Abstract: The manual was compiled by participants of an institute designed to train librarians to work with American Indians and Mexican Americans. Information is provided to aid library personnel in understanding the cultural backgrounds of these minority groups. Criteria for selecting books for and about Mexican Americans and Indians are included, as well as reader's interest and library-interest forms. Criteria for judging library services to rural and small communities are also given. Implementation of library services is discussed in terms of the library, the student-librarian relationship, the total school, the community, and state and national activities. Lists of bibliographies on Indians, Mexican Americans, and both Indians and Mexican Americans are included, and each entry is coded for interest and use level. Supplementary reading materials for cultural enrichment are listed for both Mexican Americans and Indians, and these are also coded by interest level. Resource materials such as films, records, magazines, and newspapers are cited, and a directory of sources concludes the document. (LS)

PREFACE

The materials in this manual resulted from cooperative effort on the part of librarians who participated in the "Institute to Train School and Public Librarians to Work in Communities with Large Numbers of Mexican Americans and/or Indians." The library institute was held at New Mexico State University, Las Cruces, New Mexico, from June 8 to July 3, 1970.

The overall goal of the institute was to increase the efficiency and knowledge of those persons working in school and public libraries in areas where there are large numbers of Spanish-speaking people and/or Indians. The library institute endeavored to help librarians understand and appreciate the cultural differences of these minority groups and to improve the library techniques of those who participated in the institute.

Participants felt that parents, teachers, administrators, and librarians should cooperate to provide worthwhile reading and media materials for children in elementary schools and that junior high, high school, college, and public libraries will contribute more effectively to the education of young people and adults when children have had the opportunity of growing up in a school with a good library. The good library should help to establish cultural identity and a good self-image for all children, particularly members of minority groups.

It is our hope that the materials in this manual will help other librarians, administrators, teachers, and educational personnel to reevaluate their library programs and their manner of working with Mexican Americans and/or Indians.
Chapter I

ATTITUDES AND VALUES OF THE AMERICAN INDIAN

A study of the Indian in American society today must be viewed with a knowledge and understanding of his cultural background and heritage, as well as his attitudes, values, and conflicts resulting from coexistence in a dominant non-Indian culture.

The American Indian is highly variable in cultural complexities. Tribes vary in number from less than 10 to more than 100,000 members, with the heaviest concentration being in the Southwest. In order to come to a better understanding of the American Indian today, some of his history, traditions, cultural values, and attitudes must be taken into account. Some cultural similarities which have developed among the American Indians are described below.

*** *** ***

Extended Family

The extended family was the most important social and economic unit. Survival of the individual was possible only through survival of the clan. Food, clothing, and all material possessions were shared. Personal wealth became important with everyone working for betterment of the clans. Through betterment of the clans came betterment of the tribe. Great emphasis was placed upon working together, sharing, and cooperation. As a result, the early-day Indian tended to be noncompetitive. Indian children were usually treated permissively and loved by everyone. Discipline was achieved through ridiculing and ignoring the child. All members of the family cooperated to see that the child behaved. In this extended family, there was great respect for the aged.

Religion

Religion permeated all aspects of Indian life. It gave direction to life that otherwise would have been aimless and meaningless. Even Indian social life was, and still is, centered around rites and ceremonies which have their bases in natural concepts.
Harmony with Nature

All Indians believed in living in harmony with nature and depended upon nature to supply their needs. When disease, famine, or drought hit them, it was because their lives were not in total harmony with nature. When they had bountiful crops, it was because the gods were pleased with the people. The Indians used many resources to regain this necessary balance: witchcraft, sorcery, visions, dances, offerings, rites, and chants which were led or conducted by the medicine men or shamans.

Land Ownership

The Earth was the Eternal Mother to be shared and cherished by all. Consequently, personal ownership of land was unknown.

Time Orientation

That time consists of the present, the here and now, and comes in endless supply was a concept believed by the Indian. Time was something that coexisted with the Indian. For this reason, there was little concern for the future or for what tomorrow would bring.

Language

There were many languages and dialects spoken by the American Indian. These languages evolved in accordance with geographic locations and the amount of contact with other people.

