The Quinmester course "Values" includes nine areas of study designed to develop student awareness and development of a personal value system: (1) consideration of a positive self-image as part of a system of values; (2) differentiation between acts of tolerance and intolerance; (3) investigation of the role mental preparedness based on positive learning experiences plays in developing a system of values; (4) generalization from data that freedom based on personal independence is part of developing a system of values; (5) synthesis of the concept that justice based on truth and reconciliation is integral to developing values; (6) demonstration of a developing awareness of aesthetics and their role in a value system; (7) identification of the variables of good and evil; (8) examination of the role of religion; and (9) proposal of reasons for attaining social tranquility fostered by peace and nonviolence in pursuit of a value system. These activities are based on a study of literature, including "The Man without a Country," "I Am a Rock," and "A Separate Peace." This course outline includes a 14-page listing of resource materials. (CL)

COURSE TITLE: VALUES

COURSE DESCRIPTION: An examination of literature designed to aid the student in identifying, understanding, and developing a system of values. Short stories such as "The Man Without a Country," "I Am a Rock," and novels such as A Separate Peace are possible selections for exploration.

I. Performance objectives

A. Having examined works of literature, the student will consider positive self-images as part of developing a system of values.

B. Having read selected literary works, the student, in developing a system of values, will differentiate between acts of tolerance and intolerance among two or more individuals.

C. Given works of literature to read, the student will investigate the role mental preparedness based on positive learning experiences plays in developing a system of values.

D. After having read selected works of literature, the student will infer that freedom based on personal independence is part of developing a system of values.

E. After having read selected works of literature, the student will synthesize the concept that justice based on truth and reconciliation is integral to developing a system of values.

F. After examining selected works of literature, the student will demonstrate a developing awareness of aesthetics and their role in developing a system of values.

G. After reading selected works of literature, the student will identify the variables of good and evil which contribute to the development of a system of values.

H. Given selected works of literature, the student will examine the role religion has as part of developing a system of values.

I. After examining selected works of literature, the student pursuing a value system will propose reasons for attaining social tranquility fostered by peace and non-violence.
II. Course content

A. The approach of the course is not an attempt to regiment student moral behavior but to (1) present significant resources of various levels of difficulty through a literature medium that will provide models for study and emulation, and (2) to motivate student development of an acceptable code of ethical conduct in an era of social revolution and psycho-cybernetics. A "system of values" should encompass recognized universal but functional ethical codes and modes which provide a basis for conduct in contemporary, American society.

B. A nine week range of subject matter may include nine areas with study designed to develop student awareness and development of a personal value system:

1. Consideration of a positive self-image as part of a developing system of values.

2. Differentiation between acts of tolerance and intolerance among two or more individuals.

3. Investigation of the role mental preparedness based on positive learning experiences plays in developing a system of values.

4. Generalization from data that freedom based on personal independence is part of developing a system of values.

5. Synthesis of the concept that justice based on truth and reconciliation is integral to developing a system of values.

6. Demonstration of a developing awareness of aesthetics and their role in development of a system of values.

7. Identification of the variables of good and evil which contribute to the development of a system of values.

8. Examination of the role religion has as part of developing a system of values.

9. Proposal of reasons for attaining social tranquility fostered by peace and non-violence in pursuit of a value system.
III. Learning activities

Learning activities will concentrate weekly on one of the nine performance objectives and will include an emphasis on reading, writing, listening, speaking, and viewing. Activities may range through the seven point hierarchy of learning and questioning from a level of simple recall to abstract evaluation.

A. The student will consider positive self-images as part of developing a system of values.

1. The student will complete a value sheet\(^1\) which asks the student to react to a variety of character sketches depicting positive and negative self-images.

2. The student will use hand puppets to role play characters who feel inferior or superior to his peers.

3. The student will respond orally to the question, "What constitutes positive and negative self-images?"

4. In a small group mode, the student will play the game, Black and White: Role Identity and Neighborhood Action.

5. The student will list adjectives that indicate a positive ("bright," "clever," "cool," ) and negative ("dumb," "scrawny," "ugly" ) self-image.

6. The student will use these adjectives correctly in complete sentences.

7. The student will read selected novels, poems, short stories, and plays which emphasize positive and negative self-image building. The student will write a reaction paper to one of the works he reads. Works may include selections from:

   a. Gateway's Who Am I, Coping, and Striving

   b. Scholastic Literature Units' Personal Code, Mirrors, Courage, and Survival

B. The student will differentiate between acts of tolerance and intolerance among two or more individuals in developing a system of values.

