The University of Washington held two one-week programs for library personnel to provide: (1) background information about disadvantaged and minority groups who are "unreached" by library services; (2) knowledge of "outreach" approaches and materials for use in library services; (3) understanding of, and empathy for, problems of the deprived; (4) awareness of social changes affecting libraries; (5) desire for commitment to the library's major role in changing attitudes and in becoming a vital force in our society. The recommended library service improvement programs are mostly on a small scale, person-to-person approach. Some of the suggestions include: (1) training more ethnic groups to work in libraries, (2) employing bilingual librarians in communities that speak two languages, (3) purchasing library materials that are in the language of the community, (4) purchasing library materials that will help the community understand and solve its problems, (5) working with the Visiting Nurse Association to reach shut-ins and (6) training all staff members to have a friendly and outgoing attitude.

I INTRODUCTION

The "disadvantaged" have been a popular topic of conversation for some years; but libraries have been, for the most part, not involved. Where there is interest it is diffuse and turned toward expectation of someone else handling the problem; where there is active concern it is handicapped by lack of specific information on the problems within the library's own area and where to go to find the information.

The attention of many states has been directed toward urban black ghettos; but within the State of Washington as well as the nearby states in the Pacific Northwest, a variety of types of needful people prevail, both in urban and in rural situations, and in a spectrum of groups of all colors. The libraries of the Pacific Northwest have been pioneers in establishing regional networks of libraries, but many of them are aware that even this step does not extend service to everyone within the area. For disadvantaged groups, library service as it now exists does not effectively communicate with them nor with their needs as a result of many economic and social factors. If libraries could find an entry into "life in the streets," they might join other agencies in forwarding desirable social changes.

The Pacific Northwest, with its variety of groups, needs, and areas to be served seemed a logical testing ground for library programs of service to the disadvantaged. But such a program, or any reaction to the problem, must move through, and with the assistance of the librarians of the region who may be aware that troubled areas exist. With so many kinds of service demanding their attention, however, those sectors in which they are unsure are slighted.

Any library action generated for provision of services must come through the interest and knowledge of public librarians. Their own reading can provide some clues, but librarians suffer from closed lines of communication with other agencies concerned with the same group, with the "experts," with the people who need to be served, and even with each other. This Institute was planned to bring members of these groups into contact to close a deep informational gap, so that librarians would become more truly aware of what they face in this sort of untouched service. Direct information about other programs being tried, about sources of funding, but mostly the give and take of ideas between concerned people can prove valuable for all involved. A drawing together of those concerned from other agencies, the libraries, outside experts and especially the street experts should have repercussions in library response.

This is another advantage of a region-wide Institute of this sort. Not only is information shared about a wide variety of needs, but observation can then be made regarding the efficacy of this approach. Is the librarians' lack of information and empathy the crucial factor? Can the librarian, armed with facts and prone to enthusiasm, provide the lever for action? Or is this an isolated influence not vital to the complete problem?

To give the experiment a fair chance, however, both library service personnel and library administrators on the actual project level should be included among the participants. They can present a well-rounded picture of their own institutions and provide a sounding board and reinforcement for each other when they return to the scene of concern.

The contact with the minority group representatives who are "where it's at" must be as free, open and honest as possible, because it is from their responses that the professionals have the most to learn.

With the knowledge that we as librarians are not reaching a large segment of our public, this Institute was planned to open new vistas for library service. The program was intended to be of specific assistance to the librarian facing the "unreached" by providing background information on the disadvantaged, descriptions of successful service programs, and an opportunity for interaction with the group and other participants.

The University of Washington, with enrollment over 32,000, was well suited to offer an Institute on this important subject. It is located in a spectacular setting in the city of Seattle, Washington. Because of its size, the quality of its faculty and its urban location, it is able to draw upon the combined professional and cultural resources of a large academic and metropolitan complex.

During the spring and summer of 1968, in recognition of its responsibility to each segment of the community as well as to society as a whole, the University of Washington undertook a number of positive steps to encourage the increased enrollment of minority students primarily from culturally disadvantaged backgrounds. The University has recognized for years that the number of students representing certain minority groups, especially the Blacks, American Indian and Spanish-surnamed Americans, is far below the numbers expected on the basis of their representation in our state's population. Cultural and economic factors are accepted as the reasons for this deficit.

A substantially increased commitment by the University to recruit more of these students was evidenced in the spring of 1968. For this purpose a "Special Education Program" was organized. The program included specific activities such as recruitment, admissions, pre-autumn orientation, academic program offerings and advisement, tutorial assistance and financial support. Evaluation, change, development and re-evaluation have been constant. In the spring of 1969 the Special Education Program included representatives of the following groups: Black, Chicano (Mexican-American), Asian, American Indian and white students from a poverty background.
Simultaneously, in May, 1968, a Special Curriculum Committee on Black American Culture was appointed. This Committee was asked to develop specific recommendations to the faculty on three related matters: first, what curricular and instructional provisions should be made for all non-white, but particularly Black, students who may enter the University unable to cope successfully with what seems to them to be an alien culture; second, how may each member of the faculty educate himself and his students to a proper awareness of the culture of Black America as it impinges on his field of study and his own courses of instruction; finally, what provisions need to be made for systematic instruction and research in the field of study now variously described as Afro-American Studies, Black Studies or Negro American Studies? The Committee submitted a detailed report which has resulted in the beginning of a Black Studies Curriculum which may lead to the establishment of an interdisciplinary major in this field.

It was within this framework that the Institute, "Libraries and the Unreached" was planned. The Institute was a cooperative venture between the School of Librarianship and the Washington State Library at Olympia, Washington. Miss Susan Latchaw, Library Consultant at the Washington State Library, was Assistant Director for the Institute and also had teaching responsibilities.

The University of Washington provided the physical plant, including required office and classroom space and office equipment, plus supporting staff such as librarians and maintenance personnel.

The entire Institute was held in Clark Hall. The facilities included a large classroom and two smaller classrooms for seminars. The large room was equipped for darkening so that 16 mm. sound motion pictures and other audio-visual materials could be used. Another large room was divided by partitions of book shelves and used as an office by the administrative staff, as a display area and lounge. An adjoining kitchen was used for food service, such as coffee breaks and light refreshments.

Most participants chose to live in a nearby University residence hall where the cost for a double room and all meals for one week was $35.75; for a single room, $43.25.

