This report sets forth the results of a study to develop a plan to reduce the technical and human problems of administrator salary administration, and to strengthen the ability of a school district to acquire leadership consistent with its purposes. Major targets of the study were: (1) development of position responsibility descriptions for all district administrators (including primary objectives of the positions; major areas of accountability in instructional improvement, administration, and school-community relations; and supervision and work direction of others); (2) development of administrator performance review procedures; and (3) establishment of an administrator compensation plan. Appendixes contain position descriptions for all district administrative personnel, analyses of current compensation relationships with administrators from selected school districts, and a proposed policy for administrator compensation. INTRODUCTION

In December, 1968, the Richfield School Board approved a study of selected phases of the district's administrative policies. This study was undertaken because of the desire of school administrators and the Board to make certain that the district's administrative compensation plans were systematic, rational, and equitable. Our work began that same month and has now been completed. We are pleased to present this final report containing the results of our study.

In conducting the over-all study and evaluation, a number of steps were taken and a variety of techniques were employed. These included the following:

1. An initial briefing session was held with school board members and central office administrators to discuss the purpose, scope, and procedures of the study.

2. An initial briefing session was held with all district administrators to review plans and procedures of the study.

3. Individual interviews and follow-ups were held with each district administrator in his building.

4. Discussion sessions were held with all district administrators at each phase of the study.

5. Literature on executive compensation plans in business, industry, government, and education was reviewed.

6. Compensation plans for administrators in school districts of Minnesota and other states were reviewed.

7. Richfield School District policies and procedures relating to administrator compensation and performance review were analyzed.
Our primary aim throughout the study has been to develop a plan which will lessen some of the technical problems of administrator salary administration, minimize some of the human problems, and in the process, strengthen the ability of the district organization to receive leadership at the level required to attain its purposes continuously.

The major elements of the study were:

1. Development of position responsibility descriptions for all district administrators, to include --
   a. primary objective of the position
   b. major areas of accountability in instructional improvement, administration, and school-community relations
   c. supervision of others
   d. work direction of others

3. Establishment of an administrator compensation plan based upon 1 & 2 above.

This report is organized in four parts. Part I includes a brief presentation of the general conceptualization of work planning and review and relates performance review to compensation review. Several of these concepts have been used throughout the report and form the basis for the recommended plan.

In Part II the relationship between systematic development of a compensation plan for administrative personnel and definition of administrative positions is considered. Part III deals with performance review. An appraisal plan linked to position responsibilities is recognized as a compensation determinant.

Part IV concerns the proposed compensation plan. The mechanics of the plan are simplified and quantified in a form which is readily understood and can be utilized to calculate its impact on the salaries.
of individual administrators as well as on the annual district budget.

The final sections of the report, Appendices A, B, C, D, and E, contain position descriptions for all district administrative personnel, analyses of current compensation relationships with administrators from selected school districts, and a proposed policy for administrator compensation.

We are most appreciative of the excellent cooperation and assistance provided by all Richfield School District administrators. Central office and building administrators have all contributed time and talent. Their assistance and counsel is most appreciated. Any weaknesses in the report are, however, the sole responsibility of the consultants.

PART I. PERFORMANCE REVIEW AND COMPENSATION PLANNING

Performance Review

The process of judging the behavior of another person in an organizational activity involves, consciously or unconsciously, a number of basic assumptions. In the development of this report and the suggested performance review and compensation plan for administrators, it was necessary to consider the assumptions on which the plan might be based in order to conceptualize dimensions of the task. Consideration of these assumptions and dimensions is deemed critical to the building of a practical program.

Five sets of assumptions about different aspects of a performance review and compensation program have been identified and provide the basis for the descriptions which follow in Parts II-IV. They are as follows:

1. A performance review program assumes that the district is well managed, that it utilizes appropriate administrative practices, that every administrator understands his role and wants to cooperate in the achievement of district goals;

2. A performance review program presupposes that there exists a systematic, realistic plan of describing administrative positions, that each position has been defined as accurately as possible, and is mutually understood by reviewer and reviewed;

3. A performance review program assumes that each supervising administrator knows how to supervise, that he is a reliable and competent evaluator of the performance of his subordinates, and has the ability to communicate empathically to his subordinates;

4. A performance review program assumes that objective judgments about an administrator's performance can be made, that they can be communicated upwards and downwards in the district organization without serious disruption of district or personal relationships, that they can provide a basis for compensation planning, and that they can provide the means of stimulating administrator growth and development; and

5. Finally, a performance review program assumes that each administrator understands what is required of him, that he wants to excel, that he is in control of his performance and can be held responsible for it.

