This selective annotated bibliography is designed to provide reference materials on Latin America that are useful at the secondary level. The guide includes materials on traditionally ignored areas of study, and reflects, as much as possible, an awareness of the problem of relevance and reality in Latin America, in social studies education, and in student interests. The bibliography of materials, the majority of which date from 1960 through 1970, is divided into eight parts: 1) texts; 2) supplementary readings of anthologies, literature, and specialized subjects; 3) inquiry studies, including simulation; 4) language materials; 5) citations on minority studies; 6) materials for the educationally disadvantaged student; 7) audio-visual and mixed-media materials; and, 8) bibliographies, handbooks, and other resources. Complete bibliographic information is provided, along with availability, price, and reading level for the average, above average and superior students. (Author/SJM)

INTRODUCTION

Before preparing this guide, the editor and his associates reviewed many current bibliographies on Latin America. A few of these, considered strong in certain areas, have been included in a special section of this guide. This guide is designed to provide reference to materials useful at the secondary level. Selectivity rather than comprehensiveness is stressed. In the main, the selections and annotations were made by persons with secondary teaching experience and were reviewed and in some cases, chosen by scholars. The annotations are designed to give some indication of the success or appropriateness of the materials based on teacher and student evaluations. The guide includes sections on traditionally ignored areas such as "New Social Studies" materials, minority studies, revisionist interpretations, audio visual and mixed media materials. It is hoped that the materials included reflect as much as possible an awareness of the problem of relevance and reality - in Latin America, in social studies education, and in student interests.
This bibliography is a result of the cooperative efforts of the Center for International Programs and Comparative Studies and the Division of Instructional Services. Mr. Alfred Jamieson, Chairman of the Department of Social Studies, Alhambra High School, Martinez, California and author of several monographies on teaching about Latin America was engaged as consultant to the Department during the 1969-70 school year. The bibliography represents a major segment of his work.

Selection, annotation and evaluation of materials cited were made by Mr. Jamieson, except where otherwise noted. Some selections and annotations are a result of the work of Mr. Everett Egginton of Syracuse, New York and Mr. George R. Mayer of Smithtown, New York, as indicated in the text.

The bibliography was reviewed by Dr. Ronald H. McDonald, Director, Latin American Studies Project, Syracuse University and Dr. Arnold Strickon, Chairman, Department of Anthropology, University of Wisconsin. Dr. Strickon suggested several additional source citations as well, which have been included.

Mr. Norman Abramowitz made minor stylistic and editorial changes in the final draft.

The Latin American Studies Project, of which this bibliography is a part was made operational by contract with the Mid-Hudson School Study Council, special thanks for which is given to Dr. William J. Hagany, Executive Secretary.

We are indebted to Mr. Jamieson for his exemplary efforts. We welcome the comments and critique of teachers utilizing this bibliography.

EXPLANATORY NOTE

Suitable for the "average student", and those reading a little below grade level

SS
Suitable for the "superior" student, college level reading or honors classes

AS/SS
An intermediate range falling between the above two. Suitable for "better students", and others reading at grade level

T
Especially recommended for reading by the teacher. May contain information or materials which can be used in developing class exercises

Highly recommended as being unusually suitable or useful

ALT
Includes a strongly stated "alternative" or "revisionist" view of U.S. - Latin American relations

TRAD
While many of the materials in this guide which are not labeled ALT may be considered traditional, a few examples that are particularly representative have been indicated
I. Texts

Books included here are of a nature as to lend themselves as central organizers for a course of study. None is recommended for use singly as all have weaknesses, usually superficiality, or the fact that they represent only one person's interpretation. They should be used in combination with other materials from Sections II, III, and V. Some texts, commonly in use, were omitted because they did not meet goals of the bibliography.

General survey of contemporary Latin America arranged topically. Thorough, concise but rather unexciting. Not designed primarily for secondary students.

AS/SS Curtin, Philip D. Latin America (Culture Area Studies) Morristown, Silver Burdett, 1970. 112 pp. Maps, illustrations, index. paperback
A very brief historical survey. Objective and frank, not juvenile. Interesting, but a bit general and superficial.

Not a survey, but a series of "high interest" depth studies in the form of vignettes or photograph essays. Inquiry approach designed to stimulate class discussion. For educationally disadvantaged students - reading level 5th grade.

One of the best and most readable short introductions to the history of Latin America. It does not offer a complete chronological or nation by nation survey. Rather, the author attempts to explain the major trends and developments using appropriate examples and case studies. The result is an interesting and highly readable synthesis containing enough examples to provide depth.

Part of MacMillan's Culture Regions of the World Series, this book, by a history professor who was formerly a high school teacher, is one of the best examples of a survey text organized with some emphasis on historical development. Chapters include: History, Politics, Language, Religion, Education, the Arts, Economics and Relations with the U.S. Photographs and historical prints, excerpts from primary and secondary sources, and readability make this volume highly useful.
One of the best short geographic surveys organized by country. Vignettes from primary source writings of travelers and photographs give students a flavor of the landscape.

Actually a section from Professor Stavrianos' text, A Global History of Man, this is one of the best of the very short surveys. It is arranged topically - geography, history, politics, economics and culture. Emphasis is on current issues which are traced to their historic roots using a flashback or reverse-history technique. Excellent photographs, maps, charts, and student activities make this book particularly attractive for use with secondary students, especially in combination with source readings such as the authors' Readings in World History.

Essays on the major characteristics of Latin America aimed at producing a simplified, generalized understanding. Very readable. Very suitable for an introductory course.

Probably the most readable scholarly history of Latin America and certainly one of the most preferred college level texts. Excellent as an historical reference and perhaps limited reading assignments in college preparatory secondary classes.

A complete geographic survey, organized by country. Its thoroughness, statistical data and excellent maps make this a useful reference work.

A useful reference containing 60 maps, organized topically and regionally, accompanied by brief text.
First published in 1943, the 1967 edition is revised and enlarged. It is arranged both topically and by country. Each map is accompanied by an explanatory paragraph. Useful mainly as an historical reference.

A summary outline of the major facts and events in Latin American history. Intended as an outline for college courses. Although its completeness and the 121 maps and charts make it a useful historical reference, it is now somewhat dated.

One of the scholastic World Affairs Multi-Text Series. A general survey arranged topically and by country, with student activities. An unexciting and superficial survey. The teacher edition contains a useful guide that may be used to remedy the lack of depth and give some balance to this very traditional interpretation.

Madden, Carl. Latin America: Reform or Revolution. Curriculum Resources, Inc. (Scott, Foresman), 1963. 72 pp. Illustrations, maps, graphs. pamphlet
This booklet is part of a series entitled Area Studies in Economic Progress. Although it contains a concise historical background, the central focus is on the problem of economic development. The basic message repeated throughout the material is that unless there is economic reform there will be violent revolution. The chief villains are the Latin Americans themselves (their "unprogressive" ideas and "feudalistic" social system) and "communist" agitators. The chief hope is the Alliance for Progress which is described with great optimism. There is no discussion of the relationship between U.S. trade and investment policies (most U.S. investment is raw material extraction, U.S. resistance to pleas for more favorable international commodity agreements -- both mentioned in the text) and Latin America's development problems.

A general survey text, historically oriented, arranged chronologically and topically, but including several selected country studies. It is designed for use at the secondary level and includes questions and suggested student activities. Although published in 1968, it reflects a traditional consensus interpretation; several pages are devoted to an unguardedly optimistic description of the Alliance for Progress. By contrast, only a few sentences euphemistically describe U.S. intervention in Santo Domingo, Haiti and Nicaragua during the first three decades of the century.

A current (1964) problems approach, organized in the first section topically: Cuba, Communism, the Alliance for Progress, etc. The second section contains a nation by nation survey. The book is in the format of a rather large, stiff-cover magazine. It is written in a glib, cliche-ridden journalistic style, typical of many high school current events newspapers, and with about as much accuracy and relevance. It is militantly pro-U.S. foreign policy and is somewhat dated.

A thorough, concise survey, arranged topically, including a section on historical background. A standard, informative, and bland introduction to Latin America, reflecting traditional and somewhat dated interpretation.

An historically oriented survey of Latin America designed for use as a high school text. Bland and oversimplified to the point of stereotyping, it contains numerous remarks that still betray a world-view that has become unacceptable to many Latin Americans. For example, "How can we treat the Latin American nations as full partners and allies and, at the same time retain the controls which we consider necessary for our own protection?" (p. 200).
II. Supplementary Readings

A. Anthologies. The collections of readings in this section vary in length and reading level. Most are too difficult for regular assignment to secondary students. However, they are ideal for short reference reading assignments and student research. They may often provide the teacher with ideas and material for inquiry units.

