This report is based on a questionnaire survey directed in Fall 1970 to foreign language department chairmen at 1,262 United States colleges and universities that grant the B.A. degree. Information was received from 1,034 chairmen at 822 different institutions. Detailed information from 786 institutions was supplemented by data taken from the current catalogues of 420 additional institutions, for a total of 1,206 institutions, or 96.1% of the total group surveyed. The report consists of an introductory summary of results, four detailed tables, an institutional directory, and a set of supplements to the directory. Two of the tables present a breakdown of data on requirement status by region and state, with comparative figures from surveys undertaken in 1965 and 1966.
The research reported herein was performed pursuant to a contract with the U. S. Office of Education, Institute of International Studies, under the authority of Title VI, Section 602, N.D.E.A. Survey of Foreign Language Entrance and Degree Requirements for the Bachelor of Arts Degree in United States Institutions of Higher Education.

August 1972, 58 pp.

Modern Language Association of America, 62 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10011.

This report is based on a questionnaire survey directed in Fall 1970 to foreign language department chairmen at 1,262 U.S. colleges and universities that grant the B.A. degree. Information was received from 1,034 chairmen at 822 different institutions. Detailed information from 786 institutions was supplemented by data taken from the current catalogues of 420 additional institutions, for a total of 1,206 institutions, or 96.1% of the total group surveyed.

An analysis of the chairmen's responses showed that foreign language degree requirements had been eliminated at 14.6% of the responding institutions, and had been reduced or otherwise modified at another 30.8%. Information from the total group (1,206 institutions) showed degree requirements of varying severity at 925 colleges (76.7%, compared with 88.9% in 1965-66) and entrance requirements at 331 colleges (27.4%, compared with 33.6% in 1965-66). A study of requirement changes and enrollment trends between 1965 and 1970 at 100 randomly selected colleges showed a statistically verifiable correlation between elimination or reduction of requirements and declining enrollments. By their responses to a set of opinion questions, a significant number of chairmen at institutions where changes in requirements had occurred tended to attribute the changes to student and faculty opposition toward general requirements for the B.A., rather than toward foreign language requirements.

The report consists of an introductory summary of results, four detailed tables, an institutional directory, and a set of supplements to the directory. Two of the tables present a breakdown of data on requirement status by region and state, with comparative figures from surveys undertaken in 1955 and 1966.
The present study of foreign language entrance and degree requirements in U.S. colleges is the most recent in a series going back to 1952, the year that marked the beginning of the Modern Language Association's Foreign Language Program. The 1970-71 report documents the reversal of the "upward" trend—evident in the 1950's and 1960's—toward widespread acceptance of strong foreign language requirements. In 1966, 389 institutions (33.6% of those surveyed) had entrance requirements, 1,030 (88.9%) had B.A. degree requirements in foreign language; by 1970-71 the figure had declined to 331 (27.4% of the 1,206 institutions surveyed) for the entrance requirements, 925 (76.7%) for B.A. requirements.

Unlike earlier studies, the present survey obtained its data from language department chairmen, rather than from registrars, and was thus able to include questions dealing with local attitudes (on the part of students, faculty, and administration) toward language requirements, as evaluated by the responding chairmen. This expansion of the scope of the survey was particularly appropriate at a time when the question of the foreign language requirement had become on many campuses a controversial and volatile issue, one that was sometimes decided on the basis of strongly held and defended principles of educational philosophy, but perhaps just as often on the basis of strongly persuasive arguments of local applicability.

By making use of data obtained from the MLA's concurrent national survey of foreign language registration in colleges and universities, the study also sheds light upon the shifts in requirements as they affected the position of foreign language study in American education. The study can thus be useful to the foreign language teaching profession as it sets about the task of reappraising its position and redefining its goals.

The data for the present report were recorded and compiled by Research Assistant Jeffrey H. Meyerson, who also undertook the arduous task of converting the information reported by department chairmen into the concise "code" entry that appears opposite the name of each institution listed in the Directory of Institutions. Though difficult to formulate, the "code" presents no serious obstacle to the user of this report.

