This guide cites instructional materials on Africa south of the Sahara which have become available since February 1969. Acknowledging the probability of inaccuracies in the majority of the materials cited, the guide neither evaluates nor promotes items, but simply presents annotations of readings, textbooks, fact sheets, atlases, African periodicals, film strips, transparencies and records which are intended to broaden the user's knowledge of African people, lands, fine arts, literature, music, economy, and history. The material is organized under regional groupings and then under individual countries: Ghana, Mali, Nigeria, Ethiopia, Kenya, Sudan, Tanzania, Uganda, Chad, Rhodesia, and the Republic of South Africa. Publisher's addresses are listed. (MF)

A supplement to:

AFRICA SOUTH OF THE SAHARA:
A RESOURCE AND CURRICULUM GUIDE

Spring 1970
INTRODUCTION

Africa South of the Sahara: A Resource and Curriculum Guide was first published in the early spring of 1969. It contains a descriptive list of all the commercially-prepared, English language, instructional materials on Africa south of the Sahara known to exist as of February of that year. Since then, however, many new materials have appeared. In order to keep educators informed about all materials on Africa that are now available we have therefore prepared this new listing to supplement the original resource guide.

All materials cited herein have either come to our attention or actually appeared for the first time since February 1969. Thus, only materials that have become available in the past year or so are included here. This listing should therefore be used in conjunction with the original, more complete guide which contains descriptions of over 600 other commercially-prepared materials on Africa south of the Sahara.

Except for the brief list of recommended materials on pages no attempt has been made to evaluate the materials listed here. Certainly the vast majority of these materials tend to suffer from technical flaws and/or substantive inaccuracies, lack of balance, use of negative words and ethnocentric bias. In fact, it is probably safe to say that there are few written materials entirely free from factual inaccuracies just as there are very few audio or visual materials entirely free from impressionistic inaccuracies. Yet these weaknesses do not make these materials completely useless for there is not a single one that cannot be well used by some creative, knowledgeable teachers to accomplish perfectly valid learning objectives.

Citation of these materials herein should in no way be construed as an endorsement of their quality. This listing is merely an announcement of their availability. It is not the purpose of this guide to restrict what can be done in the classroom by limiting teachers' awareness of what is available, but rather to open-up classroom learning opportunities by informing educators about all materials on Africa that are presently known to exist. Since the first step in selecting materials for use in the classroom is to identify those that may be potentially useful, the listings here, as in the original resource guide, are intended only to help make this first step possible. Selecting and evaluating instructional materials can only be done with reference to the objectives for which they are to be used. Establishing objectives and, thus, selecting materials are quite properly the prerogatives--indeed, the responsibilities--of the teacher.

The format of this supplement follows exactly that of the original guide (see table of contents following). All entries are keyed to topics that duplicate similar topics in the original. Following each series of entries herein is a reference (in parentheses) to the pages in the original guide where descriptions of other available materials on the same topic may be found. Reference should be made to these pages, too, in determining materials to select for preview and examination.

Like the original, this supplement concludes with two special features. First, beginning on page 43, there is a list of eight items which warrant your special attention. All may be most valuable in classroom teaching and learning about Africa south of the Sahara. The second feature is a listing of addresses of publishers whose materials are cited herein but whose addresses have not been cited in the original guide. Thus, the addresses included here are only those of new publishers (or those newly publishing in the field of African studies). For publishers' addresses not included here please refer to the original guide (see footnote on page 45 below).