*SS T
Considered by some to be a standard "must", many of its sections are now dated. The readings are long and difficult, but some as those by Gillin and Holmberg are worthwhile.

*SS T
As the title indicates these selections present views of Latin America, land, people, institutions, culture, as seen through the eyes of its most famous writers. This beautifully written book is highly recommended for both teachers and better students.

SS T (ALT)
An older New Left anthology. See Section II B for Annotation.

*SS T
As the title indicates, these books focus on contemporary problems and issues. Each book is divided into two sections: the first, an introduction and overview which not only condenses and summarizes information but raises the controversial issues, and the second a collection of usually short readings, grouped according to topics. The selection of both topics and readings indicates a concern for both controversy and balance.

*SS T
This collection of papers and monographs, subtitled "A Reader in the Social Anthropology of Middle and South America and the Caribbean", is designed primarily for scholars, but contains much that will be of use and interest to teachers. Special emphasis is placed on rural and agrarian areas and on changes in native cultures. Sections include delineation of cultural entities, land agriculture and economics, social organization, and views of the world.
An anthology of current New Left thought and analysis. For complete annotation, see entry under Section 11 E.

Nine leading Latin Americanists have contributed lengthy articles on the theme of the title as reflected in various groups in Latin American society, the peasant, the military, the student, etc. Of special interest is a comparative study of Japan and Latin America. Difficult reading and not as useful in a high school class as Veliz's collection on a similar theme.

A shortened version of the following item. Note its low cost.

Keen, Benjamin, ed. Readings in Latin American Civilization, 1492 To the Present 2nd edition, Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1967. 533 pp. paperback $5.25
Probably the best collection of readings on Latin America and certainly the most popular at the college level. It contains something for everyone, from the Pre-Columbian period to the present. An absolute must on the classroom or teacher's reference shelf.

A collection of articles and research studies on the following topics: (1) Marriage and the family; (2) Religion and the Church; (3) Education; (4) Government and Politics; (5) Urbanization and Ecology; (6) Status and Stratification; (7) Race Relations; (8) Locality Groupings; (9) Social Change. Excellent introduction. Some of the material is dated, but much of it is very useful for teacher preparation and student research on these topics. Several readings contain illustrative vignettes suitable for classroom use.

The publisher claims that this book "is not only the first study of Latin American elites, but is also the first comprehensive sociological study of Latin America." The essential concern is development-social economic, and political. The underlying assumption is that an indispensable factor of development is an elite motivated toward modernizing its nation. The essays in this book have been written by a variety of authors, and they deal with very diverse aspects of the relationship of elites to development. The calibre of the elite plays an important part in the nature of the development process, and for this reason the section of education and elite formation is particularly good. Most of the essays are quite sophisticated, and must be used with care by the high school student.

(Everett Egginton)

Four Latin Americanists (Tannenbaum, Silvert, Carlson and Matthews) contribute lengthy essays aimed at understanding the changes taking place in Latin America. Although much of the material is dated, background information is accurate and useful.

This extremely interesting and useful collection of readings was sponsored by AHA, NCSS, and Phi Delta Kappa. It contains excerpts from 56 high school textbooks from 31 countries on 12 topics in U. S. History. Especially pertinent are sections on the Monroe Doctrine, Westward Expansion, Overseas Expansion, and Recent International Events. Textbooks from seven Latin American countries, including Cuba, are used.

Petras, James and Maurice Zeitlin, eds. Latin America: Reform or Revolution? A Reader, Greenwich, Fawcett, 1968. 511 pp. Index paperback $1.25

See full annotation in Section 11 E.

A "problems approach" to Latin American History. Twelve "guest" editors develop readings around such problems as the impact of Spanish culture on the indigenous population, the death of Brazilian slavery, Peronism as a Rightist reaction to social problems, the Cuban Revolution as Leftist reaction, etc.

Useful ideas and materials for the teacher and a good source for student research.

Intended for use with the author's text (Section I), it contains about 100 pages on Latin America. Readings are short, highly readable, and interesting.
Latine America's population growth, the highest rate in the world, is the subject of these ten studies. Articles are gathered under three general headings: Facts, Problems, Solutions. Very useful for both teachers, and students doing research on this problem.

There are ten essays, and an introduction, which deal with various obstacles to development in Latin America. The authors agree on some essential points, such as the inadequacy of the Western model of development for Latin America, and disagree on other points, such as the role of the middle class in the modernization process. Change is analyzed in its social, economic and political perspectives by all the authors; however, each author has a central theme dealing with obstacles to change in one of these areas.
Some of the essays appear to be a bit difficult for secondary school students. However, others, if utilized with sufficient background, could be very useful. (Everett Egginton)

Special Series

A very useful series of paperback anthologies on specific problems or issues in Latin American History is the continuing series by Alfred A. Knopf, Borzoi Books on Latin America, General Editor Lewis B. Hanke. While designed for college students, a few of the subjects lend themselves to reading and student research at the high school level for superior students. Some of the more useful titles are:

Bernstein, Marvin D., ed. Foreign Investment in Latin America: Cases and Attitudes

Burns, E. Bradford, ed. A Documentary History of Brazil

Dozer, Donald Marquand, ed. The Monroe Doctrine: Its Modern Significance

Graham, Richard, ed. A Century of Brazilian History Since 1865

Hamil, Hugh M., ed. Dictatorship in Spanish America
Hanke, Lewis, ed. Do the Americas Have a Common History?

Humphres, R. A. and John Lynch, eds. The Origin of the Latin American Revolutions, 1806-1826

Pike, Frederick B., ed. The Conflict Between Church and State in Latin America

Ross, Stanley R., ed. Is the Mexican Revolution Dead?

Smith, Robert Freeman, ed. Background to Revolution: The Development of Modern Cuba

Smith, T. Lynn, ed. Agrarian Reform in Latin America
B. Literature, Fiction and First-Hand Accounts.

Humorous and moving novel of a love affair between an Arab restauranteur and his mulatto cook. A glimpse of the social and sexual customs of a small Brazilian town of the 1920's, torn by change. First Brazilian novel to achieve best seller status in the U. S.

Alegría Ciro. The Golden Serpent, trans. by Harriet de Onís, New York, New American Library (Signet), 1963. 190 pp. paperback $.60
An exciting and tender novel of the cholos of rural Peru, the book was one of the first literary attempts to describe the people and culture of these backlands. Lima is mentioned as the city known only to the back country people for two reasons -- "it's where they change the government and it's there they have the biggest jail." Descriptions of the mountains and the river, sketches of people (The Outlaw) and customs (Coca), would make excellent vignettes to spark class discussion, or inquiry.

Asturias, Miguel Angel. El Señor Presidente, trans. by Frances Partridge, New York, Antheneum, 1963. 287 pp. $5.00
The author, a Guatemalan, has received the Nobel Prize for his novels of social and political protest. This story is an excellent and terrifying portrayal of life under an oppressive Central American dictatorship, reportedly that of President Cabrera of Guatemala.

Azañela, Mariano. The Underdogs, trans. by E. Munguía, Jr., New York, New American Library (Signet), 1962. 149 pp. paperback $.75
The first and one of the best novels of the Mexican Revolution. Realistic. Student interest is usually high. See also the same author's Two Novels of Mexico: The Flies: The Bosses, trans. by Lesley Byrd Simpson, Berkeley, University of California Press, 1961. 194 pp. $1.25

A well written highly readable essay surveying the development of Latin American culture. It includes an excellent brief bibliography of titles in English translation. Essential reading for teachers.

Da Cunha, Euclides. Rebellion in the Backlands (Os Sertões), trans. by Samuel Putnam, Chicago, University of Chicago Press (Phoenix), 1944. 532 pp. Glossary, index. paperback (P22) $2.95
It has been called "Brazil's Greatest Book." Carlton Beals places it "Among the great powerful books of universal literature. Fully the peer of Tolstoy's WAR AND PEACE." It is difficult reading but well worth the effort. The questions raised by the work are of universal significance and so it has classroom utility.

First hand account of Cortez' conquest of Mexico, told by a soldier in the expedition intent on setting the record straight (he disagreed with Cortez' official chroniclers). Fascinating adventure reading. See also the version edited by Shirley Glubok in Section II D, The Fall of the Aztecs.

Garcia Marquez, Gabriel. One Hundred Years of Solitude, trans. by Gregory Rabassa, New York, Harper & Row, 1970. 422 pp. $7.95

Hailed as one of the best books from Latin America in recent years, this novel was a best seller in both Latin America and Europe. The translation is especially vivid and readable. While it describes the rise and fall of the fictitious town of Macondo through the history of one family, it has been called a novel of great social and historical importance. Saturday Review said of it, "Macondo may be regarded as a microcosm of the development of much of the Latin American continent: a strange, pristine, fecund, doomed land....." For the teacher or the "mature" student.