The staff is grateful to Dr. Kenneth Mildenberger, Deputy Executive Secretary of the Modern Language Association, for his continuous advice and guidance, and to Mrs. Julia A. Petrov of the U.S. Office of Education for her helpful cooperation. To Dr. Glen D. Willbern, former Director of Statistical Studies and Secretary for Membership of the Modern Language Association, we owe special thanks for much encouragement and expert counsel. His report on the 1965-66 survey, the immediate predecessor of the present study, served as our model at all stages of the project.

Finally, we acknowledge with thanks the splendid cooperation of the department chairmen who supplied the data upon which the report is based.

Richard I. Brod
Research Project Manager
The 1970-71 Survey of Foreign Language Entrance and Degree Requirements in B.A.-Granting Institutions is the eighth such investigation conducted by the Modern Language Association of America. The first survey in the series appeared in September 1953; annual revisions followed until 1957, and the survey was conducted again in 1960 and 1966. The present investigation differs from the earlier surveys in two important respects. First, it is based on data requested from department chairmen rather than from college registrars; and second, the questionnaire went beyond the routine inquiry about the status of institutional requirements to include a number of questions requiring judgment and evaluation on the part of the chairmen. Among the circumstances contributing to the success of the survey was the fact that it was carried out and publicized under the auspices of a special organization of foreign language department chairmen, called the Association of Departments of Foreign Languages, founded by the Modern Language Association in 1969 as a forum for the exchange of ideas and discussions of matters of professional policy in college and university foreign language departments. Through its publications, meetings, and special projects, ADEL began by 1970 to have considerable impact upon the profession, and was particularly effective in informing the departments about the growing trend toward elimination or reduction of language requirements. The very fact that the issue was "in the air" enabled the MLA to obtain excellent cooperation from the chairmen in responding to the survey questionnaire.

In the present survey, replies were received from 1,034 department chairmen representing 822 different institutions or 65.1% of the 1,262 B.A.-granting institutions surveyed. Detailed data from 786 of these institutions are reported in Table I below; information on the 1970 status of foreign language entrance and degree requirements at an additional 420 institutions was obtained from current (1970 or 1971) editions of their institutional catalogues. An analysis of the status of requirements in the combined group of 1,206 institutions (96.1% of the total) appears in Table II.

Analysis of Questionnaire Returns

The questionnaire mailed to department chairmen in the fall of 1970 had two parts: in Part A chairmen were asked to indicate whether or not foreign language entrance and degree requirements at their institutions had changed since the MLA's last previous survey of 1965-66, and if so, to provide information on the current requirements and evaluate the impact of the change upon their own departmental programs. To enable chairmen to compare current requirements with those of 1965-66, a summary statement of the latter was typed in on each individual questionnaire, the data being taken from the institutional directory that forms part of the published report of the 1965-66 survey.2 The summary of requirements is stated in terms of a "code" system of numbers and abbreviations that was explained in a Directory Key on page 3 of the questionnaire (See Attachment 3).

Table I Part A, summarizes the replies received from 822 institutions3 On Question A I, 353 of the respondents indicated that the description of requirements at their institutions was still accurate at the time of returning the questionnaire; 469 did not respond, suggesting that a change had occurred at their institutions. Of these, 360 indicated in their response to item A II the year in which the change had occurred—for 45% the year was 1970—, and in item A III evaluated the change in terms of its impact on the role of foreign languages in their college's B.A. program. Nearly 54% of this group felt that the change had weakened their department's position.