A. OBJECTIVES -- To provide for the participant: (1) background information about the disadvantaged and minority groups who are the "unreached"; (2) knowledge of "outreach" approaches and materials for use in providing library services; (3) understanding of, and empathy for, the problems of the deprived; (4) awareness of social changes affecting libraries; (5) desire for commitment to library's major role in changing attitudes and in becoming a truly vital force in our society.

B. PARTICIPANTS -- Thirty-six participants were selected for the first one-week session. They were library service personnel who are involved in direct work with disadvantaged or minority groups; for the second week thirty-two library administrators, many from the same libraries as the first group, were chosen. A list of the participants is included in the Appendix.

C. ADMINISTRATIVE STAFF.

2. Assistant Director: Susan Latchaw, Consultant Working with the Disadvantaged, Washington State Library, Olympia, Washington: B.A., University of Michigan, 1964; M.A. (L.S.) University of Michigan, 1965. Duties: Advise Director on program content, advise Director on selection of individual faculty members, coordinate and integrate the educational aspects of the program in accordance with the program objectives, select library materials (print and non-print) to be used in the Institute, responsibility for teaching (i.e., conducting film programs, moderating group discussions, advising participants).

D. PROGRAM -- The formal program is detailed in the brief description of sessions as well as in the weekly schedule which begins on the following page.

INITIATION

9:00 a.m.-Noon

"Who Are the Unreached?"

9:00 a.m.-10:30 Panel Presentation

Mrs. Roberta Byrd Barr (Vice-Principal, Franklin High School, Seattle), Panel Moderator

Ernest A. T. Barth (Professor, Sociology, University of Washington)
Content: In order for a library to effectively serve a racial or ethnic community, the communications procedures used must be at least partially adapted to the unique characteristics of that community. Such characteristics may be seen to take two general forms. The first, and most obvious relates to particular needs and interests of members of that community. An obvious example here would be materials on Afro-American history and contemporary protest activities for black communities. The second, and perhaps less obvious concern must be over the appropriate modes of communication. It is not the case that the written word is the most effective mode of communication for the residents of all communities. For some, music may be a most effective mode of communication, for others it may be discussions or lectures.

James A. Goodman (Associate Professor, School of Social Work, University of Washington)
Content: The mental and environmental notions of alienation have been used to describe what may be a many-faced reality or set of interrelated realities in our society. Our primary aim will be to look at the various definitions to see how they operate in the black community. We'll try to determine the general usefulness of this concept. A brief statement will be made regarding the historical development of black identity. Primary emphasis will be placed upon institutional patterns which have not been useful to the development of positive self-identity on the part of black people in America.

Nathaniel N. Wagner (Associate Professor, Psychology, University of Washington)
Content: The main focus will be on those psychological factors that contribute to people becoming isolated and unreachable. Special attention will be paid to the conditions of ethnic minorities and how historical, economic and social factors combine to produce the sense of psychological isolation. The concept of identity will be central to the understanding of the present behavior of the unreached and will be used to suggest ways to change and enhance the self concept. Example of the role of the perception of others and its relation to self fulfilling prophesies will be emphasized.

10:50 - Noon Discussion/question sessions.

1:00-2:00 p.m.

Cultural Exploration

Simon Ottenberg (Professor, Anthropology, University of Washington)
Content: Libraries tend to reflect the values of middle-class Americans in the views of the staff, the nature of the collection, and the physical arrangement of the library. These values are also reflected in the common illusion that there are few other cultural groups in the country of significance, except in an historical sense, that cultural groups should disappear in the "melting pot," and resentment when they don't, that middle-class Americans are not "ethnic" or cultural, but rational and reasonable. The question of change in library policy is, first of all, a re-examination of our own values in the light of the realities of cultural groupings in the U.S.

2:15 - 4:00 p.m.  Cultural Presentation

2:15-2:45 - Theater of the Streets, produced by Media Services, Mercer County Community College, Trenton, New Jersey. Creative audio-visual materials prepared by minority group representatives.

2:45-3:15 - Discussion

3:15-4:00 - Multi-media presentation on loan from Don Roberts, University of Buffalo Library School.

4:00-5:00 p.m. Film Previewing

7:00-9:00 p.m. Film Viewing and Discussion

TUESDAY, AUGUST 12 and 19

EXPERIENTIAL INVOLVEMENT

7:45-8:45 a.m. Film Previewing

9:00 a.m.-Noon  "How Do We Look To Each Other?" Panel Presentation

Mrs. Roberta Byrd Barr, Panel Moderator

9:00-10:00 Creative audio-visual materials prepared by minority group representatives.

10:00 - Noon Melvin Conerly, Tacoma Urban League

Content: The public image of libraries among those who are not "usual borrowers." Does a repository of information and exploration of man's accumulated data about his journey through time have usefulness for everyone? If it does, it must be easily available. It must also be sold to the prospective consumer—as is everything else.

Communicating with each other: The failure of people to really reach out to help others; man's inhumanity to man, especially the institutionalized and via institutional channels. How do we reach out from institutions to humans? How do we touch those in need of our services? How do institutions enter into meaningful relationships with the community?

1:00-4:00 p.m. "How Do We React To Each Other?" Panel Presentation

Mrs. Roberta Byrd Barr, Panel Moderator

Minority group representatives from New Careers and other programs:

Session I - Mrs. Betty Brown, Mrs. Edith Christian, Mrs. Anita Dudley, Mrs. Elberta Everett, Mary Hillaire, Mrs. Willie Henley, Sam Martinez, Mrs. Suzy Pittman, Jesse Powell, Mike Sambrano, Ronald Swenson, Mrs. Harriet Williams.

Session II - Mrs. Frances Arnold, Joe Brandenburg, Mrs. Betty Brown, Mrs. Edith Christian, Mrs. Elberta Everett, Mrs. Willie Henley, Sam Martinez, Mrs. Suzy Pittman, Jesse Powell, Mike Sambrano, Reuben Vela, Mrs. Harriet Williams.

Content: Library images of success and failure among "new learners"; the library's need to respond to its own community setting. If the above comment is true or nearly true, then several factors account for it. Does the local library make a serious effort to reach out in nontraditional ways to unreach persons? Does it use their significant publications and organizations for publicity? Is the initial reception friendly? Does its personnel indicate by posture, stance or gesture that the "unexpected" person is unwelcome?