The somewhat inaccurate but thoroughly engrossing narrative history of the Incas as told by Garcilaso de la Vega whose father was a Spanish conquistador and whose Indian mother was of royal Inca blood. Notes correct or explain the chronicler's statements. This edition is made especially valuable by the many primitive and forceful drawings of Guaman Poma de Ayala (Suggested by George Mayer).

This work on the Mexican Revolution is important in that it conveys the spirit of the leaders of the movement as seen by one of their followers. The main character is the author himself (who served under Pancho Villa) who takes the reader on a detailed, amusing and well-written tour of the revolution that many have called the most significant of our time. (George Mayer)

A fierce, bitter and depressing novel of the oppression of an Ecuadorian Indian community at the hands of a greedy landlord, indifferent Church and brutally repressive government. In the background is the shadow of "development" by U.S. interests. A classic, and very strong stuff. For the "mature" student.
AS AS/SS T Jesus, Carolina Maria de. Child of the Dark, trans. by David St. Clair, New York, New American Library (Signet), 1962. 159 pp. paperback (T3565) $ .75

Diary of a young mother living in a Rio slum. Blunt, powerful commentary on the culture of poverty by an unwilling victim. It is unique in that the author displays at times an almost middle class revulsion at her surroundings.

Tragic account by Aztec chroniclers of the Spanish conquest. Many line drawing illustrations based on Aztec pictures and simple, eloquent text make this a highly recommended book. The 30 page introduction by the editor provides a short but adequate background on Aztec civilization but the reading level is higher than the text itself.

This book is the result of an extended photographic and information gathering tour of Cuba (14 weeks) in 1965. It contains not only Lockwood's impressions and interviews with Cubans, his excellent photographs, but also transcript of several lengthy personal interviews with Fidel Castro. Especially interesting are photographs and interviews with political prisoners.

This stands with Azuela's The Underdogs and Guzman's The Eagle and the Serpent as novels which should be placed extremely high as important works of Mexican literature. This work, which was the first winner of the Mexican National Award in literature can be enjoyed for both its historical and sociological import as well as its beauty as an example of literature. The story of a once proud tribe of Indians now reduced to the lower class of their own land is exquisitely though simply illustrated by Diego Rivera. (George Mayer)

Said by some to be Brazil's greatest novel by its greatest writer, this is the poignant and tender story of Dom Casmurro and his childhood love, which passes through adolescence and adult marriage to a tragic conclusion. Unforgettable.
A classic of historical literature. Shortened to a single volume paperback for easy and exciting reading.

Although by title seemingly a book for a literature class, it is in reality a most effective means of conveying to the student the basic attitudes in Latin America justice, and also ideas. Enjoyable and easily read. (George Mayer)
C. Specialized Subjects: Biography, Foreign Policy, Country and Group Studies.

Biographic sketches of twelve Latin American political leaders, including Vargas, Paron, Batlle, Figueres, Betancourt and Castro. Author's philosophy appears to favor moderate democratic leaders who can institute sweeping economic and social reforms as an alternative to right and left-wing totalitarianism.

This small book is one of a series produced by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools (NCA) Foreign Relations Project. Reading level of the book is low enough to be used widely. The book is a standard text in summary form. Each chapter concludes with some rather provocative inquiry questions which could generate good discussion. The content is objective, but dated.

Changing Latin America, Middletown Connecticut, American Education Publications, 1966, 47 pp. Maps, illustrations, pamphlet $0.30
Designed for the average secondary student. It is not a survey but consists of topically organized case studies on contemporary Latin America. Case studies combined with public issue type discussion questions should maintain a high level of student interest.

Lewis, Oscar. Five Families, New York, New American Library (Mentor), 1959, 318 pp, paperback $0.95
Detailed study of five days in the lives of five families in an anthropological case study approach to the culture of poverty. Frank, absorbing, depressing. See also The Children of Sanchez: Autobiography of a Mexican Family, New York, Random House (Vintage), 1961, $2.95 and La Vida: A Puerto Rican Family in the Culture of Poverty San Juan and New York, New York, Random House (Vintage), 1968, $2.95, by the same author.

A brief chronological survey of U.S. policy in Latin America. Objective enough to correct the usual biases present in many secondary level texts. The book is a good choice for text in a course on U.S.-Latin American relations and an invaluable reference complement to any secondary course on Latin America in general.
Story of the first semi-successful guerrilla war fought against U.S. forces supporting a pro-U.S. regime (Nicaragua, 1926-31). Exciting reading for students interested in this sort of thing. Thoroughly researched, with notes, but easy to read. A look in depth at a case study of one aspect of our Latin American policy.

Included here because it is one of the best, recent books on the Cuban Revolution. A well written, tightly organized book examining the established trends in Cuban history which the author believes are the major causes of the revolution and the turn to Marxism. See also books in the New Left section.

One of the best and most readable brief introductions to the history of Mexico.

An anthropological-historical approach to the people and culture of Mexico and Guatemala. Interesting and very readable.

Not only the best book on Zapata so far and one of the best on the Mexican Revolution, but one of the best recent books on any aspect of Latin America. Highly readable.
D. Books on Special Interest Because of Visual Content.

The books in this section lend themselves to visually stimulated inquiry and class discussion, especially in classes of below level readers. They were selected mainly for the quality, interest and usefulness of their illustrations. However, many also contain textual material that is both readable and pertinent.

Berger, Josef, in consultation with Lawrence C. Wroth and the Editors of American Heritage, Discoverers of the New World, New York, American Heritage, 1960. 153 pp. Illustrations, maps, bibliography, index. $5.95
This book, and two others in this series - Cortes, and Pizarro - is written in a style that can be read and appreciated by those from sixth grade reading level up. Interesting reading, beautiful color and black-and-white historical illustrations make these books valuable in classes of non-academic students.

Bernal, Ignacio (introduction), Mexican Wall Paintings of the Maya and Aztec Periods, New York, New American Library (Mentor-UNESCO Art Book), 1963. 24 pp. 28 color plates. Bibliography. $.95
Close-up, detailed color photographs, mostly of the Bonampak murals.

Similar to the book by Berger, above. Slightly higher reading level.

An unsurpassed visual documentary on the Mexican Revolution. The striking black-and-white photographs and captions carry the reader along in an understandable and moving historical photo-essay. Most highly recommended for all levels.

Scholarly, archeological text (not suitable for some students) but over 250 beautiful illustrations, many in color. Useful as a source of material for teacher-produced inquiry materials.

Similar to the work by Bushnell but more comprehensive and more useful.
Coe, Michael D. America's First Civilization: Discovering the Olmec. New York, American Heritage, 1968. 159 pp. Illustrations, maps, chronology, bibliography, index. $4.95
This is a fascinating and beautiful book about one of the world's few "pristine" civilizations. The text, written for the non-scholarly but adult reader stresses the "why" and "how" of the mysteries surrounding the Olmec. The photographs, drawings, diagrams and maps are all outstanding.

Globok, Shirley, ed. The Fall of the Aztecs: Illustrations by the Conquered Text by the Conquerors (illustrations selected and adapted by Leslie Tillet). New York, St. Martin's Press, 1965. 114 pp. Illustrations. $5.95
This unusual book apparently intended for young readers (reading level, grades 7-9), combines the much condensed and simplified text of Bernal Diaz, with sixty illustrations based on pictures drawn by Indian artist-scribes. The result is a striking juxtaposition of two eye witness accounts of the conquest. See also Leon-Portilla. The Broken Spears, Section II, B.

Globok, Shirley, ed. The Fall of the Incas, New York, Macmillan, 1967. 113 pp. Illustrations. $5.95
Similar to the book above. Text is from two accounts, one by the Inca Garcilaso de la Vega, the other by Pedro Pizarro. Pictures are by the Indian artist, Felipe Guaman Poma de Ayala. See also Leon-Portilla. The Incas, Section II, B.

Similar to other books in this series by Berger and Blacker, above.

Beautiful photographs, illustrations, diagrams. The text is interesting and very readable. This is the most useful single book in this subject for the classroom, in the editor's opinion. Good source for teacher-produced inquiry materials.

Outstanding collections and "essays" of dramatic photographs. Text is also useful. See full annotation in Section II B.

Extremely optimistic (and in that, somewhat unrealistic) photographs and text interpretation of progress in Puerto Rico.
Life World Library Series

The books on Latin America from this series provide excellent studies of individual countries and regional groupings. The lavish color and black-and-white photographs, maps and diagrams that make up a sizable portion of each book are outstanding. In addition, the accompanying text is readable and interesting. Most of the authors are prominent Latin Americanists and while the books are occasionally used at the college level, they are ideally suited for use at the secondary level where they can be easily read by most students and appreciated for their superb illustrations by all. They are strongly recommended for classroom or library use, browsing, or as interest stimulators.