The dimensions of the performance review task are illustrated in Figure 1. The building of an effective, acceptable, and practical administrator performance review program requires that three basic principles be considered:

Principle I. Knowledge of What Is Expected (Planning). This study involved completion of position descriptions for all administrators in the district. The position descriptions were developed cooperatively with all administrators and contained built-in responsibility assignments to maintain currency. Part II of this report describes the content and process utilized in formulating the descriptions. A complete set of descriptions is found in Appendix B.

Principle II. Feedback of Results (Review). The development of an administrator appraisal plan linked to position responsibilities is described in Part III of this report. Proposed instrumentation for a two-part review process is included in Appendices C and D.

Principle III. Assistance As Needed. The planning and development of a professional growth program for administrators was outside the scope of this study. It is strongly recommended, however, that such actions as necessary be taken to initiate the planning, development, and implementation of this component of the performance review system. The responsibility for the development of an administrative improvement plan design to help and assist individual administrators must be accepted by the school district. The performance review program implementation can serve as an opportunity for commitment to such an administrator development plan.

In summary the performance review requirements considered in this report are related to the concept of a continuous cycle of planning, review, and provision of assistance.

The Relationship Between Performance Review and Compensation Review

Inclusion of a performance factor in school administrator salaries is probably the exception rather than the rule. Weaknesses in current compensation practices for administrators generally can be traced to a lack of clean-cut relationship between compensation and performance.

The suggested performance review program and compensation plan described later in this report assume a relationship between performance review and compensation review as illustrated in Figure 2. The separation of the performance review process from the compensation decision enables the school district to place proper emphasis on each. It also helps to avoid the tendency to rationalize compensation decisions in solely "merit rating" terms. Physical separation does not imply that performance should not be considered in compensation decisions. Indeed, the suggested program of performance review is designed to provide greater knowledge in making these decisions. The performance review is thus related conceptually to compensation decisions even though separated physically.

THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN PERFORMANCE REVIEW AND COMPENSATION REVIEW*

Finally, it is suggested that the goals of the performance review and compensation plans for the Richfield School District be stated in the form of district policy. A suggested policy statement is included in Appendix A.
The relationship between systematic development of a compensation plan for administrative personnel and definition of administrative positions was described in Part I. The position description is one of the planning devices by which a performance review and compensation plan is developed. The following sections are intended to make clear the concept of administrative position descriptions utilized in developing the descriptions found in Appendix B.

1. Defining the Administrator's Job

   The individual administrator's first step toward effective performance on the job is to acquire an adequate understanding of that job: its purpose, its scope, its responsibilities and authorities, and its working relationships. A position description is a summary of the important facts about a particular job. It is an attempt to clarify for all concerned the basic purpose of the position, the duties and responsibilities assigned to it, the extent and limits of its authority, and the relation of the position to others both inside and outside the organization. An organization chart is analogous to a line-drawing of the organization showing the location in relation to each position. A position description goes one step further and identifies that portion of the organization activity and responsibility assigned to a particular position on the chart. The chart identifies the "where" with respect to other jobs, and the position description describes the "what".

