
National Education Association, Washington, D.C.

Center for Human Relations.

21 Feb 70

12p.

Publications-Sales Section, National Education Association, 1201 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036 ($0.50; discounts on quantity orders)

EDRS Price MF-$0.25 HC Not Available from EDRS.

*Conference on Equal Educational Opportunity, Peace Corps

This booklet is comprised of summaries of contributions to the Eighth National Conference on Equal Educational Opportunity. National Education Association President, George Fischer, expresses views about changing attitudes, cultural differences, Southern school desegregation, busing, and the Nixon administration. Mrs. LaDonna Harris, a Comanche Indian, focuses on the problems of the American Indian people, and contends that Peace Corps work with people of different cultures all over the world is futile when the problems of cultural difference in the United States remain unsolved. Leon Panetta talks of the need for leadership and clear thinking on the issue of desegregation in order to prevent worsening of relations between the races. Roy Innis offers an alternative to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare plan for desegregation. Charles Gonsales, student NEA president, enjoins educators to begin asking some basic questions about the great cleavage between "our national goals and our national behavior." Mrs. Gwendolyn Woods, National Coordinator of the National Association of Black Students discusses the recommendations that the Association proposes to create an educational experience that is relevant to the black student and to the people the black student would wish to serve. The booklet also includes the resolutions made by the participants at the Conference. (PJ)
Increasing the Options for Wholesome Peer Level Experiences Across Racial, Cultural, and Economic Lines

Highlights of the Eighth National Conference on Equal Educational Opportunity
Washington, D.C.
February 19-21, 1970

Permission to reproduce this copyrighted work has been granted to the Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC) and to the organization operating under contract with the Office of Education to reproduce documents included in the ERIC system by means of microfiche only, but this right is not conferred to any user of the microfiche received from the ERIC Document Reproduction Service. Further reproduction of any part requires permission of the copyright owner.
Conferees represented these organizations:

Alabama
- Alabama A&M University Education Association
- Alabama Education Association
- Butler County Education Association
- Changing Times
- DC-ACT
- DCEA-Human Relations Commission
- DC Human Relations Commission
- DC Public Library
- Democratic National Committee
- Future Homemakers of America
- G.I. Scout Council of the Nation’s Capital
- Girl Scouts of the USA
- HEW-QEO
- Leadership Conference on Civil Rights
- NAIR
- National Association of Black Students
- National Association of Secondary School Principals
- National Congress of Parents and Teachers
- National Council of Catholic Women
- National Education Association (ACT, Affiliates and Membership, OuShare Emergency Fund, Human Relations Center, International Relations, NCSEA, Organization Relations, P&Es, PRSTV, Project Urban, Research, SEARCH, Student NEA, Travel)
- OSD-VISTA
- Reading is FunDamental
- Southern Education Foundation
- US Civil Rights Commission
- US Civil Service Commission
- Washington School of Psychiatry
- Iowa
- Cedar Rapids Community Schools
- Des Moines Public Schools
- Iowa-ACT
- Iowa State Department of Public Instruction

Arkansas
- Arkansas Education Association
- Lake Village Human Relations Commission
- Little Rock NAACP
- Arkansas Education Association
- Lake Village Human Relations Commission
- Little Rock NAACP

California
- California Teachers Association
- Indian Historical Society
- Riverside County Schools
- San Mateo City School District
- Torrance Unified School District
- United Teachers of Los Angeles
- California
- California Teachers Association
- Indian Historical Society
- Riverside County Schools
- San Mateo City School District
- Torrance Unified School District
- United Teachers of Los Angeles
- California
- California Teachers Association
- Indian Historical Society
- Riverside County Schools
- San Mateo City School District
- Torrance Unified School District
- United Teachers of Los Angeles

Colorado
- Colorado ACT
- Colorado Department of Education
- Colorado Education Association
- Southern Colorado State College
- Colorado
- Colorado ACT
- Colorado Department of Education
- Colorado Education Association
- Southern Colorado State College

Connecticut
- Connecticut ACT
- Connecticut Education Association
- Darien Pre-Primary Head Start Program
- Greenwich Education Association
- Hartford Board of Education
- Hartford Child Development Committee
- Hartford Commission of Human Rights and Opportunities
- Connecticut
- Connecticut ACT
- Connecticut Education Association
- Darien Pre-Primary Head Start Program
- Greenwich Education Association
- Hartford Board of Education
- Hartford Child Development Committee
- Hartford Commission of Human Rights and Opportunities

Delaware
- Conrad High School, Wilmington
- Howard High School, Wilmington
- Delaware
- Conrad High School, Wilmington
- Howard High School, Wilmington

District of Columbia
- American Association of University Women
- American Personnel and Guidance Association
- American Red Cross
- Americans for Indian Opportunity
- Association for Childhood Education
- International
- Association for the Study of Negro Life and History
- District of Columbia
- American Association of University Women
- American Personnel and Guidance Association
- American Red Cross
- Americans for Indian Opportunity
- Association for Childhood Education
- International
- Association for the Study of Negro Life and History