Each book contains sections on historical backgrounds and current problems as well as studies of geography, culture, customs, rural and urban life. All are indexed and most contain a short but very good bibliography. Approximately 160 pages each. $6.60 each. Recommended for all levels.

Bishop, Elizabeth. Brazil, 1967

MacEoin, Gary. Colombia and Venezuela and the Guianas, 1965
E. Sources for a Revisionist Interpretation of Latin America. Although many titles in this section are rated as SS, portions and excerpts can be easily read by students reading at 12th grade level. The relative scarcity of materials in this category rated AS or AS/SS necessitates this practice if balance is to be achieved in the secondary level course. Note: all items are designed (ALT).

As indicated by the title this is a "view from the other side". It is a non-scholarly, brief survey of the development of U.S. - Latin American relations as seen from a Latin American nationalist perspective. A little on the polemic side, it nevertheless offers a valuable balance to the traditional U.S. - Latin American relations. There are two appendices, the first summarizing the principal agreements adopted during the eighty year history of the meetings of the Inter-American System; the second is a resume of the resolutions passed at the Latin American Solidarity Conference, Havana, 1967. The chronologically arranged chapters are fully annotated; sources cited being newspapers, books and documents from both Latin America and the U.S. The most frequently cited U.S. sources are standard items such as the New York Times, and books by Lieuwen, Gerassi, and Meecham.

-SS-T Fanon, Franz, The Wretched of the Earth, New York, Grove, 1968. 316 pp. paperback $1.25

A socio-psychological study of the destructive relationship between the oppressed peoples of the "Third World" and their oppressors. "It is a brilliant examination of the role of violence in effecting historical change which has served leaders of emerging nations as a veritable handbook of revolutionary practice and social reorganization."--the publisher. While there are only a few specific references to Latin America, most of the material is considered pertinent to it by many in the New Left.

Latin America was never feudal, but always part of the worldwide capitalist system. Capitalism has caused and continues to maintain Latin America's underdevelopment. This is the author's thesis which he supports with detailed case studies and data from U.N. sources. Disturbing but essential reading.

Now dated, at one time this was almost the only source of left-nationalist opinion on Latin America in the U.S. "The authors include Latin Americans, North Americans, and Europeans..... What they say is often well reasoned, and represents an opinion
A documentary-style description of repressive terror and rebellion in Guatemala since the CIA-supported overthrow of the Arbenz regime in 1954. The hand of the U.S. is writ large in this study which begins with reference to the terrorist assassination of the chief of the U.S. military mission. The appendices consists of primary documents from the revolutionary movement, the most interesting being Father Thomas Melville's (a Maryknoll Missionary) "Revolution is Guatemala's Only Solution." The subject is too specific for the average student but there is a great deal of information here that could be excerpted or suggested for research.

An excellent little book which can be used to introduce students to the basic rationale and principles of guerrilla warfare. Easy to read, especially the first section, and to the point; it says many things usually overlooked or ignored. An example in the first chapter is Che's admonition that guerrilla war cannot be promoted in a country with a democratic government or even the appearance of one, because peaceful means of reform have not yet been exhausted.

Guevara, Che. Reminiscences of the Cuban Revolutionary War, trans. by Victoria Ortiz. New York, Monthly Review (Grove), 1968. 287 pp. paperback (B-177) $1.25
A good companion to the preceding book as it illustrates in narrative adventure form the principles of guerrilla war. Some of the episodes could be used as inquiry exercises in developing a functional understanding of those ideas.

This easily readable pamphlet by the author of The Other America and The Accidental Century, says much the same thing that is said by Frank, but Harrington says it more simply and understandably and without Frank's Marxist determinism. He maintains that America's unwitting maintenance of third world underdevelopment is neither inevitable nor essential to the U.S., and he offers positive steps for correction.

This book and that by Petras and Zeitlin below, are the best anthologies of current New Left thought and analysis of Latin America's present social, political and economic problems. Some of the articles are simple enough and interesting enough to be read by above average and superior students. Both books are essential to the classroom and the teacher's reference shelves.

SS T

This book is fast becoming a standard reference for revisionist scholars working on explanations of U.S. foreign policy. It is heavily researched and overly weighted with statistical data and footnotes. For this reason, Magdorff's interpretations are very difficult to ignore and warrant careful study by teachers of U.S. foreign policy. Much of it is relevant to Latin American Studies. The work is very similar to that of the French Economist, Pierre Jalee, The Pillage of the Third World, New York, Monthly Review, 1968.

AS/SS T

Memmi, Albert. The Colonizer and the Colonized, Boston, Beacon Press, 1969, 153 pp. paperback $1.95
This is a portrait of the relationship between the colonizer and the colonized, or the oppressor and the oppressed. The book is filled with universal implication in that it deals with relationships between people, even though it was written specifically to describe the relationship between the French and the Tunisians. Memmi has described relationships which everyone will recognize, but rarely think about until they are made to see them.

The colonizer-colonized relationship which Memmi describes so well exists between all groups in Latin America, and it provides an excellent starting point for an analytical study of the Latin American people. (Everett Egginton)

Editor's Note. This book is similar in many ways to Franz Fanon's The Wretched of the Earth. It is somewhat difficult reading (conceptually) but is included here with the AS/SS rating, because it was used so successfully by Mr. Egginton with his 12th grade class.

Petras, James and Maurice Zeitlin, eds. Latin America: Reform or Revolution? A Reader, New York, Fawcett (Premier), 1968. 511 pp. Index. paperback $1.25
Similar to the anthology by Horowitz, Castro, and Gerassi, above. There is some overlap but much of the material is complimentary.
Not really "New Left", this book is included here because it deals in the same way with the same sort of topic, in this case a sensational but thorough "expose" of the CIA. Included are purported materials and accounts of the Bay of Pigs (pages 6-96), the Guatemalan Affair (pages 177-197), and the Missile Crisis (pages 310-323) as gathered by the authors.

One of the best and most thorough early accounts of the Cuban Revolution and the deterioration of Cuban-U.S. relations, leading to the Bay of Pigs invasion. Heavily researched and footnoted, numerous documents and detailed chronologies are appended. The text itself is filled with quotations from personal interviews and excerpts from newspapers, magazines, and official sources.
III. Inquiry Studies

While an experienced inquiry-oriented teacher will make use of almost any form of material, even texts, to develop inquiry units, some studies have been specifically designed for this purpose.

This is the most suitable work in the D.C. Heath Series on Problems in Latin American Civilization for the classroom on the high school level. This work is an important source for the teacher leading to an understanding how the Spanish changed and/or adapted to what they found as well as for the student doing research into this relatively specialized area. The fifteen different readings provide a brief synopsis of the more specialized areas in Indian labor together with differences of opinion which serve to create controversy while stimulating thought at the same time. (George Mayer).
Editors Note. This D. C. Heath series is edited by Edwin Lieuwen, and is intended primarily for use at the college level.

Unit 2 of the book, pages 95-170, deals with race relations in Brazil, examining the historical development of Brazilian society and institutions to the present, with emphasis on the current scene. This is an example of convergent or predetermined inquiry which usually involves detailed behavioral objectives. When using this kind of material, the teacher must follow fairly detailed and specific procedures. It is necessary to make continuous use of both the teacher's manual and the kit of multimedia components. These latter are not merely illustrative; they form part of the lesson.

AS/SS

Study 6, "Cuba - The Castro Decade. What Challenge to the Americas?" pp. 61-72, consists of a relatively objective review of developments in Cuba since the revolution and Cuba's international impact. Sources frequently quoted or relied upon include Juan de Onis, Tad Szulc and Herbert Matthews of the New York Times, and Paul Settel of the National Review. Inquiry-type questions accompany the article and a helpful teacher's manual contains questions, research projects, simulation, etc.

This unit, one of the experimental inquiry series by the Amherst Project, examines U.S. Policy toward Latin America as a study in contrasts between publicly stated ideals, and actual realities in the field. Made up almost entirely of short, edited primary source readings, the students are asked to grapple with overarching questions such as the uses of history, the nature of power, the bases of national policy, the clash of differing cultures and the morality and efficacy of force in international problem solving. The heart of the unit consists of depth studies of U.S. intervention in the Dominican Republic, Haiti, and Nicaragua. The unit comes with a teacher's manual and behavioral objectives. Although intended for college preparatory students, strategies for using the material with students of average ability are included. This unit will be published commercially by Addison-Wesley as part of the series, probably in 1971 or 1972.

