder, after observing a ritual fast and purification, opens the box containing the masks. Sixteen male actors and musicians, chosen among the villagers, then proceed to the altar on the hilltop, make offerings, and perform a dance. The same dance is repeated on the fifteenth day to mark the end of the ceremony. The masks, mostly reddish in color, are carved from sandalwood and have holes pierced for the eyes and mouth. Some have the lower jaw separate and tied on with strings, in order to give a more realistic appearance. The fourth act, a mime, portrays a lion fighting and is said to symbolize an exorcism to ward off evil spirits and to welcome good luck for the new year.

In both the Haesŏ and Hahoe there are bitter attacks on the bureaucracy, Buddhist clergy, and shamans and on current fashions of thought and behavior.

The Kkoktukaksi (or Pak ch'ŏmji), the representative Korean puppet play, is presented by an itinerant troupe of six or seven members, three of whom are usually musicians. The puppet dramatis personae consist of Pak Ch'ŏmji (the hero), his wife (Kkoktukaksi), his concubine (Tolmorijip), his younger brother ⁵The name of a village in North Kyŏngsang.

⁶Unlike other mask plays which generally lack a sense of unity, the Pongsan has a simple yet ordered structure. (1) The apostate monk Ch'wibal, who has been enticed by a devil to tempt an old master of the Law, orders four head monks to dance in front of a temple where the master is reciting the Diamond Sutra; (2) Through the manipulation of Ch'wibal eight monks break their vows and dance before the master in order to corrupt him; (3) An itinerant dancing girl swirls around before the master in another attempt to deprave him; (4) Ch'wibal, two female shamans, eight monks, and the master dance together, suggesting that the master has finally fallen from grace; (5) A lion is dispatched by the Buddha to punish Ch'wibal and his companions for leading the master astray. When the fierce animal devours one of the monks, the others come to their senses, promise to repent, and dance with the lion; (6) Malttuk, a nobleman's servant, caricatures a corrupt official and arrests Ch'wibal. The seventh scene, which is perhaps a later addition, virtually unrelated to the previous parts of the play, depicts a conflict between a female shaman and her lover.
Korean Literature

(So Pak Ch'ŏnju), two young Shaman priestesses, and others. There are, in addition, a dog, pheasant, falcon, and snake. Musicians are included in the cast as villagers. It has eight acts, each independent of the others.

Realistic rather than symbolic, the puppets adhere to the text closely. But the length of the performance depends entirely on the circumstances and the interpretation of the narrators. Often several acts are omitted, but the main plot is always presented. As in the sandae, the object of exaggerated humor and satire is the yangban class (Acts V, VI, VII) and priests (II, VIII). When the troupe was invited by nobles, Act VII was omitted because of its open attack on the Yi bureaucracy.

Drama in Korea was essentially a folk art. It grew among, and was a property of, the common people. The mask and puppet plays, as we have seen, were closely associated with the shamanist and Buddhist religions, the folk songs and dances formed the basis of the plays. The texts have little literary merit. No drama text survives from the times of Silla and Koryŏ, except fragments of choral songs used perhaps in a mask play.

The drama, which could have developed into a literary genre, was denied its development owing to the conditions of Yi society. Actors occupied the lowest of the lower social strata, and no serious writer was interested in writing a play for his inferiors. The only form in which popular plays could survive was in occasional entertainments at court or at noble houses or at fairs and festivals. Actors therefore had to tour the country after the harvest, during the farmers' leisure season, barely subsisting on donations or villagers' good-will.

In addition to mask and puppet plays, there was another kind of dramatic entertainment in Korea, the p'ansori. Like the minstrel in medieval Europe, the kwangdae was a professional entertainer who recreated, dramatized, and sang known tales and narratives. What he did was select the most dramatic episodes from oral tradition and sing them with gestures and to the accompaniment of a drum. The first recorded singers of the p'ansori were Ha Han-dam and Ch'oe Sŏn-dal in the beginning of the eighteenth century. The p'ansori developed in the southwestern part of Korea, chiefly in Cholla province. The singers wrote the texts and composed the tunes, and their repertory consisted of twelve titles (madang). Among them the most famous was the Ch'unhyang chon.

Many popular novels such as the Ch'unhyang chon, Simch'ŏng chôn, and Sugyŏng nangja chon ("Story of Suyong") were outgrowths of the p'ansori, demonstrating their origin unmistakably in their style; they were meant to be recited or sung rather than read. The texts of the p'ansori differed from ordinary novels in that they were sung outdoors for the immediate audience who gathered there to enjoy the performer's vocal talents as well as his narrative skill. Another characteristic of popular p'ansori was the incorporation of popular folk songs. The Ch'\'unhyang ch\'on, for instance, contains thirty-six songs of folk origin. In the nineteenth century, Sin Chae-hyo (1812-1884), the most famous writer of p'ansori, revised six of the twelve traditional titles in the repertory. Today the p'ansori is no longer a popular art.

Bibliography: the Drama

Cho Yun-je, Kungmunhak kaes\'ol (1960), 208-236.
Ch'oe Sang-su, Annual Customs of Korea (1960).
Ham Hwa-jin, Chos\'on \'umak t'ongnon ("Outline of Korean Music") (1948).
Kim Chae-ch\'\'ol, Chos\'on y\'on'g\'uk sa ("History of Korean Drama") (1933).
Song Sok-ha, Hanguk minson ko ("Studies in Korean Folklore") (1960).
Yi Pyong-g\'i, Kungmunhak kaerun ("Outline of Korean Literature") (1961), pp. 81-99, 149-173.

Ch\'oe Sang-su, "Hanguk min'gan ch\'ons"ng yuhii chi" ("Popular Games in Korea"), MH, 2 (1957), 129-197.
Ham Hwa-jin, "Hanguk s\'obu \'ui kamy\'on muguk" ("Mask Dance Play in Southern Korea"), MH, 1 (1956), 76-81.
Yi Pyong-g\'i, "Ogwandaex sayuyu kamy\'on'guk haeje" ("Introduction to the Ogwandaex") MH, 2 (1957), 256-280.
Im Soch-kei, "Paebaengikut taesa" ("The Text of the Paebaengikut"), MH, 1 (1956), 180-188; 2 (1957), 201-226, 228-255.
Cho Won-gyong, "Narye wa kamy\'on muguk" ("Exorcism and Mask Dance Play"), Hangnim (Y\'ons\'e Univ.), 4 (1955), 16-89.
Ch\'oe Ung-nok, "Kasa munhaksange na\'an sesi p\'ungsok koch'\'al" ("Korean Customs as They Appear in Kasa Literature"), Ch\'ondam University Kungmunhak po, 3 (1962), 44-94.
Kim Sa-yep, "Chapkhi\'u ko" ("A Study of Various Sports and Plays in Korea"), YHS, pp. 139-172.
Kim Tae-kyu, "Y\'onggo ko" ("A Study of Y\'onggo"), KKY, 2 (1958), 5-16.
Son Chin-t\'ae, ed., "S\'ongin nori p\'uny\'om kwa my\'ongnor\'i p\'uny\'om" ("S\'ongin nori p\'uny\'om and my\'ongnor\'i p\'uny\'om"), Safo, 1 (1958), 242-254.

“KommuhUi” (“Sword Dance”), YHS, pp. 343-359.

“Muae-hi sogo” (“A Note on Muae”), Mun’gyong, 1 (1955), 7-12.

“Sandaehi e ch’wihayo” (“On the Sandae Mask Play”), in Thirtieth Anniversary Volume of Chungang University, pp. 189-212.

Yi Tu-hyon, “Hanguk ui kamyŏn” (“Korean Masks”), Sajo, II/5 (1958), 238-244.

“Sandae togam kŏk t’i sŏngnip e taehayŏ” (“On the Formation of the Sandae Mask Play”), KK, 18 (1957), 9-41.

Sino Chae-hyo, Sin Chae-hyo chŏn’ip, ed. Kang Han-yŏng (4 vols.; 1962-)

Development of Vernacular Genres of Prose and Verse in Korea
X. Writings in Chinese

Because of geographical proximity, the importation of Chinese characters and classics into the ancient Korean kingdoms must have taken place as early as the second century before Christ. The fact of cultural intercourse between China and the Korean states is documented by Chinese sources which attest to the two-way traffic in early days. We have such titles of early compositions as the Hwangjo ka ("Song of Yellow Birds"), by Yi Ruyi, and Konghuin ("Melody for Harp"), by Yook, whose authenticity is suspect. With the establishment of the Chinese commanderies in the peninsula, the flow of Chinese culture rapidly increased, and Koguryo, which rose from the territories of one of those commanderies, had contacts with Chinese immigrants there and used Chinese characters long before it became a kingdom. The inscription on the monument erected in honor of King Kwanggaeto (391-412), consisting of 1,759 characters, is an example of the literary accomplishment of the Koguryo people. In 600 Yi Mun-jin compiled an official history of Koguryo, and in 612 General Utchi Mundok wrote a five-word *chüeh-chü" to overawe the enemy general, Yu Chung-wen, on the occasion of Sui's invasion. Chinese was freely used in diplomatic and official documents in Paekche from the middle of the fourth century. An official history was compiled in the time of King Kunch'ogo (346-375); in 472 a royal message was sent to Northern Wei, and in 541 an envoy was sent to Liang requesting commentaries on the Nirvāṇa Sūtra and the Book of Songs. Even in Silla, which received continental culture much later than Koguryo and Paekche, Chinese was an official written language from the time of King Naemul (356-401). During the reign of Kings Pophung and Chijoong the use of Chinese increased, and in 545 King Chinhung ordered Kochilbu to compile a national history. The inscriptions on King Chinhung's monuments erected at the sites of his royal inspections are good pieces of writing in Chinese.

After the unification of the peninsula, Chinese learning developed further in Silla. In 651 the national university was established, and students devoted nine years of study to the Analects, Book of Filial Piety, Book of Changes, Collected Ritual, and the like. Great scholars came one after another: Kang Su 1See Ku-chin chu (Han-Wei ts'ung-chu 15), II, 2a-b.

---

Korean Literature

(c. 654-692), who excelled in composing diplomatic documents; Sol Ch'ong (b. 655), who systematized the idu letters; and Kim Tae-mun whose now unavailable Hwarang segi, Akpon, and Hansan ki furnished Kim Pu-sik with invaluable data for the history of the three kingdoms. But the one who brought Chinese learning to completion in Silla was Ch'oe Ch'i-won (857-915), who passed the civil service examination at the T'ang court at the age of eighteen. There he wrote the famous manifesto on the occasion of the rebellion of Huang Ch'ao and returned to Korea in 885. Altogether, fifty-eight Silla nationals passed the T'ang examination, and they studied chiefly T'ang poetry and parallel prose. The use of the Wen hsüan ("Anthology of Literature") in the Silla university as a textbook must have furthered the use of parallel prose among scholars and writers.

With the establishment of the national university in Koryo in 930 and the system of the civil service examination from 958, Chinese became the medium of expression among the literati. The adoption of the examination system encouraged the candidates to study only Chinese classics, histories, and belles-lettres and emphasized scholarly and literary skills. Therefore, men of literary talent started to worship China and to neglect the indigenous culture which they had inherited from the previous dynasty. The parallel prose style continued to be practised in early Koryo, but from the time of King Songjong (1049-1083), it began to yield its supremacy to pre-Han and Han styles. This change in stylistics was also reflected in the university, where the Wen hsüan was no more on the regular curriculum. Even so, in the beginning of the twelfth century a Sung envoy to Koryo noted the lingering effect of parallel prose in Korean writing. Ch'oe Ch'ung (984-1068), who established the first private institution of learning in Koryo, and Pak Il-lyang still wrote in parallel prose. But Kim Pu-sik (1075-1151), author of the Samguk sagi, definitely advocated reform in prose style.

After the coup d'état by the military class in 1170, scholar-statesmen lost their political prestige and hid themselves in remote mountains and villages. There they taught children of the literati class and bequeathed their literary tradition to such writers of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries as Yi In-no, Im Ch'un, Yi Kyu-bo, Chin Hwa, and Ch'oe Cha. Yi In-no, author of the P'ahan chip ("Gleanings from Leisure Hours"), wrote crystal-pure and elegant verse. Yi Kuy-bo sang fondly of such plants and animals as the duckweed, heron, and sea anemone, and his poetic spring was so nearly inexhaustible that he even composed in dreams. He was praised for his originality and for the transcendental quality in his verse and was compared to Li Po in his lifetime. His preferred poet was Po Chü-i, and his middle and later poems show his indebtedness to this Chinese master. His prose was as significant as his poetry. He was deeply versed in Taoism and Buddhism, especially the Zen and T'ien-t'ai sects, and drew freely from these two teachings to enrich his writing.

In the beginning of the fourteenth century Neo-Confucianism was imported Writings in Chinese

93
to Korea by An Hyang (1243-1306) or by Paek 1-jong (fl. 1314). Scholars soon turned to Neo-Confucianism, rejected Buddhism, and preached that the study of the classics should come before that of belles-lettres. Great names during this period are Yi Che-hyon, Yi Saek, and Chong Mong-ju. Yi Che-hyon went several times to the Yuan court on diplomatic missions, and his fame was widespread in literary circles there. He was the first to master the tzu form of verse, which he used in some of his best poems. The verse of Yi Saek was characterized by majestic lines. He taught Chu Hsi's philosophy at court and cultivated men of ability who were to carry his learning over to the Yi dynasty. Chong Mong-ju, perhaps the greatest student of Neo-Confucianism, was credited with being the father of that philosophy in Korea.

The Koryö dynasty also produced a host of priest-poets, Sont'an, Ch'oniin, Chinjong (d. 1130), and Iryon. Among important works which are still extant are: the Kyunyo Ch'on (1075), Samguk sagi (1146), Haedong kosung chon ("Lives of Eminent Korean Monks," 1215), Samguk yusa (c. 1285), and Chewang un'gi ("Rhymed History of Emperors and Kings," 1287).