Florida
- Broward County Board of Public Instruction
- Broward County Schools
- Dade County Board of Public Instruction
- Dade County Schools
- Dadeville Teachers Association
- Florida Education Association
- Hills Area Commission on Human Relations
- NEA Human Relations Council
- Sarasota County Teachers Association
- Vero Beach Educational Association
- Florida
- Broward County Board of Public Instruction
- Broward County Schools
- Dade County Board of Public Instruction
- Dade County Schools
- Dadeville Teachers Association
- Florida Education Association
- Hills Area Commission on Human Relations
- NEA Human Relations Council
- Sarasota County Teachers Association
- Vero Beach Educational Association

Georgia
- Cultural Educational Tour Institute
- Gate City Teachers Association
- Integrando Planning Institute
- Georgia
- Cultural Educational Tour Institute
- Gate City Teachers Association
- Integrando Planning Institute

Illinois
- Chicago Board of Education
- Community Relations Service
- Illinois State PTA
- National Catholic Conference
- National Council of Teachers of English
- USOE-Chicago
- Illinois
- Chicago Board of Education
- Community Relations Service
- Illinois State PTA
- National Catholic Conference
- National Council of Teachers of English
- USOE-Chicago

Indiana
- Arlington High School, Indianapolis
- Indiana CTA
- Indiana State Teachers Association
- Indianapolis Human Rights Commission
- Indianapolis Public Schools
- Indiana
- Arlington High School, Indianapolis
- Indiana CTA
- Indiana State Teachers Association
- Indianapolis Human Rights Commission
- Indianapolis Public Schools

Kansas
- Cooperative Urban Teacher Education Program
- NEA-Wichita
- Wichita Board of Education
- Kansas
- Cooperative Urban Teacher Education Program
- NEA-Wichita
- Wichita Board of Education

Kentucky
- Kentucky Education Association-ACT
- Louisville Public Schools
- Kentucky
- Kentucky Education Association-ACT
- Louisville Public Schools

Maryland
- Annapolis Teachers Association
- Anne Arundel Board of Education
- Baltimore City Schools
- Baltimore City Department of Education
- Baltimore County Commission on Human Relations
- Carroll County Board of Education
- Howard County Board of Education
- Kent County Teachers Association
- Maryland State Department of Education
- Maryland State Teachers Association
- Montgomery County Education Association
- Montgomery County Public Schools
- Prince Frederick Board of Education
- University of Maryland
- Maryland
- Annapolis Teachers Association
- Anne Arundel Board of Education
- Baltimore City Schools
- Baltimore City Department of Education
- Baltimore County Commission on Human Relations
- Carroll County Board of Education
- Howard County Board of Education
- Kent County Teachers Association
- Maryland State Department of Education
- Maryland State Teachers Association
- Montgomery County Education Association
- Montgomery County Public Schools
- Prince Frederick Board of Education
- University of Maryland

Massachusetts
- American Jewish Committee
- BTA
- Cran & Co.
- Massachusetts Committee Against Discrimination
- Massachusetts Teachers Association
- NAACP-Positive Program for Boston
- Massachusetts
- American Jewish Committee
- BTA
- Cran & Co.
- Massachusetts Committee Against Discrimination
- Massachusetts Teachers Association
- NAACP-Positive Program for Boston

Michigan
- Ann Arbor Education Association
- Catholic Diocese
- Dearborn Public Schools
- Eastern Michigan University
- Ferris State University
- Flint Human Relations Commission
- Flint Public Schools
- Grand Rapids Department of Community Relations
- Lansing Education Association
- Lansing Schools
- Michigan Civil Rights Commission
- Michigan Education Association
- Michigan Education Association
- Michigan Human Relations Commission
- Oakland County Education Association
- Pontiac Area Urban League
- Pontiac Education Association
- Pontiac Schools
- Saginaw Education Association
- Troy Human Relations Commission
- Michigan
- Ann Arbor Education Association
- Catholic Diocese
- Dearborn Public Schools
- Eastern Michigan University
- Ferris State University
- Flint Human Relations Commission
- Flint Public Schools
- Grand Rapids Department of Community Relations
- Lansing Education Association
- Lansing Schools
- Michigan Civil Rights Commission
- Michigan Education Association
- Michigan Education Association
- Michigan Human Relations Commission
- Oakland County Education Association
- Pontiac Area Urban League
- Pontiac Education Association
- Pontiac Schools
- Saginaw Education Association
- Troy Human Relations Commission
Increasing the Options for Wholesome Peer Level Experiences Across Racial, Cultural and Economic Lines

NATIONAL CONFERENCE
WASHINGTON, D. C.
February 19-21, 1970

Sponsor:
CENTER FOR HUMAN RELATIONS
NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION

Conference Coordinator:
Rosena J. Willis

Conference Photographer:
Carolyn Salisbury, NEA

Conference Editors:
Mary Kepecs and Ellen Ross

Contents

Economics Changes Attitudes—George Fischer, President, NEA...........................................2
Remarks by Panelists Arthur Diaz, Preston Roney, Martin Norwood, William Guardia ...............2
A Cross-Cultural Experience—Mrs. La Donna Harris, Chairman, Americans for Indian Opportunity .........3
Issues: Desegregation, Leadership—Leon Panetta, Former Director, Office of Civil Rights, HEW ..........4
Separate and Equal—Roy Innis, Executive Director, CORE ..................................................5
E Pluribus Unum—Charles Gonzales, President, Student NEA ...........................................6
Focus: Black Students—Mrs. Gwendolyn Woods, Coordinator, National Association of Black Students.....7
The Panelists Do Their Things ......................................................................................................8
The Participants Recommend ........................................................................................................8

We light this candle in memory of Rosena Willis and ask each of you to do the same.