Simulation

Simple, easy to understand introduction to the use of simulation in teaching social studies. Includes a rationale, methodology, and examples. Ends with an excellent listing of available simulations and games. Too general by itself but perfect in combination with the too detailed Scott book which follows.

General description of methods of setting up a simulation of government and political systems to deal with problems of development in hypothetical underdeveloped countries. Descriptions of specific simulation experiments on Brazil, another on Chile. Much too complex and sophisticated for direct application to a high school situation but nevertheless useful, even essential in planning a simpler simulation for high school. Contains a great deal of practical advice.
IV. Spanish Language Materials

Reviewer: Mr. Everett Egginton, Teacher, Latin American Civilization, Jamesville-Dewitt High School, Dewitt, New York.

There are two main sections in this book. The first contains prose by Latin American and Spanish authors; and the second contains poetry. The subject matter of the prose and the poetry is varied, and the resourceful teacher will find material for inclusion in a wide variety of topics or for the development of several important concepts.
The vocabulary is presented page by page, which facilitates the reading process for those with a more limited Spanish vocabulary.
Particularly useful are the prose and poetry which deal with the people and their relationship to their environment. A good example is Jose Marti's "Versos sencillos":

\begin{verbatim}
Yo soy un hombre sincero
de donde crece la palma
y antes de morirme, quiero escribir mis versos del alma.
\end{verbatim}

This book is inadequate for all but the very beginning student of Latin American affairs. The Spanish, however, is for the advanced intermediate student, most of whom would have already received an introduction to Latin American affairs which would make this book almost worthless. The approach is topical, but the analyses are much too superficial for the needs of a serious student of Latin American affairs, or even a student with a serious interest in Latin America.

An admirable collection of Latin American Revolutionary poems which, with but two exceptions, are here published for the first time. The poems are printed in both the original Spanish form, and are followed by an English translation. The translations are not as accurate as they could be, and they certainly do not approach the power and the beauty of the poetry in its original form. This book attempts to penetrate the revolutionary mind of the Latin American malcontent.

An anthology of essays appropriate for students in intermediate and advanced levels of Spanish who are interested in some phase of Hispanic culture and civilization. There are twelve separate essays representing a wide variety of viewpoints on contemporary issues. Most of the essays were taken from Latin American journals and were written by Latin American writers eminent in their particular fields. The range of topics is very broad, and its purpose is not to provide an extensive panorama of Latin American values and ideals. Rather, the essays can very effectively be used as supplementary readings in developing specific concepts germane to Latin American studies.

The primary objective is to provide the interested reader with an overview of Latin American culture. The means utilized is to center on a representative figure of each different epoch. By studying the writings of the individual chosen, the reader will get an idea of the cultural patterns of the epoch. The book is divided into three principal parts: (1) pre-19th century, (2) 19th century, and (3) 20th century. Each chapter contains a great deal of original writing. Most selections are very useful for the inquiry approach. The data provided lends itself to conceptual organization, and it provides the student the opportunity to generalize from the information. Advanced level.

A survey of literature of the Spanish-speaking countries of the world, arranged according to geography. The intent is through an analysis of their literature. For each region, and each country, there is a relatively extensive introduction which outlines the important characteristics of the region's culture.

The level of Spanish is intended for the advanced secondary school student or the middle level college student.

The book consists of a series of essays by well known Latin Americans who have made contributions in a variety of fields. Each of the essays is an analysis of a general theme which could have universal application. It is clear, however, that each of the authors had Latin America in mind in writing of democracy and dictatorship, social change, and freedom and the human personality.

The selections are characterized by diversity, ranging from historical factual interpretations to subjective analytical interpretations. The four categories included are: (1) The impact of the mother country, (2) Democracy and dictatorship, (3) Analysis and evaluation, (4) Freedom and personality.

Loprete, Carlos A. and Dorothy McMahon. IberoAmerica: Síntesis De Su Civilization, New York, Charles Scribner's Sons, 1965. 369 pp. Illustrations, vocabulary, index. The material is topically presented, and the topics are chronologically arranged. Each chapter is a topic, and at the end of each is a series of questions which test for retention of factual information. Since the pedagogical value of factual retention is now questioned, the orientation of this book must likewise be questioned.

As a source book, it has some value, but the student of Latin American affairs can do much better if he is looking for data to support a tentative generalization. This book doesn't lend itself to inquiry.

Tarn, Nathaniel, ed. Con Cuba, New York, Grossman Publishers, 1969. An anthology of Cuban poetry of the last sixty years. The order is by the author's age beginning with Felix Pita Rodriguez, born in 1909 and ending with Eduardo Lobo, born in 1945. The collection is not intended to be fully representative, and a number of good writers have been omitted. Much of the poetry can be used to develop concepts relevant to the social sciences. For example the poem "Porque amamos la vida" by Felix Pita Rodriguez begins, "Porque amamos la vida, podemos pelear hasta la muerte!" (Because we love life, we can fight to the death!) This is the essence of revolutionary thought. Much that is vital to Cuban life is expressed in the poetry represented in this book.
V. Minority Studies

The term minority is used in a general and commonly used (in U.S. educational circles) sense. It is not intended to be defined literally. In the case of Puerto Rican and Mexican Studies it refers to studies emphasizing the culture historic background and problems of the two most prominent Latin American minorities in the United States. The Latin American Indian may not always be in a minority in every region or country but is reserved for special study in this section because he is so frequently ignored both by the literature and by some of the societies of Latin America. As an example there are very few studies of contemporary Indians suitable for general or secondary reading (the editor is aware that this is equally true for United States Indians as well). The Black experience focuses on the institution of slavery, and both Indian and Black studies merge in a study of race and race relations.

A. Puerto Rican Studies. This is one of the most neglected areas at the high school level. There are very few really good materials.

AS/SS T

This brief, easily read pamphlet examines only the unfavorable aspects of the U.S.-Puerto Rican relationship. The text is liberally sprinkled with statistics, excerpts, and quotations. It could be used to raise some issues usually overlooked in optimistic texts and provide, if used in combination with such a text, some balance to a course on Puerto Rican studies.

Brau, Maria M., Island in the Crossroads: The History of Puerto Rico. Garden City, Doubleday (Zenith), 1968. 166 pp. Illustrations, index, paperback $1.45

Brief, readable survey of Puerto Rican history. On the bland side, it avoids controversy. Useful, mainly because there is nothing better yet of its kind, but should be used with something like Patricia Bell (above) or Gordon Lewis (below) for balance.

SS T

A critical analysis of U.S.-Puerto Rican relations. The author presents, among many other things, a strong argument for Puerto Rican independence, a needed corrective to the usual optimism about Puerto Rican "progress" within commonwealth status. "By far the best general survey of Puerto Rico ever written..." -American Historical Review. "Probably the most important book ever written about Puerto Rico, and one of the most significant studies of the whole Caribbean area." Hispanic American Report. Although the reading is college level, this book has been successfully used in a class of "average" students by assigning only very short sections.
Like Icaza's The Villagers, this is a very bitter, depressing book with the uncommon value of stark, unwhitewashed, unsoftened realism. Unlike The Villagers, La Vida is not fiction. Lewis' famous technique of allowing the personalities in the book to speak for themselves adds to the realism of this powerful documentary study. For the teacher or the more "mature" student.

B. Mexican-American Studies. This section is included for several reasons: (1) Mexican-Americans make up the second largest minority group in the U.S.; they are the largest Latin group, (2) The histories of the U.S. and Mexico are interrelated and the history of our own Southwest was Latin American prior to 1848, and (3) Newly awakened school interest in Chicano Studies, especially in the West, serves as a precedent for the just beginning interest in Puerto Rican studies in New York.

AS/SS
For almost a year, this has been an underground best-seller, but it remains largely unknown to teachers outside the field of anthropology. A Los Angeles Times review called it "An extra-ordinary book...a remarkable experience, a jarring and total emersion into a wholly alien but irresistibly fascinating sensibility. This is no ethnology text, with charts and foot-notes, but the happenings themselves, told with such immediacy, honesty and clarity that the reader becomes a part of them..." Some reviewers have predicted that it will become a classic, comparable to Aldous Huxley's Doors of Perception. Not for the "average" class. But some students will really appreciate it. Use requires much teacher discretion and sophistication. Should be read by teacher first before judgment is made regarding its use.

Autobiography of a hypothetical representative Chamula Indian, Juan Perez Jolote, "told" by the Mexican Anthropologist Ricardo Pozas Arciniegas. Easy reading but rather dry and uneventful, as must be the lives of the people described.

Thorough, detailed but not overly scholarly study of this pre-Columbian civilisation; numerous maps, drawings, diagrams make this book especially useful. Similar books by the same author include Realm of the Incas, and World of the Maya.