Meritorious subjects who assisted Yi Ssong-gye in founding the Yi dynasty were literary men versed in the teachings of Neo-Confucianism. Among them the most noteworthy were Chong To-jon and Kwon Kun, who rejected Buddhism as a heterodox religion and instituted Sung rationalism as the official political philosophy of the new dynasty. The Neo-Confucianism which they accepted as a guiding ideology emphasized metaphysics, in particular the theory of the five relations and its application in social, political, and ethical spheres. Henceforth all political and cultural activities were judged and standardized by the yardstick of this new philosophy. As a result of such dogmatism, the development of native sensibility and creativity in the arts was stifled.

Within thirty years of the founding of the Yi, Neo-Confucianism came to dominate the Korean world of thought and education. Scholars during this period were mostly those who passed the examination at the end of the Koryo dynasty and supported the Yi usurpation: Ha Yun, Kwon Kun, Pyon Kye-ryang, and Yun Hoe. When King Sejong established the Hall of Scholars (see chap. iii) and encouraged learning and literature, a series of learned men gathered under this great king: Sin Suk-chu (1417-1475), Chong In-ji (1397-1478), Pak Paeng-nyon (1417-1456), and Song Sam-mun (1418-1456). The greatest writer in the early Yi period was So Ko-jong (1420-1488), compiler of the Samguksa choryo ("Summary of the History of the Three Kingdoms"), Tongguk tonggam ("General Mirror of the Eastern Country"), Tongin sihwa, and others. The tendency among these men was to continue to practise the ancient style in prose and to study T'ang poetry and one Sung poet, Huang T'ing-chien (1045-1105).

An important change that took place in the learned world in the sixteenth century was a split between two groups of scholars, one emphasizing philosophy and the other pure literature and literary arts. The former group of scholars were purists who in their aspiration scorned worldly careers and lived far from the court. Earlier, Kil Chae (1353-1419), a surviving Koryo loyalist, had set the pattern in the South, in Sŏnsan, where he taught his disciples the Confucian classics, especially the Lesser Learning. Kil Chae was a follower of Ch'ŏng Mong-ju in his emphasis on the study of the classics and the actual practice of the sage's teachings. His teaching was bequeathed to Kim Chong-jik (1431-1492), Kim Koeng-p'il (1454-1504), and finally to Cho Kwang-jo (1482-1519). After the usurpation of Sejo in 1455 and the misgovernment by tyrant Yŏnsan'gun, the people were reduced to great misery and ethics and morality were slackened. Upon his enthronement, therefore, King Chungjong realized that Neo-Confucianism, emphasizing the five relations, was the best means of governing his country and people. He himself lectured on the Great Learning and clearly outlined the path Yi dynasty scholarship should take. That path was expressed in the following message: "Study of Confucian classics is the root, and the art of literary composition is the branch." And in 1515, with the advent of Cho Kwang-jo, who was known to his generation as a supreme interpreter of the classics and assiduous practitioner of Confucian virtues, the condition of the academic world came to be completely changed.
Korean Literature

Cho Kwang-jo introduced reforms into the civil service examination and university curriculum. He and his group advocated a close study of the classics and scorned as "spurious art" the composition of essays and verse which had hitherto been the major part of the examination, asserting that the emphasis on literary skills amounted to a utilitarian exploitation of classical learning, but not of its re-creation or practice in one's own age. Ardent reformists and militant Confucianists who were determined to re-create the age of Yao and Shun in Korea, they condemned practitioners of literary art as "superficial and frivolous," even arguing that the sovereign should not compose poetry and should not command his officials to compose verse for presentation to him. Their radical reform movement was challenged by older officials and scholars who followed the traditional mode of learning in the country. They refuted the charge made against them by Cho's group and pointed out the importance of the literary arts. Thus the world of Chinese learning was divided into two groups, the adherents of textual criticism (philosophy) and those of belles-lettres (literature). Since traditional Chinese learning in Korea had been a mixture of both philosophy and literature, the distinct division between the two meant a new development of pure literature in Chinese. Also since literature became constantly an object of criticism by the philosophy school, writings in Chinese came to have more content and substance. To the literature school belonged Kim Il-son, Nam Kon, Cho Wi, and Nam Hyo-on. The first three were all considered to have been disciples of Kim Chong-jik, who was often considered to be the champion of Neo-Confucianism in the early Yi period but who was actually more skilled in verse and prose than philosophy. Important poets were Pak Ŭn (1479-1504), who died young in the literati purge of 1504;
Yi Haeng (1478-1534), who excelled in the five-word verse; and Sŏng Hyŏn, author of the Yongjae ch'onghwa ("Collected Works of Yongjae") and Akhak kwebŏm. Important scholars who belonged to the philosophy school were Kim An-guk, Kim Chŏng-guk, No Su-sin (1515-1590), Yi Hwang, and Yi I.

Chinese writings in Korea reached maturity during the reign of King Sonjo. A host of major writers adorned the literary world. A group of three poets, Ch'oe Kyŏng-ch'ang (1539-1583), Paek Kwang-hun (1537-1582), and Yi Tal studied chiefly T'ang poets and wrote only verse. In the beginning of the dynasty, Su Tung-p'o was in vogue, but from the middle of the sixteenth century writers turned again to T'ang poetry. The great prose writer of the day was Ch'oe Ip (1539-1612), who was versed in the writings of Ou-yang Hsiu (1007-1070) and practised the ancient style. Ch'a Ch'ŏn-no (1556-1615) is worthy of mention for his masculine style; he also wrote verse, chiefly seven-word li-shih (regulated verse) and five-word verse. Kwŏn P'il (1569-1612) and Yi An-nul (1571-1637) also left jewels in poetry. A group of four writers known in literary history as the “Four Masters” are Yi Chŏng-gu (1564-1635), Sin Hŭm (1566-1628), Chang Yu (1587-1638), and Yi Sik (1584-1647). The writings of Yi Chŏng-gu were well known not only in Korea, but also in China, where they were unanimously praised by the Ming critics for their freshness of imagery and noble emotion. Sin Hŭm, author of the Sangch'on chip ("Collected Works of Sangch'on"), was a man of wide learning who excelled in verse. Chang Yu was a versatile poet who tried such Chinese forms as the sao, fu, tz'u, and li shih. Leader of the belles-lettres school, he drew freely from Taoism and Buddhism to embellish his prose and verse. Yi Sik, on the other hand, proposed that one should study the Book of Songs as well as Ch'u tz'u and perfect one's study by following the poems of Tu Fu as one's models. In prose he suggested Han Yü (786-824) as a model.

The more Neo-Confucianism developed, the farther became the gap between that Sung rationalism and the everyday life of the people. Sung philosophy, however lucid or profound its theories might be, could not solve the actual problems of the Korean people. The elucidation of the Supreme Ultimate or of ch'i and li alone could not solve the pressing social and economic needs of the day. As a reaction to this empty idealism which proved itself to be of little use after the Japanese and Manchu invasions, practical learning arose among a handful of learned men. The beginning of practical learning (sirhak) in Korea is often identified with Yu Hyŏn-wŏn (1622-1673). Yu made a thorough historical research to analyze the current political system as well as the tax and landholding systems. In his Pan'gye surok ("Essays of Pan'gye," 1652-1670; 26 chaps.) he outlined measures for land reform. But the bud of the sirhak movement had been visible even in the beginning of the seventeenth century. Yi Su-gwang (1563-1629) and Kim Yuk² (1580-1658) actively imported Catholicism and new sciences from Peking. Yi, who went to Peking three times on diplomatic missions, introduced to Korea for the first time European learning from such countries as England and France and elucidated Catholicism. He was also a champion of Korean literature and laid emphasis on the true values of vernacular poetry. Kim Yuk brought from Peking books on the calendar and mathematics, advocated land reform and the minting of coins, and urged the use of the water wheel and other machines to lighten the burden of farmers. Following Yu Hyöng-wôn, Yi Ik (1682-1764) not only advocated the well-field system in agriculture but also made historical researches in and textual criticism of the classics in his Sôngho sasîl.⁴ With the coming of Pak Chi-wôn (1737-1805; see chap. vii), practical learning was not only firmly established, but became the dominant trend of thought.

Pak read widely to discover the best solution for reforming the current administration. His great reform proposal concerned the written language of the day. Idealists blindly following Neo-Confucianism still wrote in the literary language of China, a foreign language and a dead one at that. Pak, on his return from China, wrote the Yörha ilgi (“Jehol Diary”) in a new style drawing freely from the colloquial language spoken in China and used in popular literature such as the novel and the drama. King Chöngjo, however, was a purist in style and supported the antiquated literary language and termed the Yörha ilgi “unorthodox”. But Pak scorned tradition and continued to write an easy and practical prose that could be understood by men of average education. His masterpiece, the Kwanong soch’o (“Handbook of Agriculture”),⁵ was written to promote the welfare of the people. By the end of the eighteenth century, he and his disciples — among whom the greatest was Ch’ong Yag-yong (1762-1836) — had laid a firm foundation for practical learning and for the new literary style which emphasized spontaneous expression of emotion and originality and freedom in literary works.

The last poet of importance before the fall of the Yi dynasty was Sin Wi (1769-1845), who was skilled in painting, calligraphy, and verse. He was perhaps the most voluminous poet of the Yi period. Like Yi Che-hyôn, Sin translated the famous sijo into Chinese, using the seven-word verse form.

In 1894 the civil service examination was abolished, and official documents began to appear in a mixture of Korean and Chinese. The study of Confucian

---
⁴For Kim’s role in the introduction of the tribute tax system see Ching Young Choe, “Kim Yuk (1580-1658) and the Taedongbop Reform,” Journal of Asian Studies, XXIII, No. 1 (1963), 21-35.
⁵This book is a collection of Yi’s essays in thirty chapters and is divided into five headings: Heaven and Earth, Creation, Human Affairs, Classics and History, and Verse and Prose. It describes Western theories on astronomy and geography and sets store by the positive methods of historiography. His interpretation of the Tangun myth, for example, is a scientific investigation of the nature of the myth.
⁶The book, consisting of fifteen chapters, deals with agrarian reform and methods and techniques of farming. It was presented to the throne in 1799.
Writings in Chinese scholarship and philosophy, which had been the only path to success and fame, declined, and writings in Chinese gave way to the rise of a new literature. Writers no longer used Chinese as the literary language, and the age of Confucianism and Neo-Confucianism was over in Korea.

Bibliography: Writings in Chinese

Yu Hong-nyöl, Kojong ch'iha ui Sôhak sunan üi yôn'gu ("The Persecution of Western Learning under King Kojong") (1962).

Ch'ungnam University, tr., Kugyok chuhae Pan'gye surok ("Essays of Pan'gye; An Annotated Translation [of chaps. 9-12]") (1962).

Kim Ki-dong and Im Hong-do, eds., Hanmun sosôl sönjip ("Anthology of Fiction in Chinese") (1960).

Wön Ch'ang-ju, tr., Wanyok Mongmin simso ("Complete Translation of the Mongmin simso") (1962).

Yulgok Commemoration Committee, tr., Kugyok Yulgok chônsô chôngsôn ("Selected Translations from the Essays of Yulgok") (1957).
Han U-gyun, "Sohnho Yi Ik yon'gu" ("A Study of Yi Ik"), CH, 20 (1959), 7-78.

Im Ch'ang-sun, "Im Il-gwi and His Theories: His Place in the History of Korean Confucianism), SGTN, III (1958), 151-164.

Ko PyONG-ik, "Hyech'o Wang och'onch'ukkuk yon'gu saeryak" ("A History of Studies on Hyech'o’s 'Record of the Pilgrimage to the Five Countries'), PPN, pp. 299-316.

Pang Chong-hyon "Tok K'angje chip hu" ("Upon Reading the K'angje chip"), HG, 107 (1949), 35-42.

"Tok T'aech'on chip hu" ("Upon Reading the Taech'on chip"), HG, 101 (1947), 2-8.

Sin Ki-hyöng, "Yonam ui sirhak ssang" ("Yonam’s Theories on ‘Practical Learning’"), Mun'gyöng, 4 (1957), 81-101.

Yi U-song, "Sirhak'a ui munhak: Pak Yonam ui kyöngu" ("The Writings of Upholders of Practical Learning: The Case of Pak Yonam"), KK, 16 (1957), 84-100.

Yi Ór-ho, "Yubul sanggyo e myón esô pon Chóng Tasan" ("Chóng Tasan Seen from the Confucian and Buddhist Viewpoints"), PPN, pp. 705-730.

Yun Wón-ho, "Hanguk sup’d il p’yonomy: Koryó Yiyo sup’d il chungsim bro" ("An Aspect of Essays in Korea, Especially in the Koryó and Yi Dynasties"), YHS, pp. 379-391.

Translations

... Lives of Eminent Korean Monks (1215), [forthcoming]

TWENTIETH-CENTURY LITERATURE: VERSE AND PROSE
XI. Twentieth-Century Literature: Verse

Modern literature represents nearly a total break with the Korean past. As in China and Japan, a specifically modern type of expression developed much later than in Europe. Not until the beginning of the twentieth century did it make its appearance and, unlike European modern literatures which continued the literary traditions of their own past, it tended to accept and imitate foreign examples. A rapid succession of literary movements and ideas in the short span of fifty years brought confusion to the literary world.

Despite the slowness of its start, Korean modern literature might have borne finer fruit if allowed to mature in a sympathetic and free atmosphere. The buds of the new literature were, however, soon nipped by an unseasonable frost when Korea lost her independence through Japanese occupation in 1905 and annexation in 1910. During the period of thirty-six years from the annexation to the end of the Second World War, the new literature was forced to grow in the shadow of Japanese colonialism. It was doomed to be the literature of an exploited people. Denied the spirit of freedom and dynamism, the new literature in Korea became one of sorrow, reflecting a grief-stricken and despondent outlook. Without the indomitable spirit of the Korean people, Korean literature by itself could neither have preserved the Korean language, which embodies and manifests Korean tradition and culture, nor revealed the ultimate quality of the Korean sensibility. It was a triumph of the Korean spirit that it preserved and continued the Korean language despite Japanese oppression.

The period of 1880-1905 is characterized by the introduction of Western learning and the translating of works of European literature into Korean. Writers felt the urgency of enlightenment and reform; they were anxious to cast off authoritarianism and the evils accompanying it and to inspire an awareness of what it meant to be Koreans. The first novel to express these ideas was written by Yi In-jik (1862-1916). Publication of the Hyeol ui nu ("Tears of Blood," 1906) was therefore a turning point in the history of literature, the beginning of a new epoch in Korea.