The influence of the dominant non-Indian culture has changed such concepts as those we have just discussed. Because the American Indian today is forced to conform to the non-Indian concepts of time, education, and competitiveness, his language has been influenced by English words and modern society. The present Indian religion is often a mixture of Christianity and Indian religion. Economic conditions and acculturation—with the accompaniment of chronic unemployment, drunkenness, disease, and malnutrition—have contributed to the breakdown of the extended family.
As the Indian moves further into the dominant culture, he begins to lose his identification with the ways of his youth. He finds it very difficult to replace the values of his native-born culture with the values of the society in which he now lives. This conflict accounts in part for the high incidence of mental illness among the American Indians of today.

Hopefully, we as librarians can have a part in helping the Indian to be able to take the good from other cultures with which he comes in contact and to add to his own culture that which he desires. We should provide good cultural background material for all groups to aid in this process. American society will one day find that its strength lies in its individual differences.
Chapter II

BACKGROUND OF THE MEXICAN AMERICAN

When one speaks of Mexican Americans, the name evokes different images to different people; however, for purposes of clarity, the term "Mexican American" is used here to deal with those people who call themselves Spanish American, Hispano, Latino, Chicano, La Raza, Spanish, etc.

There were four basic migrations of Mexican Americans in the United States. The first were the Spanish who settled in northern New Mexico and southern Colorado in the late 1500's and early 1600's. When Spain withdrew from the New World, these people were virtually isolated from any outside influences. For nearly three centuries, Spanish culture remained virtually unchanged. Most of these people lived in partial seclusion and self-sufficiency on lands granted to them by the king of Spain.

In 1850, the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo was signed by the United States and Mexico as a result of the Mexican American War. According to the treaty, all existing Spanish land grants were to be honored by the United States. In return, the people living on the land grants were to declare loyalty to the United States. Many of the land owners were swindled out of their lands by the legalistic maneuverings of unscrupulous businessmen. The actions of the swindlers have in modern times invoked the wrath of the descendants of the land grant owners, who banded together under the "Alianza" (Federal Alliance of Free City States) in an effort to recover their stolen lands.

Beginning in 1910 when Mexico was undergoing political upheaval, there was an influx of Mexicans who were fleeing Mexico and seeking asylum. The United States encouraged this immigration because World War I had increased the need for agricultural labor. Once again, mass immigration continued in the 1920's because of political and economic instability in Mexico. It is estimated that nearly 1,000,000 Mexicans immigrated to the United States from 1910 to 1930. After World War II, there was another influx of Mexican immigrants. During this period, the Bracero Program was initiated. Although a large number of the immigrants continued to be interested in agricultural work, many of them were no longer looking for farm labor but were headed to the cities to join the unskilled labor force. Therefore, most of the new immigrants were becoming urban-oriented rather than rural-oriented.

Today, more than ever, the Anglo society is beginning to realize that ethnic problems exist both among so-called Mexican Americans and between this minority group and the Anglo society. Mexican Americans are awakening to injustices they have suffered in the past or are still experiencing. Their clamor for a place in the middle-class Anglo society is beginning to be felt more acutely, and rightly so.

It is about as easy to define a Mexican American as it is to define an American. Mexican Americans comprise a heterogeneous group, although sometimes distinct from the dominant Anglo culture in terms of language, customs, heritage, attitudes, and values.

The stereotype of the Mexican American depicts him as being totally submissive to the teachings of the mother church (Catholic Church), barely subsisting in an agrarian society, having a fatalistic outlook on life, working only to supply his present needs, having a low level of aspiration, having a narrow time orientation, holding superstitions, and maintaining an extended family system. This stereotype may or may not apply partially or totally to the 20 percent of Mexican Americans residing in rural areas of the United States; it probably does not apply to the 40 percent of lower class Mexican Americans living in urban ghettos, and probably not to the other 40 percent of Mexican Americans living in urban areas.

Since the Mexican American cannot be readily described, perhaps it is best to consider him in terms of his degree of acculturation. On one extreme are the people recently arrived from Mexico. They have strong Mexican attitudes and behavior, and speak only Spanish. However, as with all immigrant groups, acculturation becomes more rapid as the socioeconomic level improves. Thus, at the other extreme are Mexican Americans who have been completely acculturated, or for that matter assimilated! Between these extremes are people all along the continuum.