—Sam Ethridge

Somehow desegregation has traditionally carried with it the connotation of a privilege being granted to minorities by the grace of the majority, claimed the Human Relations Council working paper which was presented to conference participants to stimulate discussion.

The Council argued in the paper that effective integration must be continuously pursued. However, the paper declared that "we must look for new concepts, new methods of social organization, and new approaches in allocating our educational resources" in order to provide minority and majority-group children with a meaningful school experience. One new approach suggested in the working paper is the establishment of intergroup education councils in each metropolitan area and school district in the nation.

Conference participants were given the opportunity to read the working paper and to group in tens and discuss its major points. These included the view that formal education should not take place solely within the walls of a school. The paper pointed out that thousands of students from racially segregated schools, and even an alarmingly large proportion of those attending nonsegregated schools, have not had the productive intergroup learning experiences so essential for meaningful living in our complex global village.

The Council referred to a number of studies, such as the Report of the NEA Task Force on Human Rights, to substantiate the view that racially isolated education has prevented both the minority child and the white middle class child from seeing a relationship between the classroom and the realities of life. On the basis of such evidence, the Council argued in the paper, a community approach is needed to overcome patterns of racial isolation in the schools.

The paper called for the establishment of intergroup education councils to increase the opportunities for wholesome, peer level, cross-racial experiences for children. Such councils would include educators and civic, religious, and business leaders. Under no circumstances would schools be released from their legal obligations to take affirmative action toward ending all vestiges of a dual system of education and the results of its accumulative discrimination, the paper stressed.
NEA President George Fischer describes work with the Task Force on Human Rights.

On Changing Attitudes:
Education can change American economics. The success of minority groups in industry will change the attitudes of white Americans.
Mergers change attitudes. If the ball club believes blocks can win, they will.

On Cultural Differences:
The Indian chief would fish and hunt. The white man would work and make a million, and then retire to fish and hunt.
In the white power structure money talks, and you are judged by your money. This won’t ever change.
Blocks, Mexican-Americans, and American Indians haven’t made it because whites have considered them subhuman and because they have different value systems.

On Southern School Desegregation:
When Southern whites desegregated their schools, they disinfected rooms and changed the toilet seats before the white kids moved in.

NEA President George Fischer describes work with the Task Force on Human Rights.

On Busing:
We have been busing the wrong kids for the wrong reasons—assuming that black kids will get a better education in the suburbs.

On the Nixon Administration:
It is my opinion that President Richard Nixon is the greatest enemy the teacher and the black man have had since Rutherford B. Hayes made his deal with the South to end Reconstruction.

On NEA’s Positions on Race Relations:
NEA filed an amicus curiae brief in the Supreme Court case of Holmes v. Anderson to prevent slowing down implementation of the HEW desegregation guidelines in Mississippi.
NEA opposed President Nixon’s nomination of Judges Clement Haynesworth and G. Harrold Carswell to the Supreme Court.
NEA opposed President Nixon’s veto of the HEW appropriations bill.

Panelist Arthur Diaz (above), Task Force Director, Paterson, New Jersey, said that “The Puerto Ricans here are suffering because promises have not been kept and because the bureaucracy is callous. We should go to Capitol Hill and discipline those bureaucrats.”

Preston Roney, left, at mike, tells conference that the controversy over busing belies the real issue—desegregation.

Other panelists noted that their minority cultures are being accepted by the American public as the melting pot theory fades. “The Indians still have vestiges of a life of dignity and courage,” said Cherokee Sparlin Norwood. Bill Guardia added that America is discovering through the Mexican-American “the beautiful cultures of Mexico, at Teotihuacan, at Montezuma.”

In photo, right to left: Mr. Roney, Human Relations Commission, Indianapolis, Indiana; Betty Buford, president, Association of Classroom Teachers, Washington, D.C. (moderator); Mr. Norwood, teacher, Dewey, Oklahoma; and Mr. Guardia, guidance counselor, San Antonio, Texas.
A CROSS-CULTURAL EXPERIENCE

By LaDonna Harris

For non-Indians, trying to understand the problems that Indian people have is in itself a problem. For example, in my state of Oklahoma there are 68 different tribes, each with its own culture, language, and attitudes. Most Indian people feel that "I am first a Comanche and second an Indian." Our biggest triumph in Oklahoma came four years ago, when the 68 tribes joined into one Indian organization.

