During its first year of operation the center made its services known to help schools eliminate the problems associated with desegregation. Among the problem areas investigated in conferences, workshops, clinics, institutes, and special programs were—cultural differences; counseling and guidance services; teaching methods; social activities; Negro academic performance; effective communication between the Negro child and Negro community and the white establishment; legal and historical aspects of school desegregation; teaching competencies; curriculum innovations; and reorientation about the meaning of quality education. Some of the center's resource materials and the help extended in many of these areas are briefly described. (AF)

PREFACE

During the period, November 7, 1966 through October 31, 1967, covered by this report desegregation in the public schools of Texas has proceeded at a pace much more rapid than the educational leaders of the state thought possible. While the Center takes no credit for this stepped-up pace we can, in looking back over our experiences, assume that it has served in some small way to create a climate where school desegregation could at least be talked about and discussed out in the open. We recall, for example, some of the advice when we started: "Go slow", "Do not publicize what you do or where you go", "Eliminate the word 'desegregation' from your announcements", "Do not confront leaders directly", and the constant reminders from our Advisory Council: "Be patient". When we compare this timidity expressed in 1966 with the boldness and forthrightness with which school leaders moved to eliminate the dual school system in 1967 and review the activities of the Center, we would be naive indeed to presume that the activities of the Center had had no impact on the present status of school desegregation in Texas. To be sure, it was indirect, but it happened.

During the year as director of the Center we have seen relationships within and without the several school districts come from one of quiet reserve to one of personal friendship with educational professionals throughout the state. This is evidenced by the frankness and openness with which they discuss their problems, hopes, fears, and attitudes toward school desegregation. For this we are both pleased and proud.

While Texas has some one-thousand or more school districts which have, supposedly, eliminated the dual school system the job of desegregation is far from complete. In fact, the physical aspects of desegregation have only served to reveal the real underlying problems which will tend to retard integration for years to come. There is little doubt that these kinds of activities as well as others can be of inestimable value in helping the several school districts of the state move from desegregation to integration. The direction of the push resulting from these activities should be the same as that outlined in our original proposal. However, the procedures and processes should be more precise and refined. The experiences of the past year makes this possible.

Nothing in this report should be construed so as to suggest that the launching of the project has been easy and highly successful. Many interacting factors have, perhaps, served to limit the possible good the project might have done. By the same token, nothing should be construed as suggesting that these problems have been overcome. We have made mistakes and will continue to make them - that is the way of progress. In all of our activities our only concern has been that of being of service to those we serve, in whatever capacity possible, as they struggle to eliminate the dual school system. It is anticipated that in the reorganization of the Center, which is underway, many of the problems will be solved and the influence of the Center will be extended and broadened.

If any modicum of success can be claimed for the Center's first year of operation, it must be attributed to the guidance and direction provided us by the dialogue carried on with members of the Advisory Council, other Center and Institute Directors, United States Office of Education personnel, and professional educators throughout the state of Texas who accepted the challenge of desegregation and deliberately sought ways and means to do something about it. For this dialogue we are grateful.
To carry out its mission the Center attempted to develop a consortium made up of representatives for the University of Houston, the University of Saint Thomas, Prairie View College, and Texas Southern University. These representatives were all members of the Advisory Council. Again, perhaps, the emotional climate surrounding school desegregation at the time the Center was funded might have been a limiting factor in making the consortium operate successfully.

No attempt is made in this report to describe the attitudes and feelings of school leaders in Texas relative to school desegregation. Rather, this report is designed to indicate the various ways and means the Center has utilized to make its services known and available to the several school districts of the state. These activities are reported under the following headings:

A. Advisory Council
B. Staff Activities
C. Institutes, Clinics, Seminars, and other Formal Programs
D. Technical Services
E. Outside Consultants
F. Summary and Projections
ADVISORY COUNCIL

The Advisory Council established according to the plans projected in the original proposal was composed of eleven members. These members came from the cooperating schools, the Texas Education Agency, Civil Rights group, professional education: Negro teacher in white school, white teacher in Negro school, school superintendent, Civic Organization, and the legal profession.

During the year that the project was in operation the Council met six times. These meetings, with the exception of the initial one, were designed to hear reports on the activities of the Center, to provide counseling and guidance for the staff in planning and following through on Center activities, to determine new and novel approaches to solve our common problem, to provide assistance in the on-going operations of the Center, and to provide assistance with the critical problem of staff recruitment.