The next ten years, which may be termed the pioneering period, produced two great men of letters, Ch’oe Nam-sŏn and Yi Kwang-su. The former founded the first literary monthly in Korea, the Sonyon ("Children," 1908-1911). The new poetry movement may be said to have started with the publication of "From the Sea to Children" and three other poems by Ch'oe in the first number of this magazine. Let me quote "From the Sea to Children":

The sea—a soaring mountain—
Lashes and crushes mighty cliffs of rock.
Those flimsy things, what are they to me?
"Know ye my power?" The sea lashes
Threateningly, it breaks, it crushes.
No fear assaults, no terror
Masters me. Earth's power and pride
Are tedious toys to me. All that the earth
Imagines mighty is to me no more Than a mere feather floating by.
Who has not bowed his head
Before my sovereignty, let him come forth.
Princes of earth, challenge me if you will.
First Emperor, Napoleon, are you my adversary?
Come, come then, compete with me.
Perched on a small hill or possessed
Of an islet or a patch of land,
Thinking that you alone reign supreme
In that kingdom small as a grain,
Approach me, coward, gaze on me.
Only the arching vault of sky, my kin,
Can equal me, only the vast sky,
Whose bright image my waters beat.
Free from sin, free from stain
It ignores earth's little multitudes.
I scorn the world's madness,
The overweaning men who seek to use me.
My love (brave children)—that is given
Only to those who come to me with love.
Come, children, let me kiss you and embrace you.

This poem may appear conventional and verbose today, but it retains its place in the history of Korean poetry as the first poem in free verse, written in simple, colloquial language. Yi Kwang-su, justly called the father of modern Korean literature, was the first author to produce the novel of modern consciousness. His characters are enlightened pioneers who long for the new science and civilization and who advocate marriages for love instead of the normal arranged alliances. This longing for modernity for its own sake was soon to be replaced by liberalism and humanism. Both Ch'oe and Yi were in the forefront of the patriotic movement before and after 1910; Ch'oe wrote the celebrated "Declaration of Independence” which kindled hope in millions of souls all over the country on March 1, 1919, the first day of the demonstrations that inaugurated the independence movement.

Shortly before the unsuccessful and costly movement for liberation, Korean students studying in Tokyo, influenced by both European literature and the new Japanese literature, published the magazine Ch’angjo (“Creation”) in February, 1919. This publication’s intent was to advocate national consciousness and to promote the development of new literature. It showed how far the new literary movement had progressed, and it represented a further step in the perfection of a vigorous new literary style. Two other important journals followed Ch’angjo: P’yeho (“Ruins”)1 in July, 1920, and Paekcho (“White Tide”) in January, 1922. In this period of experimentation the theories of new poetry were put into practice. Poets, keenly aware of the modern spirit, fostered in the backward literary world of Korea European literary movements which were not contemporary ones but those of the previous century. The poets, having rejected their own traditions and being unable to invent new conventions or a rational structure, were forced to resurrect past European movements and literary theories in order to find conventions which would give coherence and meaning to their otherwise confused experiences and practices. But Western ideas transplanted in such foreign soil could not bear fruit. The P’yeho school was decadent, and the Paekcho school excessively “romantic.” Their techniques were Symbolist, but their themes dated back to the advocates of “art for art’s sake.” Paekcho poetry suffered from undue sentimentalism and an emphasis on dream worlds and death. The favorite time was twilight or night, and the setting was usually the bedroom or tomb. The decadence in this poetry reflects the hopeless conditions in Korea after the collapse of the independence movement. The only way open to the poet was flight into the world of the imagination, where he could indulge freely in aimless revery and despair. Isolated and exiled, each spoke his private language and each had his own techniques. Each struggled to find a new mode of expression and a new set of images and symbols adequate for his unrestrained and escapist imagination. A contemporary of these groups, Kim Sowol (1903-1934), was a poet of nature and folk tradition, whose work was rich in local color. He sang of the rhythm and transience of nature. His poems unfortunately defy translation, for their effectiveness depends on the simplicity, directness, and intensity of the phrasing. A suggestion of their character may be found in the Chindallaekkot (“The Azalea”).

1The magazine’s title is said to have been inspired by Schiller’s poem. The lines that might have been appropriate for the purpose are from Das Ideal und Das Leben: “Monde wechseln, und Geschlechter fliehen/Ihre Götterjugend blühen/Wandellos in ewigen Ruin.”

You're sick and tired of me.
When you go
I'll bid you goodbye without saying a word.
I'll gather azaleas on Yak Mountain, the burning azaleas of Yongb'yŏn, and strew them in your path.
Tread gently, please,
step by step, softly,
on the flowers of dedication.
You're sick and tired of me.
When you leave
I'll not weep though I die.

His vitality and sensitiveness rose to fullness of poetry in the Ch'ohon ("Incantation"), which makes an impassioned appeal to the soul of his lady to return.

O name broken piecemeal, strewn in the empty void.
Nameless name, deaf and dumb,
that suffers me to die as I call it.
The last word carved in my heart was never spoken in the end.
O you that I love,
O you that I love.
Crimson sun hangs on the west peak, the deer bellow and call sadly.
There on the sheer steep peak
I call, call your empty name.
Until sorrow chokes me and unmans me, still I will call your name.
My voice goes aslant rejected, lost between heaven and earth.
Were I to become a stone,
I would die calling your name.
O you that I love,
O you that I love.

While the poets oscillated between the worlds of dream and despair, proletarian literature made headway. Between 1924 and 1933 leftist literature flourished in Korea. The Korean Artist Proletariat Federation (Chosŏn p'áro [let'aria] yesul tongmaeng) was organized in May, 1925. This group of writers proposed to use literature as a means of gaining political objectives. They emphasized the importance of propaganda, and their work dealt exclusively with the proletariat class. Their influence increased when two organs of theirs started to appear in 1926 and 1927. But because they emphasized content more than form, ideology was glorified at the expense of art. As a reaction to their radicalism, which ignored national traditions and disowned Korean life and thought, the movement for national literature, headed by Yang Chu-dong (b. 1903), was founded in 1926. Its purpose was to inspire the development of a national literature which would continue Korean traditions and to purify and enrich the Korean language. The novel, too, borrowed fresh inspiration from the past, and showed revived interest in historical persons and incidents. Students were sent to distant villages to educate the public and to inspire nationalism. At about the same time was formed the Research Association for Occidental Literature which began to campaign against the leftist theories of art and paved the way for the growth of pure poetry.

Meanwhile the chain of opposition tightened. The Proletariat Federation was dissolved by the Japanese police in 1935. On the other hand, general unrest grew among the literati after the Japanese invasion of Manchuria in September, 1931, and the rise of Nazism. As the pressure of Japanese censorship and colonial policies intensified, it became impossible for writers to express themselves freely. They were forced to become invisible, hiding their personalities and convictions behind their works of art. The only territory left for them to explore was the domain of pure poetry, which could transcend the steady aggravation of their situation. Poets found solace in the aestheticism of the 1890's and the perfection of techniques, remote from politics, philosophy, and the problems of society. Two poets of very different natures towered above their fellow writers: Chong Chi-yong (b. 1903) and Kim Ki-rim (b. 1909), landmarks of the generation of the thirties. Chong, perhaps the best modern poet, has inspired even to this day a host of imitators and followers. His was a poetry of sensuous beauty, marked by a flawless diction and freshness of imagery which have seldom been surpassed. Some of his best poems depend for effect on the skillful use of onomatopoetic expressions, which, if translated, lose their original charm and force. When he embraced Catholicism, his craftsmanship permitted him to produce the best Korean religious poetry of this century. A collection of his later poems, Paengnoktam (“The White Deer Lake,” 1941), contains some of the jewels of modern poetry. Here the Korean language has met its master, and can reveal its hidden potentialities to the fullest. Every word is precisely right, and every poem reveals a world which the reader has never known or even sensed before. Here the poet, singing of the hills and waters, leads the reader to the harmonious world of nature.

But not all poets of the thirties were of Chong's tribe. Some still suffered from the fin-de-siecle pangs. Others became lost in the forest of symbols, fondly explored the subconscious, or strode on the "indivisible flux" of consciousness. All in all, the garden of poetry was full of green carnations. In this moment, a school of "intellectualists" headed by Kim Ki-rim, the second important poet of the period, resolved to set the garden in order. They found inspiration and support in the works of Pound, Eliot, Auden, and Spender. In order to replace the twilit dreamy world with concrete images, they first practiced imagist poetry; later, in order to remedy their looseness of techniques, this school, echoing Eliot, advocated the depersonalization of poetry. To illustrate the virtues of organization and accurate language, the "intellectualists" also wrote satirical verse, which purported to be a diagnosis of the unhealthy state of contemporary poetry. In criticism the school hailed clarity and craftsmanship above all, condemned irrationality and sentiment in poetry, and asserted that objectivity and analysis should be the sole criteria of criticism.

With the outbreak of the Sino-Japanese war in 1937, the literary world faced the last stage of severe trials. Nationalist or anti-Japanese thought was not tolerated by the Japanese police, and the military encroached upon every literary activity. But writers did not succumb: instead they struggled to continue their art, and, most important, to preserve the Korean language. The best means at their disposal was the practice of pure poetry. Many of them retired to the country, following the example of the ancient hermits. Literary productions increased in the midst of spiritual and cultural crises. Between 1937 and 1941 more than fifty collections of verse adorned the literary world, a clear manifestation of the determined love of writers for the Korean language and a reaction against Japanese attempts to undermine what was truly Korean. The role played by the journals Munjang ("Literature," begun April, 1939) and Inmun p'yŏngnon ("Criticism of Culture," begun December, 1938) in the development of contemporary poetry should not be overlooked. Through these magazines poetry was furthered and new figures were brought to the attention of the public. The chief discovery of this period was a cluster of nature and folk poets writing in the South with remarkable virtuosity.

In 1941 the Sino-Japanese war developed into the Pacific war, and the volunteer system (1938) of recruiting Koreans for the Japanese army was changed to a conscription system (1943). The Japanese, in order to suppress the identity of the Korean race, required Koreans to adopt Japanese names. Those who spoke the Korean language in public were seized and imprisoned. Two Korean newspapers were suspended on August 10, 1940, and the literary journals Munjang and Inmun p'yŏngnon were discontinued in April of the following year. Korean literature was driven underground. Writers in despair threw away their pens, and a dark period for literature ensued.

After the liberation in 1945 two movements came into being: one advocating the restoration of true Korean traditions and the other insisting on proletarian literature. Later these two groups were united; but because their activities tended to be more political than literary, an opposing group arose. Indeed, movements and countermovements appeared with bewildering rapidity in the brief span of three years (1945-1948), and amidst that confusion the “little magazines” were a formidable force where the conflicting beliefs and practices were explored and settled. Of a large number of verse collections published between 1945 and 1950, we must be content to pick out three representative titles to use as pegs on which to hang our discussion: the Ch’ŏngnok chip (“Green Deer Anthology,” 1946) by the “Southern Trio”; the Saengmyŏng ēi sŏ (“The Book of Life,” 1947) by Yu Ch’i-hwan; and the Kwich’okto (“The Cuckoo,” 1947) by So Ch’ŏng-ju.

Finding little nourishment in life under occupation and suppression, Pak Tu-jin and Pak Mogwŏl drew on their native South with its folklore and songs, and Cho Chi-hun on folk customs and Buddhist and court rituals. To them, however, the spiritual landscape symbolized by nature poetry was a veiled expression of nostalgia for the stolen country and of entreaty for its rapid return. Like pastoral poetry in the West, most of Pak Tu-jin’s poems are allegorical pieces intended to cover his patriotic fervor or his vision of Prelapsarian life. In a chant to the sun as the source of life, Pak implores the sun to dispel the night of doubt and sorrow in order that he may enjoy once again the fellowship of man and nature. Pak Mogwŏl has not only the soul but also the art of a folk poet. His lines are bewitchingly subtle and simple, but it is the simplicity of a master craftsman who has hammered and chiseled every line into shining felicity. Cho Chi-hun is an equally, if not more, gifted technician. When he sent in a group of poems including the now famous Siingmu (“Monk Dance”) to the magazine Munjang, its poetry editor, Ch’ŏng Chi-yong, the best modern poet in Korea, is said to have marvelled at his mastery of language. Cho’s, too, is a world of elegance and harmony where monks and court ladies dance a classic dance, vividly suggesting glimpses of past glory. The poetry of the “Southern Trio,” though a poetry of withdrawal, possesses classical grace and elegance, precision and simplicity, reminiscent of the best sijo poems. Indeed, their lyrical gift, their laconic style, and their haunting rhythm are seldom surpassed. Their achievement has remained influential in modern Korean poetry, for, like Ch’ŏng Chi-yong, they have loved language for itself and taken poetry “further on its path.”

Yu Ch’i-hwan’s best poems are lucid yet symbolic, free from verbalism or condensation. He did not lead a poetic revolution but was content to find a style adequate to fit his vision. His images seldom shock or provoke, yet throughout his career he has shown a quiet control of his materials. Like the sunflower that defies the tyranny of the sun or the rock that ignores storm and wind, he sings fondly of a life of integrity and imperturbability, free from scepticism and sentimentality. As long as he has the sun and moon above him, he is content to die at any moment; yet for his enemy and those who flatter his enemy he asks the sun and moon to avenge him. Indeed, he succeeds in giving a calm philosophic overtone to genuine feeling. This overtone is typically Confucian in its refusal to be fettered by the tribulations of mundane life or to be marred by the pursuit of name and fame.

Most of the poems in these collections were, however, written before 1945.

So Ch'ong-ju's verse is characterized by the freshness and simplicity of emotion. His earlier collection of verse depicts a decadent world full of lepers, snakes, musk incense, and country lasses. But in the Kwich'okto, he sought inspiration in such cultural remains as the Stone Cave Temple near the ancient Silla capital or in such Korean lore and myth as that of Ch'unhyang, that ravishing dancing girl whose feminine virtue gave rise to the best classical fiction in Korea. He is still attached to his own world, but a world this time of chrysanthemums and cranes, stone Buddhas and ruined monuments. There are seldom the agonies of self-consciousness or the torments of a divided man.