A very contemporary problem is that posed by the urban Indian. We estimate that one half of the million Indians in the United States today live in cities. This migration off the reservations and into the cities is continuing—in fact, it is a global thing.

The "Peace Pipe Project," dedicated to the idea of cross-cultural education, was accepted by the Peace Corps. My husband and I were responsible for recruiting Indians, preparing them for the Peace Corps test, and pretraining them. After we had recruited about 65 people, the Peace Corps began to review the candidates' folders and to deselect according to their own standard value judgments. The one Indian member of the selection committee, recognizing many of the problems, helped to save 35 candidates, who then went to Puerto Rico for Peace Corps training.

The entire training experience was a conflict between the stereotypes of the non-Indian instructors and the Indian trainees. Some instructors had already formed judgments as to how the Indian trainees were going to do in the Peace Corps. We had provided a few Indian speakers to reinforce the Indian trainees during this experience. An almost unimaginable enmity arised between the "Peace Pipe" trainees and a non-Indian group of trainees across the stream, also in training to go to South America. One of the Indian trainees said he couldn't understand how the others, who were supposed to be training to work with people of a different culture, could treat us the way they did and still be able to complete Peace Corps training successfully. I made the mistake, and I'll share this with you, of putting a great deal of pressure on the Indian trainees—telling them to set an example for their younger brothers and sisters, first in the Peace Corps and later in other institutions. The pressures were terrible, and I regret having added to them.

The regular training for this group took place in California, and this proved to be even more of a disaster than Puerto Rico. The five instructors who were to teach cross-cultural relationships to the Indians did not recognize that they themselves were teaching in a cross-cultural situation. After the California experience, one of the psychologists said he was going to quit the Peace Corps and review his own attitudes. During our visit, one instructor told us not to talk to the Indian trainees by themselves, but, of course, all of the trainees asked to visit with me.

By the time the group arrived in Colombia, South America, for in-country training, there were only five Indians left. The rest were "no-shows" who had made some decisions about the Peace Corps and had concluded it was not the place for them. The "Peace Pipe" program was a complete failure.

Of course, no American will ever admit that he discriminates against Indians. The discrimination is usually subtle, not open. In many ways, Blacks are better off because they know how to deal with the open discrimination they encounter. Indian people are exposed to very patronizing attitudes, not open hostility. But look at our employment and health problems, our dropout rates; we have the lowest grade achievement of any minority group. You look at these things but do not see the Indian people. You are professional educators, and you tend to know all the answers. I am as much to blame, and I feel very bad about the pressure I put on those trainees—especially when I recall how one of the "Peace Pipe" people came to me and asked if I would be ashamed of him, if he dropped out of the Peace Corps. It brought tears to my eyes. Indians, when they face discrimination, are not sure what is happening to them. Discrimination often produces self-hate, which frequently leads to self-destruction. We hear much about the drunken Indian, and we put heavy blame on the drunken Indian; by so doing we destroy the Indian people and damage the larger society which has to live with negative input from Indians.

My point in giving you details of the Peace Corps experience is simply this. If we can't solve the problems of cultural difference in our own country, Heaven help us when we try to work with people of different cultures all over the world.

This is a summary of Mrs. Harris' speech. The full text is available from the NEA Center for Human Relations; single copies free while they last.

Mrs. LaDonna Harris, a Comanche Indian, received an NEA human relations award in 1969.
I think we are witnessing a moment in our national history, akin to the end of Reconstruction, when relations between the races in this country threaten to be set back to the point of tragedy. Leadership and clear thinking on the issue are needed. Abdication and confusion are not.

What will our nation's leaders do? I mean leaders of both political parties, who are permitting the most confused spokesmen in America to seize the high ground to trumpet their battle charges, to scream their defiance of the law.

How can one word—busing—frighten into craven retreat so many leaders who know that the issue is not busing, the fear is not of busing, and the opposition is not to busing? Desegregation itself is at issue, and busing is the symbol foisted on the nation by those who have moved into the leadership vacuum.

Let us look at the facts:

- Less than three percent of the desegregation plans accepted by HEW call for additional busing.
- Some 90 percent of the districts in this country transport 17 million schoolchildren in buses.
- Most of the districts we have dealt with have bused black children as many as 75 miles a day, past white schools to an inferior education.
- The 23 buses dynamited in Denver were not used for desegregation; 14 carried handicapped children and 9 brought children to special education classes.

Busing is a phony issue. Neighborhood schools are not the issue, either, because thousands of black children who are going to decay, racially isolated schools in their neighborhoods are getting a bad education. In fact, the U.S. Senate tabled a "neighborhood school" amendment the other day when some Southern senators said that a neighborhood school law would lead to the elimination of the dual school system in some districts in their states! But people do not talk of these realities, because someone has already framed the issue for them in the racial code clichés, "busing" and "neighborhood schools."

The law requires that we do not discriminate on a racial basis in the assignment of children to schools, and that if we have discriminated, we undo the effects of that discrimination. All the talk of busing will not change that requirement of law, which has been and will continue to be enforced in our judicial system.