It should be pointed out, perhaps, that the initial meeting of the Council was concerned primarily with acquainting members with the concept of a Center and how a Center operates, exploring, in depth, the magnitude of the problem about which we were and are concerned. In pursuing this objective members discussed a myriad of perceived problems - real and imaginary, of local educational decision-makers in the desegregation process.

In reviewing the minutes of these meetings it is interesting to note and compare the major concerns of the group at the initial meeting and the last one. At the initial meeting the major problems we faced as a Center as seen by the group were:

1. The possibility of stirring up strife in the local community by misinterpretation of our efforts by the press. (A case in point is the present situation in the Crosby Independent School District).
2. The connotations implied by use of the word "desegregation" in our title.

3. Fear on the part of local leaders, educational, to identify with an outside agency or group.

4. The relationship between what we were attempting to do and the work of the Title VI people.

At the last meeting of the Council the major problem as perceived by the group was the lack of aggressiveness on the part of the Center in getting more schools and school districts to utilize its services. We invited several East Texas Superintendents to sit in on this meeting and participate in our deliberations. They too, felt that the Center had not been aggressive enough.

Obviously, the fears expressed at the outset of the Center's operations limited the extent to which we were advised to go in assisting school districts with their problems resulting from the desegregation of their schools. It is also quite obvious that after a year's experience with the Center's operations and the attitude changes as reflected in what school districts did in the same time period, future activities of the Center could make a major impact on education in Texas.

In planning the make-up of the Advisory Council it was anticipated that: (1) the representatives from the cooperating schools would provide the technical know-how needed to make the Center's activities effective as it worked with the several school districts, (2) the representative of the Texas Education Agency would provide entree for the Center into the several school districts of the state, (3) the Civil Rights representative would provide entree into the activist groups of the state, (4) the public school representatives would provide the Center with insight into the real nature of the problems occasioned by school desegregation, (5) the representative from the Civic organizations would provide the Center...
entree into the several civic groups of the state who had as a major part of their program equality of educational opportunity, and (6) the representative from the legal profession would provide the Center the legal counsel and direction needed to pursue its mission. While we have not been as successful as we had hoped with each of these representatives, we do feel that they have been of inestimable value to the work of the Center. For this counsel and direction we are both thankful and grateful.

CONFERENCES, WORKSHOPS, CLINICS, INSTITUTES AND SPECIAL PROGRAMS CONDUCTED BY THE CENTER

As written into the original proposal workshops, conferences, clinics, et cetra were to be an integral part of the activities of the Center. The objectives of these activities were: (1) to provide a sounding-board for open and free discussion of school desegregation problems and fears, (2) to identify problems perceived by educational professionals out on the field, (3) to develop action plans to eliminate anticipated blocks to smooth desegregation, (4) to provide for working and social interaction between and among Negro and white professionals, (5) to familiarize educators in our service area with the services the Center could and would provide, (6) to explore school desegregation problems as they relate to quality education, (7) to review the United States Circuit Court of Appeals Decision relating to school desegregation, and (8) to explore the immediate steps a district might take to solve its own problems.

These activities are reported under the following headings: (1) those activities specifically designed for members of the Advisory Council, (2) those activities specifically designed for Educational Decision Makers (superintendents, school board members, school board lawyers, and school principals), and (3) those designed specifically for classroom teachers and instructional leaders.

A. ADVISORY COUNCIL

The initial meeting of the Advisory Council was designed, primarily, to acquaint members with the concept of a center, how, hopefully, a center operates, and to explore the magnitude and extent of the problems occasioned by school desegregation. To this end the following presentations were made to this group:

OTHER TECHNICAL SERVICES

Besides formal presentation at all the Center's sponsored activities we have met with the Crosby Independent School District Board of Education, Crosby, Texas to discuss with them the problems inherent in the desegregation process in their districts and how we might be of service to them in making the transition as smooth as possible. This visit was in response to an invitation by the superintendent after the Title VI people had visited him. Our recommendation to them was that they do as the Compliance people had suggested - re-open freedom of choice and integrate more teachers. However, the local press carried a different interpretation. No efforts were made to correct the release. In the discussion of finances for school building reference was made to Title III of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act which, under certain conditions, can provide a source of funds. This too, was misinterpreted to the press. The reaction of the board members in regard other Federal Programs suggest the need for some dialogue with superintendents on this topic. This is being arranged by the Center.