It must be realized that the American educational system has failed miserably in ministering to, and helping, those who do not come from homes which reflect the middle-class Anglo cultural standards and traditions. A Spanish-speaking child comes to school eagerly, with high aspirations; however, in many instances, he is felled by strokes of misunderstanding.
and a hostile environment because there is no one to help him to be proud of his home, culture, history, and traditions. Education is not a panacea, but the system could possibly help problems vanish by facing the issue and seeking unbiased educational and social solutions. The Mexican American could be educated in his own culture, using unbiased history and contributions which he can offer to society.

It is important to teach the Mexican American the skills and knowledge he needs to function well in the society in which he lives while at the same time preserving and enriching his own unique cultural heritage. The system can give him the tools by which he can build his own ladder to a brighter future—with grace, dignity, pride, and a sense of achievement.
Chapter III

GUIDE TO SELECTING LIBRARY MATERIALS
FOR MEXICAN AMERICANS AND INDIANS

The purpose of this guide is to establish evaluative criteria to determine the suitability of materials in meeting the instructional and/or recreational needs of library users.

1. Instructional goal: To fulfill a specific curriculum need or to extend an instructional area with factual information.

2. Recreational goal: To select materials on hobbies, interest areas, or special needs to stimulate interest in new as well as in familiar areas.

The school librarian* should make every effort to examine materials before purchasing them. Bookstores, departments of education, publishers' review copies and exhibits, conventions, book fairs, and various other library collections provide opportunity for the librarian to examine materials personally before selection. Fortunately, some excellent annotated lists of materials have been compiled by experienced teachers and librarians; these lists include sufficient information to serve as reliable guides in selection of materials.

In selecting materials, each librarian will need to determine what percentage of the total library collection should be devoted to material on ethnic groups, depending upon local factors. It is also important for the total collection to present a balanced point of view, insofar as possible, on controversial subjects. This includes bilingual and bicultural material (in single language, multilanguage, and translations).

* The term "librarian" is used to include all media personnel; the term "library" is used to include all media.

Association, 1969, pp. 253-7) provide basic tools for the librarian. In addition, many specific aids are needed for the Mexican American and Indian material in order to take into consideration the students' needs, interests, and background. Lists of books, records, films, newspapers, and societies are included in the present manual. Special attention is called to the following, which may be particularly helpful:

Additional selection-aid sources may be found in the form of suggestions from community and professional organizations such as community action programs, local ethnic action groups, departments of education, Federal agencies, and the Pan American Union. Because of their close identification with various ethnic groups, listings and suggestions from these agencies may be useful in determining the relevance and accuracy of materials.

The following criteria should be considered in selecting books for and about Mexican Americans and Indians:

A. Content

1. General criteria
   a. Accuracy should be maintained.
   b. Plot should have unity of action, logical sequence of events, and plausibility.
   c. Complex stories should be edited carefully to retain the flavor of the story, to hold interest, and to give suspense.
   d. Theme should be well defined and appropriate.
   e. Characters should be portrayed objectively and accurately.
   f. Vocabulary should be on the student's level and indicative of the subject area.
   g. Production should provide for good articulation, pleasant diction, and clear enunciation.
2. Specific criteria

Materials should

a. Be free of prejudices and stereotypes.

b. Provide fair and balanced recognition of children and adults of minority groups.

c. Present integrated human relationships.

d. Reflect physical appearance of Mexican Americans and/or Indians in pictures.

e. Give ethnic groups a positive image.

f. Emphasize the multicultural character of our nation.

g. Assist students in appreciating all people, regardless of ethnic differences.

h. Help students appreciate the many contributions of our leaders.

i. Present an accurate picture of conditions which have played a role in development of the nation's history.

j. Analyze intergroup tension and conflict with resolutions to social problems.

k. Help motivate students to understand themselves and their role in society.

l. Develop in the reader a positive self-image.

B. Format

1. Cover—bright, attractive, clear printing for eye appeal.

2. Paper—good quality preferable.

3. Print—clear, easily read.

4. Illustrations and pictures—appealing, preferably in color, representative of the culture.

5. Drawings—accurate.

Due to scarcity of material in the Mexican American and Indian fields, it may be desirable to select books of lesser quality format, without sacrificing important content values, rather than making no selection. Since material is being published now, librarians need to be aware of new offerings in order to obtain the best as it becomes available.