In sum, the post-liberation period belonged to the established poets, who drew upon the undying cyclical patterns of nature or the cultural heritage of the people. They fully recognized the events and temper of the time when doubt and frustration loomed dark and men despaired of imminent crises; but they left a new generation to wrestle with these problems.

The Korean War did not produce a Wilfred Owen or a Dylan Thomas, but it effected a split between conventional and experimental expression. It produced a new generation that rejected the ruling poetic fashions and endeavored to reshape the poetic medium. The call for sacrifice was for them the opportunity of exorcism. The war probably helped to make the traditional poets, especially the poets in the Green Deer tradition, look out of date; for the war of 1950-1953 was the first modern war fought in Korea; it was a war for everyone, soldiers and schoolboys alike. The dilemma of the young writers in the early fifties is best reflected in the poets of the Huban'gi group. This group vigorously repudiated the matter and manner of prewar verse, which no longer reflected the contemporary state of society or the disintegration of former values. Some began with a dire criticism of life in postwar Korea, scathingly analyzing the emptiness of modern man and illuminating their poems with bitter irony. Some intended to shock or provoke the reader into awareness of contemporary idiocies and abuses. Some fondly flirted with the unconscious or sought that "twilit realm of inmost being" in order to find metaphors and symbols for their work. In quiet succession, writer followed writer, with new themes, new accents, and new cadences.

Their works reflect a number of contemporary Western influences con-

---

3 have in mind Thomas' A Refusal to Mourn the Death, by Fire, of a Child in London, one of his "most touching lyrics."

4 An avant-garde circle organized by a group of young poets in Pusan in September, 1952.
flicting with each other. Their foremost concern, as far as I can judge, is that of style; the experimental and modernist movement they launched was a stylistic revolt that relentlessly pursued variety and individuality. But poverty of thought or shallowness of vision cannot be cloaked by a mere manipulation of texture. An introduction of a few Americanisms, some Existentialist vocabulary, or certain swear-words does not in itself constitute modernity. A comparison of an International Express with an IBM machine is nothing but a pastiche. Often experiments in form and language resulted only in flat and crude prose, the writing of which has been likened by Frost to playing tennis without a net. Although means alone cannot and should not become the sole preoccupation of poetry, some postwar poets are effecting a contribution to the modernization and revitalization of the Korean language. They are still grappling with time, and occasionally we glimpse their struggle to transcend the plight of the day. But it is too early to predict whether they are participating in the historical development of Korean poetry.

For a convenient survey of contemporary verse in Korea see Hanguk munhak chŏngjip, XXXV (1959) and Hanguk chŏnu munje sŏp (1961).
XII. Twentieth-Century Literature: Prose

We have mentioned that the first "new" novel is the Hyol-ui nu, published serially in 1906. Strictly speaking, Yi In-jik's works occupy the transitional period between the traditional historical romances or fantastic tales and the modern novel in the truest sense. Yet, in his conception of plot and characterization, in the good use of realistic prose and dialogue, Yi In-jik is a pioneer. He is the author of other major works: The Kwi-ui sŏng ("The Voice of a Devil," 1906-1907), Chi'aksan ("Pheasant Hill," 1908), and Unsegye ("The Silver World," 1908). Another writer of importance is Yi Hae-jo (1869-1927), who is noted for his prolificacy. He is inferior to Yi In-jik in plot and description: most important, he lacked feeling for the new age. His works include the Ch'eyŏng ("The Liberty Bell," 1910), Moranpyŏng ("The Peony Screen," 1911), Pip'asŏng ("Sound of the Lute," 1913), and Hwa-ui hyŏl ("The Blood of the Flowers," 1912).

Characteristically, the new novels were a literature of enlightenment which dealt with such themes as the political sovereignty of the people, promotion of education, criticism of early marriage by alliance, or the evils of superstition. Nevertheless, the new novels embraced several significant elements of the modern novel. They adopted a prose style which used the everyday language of the common people. Their subjects were chosen from contemporary life, and their scenes were set in the contemporary world. Their style became more descriptive than narrative, more analytical than chronological. Yet there were several contradictions in the new novels in the 1910's. They still followed the conventional theme of "the reproval of vice and promotion of virtue." In the Kwol-ui sŏng, for instance, the villains who murder the heroine, Kilsun, and her child are punished at the end of the book. Also, the new novels still presented types rather than individuals. A stepmother, for example, was still represented as an evil person, and the Chi'aksan suffers from such character-

---

1Published in book form in 1907. Its sequel, Moran pong ("Peony Peak"), was serialized in the Moell sinbo in 1923.
3Published in book form in 1908.
4According to the 1918 edition, this work consists of two parts, the second part appearing under the name of Kim Kyo-je.
Korean Literature

As a corollary of these shortcomings, the new novels were concerned chiefly with outcome, how they "came out." They were concluded with artificial and often melodramatic "happy endings" which would certainly have delighted those who read only the concluding chapter of a nineteenth-century novel. In short, the new novels contained defects in both form and content.

Yi Kwang-su is truly the first writer of the modern novel in Korea. In 1915 Yi published the Orin pōt ege ("To Our Young Friends"). This story deplored the conventional marriage, declared that the Koreans had hitherto not loved, and preached love as the first step to marriage and enlightenment. Yi's other major works are the Kaech'okcha ("The Pioneer"), Mūjōng ("The Heartless," 1917), and Hūl ("The Soil"). The motive of the first two works was, as the author later stated, to inspire national consciousness and to point the direction Korean youth should follow. In his later works he continuously preached love, the importance of education and enlightenment, racial consciousness, and patriotism. The influence of Buddhism and Tolstoyan humanism is apparent in his mature works. He also wrote historical novels. As a stylist Yi ranks among the greatest of Korean writers; the reader of his works is most impressed by their grand scale of conception and view of the world and life. His novels are rich in ideas and ideals. He conceived of literature as a political and social means of persuasion and enlightenment rather than a pure art. What writers of the next generation attacked was precisely the didactic function of literature that Yi upheld.

The young writers of the Ch'angjo circle advocated pure art in literature in defiance of Yi's "impure" motives in his works. The group preached that literature should present life as it is. They contributed a great deal to the establishment of colloquial prose style as a literary medium by differentiating the tenses and even by incorporating dialects. The most notable among them was Kim Tong-in (1900-1951), who wrote nearly a hundred short stories. Two characteristics mark his writings. They are inclined towards naturalism, and they strive for aestheticism, art for art's sake. The Kwangyōm sonata ("Lunatic Flame Sonata") and Kwanghwasa ("The Mad Painter") remind the reader of Oscar Wilde; the Kim Yōnsil chōn ("Life of Kim Yonsil") resembles Maupassant's Une Vie. His preoccupation with psychological description led him to unjustified sensationalism or to emphasis on the sordid, gloomy, and sick.

The golden age of naturalism in Korea produced Yom sang-sōp (1897-1963) and Hyǒng Chin-gǒn (1900-1943). Their activities centered around two journals, Kaebŏk ("Creation") and Chosŏn mundan ("Korean Literary Circles").

Yom arrived on the scene in 1921 with the Pyŏbonsil īch'ŏnggaeguri ("The Green Frog in the Specimen Gallery"), which is often considered the first work of naturalism in Korea. His productive period was, however, between Cf. Kwak Hae-song and Pak Kye-jin, Ch'ŏnwo Yi Kwang-su (1962).

Twentieth-Century Literature: Prose

1925 and 1933, when he published the Chogûman il ("A Small Incident," 1926) and other longer novels. In these works he diagnosed his time and society by analysis, exact psychological investigation, and "scientific" documentation. The Samdae ("Three Generations") is one of his better novels.

Hyôn is an uncontested master of the short story. His stories are noted for their mastery of technique, scenic description, use of the language of the lower class, and frank and vivid evocation of sexual desire. Despite his indebtedness to Maupassant and Zola, his characters are basically Korean, and his aim was, as he stated, "to grasp the soul of the Korean people." His stories include the Halmôni ui chugom ("Death of the Grandmother," 1923), Unsâu chôkôn nal ("A Lucky Day," 1924), Pul ("Fire," 1924), and Sînmunji wa ch'êch'ang ("Newspapers and Iron Bars," 1929).

From a literary viewpoint, the "new trend" movement which began between 1923 and 1924 was a reaction against the romanticism which dominated the Paekcho group. It criticized these writers for their disregard of the masses and took as its theme the life of the lower classes, the miseries of the suffering mass.

The works of this group often concluded with tragic and terrifying endings, usually with murder or arson. The best example of this type of writing is the Kia wa sallyuk ("Starvation and Murder," 1925), by Ch'oe Sohae (1901-1933). Working as a servant in a noodle shop, a porter, or as a revolutionary anti-Japanese fighter in Manchuria, Ch'oe was familiar with the life of the lower classes. His work is simple and concise as well as dynamic, as for example, in the description of the flood in the K'âmmuljin twî ("After the Flood," 1925). Pak Yong-hüi (b. 1901) in the Sanyangkkae ("The Hunting Dog," 1925) and Chu Yô-sop (b. 1902) in the Illyôkkokkun ("Ricksha Man," 1925) and Sarin ("Murder," 1925) show their sympathy toward this movement.

With the organization of the Korean Artist Proletariat Federation, the literature of the new trend school was developed into proletarian literature. Where it had dealt with poverty and resistance, it became strongly class-conscious. Advocates of proletarian literature therefore organized activities under a unified command and regarded literature as a means for the political ends of socialism. As writers became class-conscious and purpose-conscious, they emphasized content more than form. The Naktong kang ("The Naktong River," 1927), by Cho Myông-hüi, is the first story dealing with the class struggle. Other writers known as sympathizers in this movement were Yu Chin-o (b. 1906), Yi Hyo-sôk (1907-1942), Ch'ae Man-sik (1904-1950), and Han In-taek. Yu's Yôjikkong ("Factory Women," 1931) and Yi's Noryông kûnhae ("The Coast of the Russian Territory," 1931) are directly inspired by this movement. Yu's later novels, however, show his preoccupation with the sorrow and ennui of the intelligentsia in the thirties and forties. Later Yi Hyo-sôk, too, changed his style, and in the Ton ("The Hog," 1933) and later works he dealt in lyrical prose with man's profound appreciation of, and often unity with, nature.
In fiction the thirties were perhaps the most productive decade, characterized by different schools and various trends. The spokesman for the disillusioned intellectual was Ch'ae Man-sik, who in the Redimeidž insaeng ("Ready-Made Life," 1934) outlined the history of the Korean intellectuals and the cause of their despair. Yi Hyo-sok and Yi T'ae-jun (b. 1904) proved themselves to be superlative craftsmen and masters of short stories. Kye Yong-muk (b. 1904), who began his career with realistic stories, changed his style after the Paekchi'Adada ("The Idiot Adada," 1935) and wrote chiefly in the tradition of art for art's sake. Kim Yu-jong (1908-1937) had a unique style and precise diction and demonstrated his talent in the Sonakpi ("The Shower," 1935), Sankkol ("Deep Mountain," 1935), and other stories. His works are rich in local color and satire. The characters of his stories are ignorant and simple peasants whose naive joys and sorrows found wry humorous expression through his pen.

While "naturalistic" realism stressed the objectivity and the ordinary aspects of experience, psychological realism portrayed the contents of the mind, the inner world. In the Nalgae ("The Wings," 1936), the representative work of psychological realism, Yi Sang (1912-1939) portrays the plight of a helpless intellectual tormented by pitiless self-analysis. The hero of the story is supported by his prostitute-wife and does nothing but play with his wife's toilet articles. In one of his idle speculations on life the hero exclaims that the sooner he gets off the fast revolving earth, the better he will be. In this and a later story, the Chongsaeng ki ("The End of Life," 1937), Yi's interest is in revealing character by closely tracing the hero's "unending and uneven flow of the mind."

Contrarily, another group of writers indulged in photographic reproduction of contemporary customs and events with understanding irony. In the Ch'Onbyon p'unggyo ("Scenes on the Riverside," 1936), Pak T'ae-won (b. 1909) depicted contemporary scenes with the camera's eye, agreeable or disagreeable, but without any comment. The dialogue of women washing their clothes by the river, scenes of barber shops, and small incidents taking place on a corner street—Pak was indeed true to reality when he recorded all these in sober language.

A cluster of young writers who won recognition in the later thirties and early forties wrote their works during the last stage of Japanese domination. The best means at their disposal was the practice of pure literature. Whereas the established writers brooded over the present and dwelt on the memory of a freer past, young writers accepted reality as it was and tried to build up their literary careers without much ado. Kim Tong-ni (b. 1911) has his own theories to support his works. In the Hwarang bi hubye ("The Posterity of the Hwarang," 1935), Munyö to ("Portrait of a Shaman," 1936), and Pawi ("The Rock," 1936), he depicted traditional Korean characters, realities, and emotions with a refined style. He drew his materials from the myths and legends of the South. and handled them skillfully to give unity and coherence to his works. "However fantastic, unscientific, or supernatural a phenomenon may be," he declared, "it can be 'real' in a work of art if transformed and lived into an organic whole." Mysticism and the Taoist idea of nothingness permeate his early works. In the Sŏnangdang ("The Sŏnang Hall," 1937) Ch'ŏng pi-sŏk (b. 1911) delved deeply into nature and re-created a primitive and vigorous world rich in local color. His pantheistic fervor and nature worship put him in the line of Kim Tong-ni. When, however, he turned from nature to the urban middle class, he became interested in the description of sex and nudity. In the Soŏi ("The White Dress," 1939) Kim Yong-su also demonstrated his skill in the description of sexual desires and nudity. Other writers of importance before the outbreak of the Pacific war were An Su-gil (b. 1911), Hwang Sun-won (b. 1915), Ch'oe In-uk (b. 1920), Kwak Ha-sin (b. 1920), Ch'oe T'a'ae-ŭng (b. 1917), and Im Og-in (b. 1913).

The 1940's were a dark period in all branches of literature, owing to the Japanese suppression of all writings in the Korean language. The political confusion after 1945 and the subsequent outbreak of the Korean war also disrupted creative activities. Although some works of artistic merit were produced, most efforts during the conflict were accounts of the horror and devastation of war. Meanwhile a series of significant events took place in the literary world. In 1954 the Korean Academy of Arts was established, and the Korean Chapter of the P.E.N. was organized to promote cultural exchanges with the West. Several literary awards were instituted, and increasing opportunities were offered to writers by new literary journals, such as the Munye ("Literature," 1949), Sasanggye ("The Thinking World," 1953), Munhak yesul ("Literary Arts," 1953), Hyŏndae munhak ("Contemporary Literature," 1955), and Chayumunhak ("Free Literature," 1956).