Inquiries have come from other school districts with reference to this kind of activity, but so far none of them have materialized. We feel that the opportunities are forthcoming.

We, during the year, have helped the Willis, New Waverly, Shepherd, and Cold Springs Independent School Districts collect data to support a request for an Advisory Specialist. We provided the resources and advice for the Ennis Independent School District to collect and analyze data on factors which contribute to elimination of the dual school system. This same kind of service has been requested from eight (8) other school districts. We are hoping to get started on these projects when and if we are funded for another year. At the moment (time of this writing) we are advising several school districts on plans for in-service growth activities under their Title I money allocation of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.
OUTSIDE CONSULTANTS

Consultants other than the two of us associated with the Center, Jack Dodson and myself, were used in all of our meetings to assist in the achievement of our objectives. While no attempt is made in this report to evaluate the contributions of these consultants, we feel that it should be stated that from our own particular position or point of view and the expressed opinions of participants all of them fulfilled their responsibilities admirably. In fact, all of their presentations were both provocative and challenging in what they said and how they said it.

For the most part, all outside consultants were utilized as discussion leaders and their presentations were made in an informal face-to-face setting. The interaction was excellent.

In selecting consultants, efforts were made to get knowledgeable people in the area or on the topic they were to discuss. Hence, we have utilized people from across the nation. The following were utilized:

SUMMARY AND PROJECTIONS

A. Summary

During the year that the Center has been in operation its activities have been directed toward a wide range of problems and problem areas including cultural differences, counseling and guidance services, teaching methodology, social activities within and without the school, academic performance among Negro students, effective communications with the Negro child and the Negro community by the white establishment, the legal and historical aspects of school desegregation, teaching competencies, curriculum innovations, and a re-orientation as to what quality education really means. We have tried, within limitations imposed on us, to find solutions to those problems perceived by the local community. In this connection, emphasis has been placed, not only on an understanding of the problem, but also on techniques for initiating change in a positive direction. More specifically, we have looked at such problems as those associated with:

- Negro teacher - white student
- Negro student - white teacher
- Negro student - white counselor
- White student - Negro counselor
- Organizational patterns for instruction
- Social life within the school
- White principal - Negro teachers
- Negro principal - white teachers
- White principal - Negro students
- Negro principal - white students
- Emotional overtones in a desegregated classroom
- Curriculum innovations
- School - community relations
- Critical self-analysis

In addition to the human and other resources available at and through Texas Southern University, the Center has had at its disposal the nominal human and other resources of Prairie View College, the University of Houston, the University of Saint Thomas, and the Texas Education Agency. The presidents of the schools indicated and the Commissioner of Education for the state of Texas committed their schools and the agency to this idea at the time of application for establishment of the Center.

For use in the institutes, conferences, seminars and other planning activities the Center has utilized the services of nationally known scholars and educators who have worked rather closely with school and school district personnel in the development of suggested procedures, operations, and approaches to solution of problems identified within the local community relating to school desegregation.

During the first year of our operation, the Center utilized its resources, for the most part, to make its services known and to let it be known throughout its service area that we were available to schools and school districts to help them do whatever they felt needed to be done in eliminating the dual school system. In pursuing this objective, our activities have been involved largely with relatively large groups with little or no opportunity for participants to explore among themselves their problems and concerns. The number and kind of such groups follow:

Number of school districts served - 174
Number of school districts in cities - 30
Number of school districts in towns - 125
Number of common school districts - 19
Number of school superintendents participating in one or more of our activities - 115
Number of school board members participating in one or more of our activities - 59
Number of school principals participating in one or more of our activities - 142

Number of classroom teachers participating in one or more of our activities - 392

Number of supervisors participating in one or more of our activities - 32

Number of curriculum coordinators participating in one or more of our activities - 15

Number of counselors participating in one or more of our activities - 15

Number of school board attorneys participating in one or more of our activities - 3

Number of county judges participating in one or more of our activities - 2

Number of school district business managers participating in one or more of our activities - 5

B. Projections

At the close of this reporting period serious dialogue was underway among representatives of the University of Houston, the University of Saint Thomas, Houston Baptist College, Prairie View College, and Texas Southern University regarding a restructuring and re-organization of the Center to insure more involvement on the part of the participating schools. Hence, any projections as to the future direction of the Center’s activities would be premature. However, the plans for restructuring and re-organization, as they are presently being discussed include:

1. Changing the name of the Center to "The Southeastern Texas Educational Center."

2. Re-writing the original proposal for the establishment of the Center in order to give the Houston Independent School District top priority in any and all activities of the Center.

