This bilingual directory of research (1963-68) in the development of adult human resources in Canada indicates types of projects undertaken, principal objectives, institutions involved, amounts and sources of funding. It also shows which areas of research have been well covered, those with little or no coverage, and those which might be given a higher priority. Of the 375 projects surveyed, 141 are listed under effective means of providing skills and knowledge, 116 under levels of skill and knowledge, 21 under resource needs, 68 under program effectiveness, and 29 under program development. Academic disciplines represented by the principal researchers are also tabulated. Author and title indexes are included. (LY)

INTRODUCTION

This Inventory provides a guide to research activities in the development of adult human resources in Canada, the type of projects undertaken, the institutions active in this field, and the sources of funds for projects. It also shows which areas of research appear to have been well covered, those where little or no effort has been expended, and those which might be given a higher priority. It may thus be a useful coordinating device for professionals who propose to work in this field, by alerting them to the activities of others.

Some things the Inventory does not do:

a) It does not make comparisons with similar research work in other countries;
b) It does not give information on the design and method of research;
c) It does not indicate the quality of the research findings;
d) It gives no information about the dissemination of findings considered useful, nor of any innovation or change in the relevant parts of the education system resulting from such dissemination.

Although we have listed research efforts by section of the economy, by principal objectives, and by type of activity, the bulk of the available data refers only to inputs, such as the commitment of manpower or money. We have found no satisfactory quantitative data about outputs. Thus we are unable, by comparing inputs to a program of research, to draw conclusions about the outputs of that research or about the possible subsequent innovations or changes.

In the development of natural resources, increased research and development activity are believed to make a major contribution to improved productivity, economic growth, and various social objectives. If this should apply equally to the development of human resources, there are good reasons to consider carefully the merits of wider, more intensive, research into the

1 So far as is known, there are no similar publications with which comparisons can be made. The systematic evaluation of research and development is relatively new and has until now been confined to the natural sciences. The OECD manual "Standard Practice for Surveys of Research and Development" leaves many problems of definition unanswered, especially in the separation of fundamental, basic, oriented, and applied research, and their related scientific activities. All of these problems were encountered in the preparation of this Inventory.

INTRODUCTION

Le présent inventaire constitue un guide pour les travaux de recherche sur le développement des ressources humaines adultes au Canada, la nature des travaux à entreprendre, les institutions actives dans ce domaine et les bailleurs de fonds. Il montre aussi quels sont les secteurs de recherche qui semblent relativement bien traités, ceux qui ont été négligés et ceux auxquels on pourrait donner une plus grande priorité, donc jouer le rôle de mécanisme coordinateur en ce qu'il permettrait aux spécialistes qui envisagent d'entreprendre des recherches dans ce domaine de se tenir au courant des travaux des autres.

Ce qu'on ne trouve pas dans l'inventaire:

a. il ne fournit pas de comparaisons avec les travaux de recherche poursuivis dans d'autres pays;
b. il ne fournit aucun renseignement sur la conception qui préside aux recherches et la méthodologie utilisée;
c. il ne renseigne pas sur la qualité des résultats des recherches;
d. il ne fournit aucune indication sur la diffusion des conclusions jugées utiles, non plus que sur les innovations ou les changements apportés à certains secteurs appropriés du régime d'éducation à la suite de la diffusion de ces conclusions.

Les travaux de recherche ont été repertoriés par secteurs économiques, par objectifs principaux et genre d'activité, mais la majorité des données dont on dispose ne représente que des apports tels qu'engagements en main-d'œuvre ou en capitaux. Nous n'avons pu trouver de données quantitatives satisfaisantes sur les résultats de ces travaux. Nous ne sommes donc pas en mesure, en comparant les apports à un programme de recherche, de tirer des conclusions sur les résultats de ces recherches ou sur d'éventuels changements ou innovations ultérieurs.