Three other books by the same author were prepared especially for younger readers (grade 7 reading level). The Sun Kingdom of the Aztecs (1958), Maya, Land of the Turkey and the Deer (1960), The Incas, People of the Sun (1961), by World Publishing Co., Cleveland, $3.95 each. They contain a great deal of information presented through the medium of an accurate but fictionalized account of a maturing young boy. They make very interesting reading and are very well illustrated by Alberto Beltran.
Three smaller books on ancient American civilizations are by Barbara Beck: First Book of the Aztecs (1965), First Book of the Maya (1965), and First Book of the Incas (1966), by Franklin Watts, New York, $2.65 each. Reading level is a little lower and the books are quite short (60-80 pages). They offer readable, factual accounts of culture and society and end with a description of the Spanish conquest. They are profusely illustrated with pictures based on Indian art, artifacts, and architecture.

Tannenbaum, in Slave and Citizen, deals with one basic hypothesis, namely that slavery in Latin America was purely an economic condition which had already been in existence many years before the Negro slave, whereas in the United States slavery became a moral and racist issue. The book is filled with data used to prove this hypothesis.

The book lacks organizational structure. There are no chapter divisions, and the author appears to change topics without any apparent logic.

The summary and conclusion are particularly strong statements. This book would serve as an excellent introduction to a unit on slavery in Latin America.

VI. Materials for the Educationally Disadvantaged Student

Some teachers have successfully used a few of the materials marked AS with classes of students so categorized. Many of the materials, even the most difficult, contain striking descriptions, episodes, vignettes or illustrations which the perceptive teacher can excerpt, adapt or re-write for his students. Finally, the materials in Section II D (Visual Content) and Section VII (Audio Visual) are often ideally suited for use by students with severe reading difficulties.

The three items below are specifically designed for below level readers:

Part of an inquiry series on world studies (Africa, Asia) directed by John Michaelis and Richard Gross. The book is not a survey and does not aim at coverage. Rather it consists of a series of inquiry-type provocative vignettes, photograph essays, readings accompanied by discussion questions designed to raise questions of significance not only for Latin America but for the students own society as well. The approach is multi-disciplinary-geography, history, anthropology, sociology, politics and international relations, even archeology and art. Reading level is 5.0 but the issues are designed for mature students.

Similar in approach and content, but not form, to Latin America by Jamieson. However, only five of the 20 studies deal with Latin America. Fourth and Fifth grade reading levels.

Similar in approach and content, but not form, to Latin America by Jamieson. However, only four of the 20 studies deal with Latin America. Fourth grade reading level.

It should be remembered that student interest has been shown to make a considerable difference in reading "ability" and comprehension. For this reason, Fiction (Section II B) is especially recommended, although in very limited or excerpted form.

The following materials, listed and annotated elsewhere, while not designed specifically for below level readers may be read by them. Some are especially recommended (*). Reading levels are approximately 7th grade.

The seven strips are of uneven quality, the poorest being the Incas and the best the Maya. The latter strips seem to be based on forms of Maya painting and sculpture, rather than the juvenile, simplistic, comic book style so common in "educational" filmstrips. Generally speaking, the series is good, and although the pictures are captioned, provocative questions could lead to inquiry-type discussions. This is especially true of the two Maya strips and the comparison strip. Would be very useful in a class of below level readers.

These films tend to be a bit elementary. They contain short, simple captions which often explain too much that is obvious or could be discovered by the students. However, many of the captions are questions which raise important issues which could involve the students in inquiry-like study or discussions. The set could easily be used as a series of inquiry units for a class of below-level readers.

Photograph and script follow the author's travels through the Hispanic World (13 strips on Latin America). But this is much more than a travelogue. Pictures are uncaptioned and a manual suggests using each strip as an inquiry lesson. Good but brief historical background, unusually good human interest material. Good contrasts between capital cities and Indian villages (Chichicastenango, Otlalteo, etc.). Recommended especially for classes of below level readers, or with tape in Spanish, intermediate or advanced Spanish.

Sound Filmstrips

Masterworks of Mexican Art. Bailey Films, Inc., 1956. Set of six color film strips and six records, 10-11 min. each. Includes brief descriptive manual.

1) Pre-Classic Art
2) Cultures of the Pacific Coast
3) Teotihuacan Civilization
4) Toltec (includes Aztec) Civilization
5) Maya Civilization
6) New Spain to Mexico

Interesting material, mostly artifacts--pottery, sculpture, jewelry.
Probably one of the best collections of this sort of material on filmstrip, but almost entirely on Indian cultures.

Sound Filmstrips

Minorities Have Made America Great. Warren Schloat Productions, Inc., (Prentice-Hall), 1968. Part II $84.00

Part two of this series (six filmstrips) includes two filmstrips on Puerto Ricans and one on Mexican-Americans. Consultant: Ethel J.
Alpenfels, Professor of Anthropology at New York University. Teacher's Manual includes script and small section of discussion topics.

Two strips on Puerto Ricans describe their problems as immigrants, as contrasted with those of older immigrants, and ASPIRA's attempts at self-help. Mexican-Americans has lengthy historical background dating back to discovery and conquest, nothing on problems of prejudice or poverty, but concentrates on efforts to organize farm workers. The last part of the film presents a favorable view of Caesar Chavez and Huelga, culminating in the march on Sacramento.

Sound Filmstrips

Peru Echoes the Inca and Pizarro. Imperial Film Co., Inc., filmstrips and two records. Set of four color $30.00

Using maps, museum pieces, restorations, buildings and country and city scenes, the "story" of Peru's Indian and Spanish colonial heritage is told. Better than the usual sort of travelogue, it could lend itself to inquiry studies on Indian and Spanish culture.

Slides

Sandak, Inc. produces sets of colored slides on the art of Latin America. Individual slides may be ordered at $1.50 each.

Set No. 634 Art of Latin America Since Independence
196 slides $245.00
Set No. 665 Ancient Mexico
30 slides $ 37.50
Slides

Set No. 666 Colonial Mexico 30 slides $37.50
Set No. 667 Modern Mexico 30 slides $37.50
Set No. 668 Combination of Sets 665, 90 slides $112.50

Each slide is mounted in plastic frames on which is printed the picture's title, artist, and date. Set No. 634 (the only one reviewed) is exclusively of paintings; many, but not all, would be useful because of historical, as well as of artistic significance.

See also two filmstrip entries in Part F of this section, classified as mixed media because they involve the integrated use of filmstrips, sound and readings.

The following sound filmstrip set was not reviewed but appears to be quite promising and so was included. The description is by the distributor, Social Studies School Service (10,000 Culver Boulevard, Culver City, California 90230). It might be possible, by employing a good variety of integrated readings from Section II, A, B, and E, to build an entire course around this concept and inquiry oriented framework. The Director, Dr. John J. Johnson is a prominent Latin Americanist.

The Latin Americans. A series of sound filmstrips which present various themes which have shaped Latin American history—social, political, and economic development, and the relationship of Latin American nations to the rest of the world. Inquiry and discovery techniques are used to encourage the student to view other societies from the standpoint of their values rather than his own—to view Latin America not as an isolated region but as part of the mainstream of world history. The visual materials have been obtained from leading historic archives, Latin American governments and businesses, and live photography on location in Latin America. The general director of the program is Dr. John J. Johnson, Chairman of Latin American Studies at Sanford University. Each self-contained lesson consists of two filmstrips, a banded record and a teacher's manual. Multi-media Productions.

MM901 Lands of Contrast. An overview of the diversity of Latin America. $20.00
MM902 Pre-Columbian Americans. Migration from Asia and the development of societies in the Americas, including the Mayas, the Aztecs and the Incas. $20.00
MM903 The New People. Impact of Europeans and Africans on the Indian populations from conquest through colonization and later immigrations. $20.00
MM904 Changing Societies. A view of social change from stratification of colonial society and the emergence of an oligarchy through recent social development. $20.00
Religion and the Church. Religion as a social force, including the role of the Roman Church and the influence of pagan beliefs.

The Political Traditions. The heritage of authoritarianism and personalism; increased regionalism following independence and emergence of the caudillos.

The People and Their Politics. A continuation of political trends and traditions through the nationalism of the 20th century and the radicalism and dissent of the past 25 years.

The Role of the Military. The military's changing role from colonial times to the present; the military as a political force and its impact on society.

The Traditional Economy. An historic overview of the economy of Latin America with attention to transportation and other limiting factors.

Economic Development. Post-independence economic liberalism; the impact of industrialization on society.

Village and Metropolis. Typical communities of Latin America; urbanization as an accompaniment to industrialization.

Education and Culture. Latin American contributions to art and architecture, music and literatures from pre-Columbian to modern times; educational demands of an industrial age.