3. Follow through on number two above would insure that the Teacher Education Program at the University of Houston would have high priority on any and all activities of the Center since the university trains most of the teachers of the district.
4. Making sure that the general public does not get the idea that the Center is a Texas Southern University project.

5. Having the proposed organizational structure to provide for:
   a. A Policy Making Board composed of not more than twenty-five members including the heads of the cooperating schools, ten (10) superintendents, the State Director of Compensatory Education Programs, and the State Director of the Regional Service Centers.
   b. An Administrative Council to be responsible for carrying out the policies of the board and composed of the appointed representatives of each of the cooperating schools.
   c. Technical Assistants from each of the cooperating schools to be responsible for follow through on any and all programs approved by the Administrative Council.
   d. Operational Staff to be selected later.
   e. Making the Houston Baptist College the Fiscal Agent for the Center.
   f. Moving the physical headquarters of the Center to the campus of the University of Houston.

6. Follow through on the contacts and experiences of the presently organized center to insure continuity in program development.
APPENDICES

(ANNOUNCEMENTS)
Individuals selected for attendance at any and all activities under the direction and or/sponsorship of the center itself and initiated by the local school district, The Texas Education Agency, the center itself, or any other organization having the authority will be paid the usual stipend of fifteen (15) dollars per day plus travel per car pool at the usual rate of nine (9) cents per mile.

NOMINATIONS AND INQUIRIES

The Texas Southern University Resource Center is a finding operation as well as an educative adventure. It is hoped that a large number of school districts of the state of Texas will be interested in its possible application and use within their own school communities as they struggle to meet the demands of the desegregation process. The problems encountered in this process are best known by the educational leaders within the school communities of the state. Hence, nominations for participation in the center's activities should originate with the superintendent, the local school board, the Texas Education Agency, or any other state agency having such authority. Normally, the nominees should come from those districts whose superintendents have been participants in one of the area meetings specifically designed for them. As soon as a person is nominated or makes inquiry further details will be provided through correspondence.

Schools and school districts attracted by the center are invited to inquire about details.

The general theme for the seminar is: The Expanding Role of the Teacher in Desegregated Schools: Curriculum Innovations. The seminar is designed as a part of a continuing in-service education program to help school personnel examine roles, functions, methodology, and content, and, at the same time, improve interpersonal relationships. The seminar will be held in the Ennis High School Auditorium, Saturday, October 7, 1967. The following persons will explore in depth the areas indicated:

Lawrence A. Davis will put in historical perspective the civil rights movement which has resulted in desegregation of public schools and the implications for teaching, learning, and curriculum revision.

John P. McIntyre will explore in depth the expanding role of the teacher and the expanding goals of the curriculum which have resulted from desegregation of public schools.

Maeleen Arrant and Jerome Bourgeois will react, along with the above two people, to the presentations in an effort to deepen insights, broaden understandings, clarify concepts, etc.

Participants in the seminar will be paid a stipend of fifteen (15) dollars per day.

Registration will start at 8:30 A.M. in the lobby of the auditorium. The first general session will start at 9:00 A.M.

For further information contact your Superintendent, Mr. F. E. Watson.

Professionally yours,

DISCUSSION GUIDE

The Crosby Independent School District has sought assistance through the Director of the Resource Center for the Solution of Problems Associated with School Desegregation, to help them solve what seems to be some problems related to compliance with the United States Office of Education 1966 Guidelines on Desegregation of Schools.

Since we do not have first hand information concerning the problems, the following questions have been formulated. The background of these questions is an article which appeared in the January 17, 1967 Houston Chronicle. The space on the right is provided for your notes, comments, and/or questions.

1. What are some factors which might lead a group of students to transfer or re-transfer?

2. Is it possible to reword the contracts so that teachers do not contract for a particular school?

3. What is "realism" as interpreted by the Crosby School Board?
This document includes and elaborates, somewhat, the ideas which will be presented by Dr. Bullock. They are presented here to form the basis of small group discussions. Read them carefully, think about them, and come to Cold Springs on the 23rd of January, 1967 prepared for a series of lively discussions relative to them. The space on the right is provided for your notes, comments, and/or questions.