Perhaps the most important change that took place in the postwar Korean literary world was the emergence of a new generation in the late fifties. Most of them, born between the twenties and thirties, experienced the horror of war as students and later as soldiers. The freedom and peace which returned to Korea in 1945 proved not to have returned at all. Far from being able to enjoy the fruits of the liberation, Korea faced a more formidable and insoluble problem than ever before in her history: division of the country. Less than two years after the birth of the First Republic, the war erupted. The Armistice, however, in failing to bring about unification, only added a new set of problems. Conscious of the political, social, and moral chaos caused by the war and its aftermath, a cluster of young writers rose to repudiate this chaotic world and to challenge the ruling literar y fashions and conventions.

Literary moods, modes, and themes popular in Korean fiction till the early fifties were merely the fag-ends of earlier literary movements in Europe. Untroubled by current anxieties that faced the new generation and uninformed of modern innovations in fiction—such as in form, sequence, and point of view—established writers still wrote in the realistic and naturalistic tradition. To them the novel was still a mere fictional narrative of characters, following closely the rules of plot, character, and setting. This was, however, not entirely their fault. The wholesale assault of Japanese colonialism, who...
and have discovered new techniques and new forms adequate to express their new vision. To this end they have resorted to the symbolist technique, where meaning emerges not from discourse alone (which only gives a hint) but rather from a weaving of such devices as image, symbol, and pattern. In the Yohan sjip (1955), for example, a prison camp is a symbol of the modern world where a quest for freedom and dignity costs man his life. Within the confines of barbed wires, as Garcian declares in Huís Clos, "L'Enfer c'est les Autres." Just as the central image in A Passage to India is the Marabar caves, so that in the Pulkkot (1957) is a cave, a symbol for the dark night of society. In this cave, Ko Hyŏn, the protagonist, lies wounded by a bullet from a fellow villager, now a turncoat communist. The villager had also shot and killed Hyŏn's grandfather when he refused to entice his grandson to come out of the cave. It was in the same cave that Hyŏn's father, a leader of the Independence Movement (1919), spent his last night before he died of bullet wounds received from the Japanese police. Amidst the pang of wound and anguish of solitude, his interior monologue reveals his many-leveled flow of experience, a life of escape, indecision, and vacillation. He is tormented by the thought of his father's cruel death, of the unhappy life of his mother—especially the pain in her thigh and knee resulting from torture at the hands of the Japanese, of his escape from the Japanese army in North China, of his wanderings in South Manchuria, of his frustrating career as a teacher at a girl's school upon his return to Korea after the liberation, and of his inability to love Miss Cho, a fellow school teacher. Surrounded by a chain of mountains and valleys, a symbol of flux, Hyŏn is a wave tossed up and down as his stream of consciousness carries him back to the past. In the end, Hyŏn wins against the void and abyss in himself. Dawn assails the cave, scattering his despair and humiliation and crowning society's endless struggles for freedom and integrity with hope and determination. Le Temps perdu of his thirty years of life finally becomes Le Temps retrouvé. Here the author has arranged his material in such a way that the career of three generations in Hyŏn's family becomes a symbolic picture of the life of the Korean people during the past fifty years. This is only one of the advances made by the new writers in an attempt to renew both the form and substance of Korean fiction. The communication of stream of consciousness requires a subtler technique, for the underlying realities of an individual's consciousness can be revealed only by new techniques in expression. All of the new writers are trying in their various ways to discover new styles and techniques and to give a renewed vision of reality. They may vary in point of view or approach, but they affirm their function as writers in a contemporary society to make us a little more aware of the world we live in.
and to convey to us new reality and new vision. Modern Korean fiction, at its beginning, was at least one hundred years behind its Western counterpart. It is now abreast of all developments in fiction and the arts abroad; it should not be too long until Korean literature, both verse and prose, becomes a part of world literature.

Bibliography: Twentieth-Century Literature

Collections

Hanguk sinjak munhak chonjip ("A Collection of Modern Korean Verse") (10 vols.; 1959-).

(1) verse, (2-4) short stories, (5) essays, (6) drama, (7) criticism.

Paek Ch'ol et al., eds., Hanguk chonhu munje chak'um chonjip ("A Collection of Postwar Korean Prose") (1960).

Yi Kwang-su, Ch'unw'on mun'go ("Collected Works of Yi Kwang-su") (24 vols.; 1959-).

Translations

Cho Byung Hwa, Before Love Fades Away, tr. King Dong Sung (1957).
Twentieth-Century Literature: Prose

Works Written in Western Languages

Comparative Chronology

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>B.C.</th>
<th>Korea</th>
<th>The West</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>2333</td>
<td>Taagun myth</td>
<td>c.800 Homer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Majigut (Puyó)</td>
<td>Early Greek cyclic poets</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Saebuk (Koguryo)</td>
<td>c.700 Sappho</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Hanbukch'um (Ye)</td>
<td>fl. c.600 Pindar</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Festivals in the 5th and 10th months (southern tribes)</td>
<td>c.518-443 Heraclitus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>108 Yook: Konghuin</td>
<td>469-395 Socrates</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>17 King Nuri: Hwangjo ka</td>
<td>427-348 Plato</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>384-322 Aristotle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>70-19 Virgil</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>65-8 Horace</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>§121§</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anon.: Tonnorae</td>
<td>c.40-104 Martial</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anon.: Aso kok</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anon.: Kajibong yongsin ka</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anon.: Saenae ak</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anon.: Tara ak</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anon.: Chia ak</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anon.: Samae ak</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anon.: Mulgyeja ka</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anon.: Kamu</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anon.: Nulchi: Uso ak</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anon.: Ch'isulyong kok</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Paekkyol: Tae ak</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anon.: Taldo ka</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anon.: Kanin</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anon.: Miji ak</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anon.: Toryong ka</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Master Yungsch'On:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Hyeotong ka</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anon.: Narhyonin</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Sirhye: Sirhye ka</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anon.: Narhyonin</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anon.: Sirhye ka</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>c.600 King Mu: Mattung yo</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>c.635 Anon.: P'ungyo</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>c.654-661 Anon.: Yongsan ka</td>
<td>fl.670 Caedmon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Wonhyo: Muae ka</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>§121§</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Year Range</td>
<td>Work</td>
<td>Author</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------------</td>
<td>-----------------------------</td>
<td>-------------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.661-681</td>
<td>Kwangdok: Wŏnwangsaeng ka</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.661-681</td>
<td>Sŏl Ch'ong: Mo Taemara ka</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.702-737</td>
<td>An Old Man: Hŏnhwa ka</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.702-737</td>
<td>Sinch'ung: Wŏn'ga</td>
<td>The West</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.742-765</td>
<td>Anon.: Sanhwa ka</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.742-765</td>
<td>Master Wolmyŏng: Che mangmae ka</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.742-765</td>
<td>Master Ch'ungdam: Ch'an Kilborang ka</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.742-765</td>
<td>Hŭmyŏng: To Ch'ŏnsugwanăm ka</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.785-798</td>
<td>King Wŏnsŏng: Sin'gong sānōe ka</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.826-836</td>
<td>King Hŏngdok: Aengmu ka</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.861-875</td>
<td>Anon.: Hyŏn'gŭm'p'o kok</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.861-875</td>
<td>Anon.: Taedo kok</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.861-875</td>
<td>Anon.: Mun'gun kok</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.861-875</td>
<td>Ch'ŏyong: Ch'ŏnyŏng ka</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.861-875</td>
<td>Samaemok compiled</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.924-927</td>
<td>Anon.: Pŏnhwa kok</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.927-935</td>
<td>Sinhoe: Mangguk aega</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.965-967</td>
<td>Great Master Kyunyŏ: Eleven devotional poems</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.991-1020</td>
<td>Aeifric</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1021</td>
<td>King Hyeŏnjong: Hyŏnhwa sa riŭng</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1068</td>
<td>Ch'ŏe Ch'ung d.</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1096</td>
<td>Pak Il-lyang d.</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1120</td>
<td>King Yejong: To ijang ka</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1146</td>
<td>K.: Pu-sik: Samguk sagi</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.1151-1170</td>
<td>Chŏng So: Chŏng Kwajŏng</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1170</td>
<td>Im Ch'un d.: Kaksun chŏn</td>
<td>Korean Literature</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Comparative Chronology

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
<th>The West</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1214</td>
<td>Yi In-no: P'ahang chip</td>
<td>c.1200-1205: Niebelungenlied</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1215</td>
<td>Kakhun: Haedong kosãng ch'on</td>
<td>c.1200-1225: Walter von der Vogelweide</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1241</td>
<td>Yi Kyu-bo d.: Paegun sosõl: Tongguk Yisang'uk chip (2nd ed.: 1251)</td>
<td>c.1250: Owl and the Nightingale Sumer ist icumen in</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1254</td>
<td>Choe Cha: Pohan chip</td>
<td>c.1230-1280: Guillaume de Lorris &amp; Jean de Meung: Roman de la Rose</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.1214-1259</td>
<td>Hallim pyölgok composed</td>
<td>c.1265: Dante b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1285</td>
<td>Iryon: Samguk yusa</td>
<td>c.1291: Dante: Vita Nuova</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anonymous Koryô songs composed in the 13th and 14th centuries</td>
<td>c.1304-1307: Dante: Convivio; De Vulgari Eloquentia</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1306</td>
<td>An Hyang d.</td>
<td>c.1300-1321: Dante: Commedia</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.1330</td>
<td>An Ch'uk: Kwandong &amp; Chukkye pyölgok</td>
<td>c.1304: Petrarch b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1340</td>
<td>Ch'ae Hong-ch'ol d.: Chahadong</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1342</td>
<td>U T'ak d. Yi Che-hyon: Yöng p'aesõl</td>
<td>c.1348-1358: Boccaccio: Decameron</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1351</td>
<td>Yi Kok d.: Chukpuin chon; Kajong chip</td>
<td>c.1360-1399: Langland: The Vision concerning Piers the Plowman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1363</td>
<td>Yi Che-hyon: Ikhae chip</td>
<td>c.1387-1400: Chaucer: The Canterbury Tales</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1367</td>
<td>Yi Che-hyon d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1392</td>
<td>Ch'ong Mong-ju d.: Tansim ka</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1393</td>
<td>Ch'ong To-jon: Monggum-ch'ok; Saborok; Napssi ka; Ch'ong tongbang kok</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1394</td>
<td>Ch'ong To-jon: Sindo ka</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1395</td>
<td>Ch'ong To-jon: Mundök ka</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1398</td>
<td>Ch'ong To-jon: Sindo p'algyöng si</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1402</td>
<td>Ha Yun: eulogies</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1405</td>
<td>Yi Ch'om d.: Chong Sija chon</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1414</td>
<td>Ha Yun: eulogies</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1419</td>
<td>Pyon Kye-ryang: eulogy</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1420</td>
<td>Pyon Kye-ryang: Ch'uksongsu; Söngdök ka</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1425</td>
<td>Pyon Kye-ryang: Hwasan pyölgok</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

Korea

1214 Yi In-no: P'ahang chip

1215 Kakhun: Haedong kosãng ch'on

1241 Yi Kyu-bo d.: Paegun sosõl: Tongguk Yisang'uk chip (2nd ed.: 1251)

1254 Choe Cha: Pohan chip c.1214-1259 Hallim pyölgok composed

1285 Iryon: Samguk yusa

Anonymous Koryô songs composed in the 13th and 14th centuries

1306 An Hyang d.

c.1330 An Ch'uk: Kwandong & Chukkye pyölgok

1340 Ch'ae Hong-ch'ol d.: Chahadong

1342 U T'ak d. Yi Che-hyon: Yöng p'aesõl

1351 Yi Kok d.: Chukpuin chon; Kajong chip

1363 Yi Che-hyon: Ikhae chip

1367 Yi Che-hyon d.

1392 Ch'ong Mong-ju d.: Tansim ka

1393 Ch'ong To-jon: Monggum-ch'ok; Saborok; Napssi ka; Ch'ong tongbang kok

1394 Ch'ong To-jon: Sindo ka

1395 Ch'ong To-jon: Mundök ka

1398 Ch'ong To-jon: Sindo p'algyöng si

1402 Ha Yun: eulogies

1405 Yi Ch'om d.: Chong Sija chon

1414 Ha Yun: eulogies

1419 Pyon Kye-ryang: eulogy

1420 Pyon Kye-ryang: Ch'uksongsu; Söngdök ka

1425 Pyon Kye-ryang: Hwasan pyölgok
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
<th>Details</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1431</td>
<td>Maeng Sa-sŏng d.: Kangho sasĩ ka</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1433</td>
<td>Collect. of folk songs begun</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1436</td>
<td>Yun Hoe d.: Ponghwangŭm</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1443</td>
<td>King Sejong invents the han’găl</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1444</td>
<td>Chŏngŭmch’ŏng tr. Ku-ch’ŏn yun-hai</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1445</td>
<td>Yongbi bch’ŏn ka compiled</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1446</td>
<td>King Sejong promulgates the han’găl</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1447</td>
<td>Annotations on the Yongi bch’ŏn ka completed</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Prince Suyang comp. Sokpo sangjŏl</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>King Sejong: Wŏrin ch’ŏn’-gang chigok (-1448)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Sin Suk-ch’u ed. Tongguk ch’ôngun</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1449</td>
<td>Sokpo sangjŏl and Wŏrin ch’ŏn’gang chigok printed</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1451</td>
<td>Kim Chŏng-sŏ et al.: Koryŏsa</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1454</td>
<td>Sejong Annals completed</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1458</td>
<td>Pak Yŏn d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1459</td>
<td>Wŏrin sokpo published</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1462</td>
<td>Sejo tr. Lankavatara sūtra</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1464</td>
<td>Kim Su-on tr. Diamond sūtra</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1477</td>
<td>So Ko-jŏng: T’aep’yŏng hanhwa kŏlgye chŏn (pub. about 1482)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1481</td>
<td>No Sa-sin: Tongguk yoji sāngyŭm</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Chŏng Kŭg-in: Songch’ŏn kŏk</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1489</td>
<td>So Ko-jŏng d.: Tongguk t’onggyum; P’irwŏn chapki; Tongin sīhwa</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1493</td>
<td>Song Hyŏn: Akhak kwebŏm Kim Si-sŭp d.: Kūmo sinhwa</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.1504</td>
<td>Anon.: Sipyong hyangak po</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.1506-1544</td>
<td>Hwang Ch’ŏn-i</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1527</td>
<td>Ch’oe Se-jin: Hunmong chahoe</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1543</td>
<td>Chu Se-bung establishes the first private academy</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Korea