2. Uses of Position Descriptions

   Before initiating this position description program it was important to explain the various uses that would be made of the resulting descriptions. The suggested use of position descriptions was as follows:

A. to help administrators acquire greater understanding of their present position by analyzing their duties;

B. to clarify relationships between jobs by avoiding overlaps and gaps in responsibility;

C. to analyze the basic school district organization structure and division of responsibility;

D. to establish a just basis for the district's internal salary structure;

E. to use as a foundation by which to compare positions inside the school district organization with others outside it in order to pay salaries competitive with current levels;

F. to evaluate individual administrator's job performance;

G. to acquaint new administrators with their jobs;

H. as a recruitment and placement aide to find the right administrator for each position;

I. to develop lines of promotion within the school district;

J. to determine the school district's inservice training needs, and

K. to rearrange workflow and revise procedures.

The various uses stated above can be summarized as follows: external compensation comparison, internal compensation comparison, performance appraisal, administrator-development, recruitment hiring and placement, orientation of new administrators, promotion, organizational clarification and organizational planning. If position descriptions are put to use in all these ways in daily operation of the school district they can constitute a significant plus for systematic administration and overall program effectiveness.
3. What to Include in the Position Description

The determination of the "what" of the administrative job suggests that it might be helpful to begin with a list of common responsibilities of most administrative positions in educational organizations. A suggested list follows:

A. planning work;
B. assigning responsibilities and delegating authority;
C. directing work and guiding people;
D. maintaining and improving quality;
E. improving work methods and executing programs;
F. keeping others informed;
G. safety, health, and good housekeeping, and
H. reports, correspondence, and procedures.

For the purposes of this program the documentation of position descriptions was divided into five logical areas: (A) basic function or purpose of the position; (B) duties and responsibilities of the position; (C) professional growth and development; (D) limits of authority, and (E) relationships with others. The following discussion deals with each of the four components of the job description.

A. Basic function or purpose of the position

This is a brief description or digest of what occurs in connection with the position and the contribution it makes to the school organization. (For example, the purpose of department supervisor at the secondary school level: to contribute through the institution and implementation of the curriculum in his respective area; to maintain the continuity and progression of the growth of pupils; to have the responsibility of supervising, coordinating, and evaluating the development and administration of the total program of his department.) Special note should be taken in describing the basic function of a position to assure appropriate attention is given to the common administrative elements of organizational design and staffing, policy interpretation and formulation, and the planning direction and control operations required for program execution and evaluation.
B. Duties and responsibilities of the position

This is usually the longest and most detailed part of the description. It includes a listing and brief explanation of the principal activities of the position in order of importance and commonly grouped under such headings as planning, administration, personnel, organization, controlling and appraisal of results. (An example of the major responsibilities for a department supervisor is as follows: (1) curriculum development, (2) techniques of supervision, (3) supervisor-teacher relationships, (4) planning and preparation, (5) contributing to the total school effort, (6) community and public relations, (7) professional growth and (8) supervisory-staff relationships. A detailed listing of key duties under the first major responsibility of curriculum development would be as follows:

(a) re-evaluates curriculum content and methods of presentation; gives leadership to the origination and presentation of ideas; experiments with respect to revisions and additions of curricula;

(b) keeps abreast of proven or promising curriculum innovations in other school districts;

(c) organizes and participates on committees formed for evaluation of current curriculum texts, methodology, equipment, and materials;

(d) provides leadership to the development of programs within the curriculum to meet the needs, interests, and goals of all pupils.)

In order to assure that the list of duties and responsibilities would not be restrictive, special attention was directed to "duties and responsibilities normally discharged by administrators of the specific position level" and to "such other duties and responsibilities as might be temporarily or permanently assigned to this position."

C. Professional Growth and Development

The position description to this point has been focused upon administrative positions without regard to past, present, or future occupants. The need to control the qualifications of personnel who are assigned to administrative positions in a dynamic and changing educational environment suggests a systematic approach to stimulating and rewarding improved professional effectiveness during service.
Each position description in Appendix B contains an identical set of expectations for this area. Special note is directed to Item 7: "To redefine position content consistent with the evolving nature of relationships within the district." This responsibility places a primary responsibility on maintenance of up-to-date position descriptions on each administrator and should assist in the implementation of the performance review program.

D. LIMITS OF AUTHORITY

The administrator is given a grant of authority to take certain action and to make certain decisions in the performance of his duties. This authority must be spelled out as a part of the position description. (An example of a statement to describe the limits of authority delegated to the department supervisor is as follows: (1) to operate within budgetary limits approved by the director of secondary education; (2) to implement new policies and programs of major changes in previous established policies only after the approval of the director of secondary education; (3) to approve budgets and expenses submitted to him by the teachers in his department, and (4) line of authority is limited to his immediate subordinates.)