1:00-2:00 Panel presentation before total group

2:15-3:30 Three concurrent discussion sessions

3:30-4:00 Panel and audience in joint question session

4:00-5:00 p.m. Film Previewing

7:00-9:00 p.m. Film Viewing and Discussion
WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 13 and 20

RESOURCES (NON-LIBRARY) FACE THE CHALLENGE

7:45-8:45 a.m.  Film Previewing
9:00-10:20 a.m.  One Answer to Adult Illiteracy

Mrs. Mary Wallace, LARK Foundation, Yakima

Content: Finding a point of contact leading toward communication between the librarian and the adult who has a limited reading ability. As people have left familiar surroundings and are changing geographical locations many concepts are no longer valid. This means retooling a whole way of life. Basically, how can the librarians understand the mores, customs and defenses of people who have been unable to function on a literacy level? How can we help to facilitate the changeover from one level of society to another?

10:40-Noon

How Can Libraries Involve Themselves in the Educational Thrust from the Minority Community?

Alfred E. Cowles, Washington State Board Against Discrimination

Content: In the process of oversimplification, many of us fall into the habit of dividing the human family into two major groups--"WE" meaning our kind, and "THEY" meaning all other. The "WE" group to which we may refer may be the large, racial group which shares our skin color; or it may be reduced in size and exclusiveness by such limitations as language group, nationality allegiance, religious persuasion, or even occupational choice. "THEY" will fit into any framework which signifies difference or separation from the "WE" group. In the same sense that "WE" share many virtues in common, "THEY" can be identified by the unfavorable qualities attributed to them, which serve to justify the different and separate status to which we have assigned them.

1:00-4:00 p.m.  Other Agency Professionals Assess the Situation
Panel Presentation

Mrs. Roberta Byrd Barr, Panel Moderator

Vincent Hayes, Seattle Multi-Service Center
Gerry Silverman, New Careers
Edward Chatman, Youth Programs, OEO
Jeffrey McKenna, VISTA
Tomas Sandoval, Special Education Program, U. of W.
Mrs. Lorraine Misiaszek, State Office of Public Instruction

Content: Each person will be representing either a group, an agency, or a sector of interest, and presenting that message will introduce each to the audience. Main points will be the "Agency" view of the library, however, from a background with other programs and an involvement with the same people we hope to reach. Comments on the past and present, and suggestions for the future will be in order.

1:00-2:30 Dialogue presentation by the panel as a whole

3:00-4:00 Concurrent group discussions by panel members

4:00-5:00 p.m.  Film Previewing

7:00-9:00 p.m.  Film Viewing and Discussion
THURSDAY, AUGUST 14 and 21

STRUCTURED LIBRARY RESPONSE

9:00-Noon

Presentation of Services and Activities of Three Libraries

Audiovisual description (tape and slides) of the program with opportunity for audience questions via Tele-lecture.

9:00-10:00 Services and activities of the Los Angeles Public Library

Content: The slide tape presentation of the Library Services and Construction Act funded experimental and demonstration project of the Los Angeles Public Library emphasizes the project staff's activities as they have sought to interest and to increase awareness of potential patrons in library services. Program plans have made provisions for getting people into the library and for taking library service out to the people. The slides have been provided through efforts of staff members whose cameras are used frequently to recapture scenes of library events. Script was prepared by David Barron, Public Relations Representative; narrator is Mrs. Frances Carter, former bookmobile children's librarian.

10:00-11:00 Services and activities of the St. Louis Public Library

Content: The effort of the St. Louis Public Library to reach the unreached is not simply the use of gimmicks or programs to attract or dazzle. Gimmicks and programs can be successful, but we believe more basic changes are needed in urban public libraries. A new society and different cultures require the public libraries to change to meet the needs of this new society. We are attempting to effect change in Board of Trustees outlook and priorities, staff attitude and training, building concepts, book selection policies, and personnel policies and practices. We are thinking of what we might be to a rapidly changing world. Script prepared and narrated by James J. Michael.

11:00-Noon Services and activities of the Enoch Pratt Free Library (Baltimore, Maryland)

Content: Since 1965, the Enoch Pratt Free Library, en under contract to the Community Action Agency of Baltimore (OEO) to bring library services to the inner city in more effective ways and with a staff of both librarians and resident library aides. This area is 90 per cent black. Books, films, filmstrips, educational games, art, music, reading aloud, trips are used in the children's program both indoors and outdoors; in Community Action Centers and on sidewalks and doorsteps. Adult and young adult services similarly reflect an outreach approach. Special emphasis is on job information, self-help, and black interest materials, and free distribution of easy-to-read pamphlets. Cooperation with job-training and adult basic literacy programs has high priority. Script was prepared and narrated by Mr. Arthur S. Meyers, Adult and Young Adult Specialist, and Fannette Thomas, Children's Librarian.

1:00-3:00 p.m.

Library Administrators Face the Challenge - A Dialogue and Discussion

A taped presentation to be followed by Tele-lecture discussion

Session I

Meredith Bloss, Librarian, New Haven Free Public Library, Connecticut

Content: If the public library is to be effective in reaching the unreached, the administrator is the one to make it happen. Needs: conviction that it can be done; commitment to the idea that it is worth doing; and cash, that is, to provide additional financial support that is required. The administrator is facilitator. If he becomes convinced that it is worthwhile to provide services and functions that are beyond the traditional, he finds staff who are willing and able to do this kind of library work, tries to provide them with the wherewithal they need, gives what instructions and guidance he can, and accepts the risks and uncertainties which are involved.

Harold Hacker, Director, Rochester Public Library, New York

Content: Some brief comments on the major issues confronting public libraries desirous of serving the urban and rural unreached: the need for commitment by governing officials, library trustees, and staff; the need for understanding of the changing strategies of inner-city residents; a belief in the ultimate importance of education as a major element in the solution of ghetto problems; and a genuine desire to plan and work with citizen groups.
THURSDAY, AUGUST 14 and 21 (continued)

Session II

Keith Doms, Director, the Free Library of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Content: The orientation will be toward practical aspects of library administration. Special attention will be given to the relationship of the administrators' personal commitment, his philosophical outlook, and motivation in stimulating and developing meaningful programs for the unreached. Other administrative concerns that will be touched upon include some of the realities associated with staff attitudes, funding, re-ordering of priorities, recruiting and inservice training, publicity, facilities, materials, local involvement in program planning and the issue of local control. (Because of his official involvement as chairman of the two principal ALA committees concerned with library service to the disadvantaged, a brief commentary will be made regarding the direction, programs, and progress of the American Library Association in its national efforts to promote, encourage and support affirmative programs of library service for the poor, undereducated and disadvantaged persons of this country.)