1. Students will respond in an improvisational situation to stimulus words such as "foreigner," "zealot,"
"radical," "zork," "Texan," "cracker," "Oakie," "
"Yankee," "Zorita," "Gonzo." They will discuss their feelings about each until they receive another word.

2. The student will complete a value sheet which records his reactions to paragraphs describing situations of personal interaction reflecting tolerance and intolerance.

3. The student will view stimulus films and sound filmstrips, such as "Boy Alone," "Clown," "One Special Generation," "Values." The student will write a reaction paper which contrasts and compares two of the films and/or filmstrips.
4. The student, in a small group mode, will play the game The Cities Game: Urban Tension and Negotiation.

5. The student will describe in writing or through the use of individual photos, slides, photographic essay, montage, or film, situations of personal interaction with members of his family, peers, strangers, teacher, girlfriend, boyfriend, a Black, White, Black and White, Indian, Chinese, Cuban, Mexican-American, Jew, an obvious alien, and a policeman.

6. The student will bring to class pictures suitable for a bulletin board depicting personal relationships based on tolerance and intolerance.

7. The student will read poems, short stories, plays, novels, or essays whose themes explore personal interaction based on tolerance and intolerance. Works may include selections or the entire work from:
   a. Gateway's A Family Is a Way of Feeling
   b. The Job Ahead Series' Starting Work and Time Out for Leisure
   c. The Success in Language and Literature Series' (B&C) "Some of My Best Friends Are People" and "To Speak Is to Communicate"

u. Essays by Emerson
v. Situation Ethics by Joseph Fletcher

8. The student will role-play portions of a literary work whose theme emphasizes personal interaction based on tolerance and intolerance.

9. The student will write his own skit in which characters explore the motivations for tolerance or intolerance in their personal relationships.

10. The student will create poems and short stories exploring this theme.

11. The student will examine and collect newspaper and magazine articles written about personal commitment to helping the less fortunate in society.

12. The student will critically discuss hypothetical solutions to the following social problems:
    a. Education of the culturally different child
    b. Evaluation of morals of contemporary youth
    c. Ethics in business practice
    d. Job discrimination
    e. The divorce rate
    f. Child abuse
    g. Teenage marriage
    h. Care of the aged
    i. Welfare reform
j. The annual income.

C. The student will investigate the role mental preparedness based on positive learning experiences plays in developing a system of values.

1. The student will complete a value sheet exploring, inductively, the relationship between mental readiness and positive learning experiences.

2. The student will view the film "Genius Man" and discuss the implication of the title and its relationship to learning and creativity.

3. The student will write his own definition of "mental preparedness." (Synonyms may include "knowledge," "practical ability," "skills," "deep and intensive learning," "erudition," "certainty," "cognition.")

4. The student will write his own definition of "learning experience." (Synonyms may include concepts related to the act of acquiring knowledge or skill.)

5. The student will, through the use of various media, demonstrate his understanding of "mental preparedness" and "learning experience."

6. The student will write an expository paragraph on "How to . . . ." something.

7. The student will read selected biographies, plays, poems, short stories, or essays which emphasize education and attainment of life's goals. Selected works, read in part or whole, may include:
   a. Gateway's Two Roads to Greatness and Striving
   b. Success in Language and Literature's "Thinking Is the Name of the Game"
   c. Cress Delahanty by Jessamyn West
   d. The Kid Who Batted 1,000 by Bob Allison
   e. Scholastic Literature Units' Moments of Decision
   f. Nellie Bly, Reporter by Nina Baker
   g. Essays by Emerson

i. Atlas Shrugged by Ayn Rand

j. Saint Joan by Bernard Shaw

k. Don Quixote by Cervantes

1. Out of My Life and Mind by Albert Schweitzer

8. The student will contrast and compare characters from their reading who attained respected positions despite handicap (mental and physical.)

9. The student will express in writing the contribution of mental preparedness to effective decision-making.

10. The student will listen to guest speakers whose careers demand decision-making under pressure contingent upon refined mental readiness (surgeon, test-pilot, astronaut.)

11. The students will visit a scientific laboratory, operating room, or jet airliner in order to better understand the relationship of the abstract triad: Knowledge (mental-readiness) -- Learning Experiences (education) -- Career (decision-making.)