Since responsibilities and duties associated with a position and authority are quite interdependent, attention should be paid to the articulation between these sections two and three of the position description.

E. RELATIONSHIPS WITH OTHERS

This section describes the working relationships of the individual administrator, his subordinates, his superiors, other units within the school district, and with school patrons and community groups. Position descriptions typically resolve most work problems but tend to fail to resolve the relationship problems adequately. The organization chart shows the basic division of work and indicates who reports to whom but it does not describe functions in detail or explain how individuals are to relate to these functions. This in reality is how the organization works. Special caution was made in regard to utilizing the following types of delicate and often nebulous generalities in describing relationships with others: "general responsibility," "operating responsibility," "specific responsibility," and "must be consulted," "may be consulted," "must be notified," and "must approve." (The following is a typical relationship statement for the departmental supervisor: (1) Line position; (2) Is accountable to the director of secondary education; (3) maintains close liaison with the district curriculum director in a staff capacity; (4) provides advice and service to the secondary school principal in terms of parental and community relations, program descriptions, and activities of the specific department.)
Position description should include all the significant areas of activity, stating these concisely and clearly insofar as practical. The writing of position descriptions and the administration of a sound position description program constitutes one of the clearest examples of how management provides an orderly and systematic framework for administrative performance. The clarification that results from the process of formulating position descriptions gives the school district one of its most effective tools for shaping both human and material resources toward maximum goal achievement.
PART III. PERFORMANCE REVIEW

Unless an organization pursues a policy of viewing continuously the past performance, present progress, and future prospects of its human resources, it must manage them by intuition and tradition. Sound management in the school organization seems to make a formal administrator performance review program essential.

The essence of the performance review process is communication and its ultimate purpose is change. The performance review process must constitute an important element of the upward communication system to aid decision-making on matters such as compensation, promotion, and re-assignment. It constitutes an element of the downward communication system through the performance review interview to help the individual administrator grow and fulfill himself.

The general objective of the performance review process is change in the direction of raising levels of job performance so that school district goals are achieved and each administrator realizes a full measure of satisfaction and stimulation from his job.

The proposed performance review plan raises many problems, but if it succeeds, the school district has built into its structure the capacity for continuous leadership self-renewal. This is such a worthwhile goal that it deserves an all-out effort.

The performance appraisal plan proposed in this report contains two forms: (1) a trait and personal qualities form; and (2) a performance oriented form. In sequence each of the two forms will be presented along with a discussion of proposed instrumentation and plan for utilization.
1) A General Administrative Ability Review process is recommended as one component of the administrative appraisal plan. Rather than considering administrator appraisal from the many aspects relating to job expectations, this appraisal involves examining present administrators on a competitive basis to determine which of them are best fitted for promotion or reassignment. The general purpose of this review is to obtain the supervising administrator's forecast. He or they are expected to know the administrator to be reviewed intimately, and be able to predict how he will perform in a different and/or higher level position.

The administrator characteristics deemed most relevant in predicting reassignment potential and general administrative effectiveness are: (1) Effectiveness with People; (2) Decision-Making Ability; (3) Personal Characteristics; and (4) General Executive Abilities. It is suggested that this appraisal follow the general format illustrated in Appendix D and that the system be established under the direction of the Assistant Superintendent for Administration and Personnel in accord with district policies.

2) An Administrator Performance Review system is recommended to achieve a district-wide standard of excellence in administrative performance and to assure equity in compensation review. The administrator performance review, as a system, to be understood correctly, is one element of the district's communications media. It is the means by which the district and administrator, individually, assert their mutual concern for the caliber of the administrator's performance, the means by which intrinsic and extrinsic rewards can be related directly to the quality of the administrator's performance.
Despite its relative simplicity in overall purpose, the performance review process is quite difficult to translate into reality. It is affected by the nature of the district organization, requires awareness of the complexities of interpersonal perception, and varies according to its perceived objectives: information, motivation, or development.

