The instructional material in this last of 6 units is directed to the 9th graders of the Oglala Sioux people. The material focuses on games and sports, and the origin of the games is discussed. The document explains that Lakota games, besides being fun, teach values. The games teach children the values of endurance, of risk, of taking a chance and instill a desire to excel and to respect others. Also, the games teach what men do and teach girls what women do. Gambling games and games requiring special skills, as well as games intended for special seasons of the year, are included. (FF)

Introduction

Every people have games and sports. They are a part of a people's way of life, their culture. They are the way people have fun. As games are part of a people's way of life, questions like what is played, when, by whom, and with what, mirror that way of life. Games are not only for fun, they also teach. They teach what people hold dear, their values. Games, especially for children are aimed at teaching values and skills.

Among the Lakota people, there are many games, many ways of having fun. There are games for men only, for women only, for boys only, for girls only, for boys and girls together. Some of these games are meant to be played at a special season of the year, like winter. Other games can be played all year round. All the games mirror what the people have on hand, such as a bow or a plum pit. Most of them, especially the children's games mirror what people do, such as hunt or take care of the home. Some games like the men's game, Painyankapi, have stories connected with them that explain where they came from. Some games, such as the men's game Nehaka are connected with certain activities. In this case, the activity is hunting elk. The games of the Lakota people are thus not only for fun but also to teach.

Lakota games teach the values of endurance, the power to stick to something even when it demands such strength and causes pain. The games teach the value of risk, of taking a chance, gambling when things are not certain. Risk is an important value in Lakota life, even today. People are constantly taking risks for each other. One takes a risk and trusts another person. He may come through, he may not. If he does, further trust is given. This risk, and building up of trust, are basic to relations among the Lakota people.

Games also teach competiveness, the desire to be excellent. But, that desire is balanced by another value, respect. Games also teach the ability to realize a game is only a game. No one goes away angry.

For the Lakota children, to learn the above values is very important. Games besides being fun teach values. Games also teach boys what men do, and teach girls what women do.
Thus, games for the Lakota people, like any people, are important. They are fun, but they also teach values and skills important to children.

Gambling Games for Men

Many of the games for men are gambling games, of chance and skill.

1. Painyankapi

Painyankapi is an ancient gambling game played by Lakota men. The people take a great interest in this game and some of the men become very skillful at it. People often travel great distances to gamble on a game between expert players. Painyankapi was sometimes called the buffalo game. It was played to bring success in the buffalo hunt. When it was played for this reason, it was called "shooting the buffalo". The story of the game's beginnings is as follows:

Many years ago, a band of Sioux Indians were traveling in the lake country of Minnesota. There was very little game around and the people were very hungry. One of the young men decided that he would fast for four days on the top of a high hill in full sight of the camp. After he was on the hill for two days and two nights, the people in the camp saw a buffalo coming toward the man on the hill. The buffalo circled him and then it disappeared over the opposite side. Around noon the young man returned to camp and sat down on the top of a small hill. His younger brother went out to see him and the young man said to his brother, "I have a message I want you to deliver to my father. Tell my father to place a tipi in the middle of the camp circle. Tell him to scatter sage grass around the inside. Also, he must select four good men to enter the tipi and await me". The younger brother told his father what had been said.

The father believed the young man and did as he had been asked to do. When the tipi was ready and the four good men were inside, the younger brother went to get the young man. The young man came and entered the tipi. He brought out a pipe wrapped in sage grass. Then, he asked for a helper. When a helper came, he told the helper to get a stick. The helper brought the stick, and he told him to peel it. After this was finished, he told the four good men to make a sweat lodge.
Then, the young man and the four good men entered the sweat lodge. After this ceremony was finished, they all returned to the tipi. The young man told them that a buffalo had come to him on the hill and that the buffalo had given him a pipe, some instructions, and a message to deliver to his people. He made incense out of sage grass and then wrapped the pipe. The stem of the pipe was red and the bowl was a black stone. The young man ordered his helper to go out and cut an ash sapling and four cherry sticks. He gave each of the four men a cherry stick to peel. He took the ash stick and began to remove the bark. When he was all finished, he tied the ends together with buckskin strings. He then painted the hoop, and told the four good men to paint their cherry sticks red in the same way.

Then, the young man said, "Now I shall roll the hoop. It will circle the tipi. You are to watch the tracks made by it. You will see that it leaves buffalo tracks, returns to me and lies down". The young man rolled the hoop, and it circled the tipi and returned to the young man. He said that on the fourth day from that time, there would be many buffaloes. He then wrapped strips of rawhide around the cherry sticks. He tied red cloth around one stick and blue cloth around the other. He put on a buffalo robe and told the men to follow him. They played the hoop game as they walked around. The people of the camp watched them and wherever the hoop rolled, buffalo tracks appeared.

