This booklet examines the training required by staff employed in housekeeping departments in the hotel and catering industry. It details specifications of particular tasks—baths/cloakrooms; service pantries and utility rooms; beds; furniture/fittings; floors/walls and ceilings; carpets/upholstery/soft furnishings; linen handling; linen room work; and personal services. New courses for housekeeping personnel for the academic year 1969/70 are briefly described. (DM)

Introduction

This booklet, which is one of a series published by the Board, examines the training required by staff employed in Housekeeping Departments in the Hotel and Catering Industry.

The Board is concerned with training for a very large and diverse industry, in which Housekeeping plays a major role. It embraces both Commercial and Non-Commercial establishments and the term Housekeeping can be defined as the care, cleaning and maintenance of buildings and their contents, coupled with a measure of personal service to an appropriate standard, providing comfort and satisfaction to the users of the establishment.

Accommodation Services has been suggested as an alternative term for Housekeeping as it was felt that it reflected more accurately the work carried out in this sector of the industry. There are approximately—16,000 hotels with letting rooms in England, Scotland and Wales and more than 1,500 Schools, Colleges, Universities and Residential Centres providing accommodation. Letting of bedrooms is a very profitable part of an hotel’s business, therefore the standard of housekeeping is vitally important and often a major factor in determining whether guests return.

The training aims of the Board are to provide an adequate supply of properly trained staff to meet industry’s requirements at all levels, to improve the quality and efficiency of training and to share the cost between each and every employer of producing a trained labour force.

This publication follows detailed consultation with Working Parties in Industry and the purpose of this report is to stimulate discussion and comment. The four Working Parties who have assisted us in our work are as follows:

1. British Hotel & Restaurants Association
2. Caterers Association
3. Catering Teachers Association
4. Institutional Management Association Residential Section

In conjunction with this booklet, two syllabuses have been produced based on the training requirements of Room-Maids in the Hotel sector and Cleaners in Halls of Residence. These form a basis from which training programmes can be developed by qualified training personnel.

This booklet is not a final document, but a preliminary report which is designed to enable those engaged in the training of Housekeeping staff to comment on the approach outlined in it. These comments will help the Board to publish firm recommendations that meet the needs of Housekeeping. These recommendations will then be forwarded to the Secretary of State for Employment and Productivity for approval.

John Lanning
Chief Training Development Officer.
It has been quoted that, “Housekeeping is one of the world’s most ancient and honoured occupations. Its art has been exercised by every nation in every latitude since time immemorial.”

The Housekeeper or Domestic Bursar (Job nomenclature is difficult) has great involvement in the economics and well being of her particular establishment. Letting of bedrooms, is a profitable part of hotel business and it is the standard and tone of the Housekeeping which plays a large part in determining whether guests return. The Halls of Residence, Residential Centres and schools, where people of all age groups live for many months of the year, play an important part in the life of each individual.

It is a well known fact that each Housekeeper/Domestic Bursar is an individualist and it is understandable that she is reluctant to alter her ways in accepting new trends and ideas. Market demands are now compelling her to adapt as never before.

Tourism continues to grow and it is estimated that ten million visitors will visit Great Britain each year by 1975, all needing accommodation. Universities, Colleges, and schools are creating and extending their accommodation facilities and many companies now provide residence for their staff whether for a long or short term stay.

Trends in Housekeeping are changing and the jobs of Housekeeping staff are becoming more flexible. The traditional service offered by the Housekeeping department is gradually disappearing in a large number of establishments. “Motel” type accommodation has been introduced more recently and many establishments of the future may well offer this. Many hotels have dispensed with the early morning tea service, instead guests are provided with tea-making equipment. As more and more disposable items are marketed, many establishments take advantage of them. New equipment and products used and new techniques adopted.

With these and many other changes taking place, there is every indication that the duties of most Housekeeping staff will also change.

Planned training has a part to play in Housekeeping – Management and staff must make themselves aware of new ideas, new methods and new techniques. New staff will have to be trained in these techniques. Existing staff may have to become more effective as increasing costs have to be absorbed by greater productivity and versatility.

These problems face every manager in industry today. They can only be overcome if management and staff are properly equipped and trained. It has also been shown that some form of introductory basic training tends to reduce staff turnover – itself a great problem in the Housekeeping department.
Training in the Past

"Sitting by Nellie" was, and in many cases still is, the method of training in Industry. In some cases the standards were superb and training good but this is the exception, rather than the general picture.