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
<th>Details</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1431</td>
<td>Villon b.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1433</td>
<td>Malory: Le Morte d’Arthur</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1477</td>
<td>Sir Thomas More b.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1481</td>
<td>First book printed at Oxford</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1492</td>
<td>Villon: Le Grand Testament; Le Petit Testament</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1498</td>
<td>Columbus discovers the West Indies</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1504</td>
<td>Vasco da Gama discovers sea-route to India</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1516</td>
<td>More: Utopia</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1519</td>
<td>Ariosto: Orlando Furioso</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1527</td>
<td>Leonardo da Vinci d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1532</td>
<td>Rabelais: Pantagruel</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1534</td>
<td>Rabelais: Gargantua</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Comparative Chronology

Korea

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Author/Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1548</td>
<td>Yi Hyŏn-bo: Ŭbu ka</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1549</td>
<td>Du Bellay: La Défense et Illustration de la langue française</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1554</td>
<td>Shakespeare b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1555</td>
<td>Marlowe b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1556</td>
<td>Michaelangelo d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.1510-1569</td>
<td>Pak Chun ed. Akchang kasa</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1577</td>
<td>Yi I: Kosan kugok ka</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1580</td>
<td>Chŏng Ch'ŏl: Kwandong pyŏlgok</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1581</td>
<td>Montaigne: Essais</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1585-1587</td>
<td>Chŏng Ch'ŏl: Sa miin kok; Sok miin kok; Sŏngsan pyŏlgok</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1587</td>
<td>Tasso: Gerusalemme Liberata</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1589</td>
<td>Camoëns: Os Lusiados</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1590</td>
<td>Shakespeare b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1591</td>
<td>Marlowe b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1592</td>
<td>Michaelangelo d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1593</td>
<td>Montaigne: Essais</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1594</td>
<td>Tasso: Gerusalemme Liberata</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1595</td>
<td>Spenser: Faerie Queene, i-iii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1596</td>
<td>Sidney: Defence of Poesy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1597</td>
<td>Shakespeare b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1598</td>
<td>Marlowe b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1599</td>
<td>Michaelangelo d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1600</td>
<td>Shakespeare b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1605</td>
<td>Marlowe b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1611</td>
<td>Montaigne: Essais</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1612</td>
<td>Tasso: Gerusalemme Liberata</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1613</td>
<td>Spenser: Faerie Queene, i-iii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1614</td>
<td>Sidney: Defence of Poesy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1615</td>
<td>Shakespeare b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1616</td>
<td>Marlowe b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1617</td>
<td>Montaigne: Essais</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1618</td>
<td>Tasso: Gerusalemme Liberata</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1619</td>
<td>Spenser: Faerie Queene, i-iii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1620</td>
<td>Sidney: Defence of Poesy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1621</td>
<td>Shakespeare b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1622</td>
<td>Marlowe b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1623</td>
<td>Montaigne: Essais</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1624</td>
<td>Tasso: Gerusalemme Liberata</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1625</td>
<td>Spenser: Faerie Queene, i-iii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1626</td>
<td>Sidney: Defence of Poesy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1627</td>
<td>Shakespeare b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1628</td>
<td>Marlowe b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1629</td>
<td>Montaigne: Essais</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1630</td>
<td>Tasso: Gerusalemme Liberata</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1631</td>
<td>Spenser: Faerie Queene, i-iii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1632</td>
<td>Sidney: Defence of Poesy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1633</td>
<td>Shakespeare b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1634</td>
<td>Marlowe b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1635</td>
<td>Montaigne: Essais</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1636</td>
<td>Tasso: Gerusalemme Liberata</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1637</td>
<td>Spenser: Faerie Queene, i-iii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1638</td>
<td>Sidney: Defence of Poesy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1639</td>
<td>Shakespeare b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1640</td>
<td>Marlowe b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1641</td>
<td>Montaigne: Essais</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1642-1645</td>
<td>Tasso: Gerusalemme Liberata</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table> Korea

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Author</th>
<th>Title or Work</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1645</td>
<td>Yi Myeong-han</td>
<td>d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1647</td>
<td>Yi Sik d.</td>
<td>1649</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1651</td>
<td>Yun Son-do: Obo sasi sa</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1652</td>
<td>Kim Sang-hun d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1656</td>
<td>Kim Kwang-uk d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1658</td>
<td>Kim Yuk d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1659</td>
<td>Prince Pongnim (King</td>
<td>1666</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Hyojong) d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1673</td>
<td>Yu Hyoong-won d.:</td>
<td>1667</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>P'yu'ng-yo sarak</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1687-1688</td>
<td>Kim Man-jung: Kuun mong</td>
<td>1690</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1689-1692</td>
<td>Kim Man-jung: Sassi</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>namjong hli</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1700</td>
<td>Anon.: hyeong wanghu chon</td>
<td>1700</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1711</td>
<td>Nam Kt-man d.</td>
<td>1711</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1720</td>
<td>Chu Ui-sik d.</td>
<td>1726</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1725</td>
<td>Anon.: Kwandang ka</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1728</td>
<td>Kim Ch'on-taej ed.</td>
<td>1728</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Ch'ongju yongdon</td>
<td>1755</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1763</td>
<td>Kim Su-jung ed. Haedong</td>
<td>1764-1770</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>kayo</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1764</td>
<td>Yi Ik d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Kim In-gyom: Ilhong</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>changyu ka</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anon.: Kogum kagok</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1766</td>
<td>Yi Chong-bo d.</td>
<td>1766</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1777-1800</td>
<td>Anon.: Ch'unkhyang chon</td>
<td>1778</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The West

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Author</th>
<th>Title or Work</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1649</td>
<td>Crashaw d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1657</td>
<td>Moliere: Le Misanthrope</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Milton: Paradise Lost</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Dryden: Essay of Dramatick Poesie</td>
<td>1668</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1670</td>
<td>Pascal: Pensées</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1674</td>
<td>Boileau: L'Art Poétique</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1677</td>
<td>Racine: Phèdre</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1678</td>
<td>Bunyan: Pilgrim's Progress</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1700</td>
<td>Locke: Essay concerning Human Understanding</td>
<td>1711</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1711</td>
<td>Dryden d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1719</td>
<td>Pope: Essay on Criticism</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1726</td>
<td>Swift: Gulliver's Travels</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Thomson: The Seasons (-1730)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Pope: Dunciad</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Johnson: English Dictionary</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1759</td>
<td>Voltaire: Candide</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1751-1776</td>
<td>L'Encyclopédie</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1766</td>
<td>Lessing: Laokoon</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1774</td>
<td>Herder: Fragmente</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1778</td>
<td>Herder: Volkslieder</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1781</td>
<td>Kant: Kritik der Reinen Vernunft</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1788</td>
<td>Kant: Kritik der Praktischen Vernunft</td>
<td>1790</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Korean Literature
Comparative Chronology

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Korea</th>
<th>The West</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1789</td>
<td></td>
<td>Blake: Songs of Innocence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1795</td>
<td></td>
<td>Goethe: Wilhelm Meisters Lehrjahre</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1797</td>
<td></td>
<td>Hölderlin: Hyperion</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1798</td>
<td></td>
<td>Wordsworth and Coleridge: Lyrical Ballads</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1800</td>
<td>2d ed. of Lyrical Ballads with Preface</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1803</td>
<td></td>
<td>Ariefi d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1805</td>
<td>Princess Hyegyong: Hanjo ng nok</td>
<td>Goethe: Faust, I</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Pak Chi-won d.: short stories</td>
<td>Madame de Staël: De l’Allemagne</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Coleridge: Biographia Literaria</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Keats: Poems</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1817</td>
<td>Chong Yag-yong: Kyongs’yeup’yo</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Schopenhauer: Die Welt als Wille und Vorstellung</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1819</td>
<td></td>
<td>Lamartine: Méditations</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Keats d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1820</td>
<td></td>
<td>Shelley d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1821</td>
<td></td>
<td>Byron d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1822</td>
<td></td>
<td>Goethe: Faust, II</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1824</td>
<td>Yu Hui: Onmun chi</td>
<td>Carducci b.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Leopardi d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1844</td>
<td>Anon.: Hanyang ka</td>
<td>Dumas: Les Trois Mousquetaires</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1845</td>
<td>Sin Wi d.: Chaha chip</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1846</td>
<td>Namhun t’aep’yong ka</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1850</td>
<td></td>
<td>Hawthorne: The Scarlet Letter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Wordsworth d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1851</td>
<td></td>
<td>Melville: Moby Dick</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1853</td>
<td>Kim Chin-hyong: Puckch’on ka</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Thoreau: Walden</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Whitman: Leaves of Grass</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1854</td>
<td></td>
<td>Flaubert: Madame Bovary</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Baudelaire: Fleurs du Mal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1855</td>
<td></td>
<td>Darwin: Origin of Species</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1856</td>
<td></td>
<td>Tolstoy: War and Peace</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1857</td>
<td></td>
<td>Dostoevsky: Crime and Punishment</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1859</td>
<td></td>
<td>Marx: Das Kapital</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1865-1872</td>
<td></td>
<td>Tolstoy: Anna Karenina</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1866</td>
<td>Hong Sun-hak: Yonhaeng ka</td>
<td>Mallarmé: L'Après-midi d'un Faune</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1866</td>
<td></td>
<td>Dostoevsky: The Brothers Karamazov</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1875-1876</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1876</td>
<td>Pak Hyo-gwan and An Min-yong eds. Kagok wollyu</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1880</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Year</td>
<td>Event</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------</td>
<td>-------</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1883</td>
<td>Ch’ong Yae-yong’s Yoju-dang ch’osok published</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1884</td>
<td>Sin Chae-hyo d.: p’ansori texts</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1906</td>
<td>Yi In-jik: Hyol ui nu</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1908</td>
<td>Ch’oe Nam-sun edits Sonyon Pak Yong-dae, et al.: Changbo munhôn pigo</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1910</td>
<td>Chu Si-gyong: Kugó munpôp</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1915</td>
<td>Yi Kwang-su: Ōrin pot ege</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1918</td>
<td>Ch’angjo</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1920</td>
<td>Tonga Daily</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Han’gol hakhoe organized</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td>Paekcho, Kim Sowôl: Chindallaek’ot</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>Kumsông</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925</td>
<td>K.A.P.F. (-1935)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Ch’oe Sôhae d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Chindan Society organized</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Kim Sowôl d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Yi Sang: Nalgaе</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Sim Hun d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Inmun p’yôngnon</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Munjang</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Ch’ong Chi-yong: Paengnoktum</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Yi Hyo-sok d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Yi Yun-jae d. in Hamhung prison</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Yi Yukso d.: Han Yong-un d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Yun Tong-ju d. in Fukuoka prison</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Kim Tong-in d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1883</td>
<td>Nietzsche: Also Sprach Zarathustra</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1884</td>
<td>Mark Twain: Huckleberry Finn</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1909</td>
<td>Yeats: Collected Works, I.11</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1910</td>
<td>Gide: La Porte étroite</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1917</td>
<td>Gide: La Symphonie pastorale</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1918</td>
<td>Proust: A la Recherche du Temps perdu (-1928)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td>Valéry: La Jeune Parque</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>Joyce: Ulysses</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Yeats: Later Poems</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Valéry: Charmes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1926</td>
<td>Eliot: The Waste Land</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>Rilke: Duineser Elegien; Sonette an Orpheus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Breton: Manifeste du Surréalisme</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Kafka: Der Prozess</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Kafka: Das Schloss</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Mallarmé: La Condition Humaine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Eliot: Murder in the Cathedral</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Sartre: La Naissée</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Yeats d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Joyce: Finnegans Wake</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Frost: Collected Poems</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Camus: L’Étranger</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Hesse: Das Glasperlenspiel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Eliot: Four Quartets</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Sartre: Huis-Clos</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Camus: La Peste</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Faulkner receives the Nobel prize</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>Eliot: The Cocktail Party</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Comparative Chronology

Korea

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Pang Chong-lyön d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Huban'gi group organized</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Korean Academy of Arts organized</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Korean Chapter of the P.E.N. organized</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Hyŏndaeh munhak</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>Ch'ŏn munhak</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>Ch'oe Nam-sŏn d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Hanguk chŏnhu munje chakp'um chip</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>Hanguk chŏnhu munje s'ilip</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The West

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Proust's Jean Santeuil pub.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Hemingway receives the Nobel prize</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>Faulkner: The Town</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Eng. tr. of Dr. Zhivago</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Camus d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>Hemingway d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>Ponge: Le Grand Recueil</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Char: La Parole en Archipel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Faulkner d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Frost d.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
GLOSSARY & INDEX

I. Personal Names

An Chi 安 止, 33
An Ch'uk 安 軸, 16, 25
An Hyang 安 瑚, 93
An Min-yŏng 安敏英, 47
An Su-gil 安壽吉, 115
Aryŏng 阿 廣, 65
Ch'a Ch'ŏn-no 車天幹, 95
Ch'ae Hong-ch'ŏl 蔡洪哲, 25
Ch'ae Man-sik 蔡萬植, 113, 114
Chang Yu 張 楊, 95
Chijung (king) 智證王, 91
Chin Hwa 陳 漢, 92
Chinhwŏn (king) 邓興王, 83
Chinhwŏn 甄 萱, 19
Chinjong 甄 津, 93
Chinp'yŏng (king) 甄平王, 6
Chinsŏng (queen) 甄聖女王, 5
Cho Chi-hun 趙 莊, 107
Cho Chŏn-sŏng 趙存聲, 42
Cho Kwang-jo 趙光祖, 94
Cho Myŏng-hŭi 趙明熙, 113
Cho Wi 吉 偉, 94
Ch'oe Cha 崔 湛, 66, 92
Ch'oe Ch'i-wŏn 崔致遠, 84, 92
Ch'oe Ch'ung 崔 冲, 92
Ch'oe Hang 崔 恒, 27, 28