1: One of the great needs in the desegregation process is the development of a bridge of understanding between white and Negro teachers who, though functioning separately, have been generally involved in the same national enterprise: the education of the nation's children for competent functioning in the type of society we claim as our cultural heritage. To facilitate discussions that might, in turn, enhance this understanding, we will make "social class position" and "the middle class educational form" as basic terms of the first part of our conference exploration. The former term, relating to the level of social origins of public school teachers, will be defined as the level of occupation and education characterizing the family background of public school teachers. It will be related to the mobility of these teachers out of this background. The latter will pertain to the functional aims of our educative process, and will be employed as a backdrop against which will be placed the pupils we teach.

2. The term "school environment," which will also be an important facet of this discussion, will relate to the kind of demands the school places upon its pupils through the expectations of its teachers, administrators, and the pupils peers.
3. "Dropout Behavior," a term which we will use quite frequently, is here defined as the responses of pupils to the demands of their school environment, where these demands elicit withdrawal symptoms as indicated through various facets of their school record. This type of behavior will be employed merely as one of the many symptoms of withdrawal, and these types of symptoms will be brought into sharp focus in an effort to develop a greater understanding of the common problems White and Negro teachers inevitably face as they attempt to foster the educative process through their respective kinds of schools.

4. "The common ground," will be defined as the problems of education faced by all teachers, and will be presented as various demands of modern technology and of a society gone mad with technology. The common ground will be presented as a common thread that stitches White and Negro teachers together to compose one fabric of America's educational aspirations and presents a bridge across which they can walk collectively toward a complete and integrated effort. Some proposals as to how this can be done will probably be presented.
This document includes and elaborates, somewhat, the ideas presented by Dr. Millman and Miss Calhoun. They are presented here to form the basis for our small group discussion. Read them carefully tonight, think about them, and come prepared tomorrow for a series of lively discussions relative to them. The space on the right is provided for your notes, comments, and/or questions.

1. One major problem that we face as we study quality education and desegregation has to do with terminology. We confuse such terms as cultural deprivation; educationally disadvantaged; socially deprived; culturally different; self-concept; and motivation. For our discussion, the idea that one moves and one can only move in relation to what he perceives in a given situation, and that one can only assess a situation and action requirements of a situation in terms of his assessment of himself. Whatever movement or action occurs in behavior the assessment of self is self-concept, and those elements of the situation that produce behavior are motivations.

2. Too often, the complex problems faced by the Negro child as he enters school are assumed to fall into one of the rather general categories and one of these categories is used to sugarcoat problems that are racial. Actually, these problems are not restricted to any particular group but are probably present in varying degrees for all children.

3. When the usual problems associated with school entrance and attendance are superimposed upon a matrix of problems surrounding racial differences, a situation develops which is pregnant with frustrations.

4. The recent emphasis placed on "learning" of subject-matter, the preoccupation of the teaching profession with something called achievement, the overemphasis on assessment of factual knowledge, and the general tendency to expect something called normal performance have motivated us to compound frustrations of the Negro child.
5. There are several listings of "ideal" and "undesirable" traits of pupils and teachers with which all of us are familiar. How would our list look if we arranged them in rank order?

6. The achievement of a larger proportion of Negro children is inferior. The Negro pupil knows this, his white classmates know this, his teachers know this and this fact stands as a barrier between them and also tends to reinforce the superiority-inferiority feelings and stereotypes which prevail in our racially-structured society. Quality education in a desegregated school requires that pupils attain actual equality in scholastic achievement with their white fellow pupils.

7. Prevailing practices in ability grouping often result in high achieving classes which are nearly all white and low achieving classes which are nearly all Negro. These de facto segregated classes in desegregated schools nourish racial prejudice. Quality education in desegregated schools requires approaches to grouping which will serve varying needs without the negative social and emotional concomitants of ability grouping.

8. Quality education in desegregated schools requires instructional materials which deal with all people truthfully and with respect.

9. Much of what we try to teach in the school is negated decisively in the home. The problem is aggravated when we are dealing with white and Negro parents who may have conflicting opinions about the social changes underway in our culture. It is further aggravated by the distorted perceptions members of the professional staff often have of children's parents, resulting largely from the isolation of white teachers from the homes of Negro pupils and Negro teachers from the homes of white pupils. Quality education in a desegregated school requires rapport between professional staff and both white and Negro homes.
This document includes and elaborates, somewhat, the ideas which will be presented by Mrs. Arrant. They are presented here to form the basis of small group discussions. Read them carefully, think about them, and come to New Waverly on the 7th of March, 1967 prepared for a series of lively discussions relative to them.