In order to optimize effectiveness of the performance review program it is recommended that the procedures for implementation be developed with considerable care and with the widest possible participation by all district administrators. Inasmuch as the administrator position descriptions describe what each administrator is supposed to do, it would appear logical that the administrator be judged on the basis of how adequately he fulfills position requirements and carries out position duties and responsibilities as stated in the position description. One can hardly argue for compensating an administrator on the basis of one set of responsibilities and reviewing his job performance on the basis of another.

The proposed report form for the Administrator's Performance Review is contained in Appendix C. The major features of the report comprise the following:

1. The suggested form is self-contained—that is, instructions for its completion are included on the form.

2. The report is completed first by the rated administrator, then by the supervising administrator, and reviewed by the assistant superintendent and superintendent.

3. The report is submitted at least annually.

4. The administrator's performance is reviewed on a scale which includes the specific tasks, duties, and responsibilities which apply to his particular position. Two descriptive statements cover the range of performance -- excellent and needs improvement.

5. The rating administrator prepares narrative comments designed to bring out the true dimensions and requirements of the position and a description of the administrator's specific strengths and weaknesses.

6. The rating administrator must define and document a plan for improvement for the rated administrator. The performance review form and process should provide a tie-in between administrator performance review and administrator training.

7. The administrator performing the review must discuss the appraisal with the administrator reviewed prior to forwarding the review report to the appropriate district administrators for review.

While an elaboration of the administrator inservice or continuing education responsibility of the district at this point would deviate from the intended purpose of this report, it is recommended that a carefully planned administrative development program be developed as an integral component of the performance review plan.

The plan suggested in this report should be considered in the context of an initial implementation of performance review. The procedures and policies required to place this program in operation should be self-adjusting, and allow for orderly and systematic ways of implementing changes after additional experience in performance review has been gained.
PART IV. THE COMPENSATION PLAN

During recent years school boards and administrators have become increasingly uneasy about direct links between salary schedules for teachers and administrators. While these ratio systems have served a useful purpose in the past, the changing relationship between administrators and teachers has brought the practice into question. Specifically, the collective action of teachers has sharpened the differences in roles for teachers and administrators within the school organization. This development has placed administrators who negotiate and administer teacher contracts in a role involving a potential conflict of interest. Such is the case if effectiveness in the new administrative role results in a diminution of salary for the administrator.

School building principals are especially disturbed by the polarization of forces within public education. The ties with the teachers no longer provide the security which principals have enjoyed in the past. This is especially true as grievance procedures become a reality. The actions of principals are often the items of grievance and subject to adjudication by higher authority. Thus the principal is an adversary to the teacher or his representative.

Efforts on the part of principals and other middle management personnel to become identified with central administration have produced results which are equally unsatisfactory. The concept of team administration has not been fully understood or implemented in most school districts. Hierarchical rather than collegial relationships are the rule more often than not. Seldom are principals and their supervisors deeply involved in the formulation of school policy. Such is the prerogative of the board of education and superintendent in most instances. Others are literally told to cooperate and implement school policies. Also, superintendents and school boards have not found a suitable or acceptable alternative to the ratio salary schedule for principals and other administrators. Thus policy formulation and salary considerations have tended to separate top and middle management into two groups.

A second major weakness of the ratio schedules which are tied to teachers' salaries is the manner in which effectiveness is assumed to be related to the number of graduate credits accumulated and the years of administrative experience. A more direct link between administrative performance and level of compensation is needed. While no easy procedures or objective instruments are available for use in assessing administrative performance, those who administer schools are in the best position to create them. Efforts by the professionals to resist performance review procedures encourage lay appraisal of performance. Therefore, it is incumbent upon school administrators to search for appropriate procedures for measuring administrative performance. The compensation plans which follow and the material in PART III are a step in this direction.