A good education, according to the accepted studies on the matter, cannot be pursued in racial isolation. Desegregated education has been upheld as a legal principle; it has been pursued as public policy with more success than many will admit; and it should not be undone where it is successful merely because of the rabid screams of those who make political hay out of racial antagonism.

What is required of leadership? What is not required is walking away from the subject or accepting it on the busing terms in which it is now being discussed. While leadership is not exercised through false promises, neither is it exercised through empty or confused rhetoric or for that matter, through no rhetoric at all.

The cause of equal justice is being destroyed not by direct challenge but by indirectness, confusion, disunity, lack of leadership, and lack of commitment to a truly equal society. Until the desperate picture changes, there will be more busing amendments, more Whitten amendments, more resistance, more political sellouts, and more public servants lost because of little or no support for firm enforcement of the law. In the end, the real losers will be the children.

We need leaders to stand up and say that the issue is obedience to the law; the issue is a fair break in education for kids who have lost out time and again because of rank discrimination; the issue is the future of this nation's race relations. No attempted escape from reality will change those issues for us.

If the political parties are shying from this leadership role, then you, the National Education Association, must step into the breach. As the ugliness around here grows, the nation loses, and there is too much at stake to let abdication rule the day. Your courage and action can help change the direction of our society from despair to a new hope for a free and united America.

This is a summary of Mr. Panetta's speech. The full text is available from the NEA Center for Human Relations; single copies free while they last.
The problem we are dealing with here can be traced to the Plessy v. Ferguson case of 1896 in which the Supreme Court said that it is possible to create segregated but equal facilities on railroad cars, but cloaked its language and compounded its crime by stating, "Things can be separate and equal."

In 1954, in Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, Kansas, the Supreme Court stated what it thought was the opposite doctrine—that "things cannot be separate and equal." But if the Brown case dealt with segregated schools, why the use of the word "separate"? Things cannot be "segregated" and equal!

The people from the Northeast liberal establishment, joined by the civil rights aristocracy, made their own interpretation of the 1954 desegregation decision, making "desegregation" synonymous with "integration."

I think what the Court said in 1954 was that the law requiring that I sit in the back of the bus is illegal—that I not only do not have to sit in the back of the bus, but I have to sit in the front next to a white person. The first clause describes "desegregation"; the second describes "integration." We must understand the distinction. The country is in chaos and is going to blow up, all because of that one confusion.

Segregation cannot be defined in terms of spatial relationships, for in the South there are many places where there is open housing, which is impossible up North. Segregation must be measured in social, political, and economic parameters as a dynamic relationship [who controls the action], not in terms of a block school over here and a white school over there.

Now let us examine the concept of total integration. Americans have for years tried to organize themselves so that in some unit of government they would constitute a majority. Black folks are not different. We do not have different needs. We need to be a defined majority someplace, especially in the smallest defined political unit.

When we described our plan to the Southern brothers, we referred to the Supreme Court’s Holmes County decision of October 1969 which said that the exclusionary district is illegal and that there must be a unitary system in a district. Therefore, where one district exists and isn’t working, and people aren’t happy on either side, we asked that the district be divided along lines of natural communities of interest. The predominantly white area would be controlled by whites, and the predominantly black area would be controlled by Blacks. All people in one district would attend one school system—a unitary school system, and there would be no exclusion on either side.

New school districts are created all the time by whites. When they move out of Washington, D.C., in enough numbers to define themselves as a political subdivision of the surrounding states, they become an incorporated political entity, or just run a school district.

We know there will be some problems, but I have gone to the people who will be affected the most by this plan—the local people, black and white. I hope we have reasoned together. I have offered an alternative to the HEW desegregation plan, and I want you to evaluate both using the same social, economic, political, educational, and psychological parameters. See which one measures up—which plan offers peace and tranquility. I think the choice is obvious.

This is a summary of Mr. Innis’ speech. The full text is available from the NEA Center for Human Relations, single copies free while they last.
"Don't ask me how — just change," said Charles Gonzales, who addressed the conference on February 21.

A series of paradoxes, Student NEA president Gonzales said, has obviated the basic American goal of E Pluribus Unum. He claimed that while we are reminded daily of this goal — that separate groups can live together in unity — many national activities force us to question its viability.

The proposition upon which our country was founded — that "all men are created equal" — is also being called into question, he said, and educators must address themselves to this tragedy.

A lack of national consensus on major issues illustrates the need to "turn the national discussion to our national goal," advised the student leader. "Debate should occur before decisions are made, and the process should be one of public agreement," he said, "but this is not happening. Who made the decision on Vietnam in the first place?" he asked. Referring to President Nixon's threat to veto the HEW appropriations bill, Mr. Gonzales asked whether "it is the public opinion that education has a low priority and that its funding level should, therefore, be reduced."

"The proposition that "all men are created equal" deals with the right to rule," he continued. "Many capable people are not rising to positions of leadership because the system won't allow it. Political parties know that in order to get people of wisdom in decision-making positions, they must recruit from the people — all the people: black, brown, white, and red."