The young man, then said that the next day four buffalo would pass through the camp, but that no one must bother them, nor could the dogs chase them. The next day, the four buffalo came and then disappeared. A sentinel went to the place where the four buffaloes had come from, and he watched for the large herd that the young man said would appear. Soon, the large herd was sighted and the people had a great buffalo hunt. In the course of time, all the four good men died. After the death of the last man, the game was played by all the people. It became a great gambling game.

To play Painyankapi, only two things are needed: the hoop, (cangelseska); and the wands or sticks (cansakala). The cangelseska is made from an ash sapling which is cut in the spring when the sap is flowing.
It is usually about as long as the tallest man, and when it is bent into a hoop, it is a little over two feet in diameter. To bend the branch into a hoop, it is held in the fire until it becomes soft and flexible. Then, it is bent into the form of a hoop. The ends overlap firmly together with thongs of rawhide.

Beginning at the point where the two ends are tied together, four shallow spaces are cut to divide the hoop into four equal parts. Each space is about two inches long and about ½ inch wide. Each space has a special marking on it and has a special name.

The cansakala are made of ash or choke-cherry wood. Each of them is about 3⅜ to 4 feet long. One end is flattened or squared for about 10 inches. They are wrapped with rawhide or buckskin thongs from the beginning of the flattened part to within about 10 inches of the other end. Two sticks are held together by a rawhide thong about 8 inches long, which is fastened to each other about one-third of the way from the rounded ends. Each pair of wands or sticks had a small flag, blue or black on one part, and red or yellow on the other.

To play the game, two players take turns rolling the hoop. When it is rolled, both of the players follow it. Just as it is about to tip and fall over, both of the players throw their wands so that the hoop will land on the wands when it falls. Scoring is determined by how many of the spaces on the hoop fall on the wands. One marked space lying over one wand counts one point. One space lying over two wands count two points. Two spaces lying over one wand counts two. Two spaces lying over two wands counts two. Three spaces lying over two wands counts three. Four spaces lying over two wands is the game.

2. Hanpapeconpi

This game is a guessing game. It was taught by Iktomi to the Four Brothers as they were establishing the four directions. The brothers had been sent on their trail to establish the four directions by Wazi, the wizard. In the course of their travels, Yata (the north wind) and Eya (the west wind) continually quarreled over the leadership of the four brothers. They quarreled too over the length of the journey. When Iktomi came to them, they were weary and cold.
Each night Okaga (the south wind) made a great fire and the brothers sat around it. On the eighth night, there came an old man with his face covered. Eya told him to sit by the fire and asked where he came from and where he was going.

"I know that you are weary", said the old man, "But I cannot travel on this trail with you. I come at night to amuse you so that you may forget your weariness". He sat beside the fire, and Okaga gave him part of his morsel of food to eat. When he smelled and tasted it, he said "This is the food that the gods feast upon, and they give it only to those they love".

The brothers remembered that Wazi had also said this about the food of Okaga, and that he could not go on the trail with them. So, they agreed that this old man was Wazi. When the old man had eaten, he asked each of the brothers to lend him a moccasin. He placed the moccasins side by side. He showed them one white and three black pebbles. He juggled the pebbles in his hand and quickly slipped one underneath the moccasin.

Then, he asked Eya to juggle the pebbles and slip one underneath the moccasin. The old man guessed which one - white or black - Eya had slipped under the moccasin. He guessed wrong. Eya then juggled and the old man again guessed wrong. Then Yanpa juggled, and the old man now guessed right. Okaga then took a turn and juggled, and the old man guessed wrong. Thus, they played this game far into the night, and the brothers forgot their weariness. Before it was morning, the old man said that if they would stay at this camp, he would come the next night and teach them more about the game. Then, he left them.

The next day, the brothers stayed in that camp, and when it was night, the old man came bringing four bundles of wands with four wands in each bundle. He gave these to the four brothers. He also brought a large bundle with four times four wands in it, which he kept. He taught them how to gamble wand against wand. They played the game, wand against wand. They played far into the night and the brothers won all the wands. Again, the old man asked them to stay at that camp so that he might come and teach them more about the game. Before it was morning he left them. The brothers stayed the next day and played the game with each other. When it was night, they waited for the old man, but he didn't come. The fourth day they waited and played. Yata juggled only black pebbles and won the wands from his brothers.
When it was evening, Okaga made a huge fire. He left his flint and tinder exposed on the ground beside the fire. When it was nighttime, the old man came and all played.

Only Yata and the old man juggled the pebbles, but Yata won all the wands because he slyly juggled only black pebbles.

As they sat beside the fire, the old man spoke privately to Yata, saying, "You are the first-born son and should lead the brothers".

Thinking, the old man was Wazi, Yata said "You have given my birthright to Eya and he leads."

What would you risk to regain your birthright?" asked the old man.