D. The student will infer that freedom based on personal independence is part of developing a system of values.

1. The student will complete a value sheet on aspects of personal and national freedom.

2. The student will view the films, "Cages," "Conformity," and "Free Fall" and compare and contrast, in writing, their individual themes.

3. The student will generate his own definition of freedom through brainstorming and/or any small group mode. (Synonyms may include "liberty," "independence," "license," "permission," "facility," "immunity," "exemption," "release," "parole," "probation," "discharge," "elbow room," "margin.")

4. The student will generate his own definition of "personal independence."

5. The student will list antonyms of "freedom" and "personal independence."
6. The student will demonstrate his understanding of these synonyms and antonyms by using these words correctly in a complete sentence.

7. The student will read works of literature (short stories, poems, novels, plays) whose themes emphasize liberty and enslavement, both mental and physical. Works may include:
   a. Current newspaper and magazine articles on issues of civil liberty, minority rights, and revolution
   b. A Different Drummer by William Kelley
   c. Black Voices
   d. The Best Short Stories by Negro Writers
   e. Kaleidoscope: Poems by American Negro Poets
   f. Anne Frank: The Diary of a Young Girl
   g. Black Pride: A People's Struggle
   h. The Federalist Papers (Great Books)
   i. The Communist Manifesto (Great Books)

8. The student will cite in his readings selected situations as incidences of freedom or oppression.

9. The student will write a poem, short story, play, or essay which develops a theme of personal liberty.

10. The student will role play a character from his play or another student's work.

11. The student will bring bulletin board materials to class for a bulletin board display on freedom and enslavement.

12. The student will collect, copy, and hand out to the class 5-10 poems whose theme is freedom versus oppression.

13. The student will bring to class 5-10 recordings of popular songs. He will copy and distribute the lyrics of the songs to the class and will be prepared to discuss the lyrics' themes pertaining to liberty and enslavement.
14. The student will listen to an alien (invited speaker) express his views on citizenship and freedom in America.

15. The student will listen to a lecture on the relationship of freedom and responsibility.

16. The students will visit an urban ghetto area or migrant labor camp to detect the facets of social oppression.

17. The student will interview and record the comments of ghetto residents and migrants responding to the question, "What does freedom in America mean to you?"

18. The student, in a panel presentation, will contrast and compare comments of the ghetto residents and migrants.

19. The student, evaluating his collected information from the field trip, will formulate hypotheses concerning the factors contributing to the origin and continuance of the observed situation.

20. The student will write an investigative paper on a delineated aspect of one of the following topics:
   a. Liberty and revolution
   b. Freedom and moral responsibility
   c. Who is free?
   d. The civil liberties of minority groups
   e. Is a communist free?
   f. Individual free will and moral commitment
   g. Youth and the voting age

21. The student will prepare, copy, and distribute to his classmates a multiple-choice questionnaire which samples attitudes of youth on the topic "The Civil Liberties of Youth."

22. The student will re-evaluate his earlier definition of liberty and personal independence in terms of liberty as freedom from interference and liberty as freedom for personal development.
E. The student will synthesize the concept that justice based on truth and reconciliation is integral to developing a system of values.

1. The student will complete a value sheet on justice which requires a response comparing "justice" based on clemency with "justice" based on tyranny.

2. The student will reply orally, in an open-ended, small group, or class discussion, to the question, "What does the concept, 'justice', mean to you?" The student will reply in writing to the same question. The student will reinterpret his basic definition of justice in terms of justice based on truth and reconciliation.

3. The student will, in a small group mode, share personal experiences, posing a problem, which he felt were solved either justly or unjustly.

4. The student will collect, bring to class, and display newspaper articles written about court cases involving youth. He will be prepared to discuss the articles.

5. The student will view the sound filmstrips, "You and the Law," and will write a short reaction paper to the concepts presented.

6. The student will read plays, poems, novels, short stories, and essays whose themes center around justice and injustice. Selected works of literature include excerpts of:
   a. Scholastic Book Services' You and the Law
   b. Black Voices
   c. Kaleidoscope
   d. Walden
   e. Emerson's Essays
   f. Old Testament
   g. Plato's Dialogues and Republic (Great Books)
   h. In Cold Blood by Truman Capote

7. The student will write a resume', reaction paper, or critical review of the work he reads.
8. The student will prepare a bulletin board which displays, through various media, the juxtaposition of justice with injustice.