Nationalism and National Integration. The emergence of nationalism; problems of integrating peoples with many ethnic and linguistic backgrounds.

Latin America and the World. International relations among the nations of Latin America, and with other nations, especially the U.S.; U.S. foreign policy as it relates to Latin America.
B. Posters, Photographic Prints and Wall Maps.

Wall Posters
Mexico Series, Sausalito, California, Portal Study Graphics. Eight full color wall posters 26" X 38", illustrate the major regions, costumes, cultures, rites, famous points of interest. Captions and brief descriptions are in simple Spanish. Among the topics included are "Calendario Azteca," "Templo de Kukulcan," and "Universidad de Mexico." Unmounted $24.50, mounted $34.50.

Photographic Prints
Denoyer-Geppert produces a set of 24 large (30" X 21") full color photographic prints on Latin America.

The uses these photographs may be put to, especially in classes of below level readers is described in the following entry. These prints are larger than those of SVE, but are not stiffened, and must be tacked or taped up, or displayed in a frame. Much more than the SVE sets, this set tends more toward landscape, city, and prominent landmark views (which are really magnificent) rather than pictures of people at work (there are a few).

Latin America: 431702-97 with frame $55.00
431702 without frame $42.00

Society for Visual Education, Inc., (a subsidiary of the Singer Company) produces sets of large (18" X 13") full color photographs of Latin America in 12 sets of eight photographs each. On the back of each photograph are printed factual details concerning the picture, discussion topics, questions and activities. Each set $8.00

Many of these photographs lend themselves to inquiry type lessons, especially with non-reading or below level reading students. For example one print shows a Cuban waterfront with men loading sacks of sugar on a Russian ship. As there are no captions, the students must look for clues as to what is in the sacks, what country is the ship from? (the Soviet emblem is on the stack and the ship's name, Kholmsk, is visible). Where is this scene taking place? Why is it important? etc. Write to the company for a complete listing of their "Picture-Story Study Prints."

Wall Maps
Latin America History Series. Denoyer-Geppert, Inc. A series of 16 historical maps, each 44" X 32", with dual text, English and Spanish, edited by Herbert E. Bolton, University of California, Berkeley and by James F. King, also of U.S. Berkeley. Prices for the complete set vary depending on mounting, from $69.25 to $87.50. This is an excellent and useful series in any history oriented course.

Wall Map
Latin America. Denoyer-Geppert, Inc. This is a very large (50" X 70") visual, relief map. It includes political boundaries, place names, transportation, etc. Text in English and Spanish. Map scale 115 miles to the inch. It covers the area from Chicago to Cape Horn. There are large insets of Puerto Rico, the Canal Zone, and major cities. 126761-14 $25.00
C. Records. Folkways-Scholastic Records has a series of quality ethnic music recordings made in Latin America. A partial listing includes the following:

It should be emphasized that this music must be considered folk music in the purest sense. Even the so-called popular music is played by small town bands. Do not expect virtuosity or studio perfection. The Indian music, of course, is real Indian music, so do not expect familiar or "pleasant" (to you) sounds.

The set consists of 33 transparencies, including three base maps (full color relief, relief, and political outline) and 30 overlays which illustrate virtually every geographic statistic for the area - population, race, language, literacy, diet, minerals, manufacturing, transportation, climate, vegetation, crops, etc., etc. Accompanying the transparencies are interleaved sheets containing information, statistical tables, and suggestions for use. The set is packed in a three ring plastic binder. Good quality, but also very expensive, considering the need to purchase two sets - both North and South America - to get Latin America.

*Transparencies

Hammond, Inc., makes the best, most complete, and most detailed transparency maps on Latin America. Each map contains at least four overlays hinged on a plastic frame. The overlays include (1) basic outline map, (2) physical geography in color, (3) place names (countries, rivers, mountains, capes, cities and towns), (4) clear acetate as final overlay for marking.

Transparency Masters

Cities of the Americas: The Outward Thrust. Center for the Teaching of the Americas, 1969. Set of 12 originals (maps and charts) from which may be made both projection transparencies and duplicating masters. $2.00

The set comes packaged with instructions and teaching suggestions. The 12 sheets include outline maps of both North and South America, with and without boundaries, cities 500,000 population - 1,000,000 population, cities over 1,000,000 population, larger urban concentrations, and charts on urbanization.

Transparency Masters

*Latin America. (World Cultures Series) Keuffel * Esser Co., distributed by IST Communications Corp. (6 Spring Street, Clifton Springs, New York 14421). Consultant: Charmel Anderson, Assistant Professor of History of Inter-American University, Puerto Rico. Set consists of over 300 transparency masters in a loose-leaf binder. $85.00

In the editor's judgment, this is undoubtedly the definitive set of transparencies on Latin America currently available. Dozens of concepts and topics are presented, usually in the form of a base transparency and overlays to stimulate inquiry and aid in sequential development. Topics are grouped under headings of Geography, Economy, Society and History, and include many interesting and controversial subjects. Developed transparencies are attractive (multi-colored) and very flexible in their use. One drawback: a diazo transparency processor and developer must be used in order to make the transparencies. One advantage: an unlimited number of copies can be made from the one master set. Write to the distributor for descriptive literature. Highly recommended.

E. Motion Pictures. The following films have been evaluated by Mr. Everett Egginton.

Film: La America del Sur
Color; Running time - 20 minutes; Producer - McGraw Hill; Syracuse University Film Library #2 - 5478

An excellent treatment of the basic concepts relevant to a study of Latin American civilization. They are in intermediate level Spanish language and the subject matter is relevant for all students beginning an analysis of Latin American history or civilization.

The approach is purely conceptual, with data included to develop the following concepts.

1) Social unrest; 2) Communism and democracy and their validity as political forms in Latin America; 3) Latin America in international politics.

The photography and the color are excellent. Highly recommended for Latin American civilisation courses taught in Spanish.

Film: Brazil: Rude Awakening
Black and white; Running time - 54 minutes (two reels); produced by CBS News - McGraw-Hill; Syracuse University Film Library #2 - 5408

1) This is a CBS Reports documentary narrated by Eric Sevareid.

2) Supplies excellent data for the following concepts:
   a. Industrialization
   b. Urbanisation
   c. Inflation
   d. Revolutionary potential
   e. Sectionalism
   f. Latifundismo (present day feudalism)
   g. Castroismo

3) Excellent analysis of causes and consequences of quickening social unrest in what was once a stable country.

4) Contrast between the feudal conditions which exist to a large extent in Latin America, and the affluence of the large industrial centers (Sao Paolo).

5) Excellent use of interviews to demonstrate lack of consensus among the political and student leaders in Brazil.

6) Excellent insight into "reactionary" and "liberal" thought in Brazil.

7) Age group: high school and college.
Film: Early American Civilizations: Maya, Aztec, Inca
Color; Running time - 14 minutes; Producer - Cornett Films; Syracuse University Film Library #2 - 2736

A magnificent though much too brief treatment of the Inca, Aztec and Mayan civilizations. The photography of the ruins is no less than outstanding, and the reconstructed models are very effective means through which the civilizations are brought to life. After viewing this film, one cannot help but to see the tremendous influence the ancient civilizations had on the development of cultural patterns in Latin America.

Some of the sites included in the film are:

1) The ruins of Chichen - Itza; 2) The ruins of Teotihuacan, including the Pyramid of the Sun; 3) The Aztec calendar stone; 4) Inca carvings.

With each visual presentation, there is an explanation of how a contribution had been made. Recommended highly for courses in Latin American Civilization which include a unit on the people of Latin America, or more specifically, a unit on the ancient cultures of Latin America.

Film: Latin America: Its Countries
Black and white; Running time - 26 minutes; Producer - McGraw Hill; Syracuse University Film Library #3 - 5176

1) An overview of the natural regions and countries, with emphasis on contrasts and variety.

2) Basic theme: Latin America is in ferment. Why?

3) Method - a) Presentation of theme; b) Analysis of the Caribbean; c) Analysis of Mexico; d) Analysis of the countries of South America.

4) Negative points - a) Oversimplification of relevant concepts. Example, organization; rich-poor contrast; geographic factors as exclusive cause of phenomena. b) Statement of generalization not adequately supported with data.

5) Age group: junior and senior high school students.

Comments
1. Effectively develops the concept of urbanization and its application to Latin America.
2. Emphasizes the people and their backgrounds, with references to the cultural contributions of the different groups.
3. Provides introduction to the economic problems which plague Latin America, and what is being done in some countries to overcome these problems.
4. Good contrast between modern technological methods of production in some industries with the most primitive forms of production in other areas.
Film: Latin America: Its History (Part II)
(Latin America: Its Countries (Part I))
Black and white; Running time - 33 minutes; Producer - McGraw Hill; Syracuse University Film Library #3 - 5177

1) An overview of historical development in Latin America starting with the ancient Mayan and Incan civilizations and the Spanish conquest.