He then cited the paradox of our pluralistic society — that the decision-making process should but often doesn't reside in the people collectively. Commenting on the Vote-18 issue, Mr. Gonzales commended the Senate for holding hearings, but he questioned whether the voices of the young witnesses will be sufficient to influence the decision makers.

"We are at a time of deep national crisis in which democracy has become not only a possibility but a necessity," said Mr. Gonzales. "It is time to make an effort to turn the national discussion to the central proposition that we were founded upon. He argued that "this proposition is no longer operatively the law of the land." He described the holders of power in this country as those for whom America's principle of equality lives. Mr. Gonzales lamented that "the Constitution is operated only under the titles of the founding fathers, and we hold no truths to be self-evident."

Educators must begin to ask some basic questions about the great cleavage between our national goals and our national behavior, said Mr. Gonzales, for they have the best view of its effects.

Students today are not dedicated to the pursuit of products, which Mr. Gonzales called "economism." He concluded, "They are rebelling against an educational system that is committed to the product" of high school and college students who will fit neatly into working, managerial, or professional slots in the community. This repetitious human product that the schools are trying to produce may be our ruin. The efforts of educators should be directed toward helping the student develop a potential for living in his world."
FOCUS: BLACK STUDENTS

By

Gwendolyn Woods

For the last four years, black students have been engaged in a vigorous program for educational reform, challenging the black university to create an educational experience that is more relevant to them and to the people they wish to serve. Since these struggles have generally taken place in isolation, black students have felt compelled to make them very dramatic; and since the university is, in many cases, reluctant to respond to proposals for change from the students, their struggles have tended to become disruptive and violent. A rational forum is needed for black students to unify the efforts of the black university community and to examine viable alternatives to the present means of struggle. Communication among black students must improve or social disorders will increase on the black college campuses as well as within the multiversity.

The black students in the black university find themselves in a very complex situation. Motivated to get an education because there is no other means of survival in this increasingly technical society, the black student is appalled to discover that in many cases he does not receive the necessary skills he came to college to get. He also discovers that the university makes no attempt to relate to the problems of the community from which he comes. Students discover that their publications and governing apparatus are held in firm control by the university administration so that there is no longer a legitimate forum through which to articulate growing apprehension. Given no positive means of reacting to what is rapidly becoming an intolerable educational situation, students form secret insurgent groups which emerge only when confrontation's imminent. If the trend continues, we can expect the black university to become the real center of revolutionary action for black America.

The black student in the large university finds himself in an odd situation. He goes to one of the best schools in America and discovers that as part of a small subgroup within a large university he has no voice. He finds that he can acquire the skills he needs, but that the values of the institution are at odds with the development of a meaningful relationship with the black community. He has difficulty maintaining a clear perspective on his role in the struggle of black people and is forced to prove his cultural and social values by joining forces with his black brothers and sisters.

Black students must be given decision-making power commensurate with the ideas they are putting across, for, like the black community, they have grown increasingly sophisticated and creative. The ideas and tactics of black people were transmitted through idealistic youth once involved in civil rights work to the very core of this country's political processes.

A realistic approach would be to help black students create their own black student associations, which would concern themselves with the unique problems of black students. This is what the National Association of Black Students proposes to do.

Recommendations:

- Make direct grants to black student organizations.
- Create a pool of black speakers, talent, and materials to facilitate the study of blackness.
- Develop a black newspaper.
- Grant seed money to students instead of to administrations.
- Collect, analyze and interpret research by black students.
- Develop environmental exchange programs for urban and rural black students and for those in the multiversity and the black college.

This is a summary of Mrs. Woods' speech. The full text is available from the NEA Center for Human Relations; single copies free while they last.
THE PARTICIPANTS RECOMMEND

Four caucus papers and statements by two individuals formed the basis of several resolutions passed by the conference delegates. These resolutions asked the NEA to give more visibility to its implementation of the Report of the Task Force on Human Rights and urged that it become more involved in encouraging school desegregation, human relations training for educators, and multilingual publishing. They also urged NEA to promote intergroup and human relations education as part of the teacher certification process; to take a firm position on cross-busing; to help students achieve a major role in determining their curricula; and to help redirect federal funding priorities to education.

Samuel Banks, representing the Baltimore, Maryland, City Schools, presented a paper entitled "Increasing the Options: An Alternative," which called upon NEA to cooperate with the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History to develop a program of studies for each minority group. He also urged NEA to "convince a school desegregation conference...whose principal motif would be the enforcement of the law and the development of procedures to deal with white racism in the public schools."

An amendment to Mr. Banks' resolution was based on a presentation by Kim Sommers, student representative on the Dayton, Ohio, Board of Education, and Theodore Andrews of the Volusia Educators Association in Florida. They urged the NEA to pressure state boards of education to require human relations training, multilingual studies, and cross-cultural experiences as part of their teacher certification standards.

Ernie Allen, Mrs. Jay Ann Walker, and Dr. Marrell Clute presented the resolution of the Michigan caucus. Addressing themselves to institutional racism, this group urged NEA to face the failure of the urban schools to provide most of the minority students with the education needed to participate successfully in American life.