The weaknesses in this unplanned form of training are many.

1. There is no guarantee that the right skills are acquired by watching and learning from more experienced colleagues on-the-job. Bad habits or inefficient methods of working are frequently passed on and perpetuated.

2. Experienced staff usually have little or no time to spend instructing newcomers. They are frequently unable to pass on their skills and knowledge effectively because of the lack of time and lack of training in the techniques of instruction.

3. Unplanned training is lengthy and inefficient. It is normally uneconomic and a waste of human and financial resources. Appropriate skills and knowledge, taught in a systematic way, can be acquired much more quickly and effectively.

4. Personal contact is an integral part of the work of Housekeeping staff. Planned training in the 'social' skill necessary for good customer relationship is largely ignored.

For many years full time courses leading to National Certificates have been offered by Colleges throughout Great Britain, for those wishing to enter the hotel and catering industry. The majority of these courses contain Housekeeping training within the syllabus, and students who have a bent towards this work enter the industry and after suitable experience become Housekeepers or Domestic Bursars.

Examples of such courses are:
- Institutional Management Diploma
- Institutional Housekeeping and Catering Certificate
- Matron Housekeepers Certificate
- National Diploma in Hotel Keeping and Catering
- Hotel and Catering Institute General Catering Course
- City and Guilds Domestic Assistants Course
- The National Institute for Housecraft, Housecraft Diploma

Some Colleges have arranged certificated and non-certificated part-time and full-time courses for Housekeeping staff of all grades, and many of these have proved extremely successful. Unfortunately in some cases, the response has not been sufficient to warrant the continuation of such training.

The following Housekeeping courses have also been organised:
- Hotel and Catering Institute, Housekeeping Certificate
- City and Guilds, Certificate in Cleaning Science
- The National Institute for Housecraft
  a. Room-maids course
  b. Assistant Housekeepers course
  c. Supervisory course for Housekeeping staff

Individual establishments have organised their own training and more recently Group Training Schemes have arranged courses for their members, for example:

<table>

<td>Bournemouth</td>
<td>a. Housekeeper Course</td>
</tr>
<tr>

</table>

Training can also be given on-the-job and perhaps the job of room-maid and cleaner lends itself to this method most easily. Rooms can be serviced, furniture, equipment and materials are available for the trainee and there is also the opportunity of dealing with users of the establishment. It must be realised however, that training both on and off job in most cases can only be given effectively if the instructor has herself received training in the techniques of instructing. She must have the ability to impart her knowledge and skills quickly and effectively.
The Task Approach

In an industry which is largely based on the success of very many small establishments, any training recommendations put forward by the Board must reflect their needs. There must be flexibility in training so that industry can build up its own training programmes, according to the requirements of its business and the needs of its employees. This is why we have developed the Task Approach to Training.

What is a Task?
It is an identifiable part of a job which is easily recognisable by the employer.

Examining the contents of jobs within Housekeeping has revealed that all jobs are made up of talks. It can also be seen that not all jobs with the same title reflect the same task content.

Examples of tasks performed within jobs are as follows:

- Room-Maid
  - Basic Task 3: The use and care of cleaning materials.
  - Basic Task 4: Dusting.

- Cleaner in Hall of Residence
  - Basic Task 2: The use and care of mechanical cleaning aids.
  - Basic Task 10: Systematic collection and disposal of waste.

This process of task identification has revealed that some tasks are common to most jobs in Housekeeping. We have called these BASIC TASKS.

Even where the type of service provided by establishments appeared to be similar, detailed study of jobs revealed considerable variations in the combination of tasks which formed the content of apparently similar jobs. Although a few of these tasks may be exclusive to the individual establishment, most of them are undertaken by many establishments offering various types of accommodation. The tasks that fall into this category have been identified as VARIABLE TASKS.

It would be impossible to identify those few additional tasks in every job which may be exclusive to one employer and contribute to the individuality of each establishment. These EXCLUSIVE TASKS must be identified by each employer and appropriate training should be arranged by the employer.

The Identification of Tasks
The task lists which follow on pages 8-10, cover in depth the tasks which together form the commonly accepted roles of employees in Housekeeping.