The space on the right is provided for your notes, comments, and/or questions.

1. The white teacher in the Negro school is accepted by the Negro professionals and the Negro community but she is an isolate in her own "white" community. The white professional tends to look down on her and the white establishment shuts her out of the community activities.

2. The Negro teacher in the white school is tolerated by white professionals and completely ignored and invisible by and to the white community. Thus, the Negro teacher in the white school too, is an isolate.

3. When we talk about deprivation we should keep in mind that all of us are deprived to some degree.

4. Most children, regardless of race or circumstance, are of normal intelligence and all children have a background of experiences. Hence, all children learn when properly stimulated. Thus, the teacher as a paid trainer has the responsibility for stimulating children.

5. Instruction is carried out through network of communicative systems - both verbal and non-verbal. Hence, what the learner perceives to be the relationship of his teacher to his world affects his reaction and relationship to the learning environment.
TO START YOUR THINKING

In considering stepped-up desegregation in your school district next fall, it might be well to review those factors in public education which might have contributed to or deterred the acculturation and academic achievement of students from lower-class or minority group backgrounds.

The following are presented to give direction to your thinking as you plan action programs for September.

In 1954, the United States Supreme Court by a unanimous decision declared that "Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal." Kenneth Clark drew the following conclusion: "... the United States Supreme Court has stated that segregation itself damages the personality of human beings.... (Clark, K. B. quoted by Patricia Sexton, Education and Income, New York: Viking Press, 1961, Page 243)

In analysing the Segregated School, Martin Deutsch concluded that: "... the more constricted an individual's social frame of reference and the greater its distance from the cultural mainstream, the less meaningful and less effective are the dominant cultural values that impinge on him in the schools and other social institutions. (Deutsch, M. P. quoted by M. L. Goldberg, "Factors Affecting Educational Attainment in Depressed Urban Areas," Education in Depressed Areas, Passow, A. H. ed., New York: Teachers College, Columbia University, 1963, PP. 86-87)

Students from differing circumstances, i.e., different social class backgrounds, bring to school differently developed attitudes and verbal skills. Both have a strong influence upon their performance in school and later in life. (Goldberg, "Factors Affecting Educational Attainment in Depressed Urban Areas" in Education in Depressed Areas (Passow ed., 1963) page 68,87.

... increasing numbers of educators believe that the racial composition of schools can affect the performance and attitudes of students. There is some evidence that the academic achievement of Negro students is lower in majority-Negro than in majority-white schools, and many educators have said that attending schools almost exclusively with children of the same race has a negative effect upon the attitudes of both Negro and white students. (Clark, "Educational Stimulation of Racially Disadvantaged Children" in Education in Depressed Areas (Passow ed.) 1963. Page 156.

... what the pupils are learning from one another is probably just as important as what they are learning from the teachers. This is what I refer to as the Hidden Curriculum. It involves such things as how to think about themselves, how to think about other people, and how to get along with them. It involves such things as values, codes, and styles of human behavior.... (Dr. C. Pinderhughes, Testimony at Boston Hearing of Civil Rights Commission).
Before Negroes can assume their rightful place in a desegregated American culture, important changes in the ego structure of Negro children must first take place. They must shed feelings of inferiority and self-derogation, acquire feelings of self-confidence and racial pride, develop realistic aspirations for occupations requiring greater education and training, and develop the personality traits necessary for implementing these aspirations. Desegregation is an important and first step in the reconstitution of Negro personality, since the school is the most strategically placed social institution for effecting rapid change both in ego structure and in social status. A desegregated school offers the Negro child his first taste of social equality and his first experience of first-class citizenship. He can enjoy the stimulating effects of competition with white children and can use them as realistic yardsticks in measuring his own worth and chances for academic and vocational success. Under these circumstances, educational achievement no longer seems so pointless, and aspirations for higher occupational status in the wider culture acquire more substance. (Ausubel, David and Pearl, "Ego Development Among Segregated Negro Children", Education in Depressed Areas, (Passow ed., 1963) Page 109.