Two individuals then made motions which were passed. Joyce Turner, representing the NAACP in Patchogue, New York, moved that NEA emphasize the section of the Task Force Report calling for the application of professional sanctions to any agency that infringes the rights of children or school personnel.

Sigmund Pickus of Rockville, Maryland, moved that the 1970 NEA budget reflect the importance of human relations activities.

John F. Perdue of Pontiac, Michigan, presenting the views of the Black caucus, called upon NEA to take a more affirmative position in the area of desegregation and integration.

THE PANELISTS DO THEIR THINGS

"Core-to-periphery city school districts, a flexible school day, and a schoolmobile shuttle service," said Marilyn Grayboff, "are the ways the Integrando plan would assure equal educational opportunity to students in Atlanta, Georgia." Miss Grayboff described the integrando plan to conference participants as one of several being considered by the Atlanta school board.

Integrand, she said, would divide Atlanta into five sectors, each of which would function as an educational park. Existing high schools—about five inner- and outer-city schools per sector—would each specialize in one of five areas: social studies, language arts, mathematics and science, technical studies, and preparatory subjects. "The basic requirement for graduation would be attendance in at least three of the four subject schools in a sector."

In the ten elementary school sectors, Miss Grayboff continued, Integrando would team teachers and aides in some 12 schools per sector. "An inner- and outer-city school would be combined with one teacher specializing in mathematics and science and the other in language arts and social studies."

Atlanta has 26 secondary and 120 elementary schools in a 400-square-mile area. The city's 35,000 secondary students represent a ratio of about nine blacks to seven whites. Currently, said Miss Grayboff, about 415 of the students are bused—"that is, a two-way busing plan including about 20,000 black students and one red-headed white boy who buses himself to a computer class at Booker T. Washington High School."

School attendance laws under the Integrando plan could be fulfilled by extending the school day to 7½ hours and requiring only four days of class and a one-day field trip. With all schools open five days a week, Miss Grayboff said, there would be a 20 percent cut in student population. "The numbers of each ethnic group in a particular class or school would vary with interest in the subjects offered," she added.

For Atlanta's entire system of 120,000 students, Integrando would need 600 "schoolmobiles"—or 175 buses and 625 minibuses. Miss Grayboff said that each vehicle would have "a comfortable interior with desks, lamps, book shelves, and snack bars." Each secondary school unit would need only seven schoolmobiles "operating in two shuttle runs to and from the other four plants." Small children, she added, who would travel between two schools in minibuses, would spend no more than 25 minutes in transit and would be accompanied by two home school teachers.

"Go home and make the Human Relations Center the most important part of your Association," urged panelist Ray Matthews. Mr. Matthews, a reading coordinator: from Boston, Massachusetts, said that "human relations refers to the content of the whole educational system."

Conrad Romero, consultant for the Colorado Department of Education, patiently strained to sensitize conference participants to the abilities of Mexican-Americans and to some failures of the mainstream culture. He communicated an appeal by his son to English teachers. His son received a D in English but an A in Spanish—which he didn't speak before entering school. "My son requested," he said, "that I ask the teachers of English to take some lessons from the teachers of Spanish."

Terry Townsend, assistant to the vice president of the American Red Cross, presented a slide show which suggested that love and volunteer activities could help solve America's social ills. Entitled "Point and Counterpoint," the 322 slides and taped narration depicted the two sides of America—"the beautiful and ugly, the harsh and tender, the right and wrong," as Mr. Townsend put it.

Girl Scouts Constance Fradenburg and Alethia Hill described a summer camping program in Seattle, Washington, involving about 3,000 boys and girls from 15 inner-city schools. The program was made possible, they said, through the cooperation of the Girl Scouts, Seattle public and parochial schools, the Seattle Park Department, the Council of Churches, the Seattle Public Library, the National College Association, the University of Washington, and the Black Student Union.
Participating Organizations, continued:

Minnesota
- Minneapolis Board of Education
- Minneapolis Education Association
- Minneapolis Urban League
- NEA-HR
- St. Paul Department of Human Relations

Mississippi
- Mississippi CTA
- Mississippi Teachers Association
- NEA-CHR

Missouri
- National Association of College Women
- Webster College

Nebraska
- Nebraska State Education Association
- Omaha Education Association

Nevada
- Clark County CTA
- Nevada State Education Association

New Jersey
- Atlantic City Education Association
- Bay Scouts of America
- Educational Testing Service
- Hackensack Middle School
- Indiana Avenue School
- Kentopp School
- NEA-CHR
- NEA East Coast Regional Office
- New Jersey Congress of Parents and Teachers
- New Jersey Education Association
- New Jersey State Department of Education
- Paterson Task Force
- Piscataway High School
- PR&R Commission

New Mexico
- Central District of NEA New Mexico
- NEA-CHR
- Student NEA
- Theresio Public School
- University of New Mexico

New York
- Center for Urban Education
- CORE
- Council on Social Work Education
- East Rochester Public Schools
- Freeport Public Schools
- Girl Scouts of the USA
- Kermore Teachers Association
- NAACP
- National Commission Against Discrimination in Housing
- New Rochelle Schools
- New York City Board of Education
- New York State PTA
- New York State Teachers Association