9. The student will listen to one or several of the following guest speakers: criminal lawyer, district attorney, judge, law enforcement officer, or ex-convict.

10. The student will interview and record the comments of one of the guest speakers.

11. The student will take one or several of the following fieldtrips:
   a. Visit to a courtroom
   b. Visit to a judge's chambers
   c. Visit to a local jail
   d. Visit to a prison
   e. Visit to a highway patrol station
   f. Visit to a lawyer's office
   g. Visit to a law school library

12. The student will write an investigative paper on a properly delineated aspect on one of the following topics:
   a. Youth and the police
   b. Youth and being busted
   c. Local jail conditions
   d. A law career
   e. Prison reforms
   f. The history of penal institutions
   g. Early English codes of justice
   h. American frontier justice
   i. Judicial system reforms
j. Bail bonds

k. Is the draft just? Why or why not?

13. The student will create, in writing, a hypothetical problem which contrasts acts of justice with acts of expediency. The student will solve the problem in light of the duties of justice compared with the generosity of love and friendship.

14. The student, reacting to selected readings, will evaluate, in writing, man's position and duties in relation to one of the following:
   a. Justice and liberty
   b. The problems of right and duty in the family
   c. Economic justice
   d. Justice in government
   e. The measure of justice as the moral principle of political organization.

15. The student will re-evaluate his earlier definition of justice and pose reasons for changing or keeping his definition.

F. The student will demonstrate a developing awareness of aesthetics and their role in developing a system of values.

   1. The student will complete a value sheet which will allow him to consider varying manifestations of beauty.

   2. The student will view the stimulus films, "Sylvan Woods," "Stream" and "Junkdump." He will compare and contrast the ecological balance in each of the films and note the progression of imbalance illustrated by the trio.

   3. The student will view a number of stimulus films which depict beauty in its myriad forms, settings, colors, moods, and motions. Some suggested titles are "Ski the Outer Limits," "Psychedelic Wet," "Turned On," and "The Dot and the Line."

   4. The student will prepare a montage depicting his concept of beauty.
5. The student will listen to a recording such as "Environments" and give reasons why specific sounds are aesthetically appealing or not appealing.

6. The student will bring to class an object (painting, recording, artifact) he considers beautiful. Then objects may be used as stimuli for descriptive writing.

7. The student will bring to class a recorded selection he considers to be most "beautiful," play it, and be prepared to discuss his reasons for choosing it.

8. The student will prepare for duplication (ditto, stencil) or projection (acetate, dry mount, sheet music for an opaque projector) the lyrics for a song which fulfill his individual definition of beauty.

9. The student will attend a concert and visit an art museum. He will write a reaction paper concerning the function of music and the visual arts.

10. The student will listen to a lecture on aesthetics as a branch of philosophy.

11. The student will give a multi-media presentation on the arts in contemporary America.

12. In a small group mode, the student will discuss the nature of non-physical beauty. The group will share their ideas with other small groups in the class.

13. The student will listen to the following guest speakers: an artist, musician, author, philosopher, and minister (theologian) on the topic, "The True, the Good, and the Beautiful." The student will write a reaction paper to one of the addressees.

14. The student will write a formal essay on one of the following topics:
   a. The elements of beauty: unity, proportion, and clarity.
   b. The beautiful and the good: beauty as a kind of fitness or order.
   c. Beauty in relation to desire and love as object or desire.
   d. Beauty and ugliness in relation to pleasure and pain.
e. The role of the beautiful in education.

f. The beauty of God.

g. The beauty of the universe.

h. Beauty in the order of ideas.

G. The student will identify variables of good and evil which contribute to the development of a system of values.

1. The student will complete a value sheet which presents different views of good and evil.

2. The student will view stimulus films such as "The Hand" and "Stain on his Conscience." After viewing, the student will discuss themes of good and evil in the film.

3. The student will consider the individual concepts of "good" and "evil" and will list concrete manifestations of each idea. The student will then suggest how concretizations may be portrayed as themes in a poem, film, short story, or play.

4. The student will read selected pieces of literature which investigate the origin, nature, and existence of evil: The Old Man and the Sea, Anne Frank: The Diary of a Young Girl, and Macbeth. Other literary works may include In Cold Blood and Situation Ethics: The New Morality by Joseph Fletcher. The student will report on one of the works he reads and will compare and contrast themes of good and evil in the book with a view taken by another author.