On question IV of Part A, chairmen who had indicated on item I that the old description of requirements was no longer accurate were asked to describe the current requirements at their institutions. Some of the respondents made use of the "code" system in the Directory Key in formulating their answers to this item; others simply described them in words or attached relevant pages from catalogues. When requirements were reported in words, members of the MLA research staff restated the answers in terms of the "code" and so recorded them in the Directory which forms part of the present report. The answers to this question were also the source of the summary data tabulated under item A IV in Table I. For each institution, the statement of current requirements was compared with the statement appearing in the institutional directory in the 1965-66 report, and the changes were classified into one of seven categories. Entrance and degree requirements were treated separately. The seven categories are:

(A) "requirement established", i.e., in institutions where there had been no requirement in 1965-66;

(B) "requirement increased" since 1966;

(C) "requirement abolished" (i.e., totally) since 1966;

(D) "requirement reduced" (e.g., from four semesters to three, etc.);

(E) "increase in options" (e.g., an institution that formerly permitted no substitution for the required foreign language sequence has now generalized its requirement and allows students to choose one of a number of alternatives, including foreign languages, to satisfy it);

(F) "requirement maintained" unchanged since 1966; and

(G) "no requirement", either in 1965-66 or 1970-71, hence status unchanged.

Table I shows the number of responses and percentage of the total classified in each category, separately for entrance and degree requirements. Summary figures are provided for the combined categories A and B, called "upward change"; C, D, and E, or "downward change", and F and G, "unchanged". It should be noted that the combined figures for the categories C, D, and E serve to confirm the results of a number of informal surveys and samples taken by various individuals and organizations, namely, that foreign language degree requirements have been modified in recent years in nearly half (45.4%) of the B.A. granting institutions in the United States.

Part B of the questionnaire sought the evaluation by each chairman of the local climate of opinion and attitude on his respective campus. Responses were separated according to whether a chairman had reported a change in local requirements since 1966 (column B I) or not (column B II), but the questions asked were the same for both groups. In evaluating the opposition of students on their campuses, both groups attested to a greater opposition on the part of students toward requirements in general than toward foreign language requirements specifically; in particular the B I group attested to a significantly greater differential between the two kinds of student opposition on their campuses (59% as opposed to 42%). The same pattern holds true for the evaluation by members of the two groups (B I and B II) of opposition toward requirements on the part of faculty and administration. In both cases, the B I group attested to significantly greater opposition to general requirements than to foreign language requirements, while the B II group notes little or no difference.

In part B III of the questionnaire, chairmen were asked five questions requiring a yes or no response.

Do you anticipate the likelihood of a reduction or weakening of your fall 1970 FL B.A. requirements?

Have any FL curriculum or course changes been made, or definitely planned, in your department, as a result of recent national criticism of FL requirements?

Will you be willing to provide details of such changes, if we request them?

Do you anticipate a significant drop in enrollments in foreign languages on your campus in the next three years?

Do you believe it is desirable that FL entrance requirements be strong (i.e., at least 3 years of the same FL in high school)?

The responses of the chairmen to these questions appear under Part B III of Table I.

Analysis of the Total Group of Institutions

As indicated above, the information provided by 786 chairmen on the current status of foreign language requirements at their institutions was supplemented by information obtained from current undergraduate catalogues at an additional 420 institutions. Data on this total group of 1,206 institutions are summarized in Table II and compared with the results of the tally of 1,158 institutions covered by the 1965-66 survey. Consistent with the figures in Table I, the data in Table II show a decline in the number and percentage of institutions having entrance requirements or degree requirements in foreign languages. Table II is not concerned with quantitative increases or reductions.
(i.e., changes in the level of "strictness") in the requirements, only with whether or not an institution has a requirement. Thus, institutions where the requirement had been reduced between 1965-66 and 1970-71 (Category D of Table I), or where options had been increased (Category E), are not differentiated from those where the requirement had not changed. Only cases of outright elimination of the requirement (Category C), are reflected in the differential between the 1966 and 1971 totals of institutions having foreign language entrance requirements and degree requirements, respectively.

Correlation Between Changing Requirements and Declining Registrations in Foreign Languages

As provided under the terms of the contract with the U.S. Office of Education, the MLA undertook in the spring of 1971 to study the correlation between changes in foreign language requirements and actual college registrations in foreign language courses, as reported by the MLA's concurrent survey of registrations. Preparations for this portion of the study were carried out in consultation with a professional statistician, Dr. Alvin Baranchik of the Department of Mathematical Statistics at Columbia University; Dr. Baranchik's evaluation of the correlation study appears as Attachment 2 to this report.

