This report summarizes the activities and accomplishments of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA) Title III Project No. 2635 for the school year 1968-69. While the basic project goals continue to be to develop common measurement procedures and a complementary program of inservice education that interrelates the process of instruction and measurement, two new objectives were added for the 1968-69 school year. They are: 1) to develop final forms of criterion-referenced tests, and 2) to develop a usable ninth grade placement test. The achievement of these two objectives is described with emphasis on the discussion of three methods for predicting success or failure in the ninth grade foreign language experience. The experimental, statistical results of teacher recommendations, placement, and transfer tests are compared and described in this report. Project results and changes in participants' attitudes toward the use of behavioral objectives in planning curriculum are examined. Cooperating community agencies are listed. A student questionnaire, test scripts, and answer booklets are reproduced in the appendix. For a related document see ED 025 982. (FL)

PROGRESS REPORT OF THE DEVELOPMENT OF COUNTY-WIDE ARTICULATION IN FOREIGN LANGUAGE INSTRUCTION THROUGH COMMON MEASUREMENT PROCEDURES

July 1, 1969

I. INTRODUCTION

The activities of the first two years of the ESEA Title III Project #2635 have been described in annual progress reports distributed in July, 19671 and in July, 1968.2 This report summarizes the activities and accomplishments of the project for the school year 1968-69.

II. MAJOR OBJECTIVES AND TECHNIQUES IN EVALUATING THE ACHIEVEMENT OF THESE OBJECTIVES

A. OBJECTIVES

The basic goals of the project have continued to be the same as those submitted in the initial proposal, i.e., the development of common measurement procedures and a complementary program of inservice education for teachers that interrelates the processes of instruction and measurement. For the 1968-69 school year, the following specific objectives were added:

1. The development of the final forms of the criterion-referenced tests.

2. The development of a useable ninth grade placement test.

B. EVALUATION

The achievement of the first specific objective was met upon the establishment of the final forms of the criterion-referenced tests, which have subsequently been printed and currently are in use.

The achievement of the second specific objective was accomplished as follows:

At the beginning of the 1968-69 school year, three ninth grade experimental groups were selected. The pupils included in each group were chosen entirely at random. A statistical comparison of the performance of the three groups was made based upon the null hypothesis that there should be no significant difference among three methods for predicting success or failure in the ninth grade foreign language experience. The level of significance selected was the .05 level or less to reject the null hypothesis.

Group I. Teacher Recommendation

There were 92 pupils in this group which was not tested with any form of a criterion-referenced test. A questionnaire was completed by each pupil's previous eighth grade teacher. The teacher was asked to predict the success or failure of the pupil in the ninth grade foreign language program. Success was taken to be a "C" grade or better with failure defined as any grade other than "C", "B", or "A". Seventy-three of the pupils were predicted to succeed and 19 were predicted to fail.

Group II. Placement Test

There were 274 pupils in this group which was tested with the sentence pattern, morphology and relator items of the criterion - referenced tests developed for the A-IM Spanish Level I materials. These components constitute the Placement Test. The same criteria to denote success and failure for group one also applied to group two. It was predicted that if the pupil's Placement Test score was 80 (raw score) or above, the pupil would achieve at least a "C" grade in the ensuing year's program. Likewise, if a pupil's Placement Test score was below 80, it was predicted that the pupil would not achieve at least a "C" grade in the ensuing year's program. Two hundred and forty-one pupils were predicted to succeed and thirty-three pupils were predicted to fail.

Group III. Transfer Test

There were 158 pupils in this group which was tested with the transfer items on the criterion-referenced tests developed for A-IM Spanish Level I materials. The same criteria to denote success and failure for groups one and two also applied to group three. If the test score of a pupil in this group was at least 45 (raw score), it was predicted that the pupil would receive at least a "C" grade in the ensuing year's program. A test score of less than 45, was taken to indicate that the pupil could not receive at least a "C" grade in the ensuing year's program.

The following tables show the predicted and observed successes and failures of the three groups.

The following formulae were used to run a \( \chi^2 \) and a contingency coefficient analysis on both studies, i.e., (1) ability to predict success and (2) ability to predict failure.