5. The student will write an investigative paper, essay of appropriate length, or a short story, on one of the following topics:

   a. The sources of evil in human life.

   b. Suffering good and evil.

   c. The need for the experience of evil.

   d. The goodness of knowledge or wisdom.

   e. The existence and nature of summum bonum.

   f. Goods of the body and goods of the soul.
g. The possibility of moral knowledge.

6. The student will read Marlowe's "Doctor Faustus" and selections from Milton's Paradise Lost. He will contrast and compare Satan and Mephistopheles as classic figures of evil.

7. The student will read, contrast, and compare "The Book of Job" and the play, "J.B."

H. The student will examine the role religion has as part of developing a system of values.

1. The student will complete a value sheet which presents the student with problematic situations solved by acts of religious devotion.

2. The student will read works of literature which describe "irreligious" acts motivated by a different concept of "faith." Selections may include Situation Ethics, and The Secular City by Harvey Cox.

3. The student will compare the lyrics of "Take the Hand" with "Bridge Over Troubled Water."

4. The student will write his own definition of religious devotion and acts of faith. He will support and illustrate his definition through the use of various media.

5. The student will write about personal experiences he feels were "religious."

6. The student will listen to at least two invited guest speakers whose individual religions and denominations or concept of a supreme being differ. Topic: "Youth and Ethical Commitment."

   a. A Christian Scientist

   b. Unitarian

   c. Baptist

n. the current popularity of religious rock
o. music and worship
p. the function of liturgy in church worship

10. The student will write opinions about the growing youth interest in religion and Christ.

11. The student will critically discuss reasons for integrating into his own value system worthwhile precepts emphasizing faith based on temporal and spiritual understanding. The student may consult the following literary sources:

a. The Religions of Man by Huston Smith
b. Spiritual Sayings of Kahlil Gibran by Kahlil Gibran
c. The Art of Living by Eric Fromm
d. Situation Ethics: The New Morality by Joseph Fletcher
e. Of True Religion translated by J.H.S. Burleigh
f. The Mind's Road to God by St. Bonaventura
g. The Divine Comedy of Dante (Great Books)

I. The student will propose reasons for attaining social tranquility fostered by peace and non-violence.

1. The student will complete a value sheet on the psychology of violence and its effects in a society.

2. The student will view the sound filmstrips from Guidance Associates, "Revolution," "The Literature of Protest," "A Decade of Hope and Despairs," "Concord: A Nation's Conscience," and "The Reckless Years: 1919-1929." The student will write a reaction paper, that is not judgmental in tone, in which he explores the relevance and implications of the individual films.
The student will engage in role-playing and open-ended discussion after seeing the films as a means of expressing convictions about the issues.

3. The student will read works of literature which explore social mores and codes of conduct in society. Example: The Declaration of Independence, Plato's Republic, Marx's Communist Manifesto. The student will write a reaction paper which contrasts and compares two of the works he chooses to read.

4. The student will collect, copy and hand out to the class the lyrics from ten popular songs (within the last 5 years) which deal with peace and non-violence in society. The student will play some of the recordings and be prepared to lead a discussion on the lyrics.

5. The student will collect, copy, and distribute ten favorite poems to the class which compare violence and non-violence in society.

6. The student will prepare a reading of a poem which has special interest for him on the issue of peace and turmoil in society. He will accompany his reading with the appropriate music, sound, and visual effects.

7. The student will create his own poems, short stories, or play which depicts characters in confrontation with issues of peace and violence in his environment.

8. The student will tape record, as he feels appropriate, the sounds of peace and violence.

9. The student will write a short investigative paper on civil disobedience as a form of non-violent protest after seeing the sound filmstrip, "Civil Disobedience."

10. The student will defend in writing his reasons for the maintenance of society's functions based on non-violence.

11. The student will create a short story in which the characters and atmosphere are purely Utopian.

12. The student will make a photomontage of his interpretation of a society ruled by intemperance and violence.
13. The student will develop a class presentation supported and illustrated by various media which explores the roles of a responsible, ethical, and mature-acting youth in contemporary American society. The following Guidance Associates' sound filmstrip series (from the "Teacher Resources") might be included for classroom use:

   a. "The Individual: Search for Values"
   b. "The Individual and His Culture: Interaction"
   c. "The Individual and Society: Conflict and Change"