The correlation study is based on a random sample of 100 of the 786 institutions whose requirement status is reported in Table I. The 100 sample institutions were classified according to the system used above, i.e., the seven categories A-G--as applied to the status of degree requirements at each institution: for purpose of the correlation study entrance requirements were ignored. The distribution of the 100 institutions among the seven categories reflects very closely the distribution of the total group.

For the 100 institutions in the sample, the following sets of figures were tabulated: total institutional enrollments in Fall, 1965 and Fall, 1970, as reported by Office of Education surveys; and foreign language registrations for Fall 1965 and Fall 1970, as reported by the MLA's own surveys. In each of the seven categories (A-G), the four sets of enrollment and foreign language registration data for each of the institutions in the category (ranging from 1 in Category A to 44 in Category F) were added together. Then two sets of percentages were calculated: the aggregate of 1965 foreign language registrations at the sample institutions in each category as a percentage of the aggregate of 1965 institutional enrollments in that category; and the aggregate of 1970 foreign language registrations in each category as a percentage of the aggregate of 1970 institutional enrollments. The enrollment figures and the comparative percentage figures appear in Table III for each of the seven categories. Note the predictable decline in percentage points for categories C, D, and E (greatest for category C); the relative lack of change for category F. Harder to explain are the figures showing percentage decline for category B, and an increase for category G; but in both cases the sample is too small to be considered conclusive. Table III also provides summaries of the three main groups among the seven categories: A and B, or "upward" change; C, D, and E, or "downward" change; and F and G, "unchanged". The summaries reveal a signisignificant drop of 9.3 percentage points between the ratio of foreign language registrations to total college enrollments in 1965 and that in 1970 for the sample group of 44 institutions reporting a "downward" change in foreign language degree requirements. It should be noted that while the national total of modern foreign language registrations reported by the MLA in 1970 was considerably higher than the total for 1965 (1,067,217 compared to 975,777), the ratio of total foreign language registrations to total college enrollment had declined from 17.6% in 1965 to 12.6% in 1970.

A random sample of 100 institutions was analyzed. For each we compared the total college enrollment for Fall 1965 and Fall 1970 and the corresponding foreign language (FL) enrollments for the same semesters. Statistical tests were performed to ascertain which institutions exhibited a significant (as opposed to a chance occurrence) change in FL enrollment as a percentage of total enrollment. Using MLA's categories of change in requirements, we obtained the following results. (Figures in the table show the number of institutions in each category.)

Conclusion: Statistically there is less than one chance in a thousand that change in FL enrollment as a % of total enrollment is independent of requirement changes.
II. Responses of Chairmen to Parts B.I. and B.II. of the Questionnaire.

Here chairmen were asked to evaluate the climate of opinion on their local campuses in terms of opposition to B.A. requirements in general and FL requirements in particular. Chairmen answered under B.I. if they had reported a change in FL requirements since 1966, and under B.II. if they reported requirements unchanged. The statistical analysis assumes the accuracy of the chairmen's evaluations of campus sentiment.

Comparison of responses under B.I. with responses under B.II.:

a. At institutions where no requirement changes were made between 1966 and 1970, student opposition to existing general requirements for the B.A. was very significantly less than at institutions where changes had been made.

b. Student opposition to existing FL requirements was not significantly different at the two groups of institutions.

c. Faculty opposition to general requirements was very significantly less at institutions where no changes were made than at institutions where changes were made.

d. Faculty opposition to FL requirements was very significantly different at the two groups of institutions.

e. Opposition on the part of administration to existing general requirements was very significantly different in the two groups of institutions.

f. Opposition on the part of administration to FL requirements was significantly different at the two groups of institutions.