\chi^2 = \sum \left( \frac{(f_o - f)^2}{f} \right)

\[\chi^2 = \text{Chi square}\]

\[f_o = \text{Observed number of students}\]

\[f = \text{Predicted number of students}\]

and

\[C = \text{Contingency coefficient}\]

\[\chi^2 = \text{Chi square}\]

\[N = \text{Grand total of observed and predicted number of students}\]

Predicting success and failure are:

Success

Chi square = 6.872
Contingency coefficient = .0889

Failure

Chi square = 27.82
Contingency Coefficient = .5

The results show that for 2 degrees of freedom Chi square is significant at the .05 level or less, and therefore the null hypothesis is rejected.

The contingency coefficient among the three groups indicates that there is very little correlation among methods.

Since the null hypothesis must be rejected, the following comparison has been made to show the efficiency of each group for the prediction of success and failure.

</table>

It is interesting to note that all three methods for predicting success can be justifiably used but that none suffice for predicting failure. Either the teacher recommendation or the transfer test results will give the best prediction for success. A pupil whose transfer test score above is 60 is very likely to succeed. On the placement test a student scoring below 80 can be expected not to achieve a grade higher than a "C". Also, it appears that a student whom the previous teacher predicts will not succeed will likely not receive a grade higher than a "C".

The following tables give a break down of the predictive ability of the separate section of each test.

III. RESULTS OF PLANNING

Because of the needs shown last year for a keener insight into behavioral objectives, a series of monthly inservice meetings were established to increase teacher awareness of the advantages of preparing objectives in terms of student behavior. These meetings were under the direction of the Project Director and the Foreign Language Coordinator, who were assisted by Dr. Richard Jones, Department of Education, Stanislaus State College. Each of the teachers who attended these meetings was also provided with direct consultant service (in their respective schools) by the Project Director and the Foreign Language Coordinator.

As a result of these meetings and the follow-up consultant service, there now exists in the county a cadre of teachers representing seventeen school districts. These teachers are able to:

1. Write objectives stated in terms of what a student is expected to do as a result of instruction.
2. Make factual observations of student performance, teacher behavior, learning discipline, difficulty of lesson, and relevancy of learning activities to objectives.

3. Draw inferences regarding students' success in reaching objectives which have been agreed upon before the lesson began.

4. In a role-playing situation guide the teacher being evaluated to make interpretations of pupil achievement, leading to modification of procedures or objectives which will result in improvement of instruction.

5. In a role-playing situation prepare a lesson plan which will form the basis of teaching demonstration, hold a pre-teaching conference with another teacher playing the role of supervisor, teach the lesson while being observed, and hold a post-teaching conference with that teacher.

6. Analyze a learning task in terms of:
   a. Stating the long-range objectives
   b. Analyzing the task
      1) Prerequisite skills and knowledge
      2) Short-range objectives on a daily basis
   c. Selecting learning activities to provide appropriate practice
   d. Gathering evidence of student achievement to evaluate objectives and procedures used

7. Use the criterion-referenced tests that have been developed in the project.

8. Orient other teachers to the objectives of the project.
IV. PROJECT RESULTS WHICH HAVE EXCEEDED EXPECTATIONS

There was a greater acceptance of the results of the ninth grade study than was anticipated. Personnel involved in ninth grade pupil placement in foreign language are currently using the measurement instruments developed for the study.

Also there was a greater response from school district personnel this year to the objectives of the project. During the 1968-69 school year the number of Stanislaus County school districts directly involved in the project increased from three to twenty-one.

V. THE GREATEST CHANGE RESULTING FROM THE PROJECT

Most of the teachers who have been directly involved in the project are now oriented to the need for behavioral objectives. Through exposure to an educational process that interrelates learning and measurement, these teachers have an increased awareness of the need to define their teaching objectives in terms of pupil performance.

Perhaps the best example of this awareness was evidenced on the part of a group of teachers who met for three days at the end of the school year for the purpose of developing a course of study for second language learning in terms of behavioral objectives.

Interested personnel outside of the project area have been kept informed of the progress of the project through the efforts of the Foreign Language Coordinator and the Project Director. In the process of disseminating information, extensive use has been made of a descriptive brochure and a set of colored slides prepared by the Pi Supplementary Education Center in Stockton, San Joaquin County.

The Foreign Language Coordinator also has been instrumental in having the San Joaquin County Department of Education sponsor a series of activities designed to acquaint teachers in the school districts of San Joaquin County of the need to establish instructional objectives in terms of pupil performance.

Perspective teachers at Stanislaus State College are being informed of the objectives of the project and its accomplishments by Dr. Richard Jones of the Department of Education at the college.