The need for a compensation plan which will contribute to team administration is clear. This plan should encourage principals and directors to: (1) assist the superintendent and board of education in the identification and attainment of organizational goals, and (2) perform to the limit of their capacity. While these are appropriate goals for any compensation plan the board must move toward their realization within the constraints which have been placed upon public employment and upon educational administrators in particular. For instance, bonuses, stock options and other incentives common in the private sector are illegal and otherwise not available in public education. Also, any salary increase which is granted must be continued thereafter. Therefore, the degree of flexibility available to the Richfield Board of Education is rather limited.

This report proposes three salary plans which in the opinion of the consultants will accomplish the objectives which are described above. The strengths, weaknesses, and possible variations of each are discussed below. The administrative performance review procedure which is described in the previous section is common to all of the plans. This section ends with a recommendation for setting administrative salaries in Richfield.

ALTERNATIVE ONE

Reference was made above to the dilemma of middle managers in salary negotiations. These people have the distinct impression that they are no longer adequately represented by the teachers or by the superintendent. This anxiety cannot be dissipated by promises by the superintendent or the board of education. These people want some assurance that their interests will be protected. They want some guarantee that the team concept will prevail as salary considerations are discussed. In other words, they want assurances that the superintendent will represent them in salary negotiations with the board of education.

One approach which could be used to set the base salaries and determine the magnitude of increases which should satisfy middle managers is a ratio salary system within administration where all base salaries are related to the salary of the school superintendent. This arrangement would maximize the probability that middle managers would want the superintendent to be successful. Moreover, it would reassure those who feel that the superintendent does not represent them in salary negotiations with the board of education. Thus, the school organization and its administrators would benefit by a salary system which encourages team administration and reduces conflict between the levels of managers.

The weekly salaries of administrators in Richfield and eight other districts during the past three years were used to calculate the ratios shown in Tables 1 through 9 which are included in Appendix F of this report. These data would be useful in setting ratios to implement Alternative One. The base salary for all positions could be set in this fashion and the same ratios used to determine the size of the increase for administrators having good scores on the performance review.

The formula for establishing a salary for such administrators under this plan would be:

1969-70 base salary = present salary plus ratio multiplied by the raise for the Superintendent times the quantity of the number of weeks of contract divided by 48. Using the ratio for an elementary school principal for 1968-69 and a hypothetical raise of $3,000 for the Superintendent for 1969-70, the salary would be calculated as follows:

1969-70 salary = $18,000 + .675 x $3,000 (42) = $19,850

Three weaknesses of Alternative One are rather obvious. First, there is the loss of flexibility which results in tying all administrator salaries together. For instance, the Board would not be at liberty to reward or penalize the Superintendent without affecting all administrators similarly. Also, a change of superintendents in the district would likely upset the compensation plan for all administrators. A third weakness in Alternative One is the extent to which it focuses attention on a single salary, namely that paid to the superintendent. Administrative salaries in public schools are public information. Any plan which singles out one salary for further attention must be evaluated carefully.

The weakness cited above could be partially corrected by setting administrator ratios at the median of a sample of comparable districts in the area. Again, the data in Tables 1-9 Appendix E would be useful. For example, if the Richfield Board of Education chose to use Alternative One, it could select a ratio for elementary principals from Table 1 using the median of the nine districts for 1968-69 (District G) or the median figure of all districts during the three-year period (District B, 1968-69). Once such a ratio were selected, it would be applied to the salary of the superintendent in Richfield or to the median salary of the superintendent in the nine districts.

While selecting a sample of districts for setting ratios eliminates some problems, it creates others. First, the Richfield Board of Education would not have complete control of a system which is tied to median practices in other districts. Negotiations in other districts would directly affect the salary levels for administrators in Richfield. This is not to deny that such negotiations now affect Richfield, but the impact may be less direct if another alternative is selected.

A second weakness of this variation of Alternative One pertains to timing. Richfield simply could not establish a compensation schedule until all other districts had completed negotiations. This potential delay could be very disruptive.

ALTERNATIVE TWO

The second alternative bears a strong resemblance to the first one. The major change is a switch from the salary of the Superintendent to that of the High School Principal as the base upon which ratios would be established. Tables 10 through 17 in Appendix E were developed for this purpose. Again, the procedure would be to use the ratios to set base salaries and to determine the magnitude of increases. The assumption was made in developing Tables 10 through 17 that it would be preferable to use the salaries paid to high school principals in the nine districts rather than limit the calculations to the one position in Richfield.