III. Statistical Details.

The classification of each of the 100 institutions as to significance of % FL enrollment change was achieved by the standard test for the equality of proportions, with a 5% significance level. This means that the odds against attributing change where none has occurred are 19 to 1; to increase these odds substantially would have prevented detection of some actual changes. In Table 2, "No Decrease" means "Unchanged" or "Increase." A chi-square test of independence was used on Table 2, yielding a value of 14.2. This is sufficient to imply the result given at the end of Part I of this report.

In Part II, chi-square tests of independence were performed. "Very significant" refers to results significant at the 0.1% level or better. This means the odds against getting data as indicative of difference as the data obtained when in fact there was no real difference are more than 999 to 1. Accordingly, one can be very sure that differences exist. In Table 2, while the data indicate a difference between institutions with change and those without change, this is so at the 5.5% level. The odds against getting data as indicative of difference as the actual data obtained when in fact there was no difference are about 17 to 1.

FALL 1970 SURVEY OF FOREIGN LANGUAGE ENTRANCE AND DEGREE REQUIREMENTS FOR CANDIDATES FOR THE B.A. DEGREE IN UNITED STATES COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES

DEAR FOREIGN LANGUAGE CHAIRMAN:

The Modern Language Association (MLA), in collaboration with the Association of Departments of Foreign Languages (ADFL), is continuing its series of studies of the status of entrance and degree requirements in foreign languages at all colleges and universities of the United States granting the B.A. degree. We are not, at this time, concerned about requirements for other degrees.

The published results of this survey will include a directory of language requirements at these institutions, a study of trends since 1953, and an analysis of current campus attitudes about language requirements, as evaluated by department chairmen.

We believe that the simple card form accompanying this questionnaire will enable you to respond with a minimum of effort. We hope that your institution, through you, will participate in this national survey.

INSTRUCTIONS

1. "Foreign language" is abbreviated to "FL" throughout this questionnaire.

2. This inquiry consists of two parts: PART A — CURRENT FACTUAL INFORMATION; PART B — CHAIRMAN'S LOCAL EVALUATION.

3. All FL chairmen are receiving this questionnaire, even in institutions with multiple FL departments. We would like to have your response even though you expect other local FL chairmen to reply; we need to know the complete national situation, including the evaluation that all FL chairmen place upon the local circumstances.

4. In publishing results of this survey, only the factual information of PART A will be ascribed by name to your institution. The responses to PART B will be employed only in generalized tabulations and analyses.

5. You should enter your responses in the appropriate places on this questionnaire, which you will keep as your file copy. When finished, please transcribe your answers onto the enclosed reply card and mail it.

6. The manager of this project is Richard I. Brod, Coordinator of ADFL, 62 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10011 (telephone: (212) 691-3200). He will be glad to assist with inquiries.
PART A: CURRENT FACTUAL INFORMATION

Below is pasted a reproduction of your FL requirements for the B.A. degree, as reported in the last previous MLA national survey [for fall 1966, published in Foreign Language Annals, Vol. 1, No. 1 (October 1967), 49-70]. You will find on page 3 a Directory Key to the symbols employed. [If nothing is pasted here, see below.*]

☐ A.I. If the 1966 description is still accurate (for fall 1970), check here and go on to PART B. II (omit B. I)

☐ A.II. If the 1966 description is not now accurate (fall 1970) please write the year in which the change went into effect, and go on to A. III.

☐ A.III. If in your judgment the change strengthens your institution’s B.A. program, write “1”; if it weakens the role, write “2.” If the role of FLs is not appreciably changed, write “3.” Go on to A. IV.

☐ A.IV. Explain precisely what the new requirements are in the space below. Give sufficient detail so that we can prepare a full new coded description in the new report. (See “Examples” on page 3 for the kind of data requested.)

PLEASE NOW GO ON TO PART B, I

*Absence of 1966 data here indicates that either your institution was missed then, or it had not been founded. In either event, skip A.I., A. II, and A. III, but do respond to A. IV. Then go on to either B. I or B. II, whichever is applicable.