These lists will need to be studied closely by industry to ensure that no tasks have been left out and amendments are made to meet the changing demands placed on industry by the public and in the development of new techniques and equipment.

For training purposes we have identified what appear to be the Basic Tasks and grouped them with an Introduction to Housekeeping to form the foundation of Basic Housekeeping Training which we consider would be appropriate to meet some of the Housekeeping training needs of most employers. The outline of this basic training is shown on page 8.

In addition we have attempted to identify all Variable Tasks and have listed them under the following headings:

- A. Bathrooms and Cloakrooms
- B. Service Pantries, Utility Rooms
- C. Beds
- D. Furniture and Fittings
- E. Floors, Walls and Ceilings
- F. Carpets, Upholstery, Soft furnishings
- G. Linen handling
- H. Linen Room Work
- I. Personal Service

The Basic and Variable Tasks are detailed on pages 8-10.

Exclusive Tasks are obviously dependent on the type of establishment concerned. Every employer will wish to identify these for himself to ensure they are included in the training his employees receive at work.

Each task has been given a reference number for ease of identification to help the employer quickly identify the task content of their employee's job.

Linen Room Work

Personal Service
The Basic Training combines an introduction to Housekeeping with training in those Basic Tasks which appear to be necessary for all new entrants to Housekeeping. It is designed as basic training from which further, more specialised training can be developed as required. On completion of the Basic Training most employees will require training based on those Variable Tasks appropriate to their individual job. These can be selected by every employer from the lists of Variable Tasks. Training for any exclusive tasks that have been identified will be included by the employer as part of the training undertaken within the establishment. Examples of this are on pages.

Introduction to Housekeeping

This general introduction to housekeeping has been compiled for all new entrants to Housekeeping. In addition, all employers will wish to give new employees an introduction into the range of services and facilities provided by their individual establishment. The general introduction to Housekeeping includes:

The Organisation
- General – the organisation involved, staffing structure, geography of building, specific work areas including ancillary departments, welfare and other relevancies. Housekeeping in the organisation, scope of department, rules and regulations of department. The Individual’s Role. The contribution of the individual in the organisation.

Personal Requirements
- First-Aid, safety and fire precautions, hygiene, appearance.

Social Skill
- Team work, working with supervisors, colleagues, other departments, sensitivity for users of the establishments, attitude.

Security
- Company’s security procedure.
- Importance and care in handling people’s belongings. Use and handling of keys.
- Dealing with lost property. Reporting suspicious people or incidents.

Understanding of Instructions
- Importance of carrying out instructions. Type of instruction.

Methods of Communication
- Verbal, written, use of telephone, ‘bleep machine’, light system, bell system.
Bathrooms/Cloakrooms

Selected tasks from this list form part of the work of the majority of Housekeeping staff. These tasks would frequently be undertaken in conjunction with some of the tasks listed underFloors, Walls and Ceilings (Task List E).

A1 Ventilating room with air conditioning system.
A2 Ventilating room without air conditioning system.
A3 Removal of soiled linen.
A4 Attending to incinerator.
A5 Cleaning windows.
A6 Cleaning mirrors.
A7 Cleaning glasses.
A8 Cleaning of bathroom furniture and fittings: e.g. basins, baths, showers, bidets, lavatories, bathroom fittings.
A9 Cleaning of special items: e.g. brushes, bins, rubber bathmats.
A10 Replenishing supplies: e.g. soap, toilet paper, tissues.
A11 Using deodorisers.
A12 Using disinfectants.
A13 Cleaning window curtains and shower curtains.
A14 Changing window curtains and shower curtains.

Service Pantries/Utility Rooms

Some of these tasks are normally undertaken by Housekeeping staff in non-commercial establishments. In commercial establishments where Housekeeping staff are involved in the preparation of snacks and light meals, tasks can be selected from this list.

B1 Use and care of Refrigerators.
B2 Use and care of Milk Boilers.
B3 Use and care of Coffee Makers.
B4 Use and care of Food Trolleys.
B5 Use and care of Cooking Appliances.
B6 Use and care of Irons.
B7 Use and care of Food Trolleys.
B8 Use and care of Drying Equipment.
B9 Use and care of Ironing Boards.
B10 Use and care of Hair Dryers.
B11 Use and care of Dish Washing Machines—Domestic Type.