Ch'oe In-uk 崔仁旭, 115
Ch'oe Ip 崔 丕, 95
Ch'oe Kyŏng-ch'ang 崔慶昌, 95
Ch'oe Nam-sŏn 崔南善, 47, 101
Ch'oe Sŏhae (real name: Ch'oe Hak-song) 崔曙海 (崔鶴松), 113
Ch'oe Sŏn-dal 崔先達, 86
Ch'oe T'ae-ŏng 崔泰應, 115
Chŏn Hyŏng-p'ŭl 全 廣弼, 28
Chŏng Chi-yong 鄭芝溶, 105, 106
Chŏng Ch'ŏl 鄭 湜, 40-42, 52, 61
Chŏng In-ji 鄭麟趾, 28, 93
Chŏng In bo 鄭賓音, 47
Chŏng Kūg-in 丁克仁, 51
Chŏng Mong-ju 鄭夢周, 24, 93, 94
Chŏng Pi-sŏk 鄭飛石, 115
Chŏng T'ae-je 鄭泰齊, 68
Chŏng To-jŏn 鄭道傳, 31, 32, 93
Chŏng Yag-yong 丁若镛, 96
Chŏngjŏ (king) 正 祖, 59, 96
Ch'ŏnin 天 因, 93
Ch'ŏyong 處 容, 7, 19-20, 22
Chu Mong 朱 蠡, 65
Chu Ùi-sik 朱義植, 46
Chu Yo-sŏp 朱曜燮, 113
Ch'ungdam (master) 忠談師, 8, 9, 10
Chungjong (king) 中 宗, 17, 39, 94
Ch'ungnyŏl (king) 忠烈王, 20, 31
Ha Han-dam 河漢潭，86
Ha Yun 河原，32, 93
Han In-t'aek 韓仁澤，113
Hogong 弘公，65
Họ Kyun 許筠，58, 71, 81
Họ Nansörhon 許蘭雪軒，52, 58
Hong Sun-hak 洪淳學，60
Hùimyŏng 希明，10
Hwang Chin-i 黃眞伊，40
Hwang Sun-wŏn 黃順元，115
Hwanjo 恒祖，33
Hyangdan 香丹，78
Hyegyŏng (princess) 恆慶宮，74
Hyojong (king) 孝宗，46
Hyŏn Chin-gŏn 玄鎮健，112, 113
Hyoŏsŏng (king) 孝成王，7
Ikcho 翼祖，33
Im Che 林悌，68
Im Ch’un 林椿，66, 92
Im Og-in 林玉仁，115
Inhyŏn (queen) 仁顯王后，74
Injo (king) 仁祖，67, 77
Inmok (queen mother) 仁穆大妃，74
Iryŏn 一然，9, 93
Kang Su 強首，91
Kil Chae 吉再，39, 94
Kilbo (knight) 資婆郎，9-10
Kim An-guk 金安國，95
Kim Chin-hyŏng 金鎭衡，60
Kim Ch’ŏn-t’aek 金天澤，46
Kim Chŏng-guk 金正國，95
Kim Chŏng-jik 金宗直，94
Kim Chŏng-sŏ 金宗瑞，39
Kim Il-son 金弼孫，94
Kim In-gyŏm 金仁謙，60
Kim Ki-rim 金起林，105-106
Kim Koeng-p’il 金宏弼，94
Kim Ku 金絺，39
Kim Man-jung 金萬重，74-76, 81
Kim Nak 金樂，19
Kim Pu-sik 金富弼，92
Kim Sang-hŏn 金尙憲，42
Kim Sang-ok 金相沃，47
Kim Sang-yong 金尙容，42
Kim Si-sŏp 金時習，67, 81
Kim Sŏng-wŏn 金成遠，54
Kim Sowŏl (real name: Kim Chŏng-sik) 金素月（金廷湜），103-104
Kim Su-jang 金壽長，46, 47
Kim Tae-mun 金大問，65, 92
Kim Tong-in 金東仁，112
Kim Tong-ni 金東里，114-115
Kim U-gyu 金友奎，46
Kim Yong-su 金永壽，115
Kim Yu-gi 金裕器，46
Kim Yu-jŏng 金裕貞，114
Kim Yuk 金塼，96 and n
Koch’ilbu 居溱夫，91
Künch’ogo (king) 近肖古王，91
Kwak Ha-sin 郭夏信，115
Kwan Ch’ang 官昌，83
Kwangdok 广德，8
Kwangaet’o (king) 廣開土王，91
Kwanghaeun 光海君，74
Kwangjong (king) 光宗，15
Kwón Che 權鍾，27
Kwón Ho-mun 權好文，25
Kwón Kún 權近，32,93
Kwón P’il 權赫，95
Kye Paek 閾伯，83
Kye Yong-muk 桂永默，114
Kyöngdok (king) 景德王，6,9
Kyunyö (great master) 均如大師，11-12,15
Mokcho 穆祖，33
Mu (king) 武王，6
Myöngjong (king) 明宗，39
Naehae (king) 奈解王，4
Naemul (king) 奈勿王，91
Nam Hyo-on 南孝溫，94
Nam Kon 南衮，94
Nam Su-mun 南秀文，33
Nam Yong-no 南永魯，69
No Su-sin 虚守慎，95
Ô Suk-kwôn 魚叔權，67
Paek I-jong 白顕正，93
Paek Kwang-hun 白光勳，95
Pak Chi-wön 朴趾源，68-69, 96
Pak Hyo-gwan 朴孝寬，47
Pak Hyökköse 朴赫居世，65
Pak Il-lyang 朴宜亮，65,92
Pak In-no (or Il-lo) 朴仁老，42,52,58-59
Pak Mogwöl (real name: Pak Yong-jong) 朴木月（朴泳鍾），107
Pak Paeng-nyön 朴彭年，93
Pak Tae-wön 朴泰遠，114
Pak T’u-jin 朴斗鎔，107
Pak Una 朴闢，94
Pak Yong-hui 朴泳熙，113
Pophüng (king) 法興王，91
Pyön Kye-ryang 尹季良，32,39,93
Sado (prince) 思悼世子，74
Sejo (king) 世祖，27,34,94
Sejong (great king) 世宗大王，17,27-28,32,34-35,72,84,93
Sigyöngam 懇影庵，67
Sin Chae-hyo 申在孝，87
Sin Hüm 申欽，95
Sin Suk-chu 申叔舟，93
Sin Sung-gyöm 申崇謙，19
Sin Wi 申緯，96
Sinch’ung 信忠，7
Sinhye (queen) 神惠王后，33
Siro 得鳥，6
Sö Chöng-ju 徐廷柱，107,108
Sö Kô-jong 徐居正，67,93
Söhön (queen) 昭憲王后，34
Sol Ch'ong 薛 聰, 5, 92
Sŏnt' an 禪 坦, 93
Song Hyŏn 宋 侖, 67, 95
Song In 宋 賓, 67
Song Sam-mun 成三聞, 39, 93
Song Sun 宋 均, 39
Songdŏk (king) 聖德王, 2
Sŏngjong (king) 成宗, 17, 22, 39, 67, 92 (Koryo)
Sŏnhw a (princess) 善化公主, 6
Sonjo (king) 宣祖, 52, 95
Sukchong (king) 蕭 宗, 67, 69, 74, 76, 77n
Sunjong (duke) 純貞公, 2, 6
Suro 水 路, 2, 6
Suro (king) 首露王, 65
Suyang (prince) 首陽大君, 34
Taegu 太 矩, 5
T'aejo (king) 太祖, 32-34 passim
T'aejong (king) 太宗, 24, 33-34 passim
Taemara 竹旨郎, 6
Tangun 檀 君, 65
T'arhae (king) 聖德王, 65
Tohwanyŏ 桃花女, 65
Tojo 度 祖, 33
U T'ak 呂 愧, 39
Ülchi Mundŏk 乙支文德, 91
Wang Kŏn 王 建, 33
Wihong 魏 弘, 5
Wŏlmae 月 梅, 78
Wŏlmyŏng (master) 月明師, 6, 9
Wŏn Ch'ŏn-sŏk 元天錫, 39
Wŏn'gyŏng (queen) 元敬王后, 33
Yang Chu-dong 梁柱東, 4, 105
Yang So-yu 楊少游, 75
Yangji 良 志, 6
Yejong (king) 福宗, 19
Yi An-nul 李安訥, 95
Yi Ch'ŏn 李 詩, 67
Yi Chŏng-bo 李鼎輔, 46
Yi Chŏng-gu 李廷RenderingContext failed (10140135:1)
Yi Hae-jo 李海朝, 111
Yi Haeng 李 茋, 95
Yi Hang-bok 李恒福, 42
Yi Hwang 李 榮, 39, 40, 95
Yi Hyo-sŏk 李孝石, 113, 114
Yi Hyŏn-bo 李賢輔, 39
Yi Ch'ŏn 李 詩, 67
Yi Che-hyŏn 李齊賢, 25n, 66, 93, 96
Yi Ch'ŏn 李 詩, 67
Yi Chŏng-bo 李鼎輔, 46
Yi Chŏng-gu 李廷龗, 95
Yi Hae-jo 李海朝, 111
Yi Haeng 李 茋, 95
Yi Hang-bok 李恒福, 42
Yi Hwang 李 榮, 39, 40, 95
Yi Hyo-sŏk 李孝石, 113, 114
Yi Hyŏn-bo 李賢輔, 39
Yi Ch'o'ng 基 謹, 6
Yi In-jik 李仁植, 79, 101, 111
Yi In-no (or Il-lo) 李仁老, 66, 92
Yi Kok 李 殼, 66
Yi Kŭn-wŏn 李 謹 元, 59
Yi Kwang-su 李光洙, 47, 101-102, 112
Yi Kyu-bo 李奎報, 66, 92
Yi Mun-jin 李 文 眞, 91
Yi Myŏng-han 李明漢, 42
Yi Ōn-jŏk 李 彥 迪, 59
Yi Pang-wŏn 李芳遠, 24
Yi Pyŏng-gi 李秉岐，47
Yi Saek 李 稔，67, 93
Yi Sang (real name: Kim Hae-gyŏng) 李箱（金海卿）, 114
Yi Se-chʼun 李世春, 37
Yi Sik 李 植, 95
Yi Sŏng-gye 李成桂, 17, 32, 93
Yi Su-gwang 李曙光, 96
Yi Sun-sin 李舜臣, 39
Yi Tʼae-jun 李泰俊, 114
Yi Tal 李 達, 95
Yi T’oryŏng (Yŏng, Mongnyong) 李道令（靈，夢龍）, 77n, 77-78
Yi Tŏk-hyŏng 李 德馨, 59

Yi Ŭn-sang 李殷相, 47
Yŏm Sang-sŏp 廉相涉, 112-113
Yŏngjae 永才, 10
Yŏngjo (king) 英祖, 59, 74
Yŏnsan’gun 燕山君, 94
Yŏok 麗玉, 91
Yu Ch’i-hwan 柳致遠, 107-108
Yu Chŏl-o 鄭鎬, 113
Yu Ho-in 俞好仁, 39
Yu Hyŏng-wŏn 柳馨遠, 95
Yun Hoe 尹 淮, 32, 93
Yun Sŏn-do 尹善道, 42-46
Yuri (king) 懿理王, 2, 3, 4, 91
II. Other Proper Names & Titles

Akchang 樂章，31-36, 51n
Akchang kasa 樂章歌詞，23 and n
Akha kwebōn 樂學範，84n, 95
Akpon 樂本，92
Anmin ka 安民歌，10
Chahadong 紫霞洞，25
Ch'aejong kambŏl kok 彩鳳感別曲，79
Ch'an Kilborang ka 志花紅蓮 傳，76-77
Chang Kukchin chon 張國振傳，73
Changdan'ga 長短歌，37
Ch'angga 長歌，ix, 15-26, 51
Changwa hongnyŏn chon 蕭花紅蓮 傳，76-77
Changhyŏng sijo 長型時調，38
Changjinju sa 將進酒辞，58
Ch'ango 創造，103, 112
Chayoung 自由鍾，111
Che (island) 堤 島，72
Chayu munhak 自由文學，115
Che mangmae ka 祭亡妹歌，9
Chewang un'gi 帝王韻記，93
Ch'iaksan 堆岳山，111
Chindallaekkot 進鼓舞冊，103-104
Chin Taebang chon 陳大方傳，77
Chinhah 陈韓，1
Chiphyŏnchon集賢殿，27 and n, 93
Ch'onggu Yongon 青丘永言，24
Ch'ongnamji chon 丁侍者傳，67
Ch'ong tongbang kok 朝東方曲，31, 32
Ch'ongt'ongch'a chon 靑洞村，112
Ch'ongsok ka 鄭石歌，22, 23
Ch'onghyŏn p'unggyŏng 川邊風景，114
Chŏsaeng chŏn 植生傳，67
Chosŏn munbun 朝鮮文壇，112
Chosŏn p'ŭro [ret'aria] yesul tongmaeng (KAPF) 朝鮮프로藝術同盟，104-105
Chosŏn wangjo sillok 朝鮮王爵實錄，17n, 27n
Ch'yo'ng dance 處容舞，19-20, 84
Ch'yo'ng ka 處容歌，7, 19
Chuk puin ch'ın 竹夫人傳，66
Chukkye pyŏlgok 竹溪別曲，25
Ch'aksŏngsu 祝聖壽，32
Ch'ungbo munhŏn pigo 增補文獻備考 27n, 84
Chunghyo'ng sijo 中型時調，38
Cho Ung chŏn 趙雄傳，73
Cho'gonman il 趙侃男 契，113
Ch'o'gon 招魂，104
Chŏn Uch'i chŏn 田禹治傳，73
Ch'ŏng Kwajŏng 鄭瓜亭，18, 19
Ch'ŏngsaeng ki 終生記，114
Ch'ŏng sija chŏn 丁侍者傳，67
Ch'ong tongbang kok 靖東方曲，31, 32
Ch'ŏnggu yŏngon 青丘永言，24
Ch'ŏng'un yŏnŭi 天君衍義，68
Ch'unhyang chōn  情香傳
77-78, 81-82, 86, 87
Ch'unnnyŏn kok  春眠曲, 61
East Okchŏ  東沃沮, 1
Haedong kosŏng chōn 海東高僧傳, 93
Haein (temple)  海印寺, 67, 72
Haerye  解例, 28
Haesŏ(mask play)  海西, 85
Hahoe (mask play)  河回, 85
Hallim pyŏlgok  翰林別曲, 25
Halmŏni i-ui chugŏm  할머니의 축음