2) Nation building as it applies to Latin America, with emphasis on the authoritarian governments, plantations and mines, is the central theme.

3) An analysis of the decline of Spanish power and the basic causes for the war of independence is emphasized.

4) Revolutionary potential today in Latin America is analyzed. The problems of land ownership, lack of agricultural sophistication and increasing poverty and illiteracy are brought out.

5) Method - a) Chronological development; b) Analysis of historical events; c) Presentation of factors causing unrest in Latin America today.

Comments
1. Good development of the major concepts of nation building and revolutionary potential.
2. Too much historical data to fully understand the significance of each event presented.
3. Age group: junior and senior high school.

Film: South America: Votes or Violence?
Black and white; Running time - 60 minutes (two reels); Producer - N.E.T. - Indiana University; Syracuse University Film Library #3 - 5916

1) Three case studies are analyzed: Bolivia, Brazil and Chile

2) Each country has witnessed drastic changes of government. The causes for each of the changes are analyzed.

3) The basic question concerns the efficacy of the democratic form of government in Latin America, and whether or not it is feasible for developing nations composed of people with differing backgrounds, socially, economically and politically.

Comments
1. The photography is magnificent, allowing the viewer to almost feel the revolutionary potential. The contrast between poverty and wealth is shown very graphically.
2. The frustrations of trying to provide for the needs of the oppressed classes is demonstrated, and the viewer can understand the growing revolutionary potential.
3. Excellent data is supplied for the following concepts:

   a. Political unrest
   b. Democratization
   c. Latifundismo
   d. Traditionalism - for example, there is an excellent section on Macumba in Brazil which shows good cause for its presence.

4. Age group: high school, college, and adult.

   Film: Sundamerica; Continente de Gran Porvenir
   Color; Running time - 29 minutes; Producer - International Film Bureau - Spanish; Language - Spanish; Syracuse University Film Library #2 - 4571

1) This film is intended for advanced Spanish language students.

2) General treatment of historical and geographic forces which have influenced the development of Latin America:

   a. The Andes
   b. La Conquista
   c. The treatment of the Indian
   d. The role of the Church
   e. The hacienda in Latin America
   f. Paternalistic relations

3) Concepts for which data is supplied:

   a. Industrialization
   b. Paternalism
   c. Assimilation
   d. Social change

4) Basic objectives:

   a. Introduction to "life style" in Latin America
   b. Bases of life style
   c. Influence of geography in developing the life style
   d. Role of education in implementing social change in Latin America
   e. Role of religion in social change in Latin America

Comments
1. Excellent introduction to problems in Latin America.
2. Age group: high school, college and adult.

The following films have been suggested by Mr. Joseph Lombardi, who teaches Latin American Studies at Arlington High School, Poughkeepsie, New York.

   The Ancient New World
   Churchill Films
   $8.00

An excellent film, using animation and authentic figurines, to describe the rise and fall of the Aztec Empire of Mexico. An incisive anthropological approach to the nature of attitudes in a civilization.
Brazil—The Troubled Land  McGraw Hill

A good film of rural poverty in the "northeast" of Brazil. It focuses on one family and presents sympathetically, the problems and alternatives of the peasant. Film footage is devoted to the Juliao movement of the mid 1960's.

Castro  Syracuse  $5.50

A typical Mike Wallace approach to the controversial revolutionary leader of Cuba.

The Forgotten Village  Brandon Cat.  $20.00

There are few films that present the insights into "traditional" society as this masterpiece does. Although filmed over twenty years ago in Mexico, its description of the attitudes and the problems of attitudinal change are most valid. It is based on the John Steinbeck story of the same name. The photographic technique is excellent.

The Orozco Murals  Brandon Cat.  $15.00

Excellent reproductions of the Dartmouth College murals of J. C. Orozco describing the story of Quetzalcoatl. This film fills a void in its artistic approach to civilization in Latin America.

So That Men Are Free  Syracuse  $6.50

A classic example of attitudinal change brought about by a Cornell group under Dr. Alan Holmberg. The film describes the work of his group in moving a typical hacienda from the 16th into the 20th century in the space of just a few years. Aspects of the traditional economy and life style of a remote village are also examined. Highly recommended in studying the process of change in any society.
For Mixed Media.

Keyes, Ralph. Confrontation: The Cuban Missile Crisis, New York, School Marketing, in consultation with the World Law Fund, 1970. Program contents: 4 filmstrips, 4 accompanying cassettes, 1 simulation exercise, 35 student booklets—"Reporting the Crisis: Three Views," 1 teachers guide and bibliography. $150.00 Highly recommended. A multi-media information resource unit of the inquiry-simulation type, on the 1962 Cuban Missile Crisis. Materials, visual, sound, and printed are drawn from primary sources—U.S., Soviet, Cuban, Each of the first three reels presents the background to the crisis from the perspective of each of the protagonists. A fourth reel focuses on the day-by-day unfolding of the crisis itself. Photographs and sound are dramatic and compelling. A simulation exercise—the core of the program—forces the students to face the crisis just as the protagonists did, and try to work toward a solution. Student booklets compare and contrast press coverage of the crisis, and include articles translated from Izvestia and Pravda, from Revolution and from the New York Times. The entire program has an immediacy and impact that provides a realistic and sophisticated learning experience.

Vargas-Baron, Emily and the Southwest Council of La Raza. La Raza: A History of Mexican Americans, Multi-Media Productions (distributed by Social Studies School Service, Culver City, California), 24 filmstrips, 12 LP records, 200 page teacher's manual. $235.00. A sound-filmstrip with coordinated readings and daily lesson plans, this is a documentary study of Mexican and Mexican-American history, from earliest Pre-Columbian times to the recent activities of Chicano militants. It strongly presents the Mexican point of view, providing a sharp contrast with most U.S. History textbooks. The kit contains an entire "packaged" course. Suggested readings lend themselves to inquiry techniques.
VIII. Bibliographies, Handbooks, Other Reference Sources

Latin America: An Annotated List of Printed Materials Suitable for Children Selected by a committee of librarians, teachers and Latin American specialists in cooperation with the Center for Inter-American Relations. New York, Information Center on Children's Cultures, United States Committee for UNICEF, 1969. 96 pp. Publishers addresses, index. $1.00

Over 400 books are included, quite a few suitable for use at the junior and even senior high school level. Evaluations are frank — many are critical. Reading age levels are very useful (but some over optimistic).

One of the best and most useful bibliographies for high school teachers. It is selective, rather than comprehensive. It is divided into two parts, Latin America as a whole, divided topically, and Latin America in its regional diversity, divided by country, and region. Each sub-section is further divided into materials for students and materials for teachers and reference. There are occasional notations of suitability for younger, average, better or more mature students. There is one minor weakness. Many of the reading difficulty ratings are unrealistically optimistic.

This is an extremely useful handbook which in fact served as an organizational model for the present handbook. Chapters one and two are excellent introductions to effective social studies teaching in Latin American Studies. Chapter five contains a good introduction to simulation and an interesting description of a demonstration exercise. The strong point of the handbook, however, is the excellent series of four chapters on language teaching methodology. Social Studies teachers unfamiliar with new developments in foreign language teaching should examine this material carefully, as much of it is concerned with measurement and behavioral objectives. The bibliography is interesting and perhaps beyond reproach from a scholarly point of view. It is a little weak on terms of usefulness for average ability high school students.
Latin America Curriculum Project, the University of Texas at Austin, Clark C. Gill and William B. Conroy, Directors. This is one of the few nationally recognized, long standing curriculum projects devoted exclusively to Latin America. The project has produced five background studies and a quantity of instructional materials. The latter have not yet been published. The five studies, published as bulletins are as follows:

These five bulletins may be ordered from the ERIC Document Reproduction Service, the National Cash Register Company, Box 2206, Rockville, Maryland, 20852. The ED number and price are:

Bulletins 3, 4, and 5 are very useful, especially No. 4. The bibliographies are comprehensive, but the annotations are descriptive only, not critical. They both contain some material that is quite dated.

Newsletter - Focus on the Americas, Sister Mary Consuela, I.H.M., Director, Center for the Teaching of the Americas, Immaculata College, Immaculata, Pennsylvania 19345. This is a monthly four page newsletter for teachers of Latin American Studies in elementary and secondary schools. Besides excellent feature articles, each paper also contains a graph, chart or map suitable for reproduction as an overhead transparency, reviews of useful books, and descriptions and sources of other teaching materials. The relevance of the topics - urbanization, trade, hunger, population, etc. - combined with a frank and realistic approach make this newsletter especially useful to teachers. Write to the above address for information.