1 Pour autant que je sache, il n'existe aucune publication similaire avec laquelle on puisse faire des comparaisons. Il y a relativement peu de temps qu'on a commencé à évaluer systématiquement les recherches et le développement et jusqu'à présent, on s'est occupé uniquement des sciences naturelles. Le manuel publié par l'O.C.D.E. "Standard Practice for Surveys of Research and Development" laisse sans réponse l'ien des problèmes de définition, notamment dans la distinction entre recherches fondamentales, de base, orientée et appliquée et les travaux scientifiques connexes. On s'est heurté à tous ces problèmes pour établir le présent inventaire.
subject, relative to all other demands on the nation's manpower and money. To select an optimum pattern for investment is extremely difficult. The limited resources available for research and development should be invested where they are most likely to benefit the Canadian situation.

If we are to realise the maximum return from our investment in research, we must not merely invest: we must examine the results, draw the correct conclusions, and ensure that both are made known to those who make decisions and establish policies. To date, as is apparent from this Inventory, there has been little, if any, collaboration between governments, universities, and the private sector in the selection of projects and allocation of resources.

Dans l'exploitation des ressources naturelles, on croit que, d'accroître les travaux de recherche et d'expansion, contribuerait beaucoup à améliorer la productivité, le développement économique et les divers objectifs sociaux. En supposant que ceci s'applique aussi au développement des ressources humaines, il y a tout lieu d'examiner avec soin les avantages d'une recherche menée de façon plus intensive et plus large sur la question, par rapport à tout ce qu'on demande d'autre part à la nation en matière de main-d'œuvre et de capitaux. Il est extrêmement difficile de choisir le meilleur mode d'investissement. Il faudrait investir les ressources limitées dont on dispose pour la recherche et le développement là où elles ont le plus de chance de profiter à l'ensemble du Canada.

Si nous voulons tirer le maximum de bénéfice de nos investissements en matière de recherche, il ne suffit pas d'investir: il faut examiner les résultats, tirer les conclusions qui s'imposent et s'assurer que les uns et les autres sont communiqués à ceux qui prennent les décisions et définissent la politique à suivre. Comme on peut le voir d'après cet inventaire, les gouvernements, les universités et le secteur privé n'ont guère fait preuve jusqu'à présent de coopération dans le choix des projets et l'affectation des ressources.
HIGHLIGHTS OF THE REPORTED DATA

There have been no previous studies to identify who is, or is not, interested in or concerned with this subject. To find such organizations, whether conducting or financing research, we cast our net nationwide. We defined the broadest possible boundaries for our subject, to encourage respondents to report even the most borderline of projects, and made the final selection ourselves. Except in Quebec, we requested the information directly. In Quebec, the Department of Education assumed this responsibility and has provided excellent data. Questionnaires were available in both official languages. Table 1 shows the organizations invited to supply information, and the response rate. Tables 2 through 8 summarise the returns.

Of the 322 organizations requested to supply information, 266 responded (83%). There were 99 organizations actively involved in research into the development of adult human resources: they completed 464 research data sheets. Sometimes both the institution conducting the research, and the source of finance, reported the same project. When the duplications and the projects deemed inappropriate were deleted, the total number was reduced to 375. These form the Inventory. The excellent response of 83% shows the interest and enthusiasm of those engaged in research in this field, and their willingness to share information and coordinate activities.

FAITS SAILLANTS DES DONNÉES SIGNALÉES

On ne disposait d'aucune étude antérieure pour identifier les organismes qui s'intéressent ou non à la question. Aussi il a fallu sonder un rayon très vaste pour les trouver, qu'ils s'occupent eux-mêmes de recherche ou qu'ils la financent. Nous avons défini les limites du sujet le plus largement possible pour inciter les interrogés à inclure même leurs travaux les plus marginaux et nous nous sommes chargés du choix définitif. Nous avons demandé directement les informations nécessaires sauf au Québec où le ministère de l'Éducation s'en est chargé et a fourni d'excellentes données. Les questionnaires ont été distribués dans les deux langues officielles. Le tableau 1 représente les organisations invitées à fournir des renseignements et le pourcentage des réponses. Les tableaux 2 à 8 résument ces réponses.