Carlton Rochell, Director, Atlanta Public Library, Georgia

Content: Emphasis will be on philosophy and service concepts as they exist today with particular attention given to the evolution of the public library over this century. Specific areas will be touched upon where administration has not kept pace with professed ideals of service. Particular aspects of these gaps include buildings, identification of needed talents, need for more specific direction in changing concepts of library materials. Discussion will focus upon effective approaches needed to bring library systems to a point that new services and concepts have a fair chance to develop.

3:00-4:00 p.m. Institute participants describe services and activities of their libraries.

4:00-5:00 p.m. Film Previewing

7:00-9:00 p.m. Film Viewing and Discussion

FRIDAY, AUGUST 15 and 22

CONSTRUCTIVE PARTICIPANT REACTION

7:45-8:45 a.m. Film Previewing

9:15-10:15 a.m. Panel - David Taylor, Mrs. Lura Currier, Susan Latchaw, Panel Moderator (Staff, Washington State Library)

Funding, publicity, first steps to take. Question period.

10:30-11:30 a.m. Research Report

Margaret E. Monroe, Director, Library School, University of Wisconsin. A taped presentation to be followed by Tele-lecture discussion.

The survey of public library personnel serving inner-city populations in Fall 1968 included data on 1111 staff members in 29 public libraries, and interviews with 147 of these staff members in 14 of these libraries. The purpose of the study was to search the implications for library education from present personnel patterns. The findings group themselves around personnel and service programs. There are clearly identified types of employees new to public libraries (library aides; college-educated persons with art talents; professionals from such fields as social work, religious education, etc.) and there are new functions for professional librarians (street work, community-wide liaison service, etc.) Formal library education carries only part of the responsibility for training these various types of personnel.

In the service program, libraries have been innovating with new emphases: spontaneous programming, programs to develop reading readiness, and involvement of local citizens in planning their own library service. In order to make service programs truly relevant, public libraries have begun to reorganize to ensure the flexible adaptation to local neighborhood needs.
FRIDAY, AUGUST 15 and 22 (continued)

11:30-Noon  Participant Evaluation
Completion of written assessment form.

1:00-4:00 p.m.  Ideas and Recommendations
Moderators: Mrs. Roberta Byrd Barr, Susan Latchaw, and Irving Lieberman.

Hardy R. Franklin, Pre-doctoral candidate, Rutgers University Library School (formerly Senior Community Coordinator, Brooklyn, N.Y. Public Library). A taped presentation to be followed by Tele-lecture discussion.

Content: The profession of librarianship is again at one of the many crossroads in a long history of confrontations. Brickbats are being hurled from within its ranks vigorously and in a steady barrage. Rejection from the outside has been in the form of budget defeats and by reduction or curtailment of funds from state and federal levels. As workshop participants you have heard about the imaginative and even unimaginative but effective ways in which libraries have sought out and tried to develop new patrons. You have heard the administrators explain their efforts to solve the technical and organizational problems. As library workers you have probably found that there is a need to improve significantly the stature of libraries and librarians. Many questions are probably raised in your minds since the concern of each of you as a participant is how you can apply what you have learned to your own situations in terms of service to the unreached.

II EVALUATION

A. ADMINISTRATION

Pre-Institute Preparation: In considering pre-Institute preparation the key to every problem was the short amount of time available. Since plans, had, of necessity, begun late, this problem would not be likely to occur again.

Inquiries began to come in during January and February as soon as the national publicity was released. Two letters were sent in answer to the inquiries, one giving general information and the other setting ahead the date on which the inquirer would be informed if he had been accepted. Some inquiries posed problems that could not be handled through one of the two letters described. For these, several letters were developed to meet various situations and from these the appropriate form letter could be selected and typed. This method solved the problem in the majority of cases.

The brochure which was prepared for this Institute probably reached the public late. It was mailed early in April and the Application for Admission to the Institute had to be postmarked no later than April 21. This meant that in a matter of four weeks the application had to be applied for and returned to this office.

Relations with the USOE and the University of Washington: The memoranda issued by the U.S. Office of Education were extremely explicit and any problem that occurred was related to the shortness of time, not to the work of the USOE. In working with the University of Washington Grants and Contracts Office, the same cooperation existed. No obstacles of any kind were encountered, for the personnel "bent over backwards" in an effort to expedite the work of the Institute.

Sources of Evaluation of the Institute: Participants and instructors were the two principal sources used in the evaluation of the Institute. Prior to the opening of the Institute, each participant was asked for a statement of expectations. On the final day a questionnaire was prepared by the Director and staff and answered by the participants. Later a written evaluation letter was requested by the Director some weeks after the close of the Institute. There was also the information gained by the Director and Assistant Director in their conferences and informal contacts with the participants and staff. Information gathered appears later in this Report.

B. PARTICIPANTS

Eligibility for Admission to the Institute: The Institute was designed for two identical one-week sessions primarily for public librarians of the Pacific Northwest. It was geared to prospective attendants from the same library by library service personnel during the first session and administrative personnel during the second session. Emphasis was on the individual librarian's interest, concern and commitment rather than on educational qualifications. The following points were the basis for selection:

1. Experience and/or interest in working with the disadvantaged and minority groups.

2. Commitment to the concept of service as being the prime responsibility for libraries and their staffs.

3. Employment, present or past, with expected future involvement, with library situations involving the disadvantaged and minority groups whose needs require special innovative patterns of service and materials.

4. Attitude of willingness to understand and accept forces of social change in today's world where emphasis is being centered on the development of programs to assist the disadvantaged and minority groups.

5. Ability to benefit from this Institute and translate knowledge gained into effective programs of action in the home community.

6. Representation from the same library of both service and administrative staff preferred.

It was not possible to secure the participation of teams from all libraries. Therefore individual acceptances were made to a few school librarians, a few community college librarians and to some single representatives from public libraries. The staff was particularly pleased with the caliber and commitment of the participants.

Orientation: The participants were asked to report on Sunday of the week of the Institute for purposes of registration and orientation. An explanation was given as to how the Institute came into being, its objectives, the program, the exhibits and library materials. The educational and recreational opportunities available on and off campus were reported. The session culminated in a buffet supper arranged at the home of the Director. These beginning hours were very satisfying in "breaking the ice" and getting the participants and staff to know each other better.