Beds

Training in some of these tasks is necessary for a large proportion of Housekeeping employees.

C1 Obtaining clean linen.
C2 Dealing with soiled linen.
C3 Stripping, inspecting, airing beds.
C4 Care and cleaning of mattress and base, rotating, turning, suction cleaning.
C5 Care of mattress cover and binder.
C6 Making bed (1 room-maid)
C7 Making bed (in pairs).
C8 Nightly folding and storing cover.
C9 Turning down (single, twin, double bed).
C10 Moving of beds, according to type and size.
C11 Making up cots.
C12 Recognising and Reporting infestation.

Floors/Walls/Ceilings

These tasks are normally integrated with some of the tasks from Baths and Cloakrooms (Task List A), Floors, Walls and Ceilings (Task List E) and Carpets, Upholstery and Soft Furnishings (Task List F).

D1 Venetian blinds.
D2 Light fittings and lamps.
D3 Telephones.
D4 Radiators, ventilators.
D5 Wood—glossy finish.
D6 Wood—matt and satin finish.
D7 Plastics (hard & soft).
D8 Metal.
D9 Hide.
D10 Wicker.

Cleaning Accessories

E1 Use and care of vacuum cleaner, attachments and dustette.
E2 Use and care of floor polisher.
E3 Lino.
E4 Cork.
E5 Rubber.
E6 Thermo plastic.
E7 Vinyl.
E8 Sealed wood.
E9 Unsealed wood.
E10 Terrazzo and ceramic tiles.

Routine cleaning of wall and ceiling surfaces

E11 Paintwork, wall coverings.
E12 Paper.
E13 Fabric.
E14 Wood.
E15 Ceramics.
E16 Plastic base.

Periodic cleaning of floors, walls and ceilings

E17 Floors.
E18 Walls.
E19 Ceilings.

Use, care and storage of:

E20 Floor, wall and ceiling cleaning agents.

Furniture/Fittings

These tasks are closely linked with Baths and Cloakrooms (Task List A) and Carpets, Upholstery and Soft Furnishings (Task List F).

F1 Ventilating room with air conditioning system.
F2 Ventilating room without air conditioning system.
F3 Removal of soiled linen.
F4 Attending to incinerator.
F5 Cleaning windows.
F6 Cleaning mirrors.
F7 Cleaning glasses.
F8 Cleaning of bathroom furniture and fittings: e.g. basins, baths, showers, bidets, lavatories, bathroom fittings.
F9 Cleaning of special items: e.g. brushes, bins, rubber bathmats.
F10 Replenishing supplies: e.g. soap, toilet paper, tissues.
F11 Using deodorisers.
F12 Using disinfectants.
F13 Cleaning window curtains and shower curtains.
F14 Changing window curtains and shower curtains.
Carpets/Upholstery/ Linen Handling

Selected tasks from this list are relevant to the majority of Housekeeping staff.

F1 Use and care of Carpet Sweeper.

F2 Use and care of Non-mechanical carpet shampooer.

F3 Use and care of Mechanical carpet shampooer.

F4 Routine cleaning of carpets, fitted, squares, rugs and stair carpets.

F5 Turning carpets and underlays.

F6 Carrying out simple repairs to carpets and rugs.

F7 Shampooing extensive carpet areas using large scale equipment.

F8 Routine cleaning of fabric upholstery: cut and uncut pile.

F9 Removing simple stains—carpet and upholstery.

F10 Routine cleaning of cushions.

F11 Cleaning lampshades.

F12 Loose covers—removing, washing, finishing, re-fitting.

F13 Machine washing and ironing net curtains and small items.

F14 Removing and re-hanging net curtains.

F15 Removing and re-hanging heavy curtains.

Linen Handling

These tasks are used by the majority of Linen Room staff. Some tasks can be linked with tasks from Beds (Task List C) for some Housekeeping staff and with Linen Room Work (Task List H) for those engaged in Linen Room work.

G1 Identifying linen—category, type, size.

G2 Issuing where applicable:

G2.1 linen

G2.2 uniforms

G2.3 non-traditional items.

G3 Lifting and carrying linen.

G4 Using linen chutes.