Sur les 322 organismes à qui on a demandé de fournir des renseignements, 266 ont répondu (83 p. 100); 99 s'occupent activement de recherches sur le développement des ressources humaines adultes: ils ont rempli 464 feuilles de renseignements. Il est arrivé parfois que l'institution chargée des recherches et le bailleur de fonds aient signalé le même projet. Une fois les doubles emplois et les projets jugés inappropriés supprimés, le total en a été réduit à 375. Le grand nombre des réponses, 83 p. 100, est un signe de l'intérêt et de l'enthousiasme de ceux qui se sont engagés dans la recherche en ce domaine et de leur désir de se communiquer les renseignements et de coordonner leurs travaux.

TABLEAU N° 2
The universities are the main research centres in adult human resource development. Table No. 3 is a classification of the research by the agency conducting the research. The academic community with 164 projects out of 375 total projects also lead in each of the 5 classifications used. The provincial governments, federal governments and national organizations together report 168 projects with an almost equal distribution amongst the 3. These 3 together with the academic account for approximately 90 per cent of the total projects. The two classifications which reflected the least activity were research on resources required and research on program development which both have a major planning component.

- Research on effective means of providing skills and knowledge
- Research on required level of activities
- Research on resources required
- Research on effectiveness of present programs
- Research on program development
A change occurs when one moves from an analysis of the research centres to an analysis of the fund sources for the research. Table No. 4 is a breakdown of the source of funds by classification of the research. The total number of inputs to funding is 457 for 375 projects since some of the projects are multi-funded. The Federal Government is the most important and frequent source of funds-in that it is involved in funding 200 of the 375 projects. The spread of involvement by classification of the research is interesting in that federal funds support the most number of projects in each classification. The provinces also demonstrate a fairly even spread of funding through each of the classifications.

Where the academic community and foundations appear to invest their money is in research on effective means of providing skills and knowledge. The national organizations record their most frequent investment in research on required levels of activities. This probably reflects the interest of national professional associations in establishing standards and performance guides for their members. It is noteworthy that industry also invests heavily in this classification.

There was a 48 per cent response on dollar amounts which rendered a value of $6,725,191. By a rough ratio and proportion estimate the value of research activity in the 375 projects reported could be expected to run of an order of 13 to 14 million dollars. The budget for the Canada NewStart program would add an additional 4 million to the total and unreported projects possibly another million. Two major sources not reported are the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism and the Royal Commission on the Status of Women. An educated guess would place the total value of research in adult human resource development in the vicinity of 20 million dollars. However, this amount is spread over a number of years and would appear to approximate 4 million per annum.

Table No. 5 shows the range of funding by classification of projects and the total dollar value of 179 projects in which information on funding was reported. 48 projects were in the range under $5,000. At the other end of the scale there were only 14 projects reported with a value over $100,000. The average cost of a research project was approximately $38,000.

In referring to Table No. 4 the comment was made that the Federal Government represented the most important and frequent source of funds. Table No. 6, which shows a further breakdown on the dollar funding of those projects which reported this data, emphasizes this fact; of 234 projects showing a dollar value of $5,441,391 the federal government contributed $3,275,818 to 115 projects. Industry was least able to report dollar value either because the data was confidential or because the project was not a separated item in a larger departmental budget.

A propos du tableau no 4, on signale que le gouvernement fédéral est le bailleur de fonds le plus important et celui auquel on a le plus fréquemment recours. Le tableau no 6 qui représente un décompte plus détaillé du financement en dollars des projets pour lesquels ces chiffres ont été fournis, met l’accent sur le fait que sur 235 projets totalisant $5,441,391 le gouvernement fédéral en a subventionné 115 d’un montant de $3,275,818. L’industrie n’a pas été en mesure de renseigner aussi exactement sur la valeur en dollars des projets parce que les données en étaient confidentielles ou que le projet ne constituait pas un poste distinct dans un grand budget ministériel.

* No. indicates the number of projects funded by the agencies.
Nombre indique le nombre de travaux financés par les organismes.
In requesting data the respondents were asked to break down the dollar value of the projects by year of expenditure. Data was returned on 212 projects for 3 years - 1966-1969. Table No. 7 shows the tabulation of this data. However, only 2 of the 14 projects having a value over $100,000 are reported in this table so that it is impossible to draw any significance from the data.