Alternative Two has most of the weaknesses of Alternative One. The one exception is that in using the salary of high school principals to set the ratios, the Board would be at liberty to deal independently with the Superintendent of Schools. Also, public attention would not be focused on a single salary which is the highest one paid in the District.

ALTERNATIVE THREE

The two alternatives described above satisfy many of the principles of administrative salary scheduling. In fact, Alternative One may represent the plan of the future in public schools. However, it is a rather drastic departure from existing practice, it is complex, and may be unacceptable to the administrators and the Board of Education in Richfield. Also, the present state of evolution in the profession of educational administration may preclude the use of a salary plan which institutionalizes team administration. For these reasons and others which are cited above, the third and recommended compensation plan was developed.

While Alternative Three may be short on conceptual framework, it is simple. It assumes that the base salary for any year should be established by adding the cost of living to the base for the previous year. The increments for outstanding performance would be a fixed percent of the salary for the present year. This amount plus the cost of living factor plus the current salary would equal the salary for the following year. A factor of 10 percent plus the cost of living is recommended. Also, the base should be increased one increment (10 percent) every third year regardless of the results of the performance review. In summary all administrators would get cost-of-living increases annually. Those deemed to be outstanding would receive an additional 10 percent increase. All administrators would receive at least one 10 percent increase in addition to the cost-of-living increases every three years.

The formula for the recommended compensation plan is:

\text{Salary for following year} = \text{present salary} + 10\% \text{ (for administrators with good reviews)} + \text{cost of living factor.}

This compensation plan, like all salary schemes, should be reviewed periodically. Certainly, it is no panacea for all of the salary problems in Richfield. Moreover, as observed in Part I of this report, it is important for the Richfield Board to maintain a competitive position as it attempts to recruit and retain able administrators. Therefore, it may be necessary to increase the magnitude of the increase if other districts move ahead of Richfield.
Finally, Alternative Three fails to establish base salaries for 1969-70. Since a review of administrative performance must be based upon an agreed upon description of duties, any review based on the position descriptions included in this report must be delayed until the Spring of 1970. Therefore, arbitrary bases must be established once more. The procedures used one year ago may offer the best promise for setting salaries for 1969-70.
APPENDIX A

SUGGESTED COMPENSATION POLICY FOR ADMINISTRATORS
SUGGESTED COMPENSATION POLICY FOR ADMINISTRATORS
RICHFIELD PUBLIC SCHOOLS

IT IS THE POLICY OF THE RICHFIELD SCHOOL DISTRICT TO MAINTAIN AN ADMINISTRATOR COMPENSATION PLAN DESIGNED TO:

(1) Contribute to attainment of school district objectives and to the economic, social, and psychological satisfaction of all administrative personnel;

(2) Attract and retain administrative personnel capable of performing effectively in the positions to which they are assigned;

(3) Equal or exceed compensation levels in other school districts in the Twin Cities area;

(4) Compensate all administrative personnel equitably in proportion to the effectiveness with which they perform the services for which they are employed; and

(5) Relate compensation to the value of the work of the school district.
POSITION DESCRIPTION

POSITION TITLE: Superintendent of Schools
DEPARTMENT/UNIT: District Administration
ACCOUNTABLE TO: School Board

I. BASIC FUNCTION/PURPOSE OF POSITION

To serve as chief executive officer of the Richfield Public Schools, responsible for:

1. Coordination of the technical talents of the administrative and instructional staffs
2. The general administration of all educational programs, projects, and services
3. The general administration of all financial operations, physical resources, or other affairs of the school district
4. Advising and making recommendations to the school board with respect to these functions

II. DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE POSITION

Consistent with legal requirements and with high professional standards and within the limits of by-laws, regulations, and policies adopted by the school board, the superintendent is responsible for and has commensurate authority to accomplish the duties set forth below. He may delegate portions of his responsibilities together with proportionate authority for their fulfillment, but he may not delegate or relinquish any portion of his accountability for results.