C. Sources of Book Recommendations

1. Reviews by reputable authors.

2. Professional authorities knowledgeable in the field covered by the book.

3. Teacher requests for books applicable to curriculum or for enrichment.

4. Student approval or rejection.

5. Parents' requests.

6. Other librarians oriented to material on Mexican Americans and/or Indians.

7. Leaders of groups in a local area who have particular interest in Mexican Americans and/or Indians.

COMMENTS:
Chapter V

CRITERIA FOR JUDGING LIBRARY SERVICES TO RURAL AND SMALL COMMUNITIES

1. Libraries should undergo continuous reevaluation of purposes of the library, its facilities, collection, and services. Periodic evaluation should be conducted by a representative cross-section of the community which the library serves. Communities should be surveyed to determine needs.

2. There should be a wide variety of materials available. Patrons should be encouraged to check out media, reference materials, and equipment as well as books.

3. Funds should be available for maintenance and prompt repair of equipment.

4. There should be an adequate building and adequate shelves and supplies of equipment. The facilities should be inviting to the public, both in physical appearance and in atmosphere.

5. Libraries should utilize services of state and regional libraries and their consultant services. Where trained librarians are not available, consultant services should be available to assist non-professional library workers.

6. One person should be in charge of the overall library program.

7. Maximum effort should be made to involve the community in operation of the library—especially members of ethnic and minority groups, community action groups, parents, and civic leaders.

8. There should be a written book-selection policy and a procedure for the public to comment on books. These comments would be used to select materials based on the interests, needs, and reading levels of library patrons.

9. It is very important that libraries in rural areas be accessible to all members of the community. The American Library Association, in its stated objectives for school libraries, specifies that it is to "co-operate with other librarians and community leaders in planning and developing an over-all library program for the community or area."
Library hours should accommodate the needs of the community.
10. Library utilization should be encouraged through publicity measures, club activities, and individual efforts.
Chapter VI

AREAS OF IMPLEMENTATION

Wishing to initiate the new ideas and procedures gained through this library institute, we, the participants, have offered the following suggestions as specific areas of implementation. The strategy, when the actual work begins, is to relate effectively to everyone involved; to reach out to others, wherever they are, rather than waiting for them to come to us; and to be extremely dedicated, regardless of opposition and setbacks. Common sense, thoughtful planning, resourcefulness, and imagination will indicate the appropriate plan of action. The specific areas of implementation discussed are

1. The Library
2. Student-librarian Relationship
3. The Total School
4. The Community
5. State and National Activities

The Library

1. Make libraries as attractive as possible. Carpeting is an asset.
3. Have a free atmosphere with few rules.
4. Check out reference materials to students if at all possible.
5. Develop subject and unit bibliographies for student and teacher usage.
6. Build up the collection in the minorities subject areas.
7. Work for a larger library budget by showing the value of library services.
8. Develop an adequate media library to reinforce the curriculum.
9. Have a survey sheet to evaluate the library collection and services.
11. Have booklists with annotations.
12. Use recommended selection tools.
13. Have bilingual materials and posters.
15. Have orientation for library aides in the routine procedures.
16. Expand the vertical files to include all interests of students and teachers.
17. Be alert to new trends in library services.
18. Prepare lists, by reading level, for student and teacher use.
19. Plan programs for special times—for example, Children's Book Week, national holidays, or special cultural days.
20. Have a library newsletter.
22. Be alert to current affairs and have materials available.
23. Remove poor materials depicting any minority group as a stereotyped part of society.
24. Have a good selection of paperbacks.
25. Have a swap shelf for students and teachers.
26. Have a library club or literary club where books are discussed.
27. Have a good supply of bookmarks on hand to advertise books and the library.
28. Remember that clerical assistance is needed to support the professional work of the librarian.
29. Keep in mind that a good library program is the shared responsibility of administrators, board members, teachers, and the librarian.