C. PHYSICAL FACILITIES

Classroom Quarters: There were several factors in favor of the facilities of the Institute. The program was quartered in Clark Hall which is used by the Naval ROTC unit, since they had no students in the building during the summer. The quarters were well situated on the campus.
near both the dormitory and the library. The main lecture room was somewhat unsatisfactory. There were several posts in the room that obstructed vision and chairs were fastened together in groups, making informal arrangements difficult, a very serious handicap. This is one of the older buildings on the campus with high ceilings, and yet the treatment on the walls and ceilings did not allow for the best acoustics. There were difficulties reported in the audio quality available when the public address system or sound motion picture projection was used.

The other rooms were thoroughly satisfactory. The administrative office was large; the display and library area, combined with the social room, was ample and comfortable; the seminar rooms were excellent.

Living Quarters: Participants were not required to live in the dormitory and they replied in their questionnaire that they liked the optional arrangement. However, most of the participants would have liked to have eaten their noon meals together. This was not always possible, although some special arrangements were made. Many participants recommended that all students live in the dormitory. They all reported the importance of sharing of experiences with other librarians. Group living seems to have been one of the strongest features of the participants' experience.

D. PROGRAM

Number and Scheduling of Classes: The time schedule for the program was essentially three hours in the morning and three hours in the afternoon. In addition there was film previewing for an hour in the morning, an hour in the afternoon and also two hours for films and discussion in the evening on a voluntary basis. The film previewing in the morning was similar to that of the evening, minus the discussion, so that the participants could choose either a morning or evening session and not miss any of the content presented.

Use of Newer Media: On Thursday and Friday of the weeks of the Institute, special audio-visual presentations which had been prepared by three of the large public libraries in the United States were shown. These presentations were followed by 30 minute Tele-lecture discussions. This same technique was used with audio presentations prepared by two of our country's leading library administrators, as well as two library educators. They, too, were available for questions and discussion by the Tele-lecture method. There was some criticism that the Tele-lecture as an audio technique was too demanding and exhausting for the number of hours arranged in consecutive order. Many participants recommended that this type of activity should have been spread over the entire week with greater effect. On the other hand, the staff and the Tele-lecturers reported great satisfaction with this new technique since it afforded wide participation at a minimum cost. Another value of the audio-visual presentations especially produced for the Institute will be that the materials will continue to be used in the continuing Master of Librarianship degree program at the University of Washington. At the same time these materials will be available for borrowing for programs of Inservice Education by local libraries.

Staff: All faculty members were selected for their special knowledge and effectiveness in their own subject. The use of the permanent faculty at the University of Washington was commended in general with the wish that more time could have been spent with each person in order to realize a more complete discussion situation.

Use of the minority group representatives for the panel presentations on Tuesdays was considered successful by many of the participants. The group represented Mexican-Americans (Chicanos), American Indians, Blacks and migrant workers. Some negative criticism was offered concerning the concentration of the people selected from a single community in the State. The actual selection was six from one community the first week and five from other areas; the second week there were six from one community and seven from other areas. This was accidental and might have been corrected if a problem concerning this matter had been anticipated. In general, however, most of the participants considered this part of the program the highlight of the whole week since it did stir the participants and made them realize the necessity for accomplishing some of the recommendations upon their return to their own libraries.

Another successful instructional situation was realized from the participation of the representatives of other agencies working with minority groups. Points of reference for future relationships were indicated for all of the participants in the Institute.

Use of Materials: Exhibits and displays were prepared for the participants in the subject areas covered by the Institute. More than 50 libraries were invited to send materials for display and 30 libraries did so. The material included posters, bookmarks, bibliographies, handouts of all kinds. In addition a photograph display was prepared to describe the activities and services of several libraries. Two-by-two slides and other printed material were also available, as well as the audio-visual productions already mentioned as being prepared by the Los Angeles Public Library, the St. Louis Public Library and the Enoch Pratt Free Library (Baltimore, Maryland). Xerox copies of the items which appeared in two important bibliographies, namely, "Public Library Service to the Disadvantaged: Comprehensive Annotated Bibliography, 1964-1968" by Carla J. Stoffle, which was published in the Library Journal for January 15 and February 1, 1969; and Library Service to the Disadvantaged, compiled by Christina Copenhaver and Joanne Boelke, Eric Clearinghouse for Library and Information Sciences, University of Minnesota, December, 1968. The book collection exhibited by the Combined Book Exhibit at the ALA Conference in Atlantic City in June with a prepared booklist titled "Red, White and Black" was made available for participant examination and use. The book list itself, as well as other materials secured in quantity were given to each participant as a kit when he registered.
E. PARTICIPANTS' FORMAL COMMENTS AND CORRESPONDENCE

1. Statement of Objectives: As a technique to create greater relevance and as an aid for the faculty and staff, each participant was asked prior to the Institute to write a letter concerned with expectations and particular strengths in the Institute content. The statements were reproduced and given as a set to each member of the faculty and staff to improve individual preparation and to achieve necessary coordination.

In general the library service personnel attending Session I seemed to want specific suggestions of what to do and how to do it, while the library administrators in Session II had larger goals, such as "learning who the unreached are, what are their problems, and how the library can help." The first group was also interested in ways to make contact with the unserved in their communities and learning from others. The administrators hoped to find new ideas and methods to stimulate their staffs and to share ideas with others.

2. Final Day Evaluation Instrument:

Question: In what specific ways has this Institute been of value to you?

Comments: In Session I (library service personnel), a new awareness of the problems involved, a determination for self-improvement, and contact with guest speakers, other libraries and minority representatives were cited most often. In Session II, library administrators also most often mentioned receiving a better understanding of the problem and new ideas of what to do about it. They gained new perspectives of their own role and the need to reevaluate their goals.

Question: Are there any topics which should have had more coverage or any topics which should have had less coverage?

Comments: The library service personnel (Session I) commented that there was "too much theory, not enough specific programs." They also felt there was too much emphasis on the urban Black minority group, with not enough on Indians, Chicanos and rural disadvantaged. They would have liked more contact with the minority representatives and less with the professionals. The Session II library administrators also mentioned minority groups they felt had not been covered. On the other hand, many felt the program was well balanced.

Question: Should any faculty member, singly or in panels, have had more or less time?

Comments: The Session I (library service personnel) group mentioned a total of 16 individuals or panels they would like to have heard more from, some by as many as ten of the participants. The less dynamic speakers and the tele-lecturers were not as popular, but eight participants thought the program was well balanced. The Session II library administrators also listed many of the same speakers as noted above. It was suggested that they should have had more time. These participants were also impressed with the minority group representatives. There was mention that some of the instructional staff did not seem to be aware of the particular problems of libraries.