G5 Handling soiled linen:

G5.1 Sorting

G5.2 Counting and listing

G5.3 Packing

G5.4 Despatching

G6 Receiving clean linen:

G6.1 Checking, counting and recording

Linen Room Work

The Tasks in this list are relevant to those working in the linen room, they can be integrated with tasks from Linen Handling (Task List G).

H1 Use and care of sewing machines—various types.

H2 Carrying out simple repairs and renovations.

H3 Ironing/Pressing.

H4 Marking linen by machine.

H5 Repairing soft furnishings.

H6 Renovating linen and soft furnishings.

H7 Making new items.

Personal Service

Tasks from this list are relevant to the Commercial aspect of Housekeeping although in some non-commercial establishments Housekeeping staff may be required to carry out some of the tasks.

Selected tasks can be linked with Beds (Task List C) Linen Handling (Task List G) Linen Room Work (Task List H).

I.1 Carrying out early morning routine.

I.2 Dealing with users of the establishment.

I.3 Carrying out evening routine.

I.4 Filling and inserting hot water bottles.

I.5 Inserting electric blankets in beds.

I.6 Supplying bed boards.

I.7 Dealing with infection/special bedding.

I.8 Supplying incidental requirements: e.g. extra pillows, flower vases.

I.9 Arranging for guests laundry/dry cleaning.

I.10 Carrying out simple repairs.

I.11 Carrying out baby supervision.
How can the Task Lists be used?

Many employers and trainers have already looked at the content of jobs in Housekeeping and identified the tasks contained in each.

There are some perhaps who may want to commence a training programme and are wondering how best to set about identifying the tasks involved in jobs. On the pages which follow is a brief explanation of the method to use.

It is essential first of all to establish which job is to be examined. This is the JOB TITLE—

Room-maid
Cleaner

Examples

Although the duties performed have now been identified it is necessary to take another look at each duty and find out what is involved—i.e.,
What does the worker do when performing this duty?
What skill is involved?
What does she need to know?

Once this is known it is necessary to look deeper into the JOB TITLE to find out in broad terms the purpose, range of activities, duties and responsibilities of the jobs. Talk to the employee's supervisor or the employee herself. What in fact you are doing is finding out

1. Who is to do the job?
2. What is to be done?
3. When and where is the job performed?

This information gives a JOB DESCRIPTION. Each Job Description is unique to the particular establishment or type of establishment where the job is performed.

Identify tasks, use the task list, observe the employee, talk to her and also to her supervisor. As tasks are identified these can be marked on the list.

Training can then be given in these tasks, the trainer deciding on those requiring priority.

The Four Dimensions of Housekeeping Training

As already illustrated on the task lists, employers can build up a list of tasks which accurately reflect the job content of their employees. In order to facilitate training in these tasks, we recognise that each task may contain all or one of the following:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Dimension</th>
<th>Example</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1 Technical Skill</td>
<td>manipulating cleaning equipment</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2 Technical Knowledge</td>
<td>knowing the function of cleaning equipment</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3 Social Skill</td>
<td>working without disturbing users of the establishment</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4 Experience</td>
<td>building up speed under pressure and dealing with the unusual or an emergency</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

These elements we have called the four dimensions of a task. Each of the tasks listed have been broken down into four dimensions, where appropriate, and are illustrated in syllabuses I and II.

This breakdown of a task is intended for the trainers' use. By applying this task breakdown, she can draw the trainee's attention to specific skills and knowledge and use it as a guide to training both on and off-the-job.
How are these four dimensions acquired?

Technical Skill
Training in the technical skills of Housekeeping is essential for the efficient and smooth operation of an establishment. Without complete mastery of the relevant technical skills, users of the establishment’s Housekeeping services may be affected. Lack of technical skill makes it difficult for Housekeeping staff to pay sufficient attention to creating the right atmosphere which will give guests that — “We are being looked after” feeling.

Technical Knowledge
Housekeeping staff must have sound technical knowledge in order to exercise their technical skills and give satisfaction to users of the establishment, for example, training that ensures the maintenance of Housekeeping standards are what the users of the establishment expect, and indeed are entitled to.

Social Skill
Training in social skill is vital for all Housekeeping staff. They should be able to adapt to the moods of users of the establishment and be sensitive to their requirements throughout their stay. Housekeeping staff are an important link with the users of the establishment and if they are successful in their work, the guests will be encouraged to return. The social skill of dealing with other people and fellow staff form an important dimension of any job especially in a service industry.