Student-librarian Relationship

1. The librarian should develop a one-to-one relationship with the student by greeting him personally, by encouraging a good self-image, and by becoming acquainted with personal interests and reading tastes. (Use survey sheets for reading interests.)
2. Student ideas should be utilized in book selection.
3. Students should be given library orientation, including rules and the care of library materials.
4. Student library aides should receive credit for work in the library.
5. A library club should be organized and should be active in school activities—for example, give book talks on the Southwest.
6. Contests should be promoted among students by designing original book covers, displays, and posters; students can judge and give good books as prizes.
7. Students should be helped to become more critical and to evaluate materials offering the opportunity for complaints.
8. The librarian should work with extracurricular clubs and activities, allowing a better chance to become acquainted with students and parents.
9. The librarian should promote or help to establish a "big brother-big sister program" to aid new students in becoming acquainted with and adjusted to the new school situation.
10. The librarian should help to create a student tutorial program and offer the library and the librarian's services for its use.
11. The librarian should learn other languages (not just English) that the students speak.
12. The librarian should examine herself for harbored prejudice.

The Total School

1. Educate the school board and administration as to the purpose, programs, needs, and goals of the library through monthly reports and personal contact.
2. Make the services and materials of the library known to the faculty by talking "library." Keep the channels of communication open, and ask for and give consideration to teacher requests.
3. Provide an orientation to library services for new teachers.
4. Provide for teacher orientation and sensitivity training dealing with the cultural heritage of students.
5. Provide in-service training for teachers and aides when new equipment and media are purchased.
6. Provide an orientation on use of the library for students. Use a well-done film to sell the library and to change stereotyped ideas.
7. Become involved in total school activities, including faculty meetings.
8. Set up displays and bulletin boards throughout the building, including original art work by students.
9. Seek membership on the curriculum committee so as to supplement and implement the curriculum more effectively.
10. Be aware of the overall goals of the school.
11. Make the library accessible to all students, both before and after school. The librarian should also be accessible to all.

12. Help to organize ethnic clubs where students can learn about the culture of other people.

13. Recommend that a faculty-student committee be formed to work with the librarian on library programs and problems.

14. Work closely with guidance counselors in order to contribute to the guidance program.

15. Encourage the administration and school board to establish a course about the history and development of, for example, the Southwest— including the contributions of Indians and Mexican Americans.

16. Recommend that a written book-selection policy incorporating the Library Bill of Rights be adopted by the school board.

17. Remember that lectures can be arranged by Telethon with slides through the Bell Telephone Company.

18. Initiate the concept of having "big brother" and "big sister" for new students.

19. Field trips should be planned using the library for background material.

OTHER LIBRARY MATERIALS

The following bibliography is limited to library materials that (1) were used by the librarians while at the institute or (2) were recommended by librarians who had used the materials in their own libraries. This is by no means a comprehensive bibliography; rather, it is a selected list of books used by librarians who serve Indians and Mexican Americans.

The bibliography is divided into three parts: (1) Mexican Americans, (2) Indians, and (3) Miscellaneous Materials on Mexican Americans and/or Indians.

Mexican Americans

In addition to the books listed herein, one hundred easy children's books in Spanish were available for examination by institute participants—thanks to the Latin American Productions Company.
From Indian shepherd boy to president is the story of Benito Juarez, the liberator of Mexico who set his country on the path of democracy. Very well written.

The story of Alberto and how he obtained a watchdog for his family during the fiesta when all Mexico celebrated its day of freedom. Good description of Diez y Seis.

Barlow, Genevieve. LATIN AMERICAN TALES. Chicago, Rand McNally.
Folklore from 14 countries of Latin America.

Novel about farm workers in California.

Account of the Mier Expedition written by one of the survivors.

Illustrados por Carlos Sanchez M.

Ronnie managed not only to play but, with his new-found Mexican friend Julian, developed a double-play combination that made history—until his aunt discovered what he had been doing with his afternoons.

A southern belle and her son relive the good old days of the South—in New Mexico. Among the son's friends are an ex-Pachuco and the Mexican cook's daughter.

Tells what the moon is like. (In Spanish.)

Stories gathered from Indian story tellers in Mexican villages. Some tell about their gods and especially Tezut, the boy who could do anything. Others are very funny.