Question: Was there enough time to confer with other members of the Institute?

Comments: Twenty-four participants in Session I replied yes and nine said no, with comments suggesting more social events and group get-togethers to discuss ideas presented during the day. Twenty-nine administrators answered yes and three no, suggesting that those living in the dormitory had an advantage in this respect.

Question: What is your reaction to the following and how could they have been made more useful to you?

a. The library collection: Nineteen participants in Session I rated this as good, with various comments such as not enough time to use it, should have had books on minorities other than Black, etc. Four participants in Session II rated this as excellent, five as fine, and 13 as good, with comments similar to above. Particular mention was made concerning the Xeroxed articles from the two significant bibliographies on the subject.

b. Display area: Nineteen of the library service personnel rated this as good and two excellent, commenting that there was not enough time to examine the contents in detail. The library administrators rated this as good to very good, but suggesting more room for display.

c. Films: The Session I participants rated these as generally good, with almost everyone having comments on some they liked and some they didn't. Some felt there were too many, that some of them were out of date, that there should have been more discussion, etc. The administrators had similar feelings about the films, also mentioning the poor acoustics in the room. "Where is Prejudice" and "Superfluous People" seemed to be the films most participants in both sessions liked. They appreciated the duplicate schedule in the mornings and evenings so that they could choose whichever session they wished to attend.

d. Style of presentation: This was rated good to excellent by most of the participants, with again comments on the poor acoustics and seating in the lecture room. Many mentioned the variety of the program and the excellent job done by Mrs. Barr as moderator. A few suggested that the Tele-lectures would have been improved if they had been spaced out through the week.
Question: Do you have any unfulfilled expectations? If so what are they?

Comments: The library service personnel felt the scope of the Institute was too limited - they mentioned minorities they felt should have been represented. They also had hoped for specific sources and examples, but six said they had received more than they expected, and two said they realized there are no short cuts. When asked if they would make any changes in the program for the second session, several suggested more contact with minority and agency representatives.

Ten of the administrators said they thought the Institute was relevant, well-rounded or did what was intended. Others had hoped for round table discussions with librarians about their programs, or discussion of the library's role in backing up community agencies in their work with minority groups. A few were disappointed that the participants lacked open-mindedness and were so defensive.

3. Follow-up Evaluation Letters: Several weeks after the close of the Institute, a letter was written to all participants asking for the most significant thing that happened to them during the Institute. Ideas and suggestions for implementing the principles and concepts of the Institute were also requested. The following is a summary taken from these letters.

Question: What was the most significant thing that happened to you during the Institute?

Comments: Besides mentioning specific parts of the program that impressed them most, and perhaps applied most closely to their particular problems, most answers reflected a new outlook and awareness of the problems of minorities to which they had never been exposed before. The following quotations are examples.

"I feel that this Institute - even after this lapse of time - has had the most personal impact of any I have attended. Not only in terms of philosophical and psychological shaking up, but in terms of practical application and ideas."

"My eyes were truly opened as to what is really happening in our country and the role both school and public libraries can play ... I even read the newspapers now with greater comprehension concerning the racial problems. I feel more alive to contemporary situations and this can't help but be reflected in my work as a librarian and a teacher."

"The Institute made me realize that we had done a lot of talking in the last several years, with little action."

"The Institute helped me understand why minorities are afraid of the library."
"If we are to succeed in communications with all groups of people, it has to be on a closer level."

"I realized more fully that understanding service to people is far more important for good public relations than an elaborate advertising program."

"Probably the most valuable carry-over from the Institute was the enthusiasm that both of our staff who participated brought back and tried to convey to the rest of the staff."

"The 'outside' people were excellent. To be told by the unreached why they are the unreached penetrated me to the core. The human element was ninety per cent of the cause of unreaching."

"Attendance increased my sensitivity toward the problems of the minorities. I accept a share of the blame as a 'WASP' for the dilemma in which they are enmeshed."

"The Institute reaffirmed my belief in the importance of attitude toward the public and the fact that librarians can no longer remain in the library but must become a part of the community meeting those people who would or could become users of library resources and services."

Question: How do you plan to implement the principles and concepts of the Institute?

Comments: A few seemed pessimistic about making any progress since they were easily discouraged by lack of enthusiasm from staff and superiors. The majority, however, were highly creative and sent long lists of things they have accomplished or are working toward. The replies were particularly interesting because of the great variety of programs proposed or already begun, each participant being able to relate the ideas and new outlook gained to his own library situation and environment. The programs are mostly on a small scale, person-to-person approach, since no new funds are available, but rather involve a readjustment of priorities. This was probably one of the greatest benefits of the Institute to the participants - they learned that a lot of small enthusiasms and efforts can often be more effective in reaching the disadvantaged than a large expensive project.

The following are a few quotations from the many answers received to this question:

"We have ideas for implementing a service to shut-ins and for working with Indian tribal councils to provide library stations. I am working on information to improve our thoroughly inadequate Spanish collection."
"We are actively trying to broaden the representation on the local library boards so that they may include all segments of society."

"We would like to provide a rack of paperback materials on contemporary problems, many of which center around the problems with which we concerned ourselves during the Institute week."

"I intend to implement the principles and concepts of the Institute by asking for more library assistants from the ethnic groups."

"We plan to explore ways to get the staff to relate better to each other and to patrons, bringing library services to disadvantaged neighborhoods, and the creation of a position of librarian to work with the disadvantaged."

"Our report to the Idaho Migrant Ministry has resulted in their resolve to expand our service to the Spanish speaking community. The committee envisions incorporating several of the recommendations which came out of the Institute."

"We are including in our fall bookmobile schedule more hours in disadvantaged areas and centers patronized by minority groups. We are, for example, sending our former employee in the Indian Mission along on the bookmobile visits to an Indian Health Services center, and on her first visit she went in and personally brought the staff out to the bookmobile and introduced them to the services that might be available for their Indian patrons. We are talking with people who are themselves leaders in their own minority groups about ways in which we can help them build better use of library facilities by their nationals. We are also trying to build understanding on our own library Board as to why it may sometimes be better to help supply materials in a Spanish-American or Indian recreational center than to be satisfied with trying to bring the alienated persons into a nearby branch library. We are trying to take a new look into achieving a balance between getting better and wider uses of our own facilities and serving the people where they are."