As an instrument of democracy, the schools should work to reduce class and race barriers rather than to reinforce them. Havighurst contends that the lower class or racially segregated school reduces the democratic quality of our society, since many of the characteristics which we regard as essential for a democracy are systematically undermined by segregation. Havighurst further comments that limiting the school program to improvement of segregated schools is a tacit admission that "separate-but-equal" education is enough for Negro and lower-class youth. (Havighurst, R. J. "Urban Development and the Educational System", Education in Depressed Areas, (Passow ed., 1963) Page 33.

Raab and Lipset, in their study entitled "The Prejudiced Society" discuss the segregated school as a breeding ground for prejudice. Their documented study shows that the learning of prejudice is effected primarily by the kinds of social situations in which people live. Consequently, segregated communities are "Schools for Prejudice." They cite studies which show that specific attitudes change favorably after desegregation; and that is not necessary to wait for changes in attitudes before desegregation. (Raab, E. and S. M. Lipset, "The Prejudiced Society", American Relations Today, E. Raab ed., New York: Doubleday, 1962.

The average white student's achievement seems to be less affected by the strength or weakness of his schools facilities, curriculums, and teachers than is the average minority pupils. (Coleman, J. S. et al, Equality of Educational Opportunity Washington, D. C. U. S. Government Printing Office, 1966 page 22).
If correcting behavior is important for whites, so it is for Negroes. If jacking up white children who slump in their work is a way to increase their effort and attention, so it is for Negro children. If pressuring children to do their best to strive to be better, to aspire to be excellent is necessary to increase the achievement of white pupils, so it is for Negro pupils. Negro parents and children are not satisfied with leniency or with being overlooked. They want equality of interest, of treatment, and of opportunity to learn in the mixed school. (Noar, Gertrude, The Teacher and Integration, Washington, D. C. NEA, 1966, page 33).

The concept of a common curriculum and a single state-adopted textbook failed to take into consideration the fact that all pupils of the same chronological age have not enjoyed equal advantages in terms of cultural development, economic opportunity, family stability, opportunity for learning, and previous academic success. If educationally deprived children are to receive from this time forward genuine educational opportunity, the school must compensate for the former and present disadvantageous circumstances through the development of a curriculum to meet their academic needs, whatever these needs may be. (Bash, J. H. Effective Teaching in the Desegregated School, Bloomington, Ind.: Phi Delta Kappa, Inc. 1966).
All of us know that desegregation, students and staff, will be stepped up in all our schools next fall. We know too, that this is going to create (??) or add to the already existing instructional problems in our individual schools. Among the anticipated problems are:

1. Low or non-motivated children in the same class group with highly motivated children.

2. Tendency on the part of some children of a particular race to "try" the teacher if she is of another racial group.

3. Children with poor study habits will be thrown together with children who know not only how to study but how to listen as well.

4. Some parents or pressure groups are going to complain that the poor performers (academic) will force the school to lower its standards.

5. Some parents and pressure groups are not going to accent teachers of a different race in particular schools, etc.

6. Less parent interest in school activities on the part of many parents.
Discussion Guide, 2

7. Some parents want the school to do everything for the children. They just don't seem to care.

8. Social life within and without the school is strained.

9. Teachers who are members of a minority group in a given school tend to be isolates.

10. Some parents and pressure groups want to maintain the status quo.

11. Some people stereotype other people too often.

12. Ability grouping must be re-evaluated or we re-segregate in our desegregated schools.

13. Some groups tend to isolate themselves.

14. Patterns of behavior differ for various groups.

15. Some school boards have not openly charged policies regarding a dual school system - thus adding to the problem.

16. Some groups in our communities are difficult to sell desegregation.

17. Standards of personal hygiene vary among people.

18. Communication becomes a problem because of different speech habits.

19. Some children's attitudes are already stabilized.

20. Book selection and Reading lists need re-examination.

21. Some students whom we call "slow learners" are in reality "poor learners."
22. Some parents and pressure groups are not going to accept members of another race at school social functions.

23. Some children do not feel that regular school attendance and studying have any value.

In our small group discussions we are to look at each of these problems as well as others and make plans for local action programs come September. At the outset we will explore these problems together. Then after lunch we will meet as individual schools and come up with our action plans. Time will be provided for each of us to listen to the plans of the other.

A limited amount of Resource materials has been sent to your superintendent for your information and guidance.

The space on the right is provided for your notes, comments, and/or questions. Let's come to Shepherd on April 18th, 4:00 P. M., prepared for a series of lively and profitable group discussions.