Hanbŭlch'um  舞天, 1, 83
Hangnyŏnhwadae Ch'ŏyongmu hapsŏl
鹤蓮花臺處容合唱, 84n
Hanguk chŏnhu munje chak'um chip
韓國戰後問題作品集, 116
Hanguk chŏnhu munje siijip
韓國戰後問題詩集, 109n
Hanguk munhak chŏnjip
韓國文學全集, 109n
Han'gul  한글, 28
Hanjung nok  恨中錄, 74
Hansan ki  漢山記, 92
Hanyang ka  漢陽歌, 60
Hayŏ ka  何如歌, 24
Hojil  歴, 69
Hong Katong chōn  洪吉童傳
58, 71-73
Hongbaekhwa chōn  紅白花傳, 70
Hŏnhwa ka  献花歌, 6
Hŏsaeng chōn  許生傳, 68
Haban'gi (group) 後半期, 108
Hujŏn chŏnjak  後殿箋, 17
Hŭlk (or Hŭrk)  勝, 112
Hŭngbu chōn  興夫傳, 79
Hunmin chŏngŭm  訓民正音
5n, 15, 27-29
Hwangjo ka  黃鳥歌, 91
Hwarang 花郎, 6, 83
Hwarang segi  花郎世記, 65, 92
Hwa-ang ì-i huye  花郎의 後裔, 114
Hwa-ì hyŏl  花의 血, 111
Hwasa  花史, 68
Hwasso pyŏlgok  華山別曲, 32
Hyangch''al  郷札
5 and n, 15-16, 18, 25
Hyangga  郷歌, 4
Hyesŏng ka  彗星歌, 8
Hyŏl ì-i nu 血의 淚, 101, 111
Hyŏnhae munhak  現代文學, 115
Hyŏnhak kum (Kŏmungo)  玄(鶴)琴, 42
Hyŏnha (temple)  239
Hyŏnha (temple)  懷化寺, 15
Idu  吏讀, 5n, 92
Ikchae nan'go  益齋隨筆, 25n
Illyŏkkŏkkun  人力車 곤, 113
Ilchong changyu ka  日東壯遊歌, 60
Imhwa chŏngyŏn  林花鄭延, 79
Imjin nok  壬辰錄, 73
Im Kyŏngŏp chōn  林慶業傳, 73
Inhyŏng wanghu chōn  仁顯王後傳, 74, 76
Inmun pyŏnggon  人文評論, 106
Isang kok 暖霜曲，18, 19, 23
Kaech'okcha 開拓者，112
Kaebyok 開 闢，112
Kaesong (Songdo) 開城(松都)，15, 40
Kagok 歌 曲，37
Kamkuniin 感君恩，32
Karac 駕洛(加洛，加羅，伽羅，迦羅)，2, 65
Kasa 歌 詞，40, 51-64
Kasiri 가시리，18
Kia wa sallyuk 飢餓卒 殺戮，113
Kim Yonsoil chon 金妍實傳，112
Kisaeng 妓 生，20 and n，22, 24, 40, 60, 66, 69, 75, 77
Kkotukasaki (or Kkotukkkaksi) 2, 32, 15
Koguryo 高句麗，1, 4, 66n, 83, 91
Kongan novel 公案小説，77 and n
Kongbang chon 孔方傳，66
Kogiam soch'ong 古今笑遊，67
Konghuin 笠笈引，91
K'ongiwi p'atchwi 遠 وج 유，79
Koryo 高 韓，4, 8, 15-19 passim，24, 25, 27n，31n，33n，37, 39, 51, 65, 66n，67, 84, 86, 92-94 passim
Koryo sa 高麗史，18, 23n，25n，27n
Kuji (Mt.) 龜 峰，2
Kuk sōnsaeng chon 魏先生傳，66
Kuksun chon 魏醇傳，66
Kumhwan 金 丸，84
Kūmo sinhwa 金繭新話，67-68, 71
K'unmuljin twi 庫木遜話，113
Kuun mong 九雲夢，69, 70, 74-76
Kwandong changyu ka 關東壯遊歌，61
Kwandong pyölgok 關東別曲，25, 52, 61
Kwandung ka 關燈歌，61-62
Kwanghwasa 狂薰師，112
Kwangmun chon 廣文傳，69
Kwangyöm sona'ta 狂炎소나타，112
Kwanong soch'o 講農小抄，96
Kwi ui sŏng 鬼與聲，111
Kwich'okto 歸説途，107, 108
Kwŏn Ikchung chon 權重傳，73
Kyech'uk ilgi 發表日記，74
Kyŏnggich'e ka 景幾體歌，18, 25, 32, 51n
Kyŏngp'an (edition) 京 版 本，71n, 77n, 78
Kyŏnhoe yo 造縂謠，43
Kyunyo chon 均如傳，4, 5, 93
Kyuwŏn ka 關怨歌，58
Mahan 馬 韓，1
Majigut 迎 歌，1, 83
Mangdang (mountain) 芒碩山，72
Manjönch'un 滿殿春，19, 24
Mättung yo 著童謠，6
Mo Taemara ka 著竹旨郎歌，6
Mongch'ón yo 夢天謠，46
Monggŭmch'ok 夢金尺，31
Moranbong 牧丹峰, 111
Moranbyŏng 壮丹屏, 111
Muae 無道, 17 and n
Mujŏng 無情, 112
Munhak yesul 文學藝術, 115
Munjang 文章, 106, 107
Munye 文藝, 115
Munyŏ to 巫女圖, 114
Naktonggang 洛東江, 113
Nalgaeg 洗禮, 114
Napssi ka 納氏歌, 51, 32
narye 祭禮, 84
Nogye ka 蔡溪歌, 59
Noryŏng kŭnhae 露隴近海, 113
Nuhang sa 陋巷詞, 59
Öbu sasi sa 漁夫四時詞, 44-46 ogi 英技, 84
Ogwan [g] dae 五廣大(假面劇), 83
Ongnangia chŏn 王娘子傳, 77
Ongnu mong 玉樓夢, 69-70
Ôrin pot ege 어린 병에제, 112
Oryun ka 五倫歌, 32
ot sijo 芸時調, 38
Pae paejang chŏn 裳祿草傳, 79
Paegun sosŏl 白雲小說, 66
p'aegwan 稚官, 65 and n
P’aeugwan chapki 稚官雜記, 67
Paekche 百濟, 4, 6, 39, 66n, 83, 91
Paekch’i Adada 白雉阿達大, 114
Paekcho 白潮, 103, 113
Paengnoktam 白鹿潭, 105
P’ahan chip 破閣集, 66, 92
Pak Ch’ŏnji 朴倉, see Kkoktukaksi
Pak h‘unsu chŏn 朴文秀傳, 77
Paksisi chŏn 朴氏傳, 73
p’algwahoe 八閤會, 83
Pan’gye surok 磐溪隨錄, 95
p’ansori 磐索里, ix, 86-87, 89
Pawi 帕薇, 114
P’yeoh 瘟墟, 103
Pip’asong 箏琶聲, 111
Pohan chip 篠林集, 66
Ponghwang um 鳳凰吟, 32
Pongsan (mask play) 鳳山踏柶, 83
Pongsŏnha 鳳仙花, 58
Pukch’ŏn 北損, 32
Pukch’ŏn ka 北遜歌, 60
Pukch’ŏng (lion dance) 北青獅子舞, 83
Pul 上, 113
Pukkot 坡克, 117 and n
Punhwang (temple) 菩薩寺, 10
P’ungipsong 風入松, 25
P’ungyo 風謠, 6
Puyŏ 夫餘, 1, 65
P’yoborsil ìi ch’ŏnggaeguri 標本室의 青傑官吏, 112 p’yŏng sijo 平時調, 38
Redimeidā insaeng  레디미드인생
114
Saebfilk  李 盟, 1, 81
Saenaennorae  鞑靼歌, ix, 1-12, 15, 18, 37
Saengmyōng ui sọ  生命里, 107
Saje kok  莎堤曲, 59
Samdae  三代, 113
Samdaemok  三代目, 5
Samguk sagi  三國史記, 3, 5, 65, 92, 93
Samguk yusa  三國遺事, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, 65, 93
Samguksa choryo  三國史節要, 93
Sa miin kok  思美人曲, 52
Samjinjak  三真曲, 19
Samo kok  思母曲, ix, 24
Sandaes  山 歌, 84-85, 86 and n, 113
Sangch'on chip  象村集, 95
Sangch'un kok  賞春曲, 51
Sangdae pyŏlgok  霜臺別曲, 32
Sankkol  山 歌, 114
Sanyangkkæ  多行歌, 113
sanye 弥 妮, 84
Sarin  杀 人, 113
Sasanggye  思想界, 115
sasŏl sijo  辭說時調, 38, 47
Sassi namjŏng  謝氏南征記, 76
Sejong sillek  世宗實錄, 17n, 27n, 28n sijo  時調, 19, 24, 37-49, 107
sijŏl kajo  時節歌調, 37
Silla  新 羅, 2-8 passim, 15, 16, 37, 83, 84, 86, 92
Simch'ŏng chŏn  沈淸傳, 79, 86 sinbŏn  新 翻, 37
Sindo ka  新都歌, 32
Sindo p'algyŏng si  新都八景詩, 32
sinjo  新 調, 37
Sinmunji wa ch'ŏlch'ang  新聞紙斗 鐵窯, 13
sirhak (movement) 實 學, 95-96
Siyong hyangak po  時用鄉樂譜, 18
Sŏgyŏng pyŏlgok  京西別曲, 18, 19, 22
Sok miin kok  極美人曲, 52-54
Sŏkpo sangjol  釋譜詳節, 34, 36 soktok  束 帝, 84
Sonakpi  脫南議, 114
Sŏnangdang  城陰堂, 115
Sŏngdok ka  聖德歌, 32
Songgang kasa  松江歌辭, 40-41, 52
Sŏngho sasŏl  星湖儒說, 96
Sŏngjong sillok  成宗實錄, 17n, 24
Sŏngsan pyŏlgok  星山別曲, 54-58
Sŏnsangt'an  船上歌, 59
Sonyŏn  少 年, 101
So'ŏi  素 衣, 115
Ssanghwajŏm  雙花店, 20, 24
Suborok  受寶錄, 31
Sugyŏng nangja chŏn  淑英娘子傳, 86
Sui chŏn  紫絹傳, 65
Sûngmu  僧 舞, 107
Susŏng chi  愁城誌, 68
taemyŏn 大面，84
T'aep'yong hanhwakolge chŏn 太平開話硯禪傳，67
T'aep'yong sa 太平詞，58
tan'ga 塔歌，37
Tansim ka 詩心歌，24
To Ch'ŏnsugwanam ka 繼千佛覩音歌
10
To Ch'ongga ka 悫二將歌，15, 18, 19
Ton 蜜，113
Tongdang 動堂，18, 21-22
Tongguk t'onggamous 東國通鑑，93
Tongin sihwa 東人詩話，93
Tongnaktang 獨樂堂，59
Tonnorae (or Tosolga) 兇率歌
3n, 3-4, 6
Ujŏk ka 遇賊歌，10-11
Ŭnsegye 銀世界，111
Unsu chŏhan nal ounch'ŏn nal，113
Wangnang parch'on chŏn 王郎返魂傳
67
Wan'p'an (edition) 王版，77n, 78 wolch'ŏn 月穎，84
Wŏn'ga 忍歌，7
Wŏnchwangsaeng ka 願往生歌，8
Wŏrin ch’ŏn’gang chigok 月印千江之曲，34-35, 36
Wŏrin sŏkpo 月印釋譜，34
Yangban chŏn 兩班傳，69
Yasim sa 夜深詞，25
Ye 濟，1
Yedŏk sŏnsaeng chŏn 業德先生傳，69
Yeǔi 例義，28
Yi (dynasty, period) 李，朝，15, 19 passim, 22, 24, 25, 31-34 (eulogies)，41, 47, 52, 54, 62, 67, 69, 73, 79, 84-86 passim，93-94, 96
Yŏgong p’aesŏl 慶翁稗說，66
Yŏgye myŏnghyŏn chip 麗季名賢集，25n
Yohan sijip 宮節集，117
Yŏjikkong 女職工，113
Yŏlyǒ Ch’unhyang sujŏl ka 烈女春香守節歌，78
Yongbi ḏch’ŏn ka 龍飛御天歌
27, 32-34
Yonggae ch’onghwa 懷齋囊話，67, 95
Yongmyo (temple) 隻慶寺，6
Yŏngnam ka 嶽南歌，59
Yŏng sin’gun ka 迎神圖歌，2
Yŏnhyŏngje kok 宴兄弟曲，32
Yŏrhagi 熱河日記，96
Yu Ch’ungnyŏl chŏn 劉忠烈傳，73
Yul (island) 肆島，72
Yurim ka 儀林歌，32
ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Peter H[acksoo] Lee is widely regarded as the foremost modern interpreter of Korean culture and literature to the West. He was educated at Seoul, Yale, Fribourg, Florence, Oxford, and Munich, where he received his Ph.D. in 1958. Dr. Lee has been a Fellow of the American Council of Learned Societies and the Bollingen Foundation. His publications include Studies in the Saenaennorae (Rome, 1959), Kranich am Meer: Koreanische Gedichte (Munich, 1959), and Anthology of Korean Poetry (New York, 1964). Currently he is preparing the first complete translation of the Haedong kosůng chŏn ("Lives of Eminent Korean Monks," 1215) and Yongbi och'ón ka ("Hymns to Flying Dragons in Heaven," 1445). He has taught at Yale, Columbia, and the University of Hawaii, where he is Associate Professor of Korean Language & Literature.