"Because of the emphasis at the Institute on using people from minority groups in helping their own people make better use of the library, we are redoubling our efforts to find representatives from these groups that we can actually employ on our staff on either a full or part-time basis."

"We have begun to put some of the ideas and concepts of the Institute into practice. Perhaps most importantly, and as a direct result of the Institute, we now have a greater willingness to experiment and try new approaches and programs."
"The Institute helped me see the need for including more books in the library that appeal to the minority groups; I am also more aware of what some of these books are."

"Suggestions from minority panelists that more personal interest and contact must be made to coax non-users into the library led to a door-to-door contact with people living in a housing project and a trailer court to issue invitations to a pre-school story hour."

"We are doing preliminary work on service to shut-ins, both adult and children, working primarily through the Visiting Nurse Association. This was started as a direct result of ideas garnered at the Institute."

"I can't list all the small ways your Institute has helped me. Mostly, it has made me aware that I can help people - and how."

"We have started or expanded service to nursing and retirement homes, the Valley Neighborhood Center, the migrant worker Day Care Center and the shut-ins and convalescents through the Health Service's visiting nurse program."

"Inspired by many ideas of broadening service to the public discussed at the Institute, we have started some new projects: (1) branch librarians have been asked to turn in a report on their community in relation to the branch; (2) we are starting a free paperback deposit collection to be placed in nursing homes, clubs, etc.; (3) we are conducting a study to determine whether all fines may be dispensed with. This week we discontinued fines on children's books; (4) we will try to order more books that appeal to minority groups; (5) for the first time, this December, all branches will have a Christmas tea with people of the community as guests."
III CONCLUSIONS

A. STAFF MATTERS

The ratio of staff to participants seemed to be appropriate. Because of initial recruitment difficulty for the Institute secretarial position and the amount of paper work required, especially in the preparation of the final report, it was necessary to request an extension of the Grant period so that secretarial assistance could be compensated for the terminal work of the Institute. Otherwise the planning for the work delegated to the various staff members proved to be satisfactory.

All faculty members, with the exception of the chief Consultant, Mrs. Roberta Byrd Barr, and the Assistant Director, Susan Latchaw, were "visiting" members. These staff members were selected for their special knowledge and effectiveness in the substantive areas of instructional content.

The involvement of Mrs. Roberta Byrd Barr as a Consultant prior to as well as during our two Institutes was noteworthy. Since there were two one-week Institutes, it was most important to have Mrs. Barr carry the continuity of each Institute, as the first built upon the second. As our chief Consultant during the weeks of planning prior to the August Institutes, Mrs. Barr gave unselfishly of herself through attendance at planning committee meetings, discussions by telephone at home and at her office, as well as briefing sessions in both places. As the recognized instructional leader during each of the Institutes, Mrs. Barr set the stage for numerous discussions, pointed up areas of concern, and helped the participants to see the road to successful programs. She played a unique role in both Tuesday panel discussion sessions when we established a dialogue between the "unreached" and our Institute participants. She did this again in both Wednesday panel discussion sessions when Agency representatives (who work with the unreached) offered ideas and recommendations for furthering the use of library materials. The two panel presentations added a new dimension to the thinking of the librarians at our Institutes. Some of the dialogue was effective not only in terms of philosophical and psychological shaking-up but in terms of practical application and ideas. As one participant remarked, "The jarring effect of the verbal tongue lashings was significant."

The University of Washington faculty members in the persons of Ernest A. T. Barth, Professor of Sociology, James A. Goodman, Professor of Social Work, Simon Ottenberg, Professor of Anthropology and Nathaniel N. Wagner, Professor of Psychology, were excellent contributors on the substantive issues which were the concern of the Institute. Many of the participants remarked that they would liked to have had more time with these professors.
The participants waxed enthusiastic about the lectures and discussions which followed by Alfred E. Cowles, Executive Secretary of the Washington State Board Against Discrimination, and Melvin J. Conerly, Director of Economic Development, Tacoma Urban League. Mr. Cowles' address was made in a prepared statement which was reproduced and distributed to the participants for additional discussion and implementation.

Particular commendation needs to be expressed to the staffs of the three library systems who gave unselfishly of their time to provide our Institute with the half-hour audio-visual presentations (just for the cost of materials), as well as the half-hour Tele-lecture discussion which followed each presentation. At the Los Angeles Public Library our thanks go to Harold L. Hamill, City Librarian, as well as Mrs. Edith P. Bishop, Director of Branches, and the staff specifically concerned, Mrs. Johanna G. Sutton, Mr. David M. Barron and Mrs. Frances Carter; at the St. Louis Public Library, Paxton P. Price, Librarian, and the Chief Supervisor in charge of Branches and Community Services, James J. Michael; and at the Enoch Pratt Free Library, Edwin Castagna, Director, Evelyn Levy, in charge of the Community Action Program, and the staff, Arthur S. Meyers, Fanette Thomas and Lucian Dixon. For the Tele-lectures with the library administrators during the First Week we were grateful for the taped audio presentations as well as the Tele-lecture discussion which followed with Meredith Bloss, City Librarian of the New Haven Free Public Library and Harold Hacker, Director of the Rochester Public Library. During the Second Week, we were grateful for the taped audio presentations as well as the Tele-lecture discussion which followed with Keith Doms, Director of The Free Library of Philadelphia, and Carlton C. Rochell, Director of the Atlanta Public Library.

The staff responsibility carried by the following three lecturers rounded out the substantive content of the Institutes. We appreciated the involvement of Mrs. Mary C. Wallace, President of Lark Foundation, Yakima, Washington, both as an advisor for the two Institutes as well as her participation in person with regard to literacy activities and libraries. Dr. Margaret E. Monroe, Director of the Library School of the University of Wisconsin, shared the findings of her recent study on public library programs for the unreached with our Institute participants. Her report and question and answer period by Tele-lecture proved to be an important synthesizer for our participants. In the concluding afternoon, Hardy R. Franklin, former Senior Community Coordinator of the Brooklyn Public Library and currently pre-doctoral student at the Library School of Rutgers University, helped us find some direction for the concluding ideas and recommendations which appear at the end of this section of the report.