Experience
Practical experience in the working situation which is carefully planned, will ensure that the other three dimensions, technical skill, technical knowledge, social skill, are carried out.

Planned experience in the trainee’s establishment is essential. Only by experiencing the pressure that can exist in Housekeeping work can staff organise their work to the best advantage, build up speed in technical skills, apply their full technical knowledge and fully understand the need to develop their expertise in social skills. This experience properly planned will bring confidence and maturity and thus lead to maximum efficiency.

These four dimensions create the framework within which Housekeeping staff can be trained, and the breakdown of each task identified can be found in syllabuses 1 and 2.

All identified tasks have been broken down in a similar way and if you require copies of these, they can be made available on request.
The academic year 1969/70 sees the advent of new full-time catering courses.

1. The Higher National Diploma either in Hotel and Catering Administration or Institutional Management is a three-year sandwich course.

2. The Ordinary National Diploma in either Hotel and Catering operations or Institutional Housekeeping and Catering, is a two-year full-time course.

3. The City & Guilds of London Institute introduce a one-year General Catering Course (441).

It is expected that a number of housekeepers of the future will stem from these courses, and from the OND and HND courses already well-established in Scotland, and other Supervisory and Management courses.

Training—by whom? To whom? Where and when?

By Whom

Training is the responsibility of management. Employers, Managers, Supervisors, Housekeepers and Domestic Bursars should be closely involved in their employee’s training programme.

Training should be given by skilled people, trained in techniques of instruction, in order that they are able to pass on their knowledge and skills effectively.

To Whom

This training approach enables all types of staff to receive planned training to meet employers’ and national needs. The main streams to receive training will be:

a. new entrants to the industry
b. existing staff who may require further training, re-training, or refresher training.

Where

Training to be effective must be properly planned and should really be made up of off-the-job as well as on-the-job instruction.

Off-the-job enables staff to acquire the skill and knowledge of a task in a systematic way, and at their own rate of learning. On-the-job training is necessary to build up speed and confidence in performing the job within a given time and under pressure of work. This is more frequently known as gaining ‘Experience’.

When

The question so often asked is, “When can I find time to train?” Well, there are times, if work is carefully planned.

1. Before the trainee takes a fully active role in the department immediately she joins the organisation
2. During off peak periods
3. Prior to the opening of a new season’s business
4. Prior to the opening of a new establishment
5. For College halls-of-residence, during students’ vacation periods.

What happens tomorrow?

This booklet aims to lay down a positive framework for the future training recommendations for Housekeeping personnel.

It has been prepared by the Board’s Development Department in consultation with industry. Although there is further work to be done by the Board and by industry, the booklet provides a basis for discussion and action.

What use can you make of this booklet and the two Training Syllabuses?

1. You can use the task list to identify the tasks which your own staff undertake.
2. Based on these Training Syllabuses, you can introduce training programmes for your staff which you can organise yourself. If you require help in this, you can contact your Regional Training Adviser (his address is listed on the inside back cover.)
3. You can discover what training for Housekeeping Staff is being carried on, in your local Technical College, Group Training Schemes. If there is no existing training course, it may be possible for the College or Group to put on courses for you and other employers in the area, based on the appropriate programme of tasks you have identified. Again, your Regional Training Adviser will help.

We are convinced that the Task Approach is right for training in the Hotel and Catering Industry. The Industry’s Working Parties believe that this approach can be fully developed into a nationally accepted training system for all Housekeeping staff. In this way, National standards that are meaningful to all employers can ultimately be established.

Industry can make a considerable contribution in the further development of this approach—by giving the Board’s Principal Development Officer, or Regional Training Advisers, the benefit of its experience and advice. It is realised that the breakdown of tasks may need to be adjusted, and that further work has to be carried out before national training programmes based on groups of tasks can be fully developed. In this way, training programmes can be built up to fully satisfy the needs of the employer and employee. The most difficult part of this work is to agree on the combination of tasks that make up each syllabus. The Board will need help and guidance to be able to do this. This is why it is anxious to receive as much constructive comment as possible. As a result, the Board can be sure that when it subsequently introduces its training recommendations in Housekeeping they are firmly based on the needs of the industry.