Ohio
- Akron Public Schools
- Berea City School District
- Cleveland Urban League
- Columbus Public Schools
- Dayton Board of Education
- Dayton Human Relations Commission
- Dayton Schools
- Kent State University
- Office of Equal Educational Opportunity
- Ohio-CHR
- Ohio Department of Education
- Ohio Education Association
- Ohio PTA
- Parma Education Association
- Youngstown Board of Education

North Carolina
- Adult Basic Education
- Halifax County PTA
- Halifax County Schools
- Hoke County Schools
- NEA-CHR
- North Carolina-CTA
- North Carolina A&T State University
- North Carolina Teachers Association
- NCTA-CHR
- NCTA-SNEA
- Robeson County Board of Education
- Robeson County Schools

Oregon
- Future Teachers of America
- Oregon Board of Education
- Oregon Education Association
- Salem Intergroup Human Relations Committee

Pennsylvania
- Allegheny Schools
- American Friends Service Committee
- Cheyney State College
- Diocese of Pittsburgh
- Lancaster, PSEA
- Pennsylvania Department of Education
- Pennsylvania Human Relations Commission
- Pennsylvania State Teachers Association
- PSTA-DCT
- Philadelphia City Education Association
- Reading Schools

Rhode Island
- Cranston Schools
- Progress for Providence, Inc.
- Providence School Department

South Carolina
- South Carolina Education Association-CTA

Tennessee
- Memphis City Schools
- Memphis Education Association
- Memphis State University
- Metropolitan Nashville Education Association
- Tennessee Department of Education
- Tennessee-CHR
- Tennessee Education Association
- University of Tennessee

Texas
- Houston Teachers Association
- NEA-CHR
- NEA Southwest Regional Office
- Texos-CHR
- Texas Congress of Parents and Teachers
- Texas State Teachers Association
- University of Texas

Utah
- Salt Lake City Civil and Human Rights Committee
- Utah Education Association

Virginia
- Charlottesville Public Schools
- Fairfax County Public Schools
- Girl Scouts of the USA
- NEA Mid-Atlantic Regional Office
- Springfield Schools
- Virginia Seminary & College

Washington
- NEA Board of Directors, Kirkland
- North Shore Education Association
- School Nurse Organization of Washington

West Virginia
- Huntington Schools
- McDowell County Board of Education
- Monongalia County School System
- Parkersburg Schools
- West Virginia-CHR
- West Virginia Department of Education
- West Virginia PTA
- Wood County Schools

Wisconsin
- Madison Equal Opportunities Committee
- Madison Public Schools
- Madison Urban League
- Milwaukee Teachers Education Association
- NEA Executive Committee, Racine
- Racine County USD #1
- Wisconsin Education Association
Council on Human Relations

Walter J. O'Brien, development director, New Jersey Education Association, chairman
Joseph C. Duncan, principal, Yanceyville, N.C., vice-chairman
Mrs. Catherine O'C. Barrett, NEA director, N.Y., pres., NYSTA
Betty I. Buford, ACT president, Association of Classroom Teachers, Texas
C. Sullivan Culver, NEA director, Fla.
Nicholas E. Duff, chairman, Commission on Professional Rights and Responsibilities, Minn.
George D. Fischer, NEA pres., NEA Headquarters, ex officio
Mrs. Margaret Fischer, classroom teacher, Des Moines, Iowa
Clymattes B. King, classroom teacher, Jackson, Miss.
Sam M. Lambert (Dr.), NEA exec. secy., NEA Headquarters, ex officio
Mrs. Lillian J. Madison, classroom teacher, High Point, N.C.
Leo Reano, classroom teacher, Santo Domingo Pueblo, N.M.
Josephine Sawoja, classroom teacher, Scottsdale, Ariz.
Frank A. Valdes, classroom teacher, Las Vegas, Nev.
Wade Wilson (Dr.), NEA Executive Committee, pres., Cheyney State College, Pa.
Staff Contact: Samuel B. Ethridge, asst. exec. secy., NEA Headquarters
Consultant: Allan M. West, deputy exec. secy., NEA Headquarters

Center for Human Relations Staff

Samuel B. Ethridge .................................. Acting Director
Boyd Bosma .................................. Asst. Dir. Civil Liberties
Bernice C. Brigham .................................. Adm. Assoc.
Deborah B. Campbell .................................. Adm. Asst.
Martha D. Dutch .................................. Adm. Asst.
Sparlin Norwood .................................. Indian Conference Coordinator
Mary Kepecs .................................. Staff Assoc.
John Lawton .................................. Consultant, NTL
Donald R. Shire .................................. Asst. Dir. Communications
Rosena J. Willis .................................. Asst. Dir. Intergroup Relations
Edith Goldman, Carol Kniebusch, Ellen Ross ........... Secretaries
Sandra Ibrahim, Gladys Laudermer, Rose Moses, Krishana Williams ............ Office Assistants
Barbara Garnes, Forrest Hall ......................... Interns