The Washington State Library gave extensive support in the planning and the actual functioning of the Institutes. The new Library Consultant Working with the Disadvantaged, Susan Latchaw, was the force that moved the original idea forward to the formal proposal. As Assistant Director for the Institute, Miss Latchaw gave considerable assistance, both mental and physical, in fact much greater than the usual professional support. It was her particular responsibility to help select many of the staff who contributed strength to the content considered. It is her intention to work with the libraries, at least within the State of Washington, on implementing the ideas and recommendations of the Institute. It would be most appropriate to mention specifically the work of Dorothy Doyle, Washington State Library Consultant, who helped throughout the planning of the Institute and was present for a good deal of each of the two weeks to offer her thoughtful counsel, strong support and willing participation wherever it was needed.

A final word of appreciation for all around support prior to, during and following the Institute goes to Sylvia Dearle, the Institute secretary. With her good sense, excellent business skills and even temperament she helped the staff and the participants with unforeseen difficulties and solved many problems involving the University's administrative channels. Without her continuing help this report would not have been completed.

B. OTHER EVALUATION MATTERS

It was immediately apparent from the questions and comments of the participants that today's library education needs to be changed. The student must be confronted with the problems raised by the panel members as well as the Institute participants. Such problems have heretofore received insufficient attention in the curriculum of the School of Librarianship.

Personnel improvement and development were mentioned time and again, particularly with regard to attitudinal responsibility and the use of para-professionals. Recruitment of minority students for careers in librarianship was emphasized.

Particular emphasis needs to be given to the education function of the public library. In fact there is the requirement to effectively explain library service. This was most evident in the gaps in the information about libraries and librarianship of the Institute staff (i.e., its faculty, the Agency personnel, as well as the panelists participating in the discussions). Too often librarians report their activities and programs as they are viewed through rose-colored glasses. To be sure, one should present the rosy side of things as progress toward a goal is reported. Even more important, however, we must be willing to face up to failures and lack of success. Considerable question was raised about the librarian as social worker or as reference worker. Library administrators especially were concerned that we identify our role in library development more carefully. Perhaps we need to take a lesson from current instruction in librarianship where the emphasis includes, (1) study the community, (2) tell the library story, (3) work with groups and also with individuals, and (4) activate the librarian's role as a materials' expert.
Again and again the participants recommended the necessity for the team attendance at the consecutive Institutes (e.g., the original plan) rather than a single individual from a library system. The librarians also wanted more time to discuss their "own" programs. Many participants reported in-service education opportunities based on the Institute as part of the follow-up in their libraries. While the use of the Tele-lecture method was enthusiastically received at first, it began to be a tiring experience because of the concentrated listening required. Most of the participants recommended the need for spacing out the Tele-lecture programs over the entire week.

Probably the most significant realization in each of the two Institutes was that all of us as individuals should be as concerned about process as we are about content. Too little time is spent at examining and evaluating why we do something rather than taking the action itself.

On Friday afternoon at the concluding session, a panel made up of Mrs. Roberta Byrd Barr, Susan Latchaw and Irving Lieberman led a discussion which resulted in certain ideas and recommendations being recorded for future action and implementation. A summary of these ideas and recommendations follows:

1. Acquire bodies of knowledge which are gaps in each one's education at the undergraduate or graduate levels by:
   (a) Personal reading
   (b) Returning to school for course work
   (c) Assuming other jobs
   (d) Studying a language
   (e) Going to a different church on a sustained basis
   (f) Going to other agencies to secure help or offer help
   (g) Going to community group meetings as a silent observer

2. Study Public Library - Library School relationships. Suggest a Council with representation; information bulletins; joint planning, particularly summer programs.

3. Where is the emphasis in your policy(ies)? Are your rules and regulations necessary?

4. Use print and non-print materials . . . paperbacks. Evaluate materials used.

5. Recognize that new kinds of personnel are required to plan in-service education for existing and new staffs. Consider how to incorporate people for OUTREACH from the target groups.

6. Be aware that physical facilities and human resources are equally as important as are materials.
7. Have an interest in sensitivity training. Forced Field Analysis offered as an assessment tool which considers the facilitating and inhibiting factors in order to reach a goal. Diminish the negatives -- augment the positives.

C. IMPACT

The Institute had a definite impact on the regular program of the School of Librarianship. The faculty of the School of Librarianship became acquainted with the staff of the Institute and there are continuing areas of cooperation possible in the future. The Institute faculty, representing the various disciplines on campus, now have a broader point of view concerning the preparation of librarians and their involvement in the political process of our cities, state and nation.

The instructional materials, both audio-visual and printed, purchased for the Institute, have become the permanent property of the School of Librarianship and will be useful in furthering the instructional program of the School of Librarianship. The slide-taped reports of the three library programs would be difficult to duplicate, and thus become a unique part of the curriculum material available for library education. In fact, the University of Illinois Library School has asked to borrow this material for its Institute: "Inner City Library Service" next March.

Through news releases and radio announcements, information concerning the Institute was reported widely. Examples of the prepared releases as well as the published stories are included in this report. It is quite evident that both internally and externally on this campus much greater understanding of the use of library materials with minority groups will be evidenced in our region.

LIBRARIES AND THE UNREACHED

An institute presented by the University of Washington
School of Librarianship and the Washington State Library
Session I, August 11–15, and Session II, August 18–22, 1969

(Brochure)

APPENDIX A
LIBRARIES AND THE UNREACHED

EVERYONE IS TALKING about the Disadvantaged, but what are librarians, especially those in the Pacific Northwest, doing about the problem? What can librarians do? This institute is intended to bring together librarians, university and other agency “experts,” and representatives of the Disadvantaged themselves to discuss the situation, to empathize with it, and possibly to initiate some suggestions for constructive action. Migrants, Indians, Blacks, and the Spanish-surnamed will be among the groups considered; direct response to local community needs will be emphasized.

Two identical one-week sessions held on consecutive weeks will be conducted for thirty-five library service personnel and thirty-five library administrators from the same libraries. Everyone attending will be encouraged to participate fully.

IF YOU ARE CONCERNED

about (1) serving the Disadvantaged and minority groups that are the “Unreached,” (2) acquiring knowledge of outreach approaches and materials for use in providing library services, (3) achieving an understanding of, and an empathy for, the problems of the deprived, and (4) recognizing social changes affecting libraries, the institute will provide you an opportunity to respond actively to those interests.

STIPEND

A stipend of $75.00 per week, plus $15.00 per week for each dependent, will be given each participant during the institute. Although participants are exempt from payment of all tuition and regularly required fees, they must pay their own travel expenses, must furnish necessary books and supplies, and must provide their own board and room.