"Anything and everything," replied Yata.

"I will play you three times. You may juggle twice and I will juggle once. He who wins twice will win our bet. I will bet your birthright," said the old man.

"What must I bet," asked Yata.

"You must bet that flint and tinder lying beside the fire," said the old man.

Yata slyly took the flint and tinder, and he and the old man went away to gamble.

He juggled and placed only black pebbles under the moccasins. The old man lifted a moccasin and lost. The old man then juggled and he placed the last pebble under the fourth moccasin, Yata saw that it was white. He watched the face of the old man closely and pretended to lift the first moccasin. The old man appeared pleased. Yata pretended to lift the second moccasin and still the old man appeared pleased. The same with the third moccasin. Yata then approached the fourth moccasin and the old man appeared anxious, so Yata quickly lifted the third moccasin. There was a black pebble under it, and the old man won this game. "You have won a game, and I have won a game. Now I have one chance and you have three chances to win the next game. When people talk about Yata, they will tell how he gambled with me. Having your birthright will give you power to command your brother, Eya. Then you may have revenge for what he has done to you."
Yata juggled and placed only black pebbles under the moccasins, and said, "I should bet more on this game."

"I would like to help you get even for the wrong that has been done to you. I will bet my power as a god against the girl whom you desire," said the old man.

"Agreed, and I would bet even more," said Yata.

"I will bet my services to you against your seat with the gods," said the old man.

"Agreed," said Yata.

"You watched my face to learn when your hand approached the white pebble, and now I shall watch your face," said the old man.

Yata looked away from the moccasins while the old man pretended to lift each one slipping his fingers under each as he did so.

"You give me no chance, and I will take no chance. I will close my eyes and turn around once and lift the moccasin my hand touches first," said the old man.

He did this, and Yata watched him closely. He lifted the first moccasin, and a white pebble was under it. Yata stared in astonishment and then he lifted each of the other moccasins. There was a white pebble under each of them. He said, "You have cheated me. These pebbles are all white."

"You should know that I have cheated, for you put no white pebbles under a moccasin. I should have taught you that the rules of the game are that if a player cheats, he should be cheated. I have played according to the rules, and you cannot complain," said the old man. Then, Yata wept as a child weeps, and the old man laughed in ridicule.

When the morning came, it was cold. Okaga wished to make a fire, but he could not find his flint and tinder. Then, the old man laughed loud and long. He uncovered his face and said, "Your father warned you to beware of Iktomi. I am Iktomi, and I have made you ridiculous."
Forever it shall be told that while you were doing the work of the gods, you neglected your work to gamble on a game of chance. Eya, your leader, permitted this to happen and even took part in it. Yata cheated and stole from his own brothers and gambled away both that which was not his and that which he most desired. Okaga, the prudent Okaga, even forgot his duty and lost that which was for your comfort. Everyone will laugh at you. Where you go there will be neither flint nor tinder, and each day while you suffer as you do not have a fire, I shall laugh at you.

The four brothers hung their heads in shame, and Iktomi mocked and taunted them until Okaga made music with his flute. The music was very sad and Iktomi fled from it because he hated music.

That day, the brothers journeyed on the trail, and when it was evening, they were discouraged and cold. Then, Eya prayed to Wakinyan and said, "Oh, Wakinyan, we are comfortable and wish no aid from you. The glance of your eye is cold and weak as fire. We scorn you, and if you offer aid to us, we will not receive it."

The other brothers stared at Eya as if he were crazy because they didn't know what was pleased to Wakinyan. All bowed and a small voice said, "This is the will of the gods: Because, for four days you have neglected your work, for four times four days each day you must travel a day's journey and also a fourth of a day's journey in order to correct the fourth time. You neglected your work for the gods to gamble on chance, therefore when you are a god, you shall be so mysterious that no one can tell where you come from, where you go, and how you go. Okaga, by his neglect, lost the means of making a fire, therefore when he leaves his father's lodge for the last time, he shall never again make a fire.

"Because Yata gambled away that which was not his own, he shall have no seat with the gods; the woman's work shall never be done in his tipi, and he shall always be cold. Eya permitted the gambling which caused the delay, therefore, when he is a god, he shall never lead in anything and shall do nothing wisely. Because of his scheming, Iktomi has made the four brothers ridiculous and interfered with the will of the gods, he shall forever fear fire and the smoke of fire."

"This is the message of Wakinyan: A dry stick moved swiftly against dry wood will make a fire."
As you will notice in this story of the origin of the guessing game, the story ends telling how fire was first made without flint.

In the game of Hapapeconpi, one of the players conceals a small bit of horn under one of two, three, or four moccasins. The other player has to guess under which moccasin, the small bit of horn is hidden. Each player has his own stick, but the one who is guessing uses both of them. He uses the other player's stick to push a moccasin away, and this means that the object is not hidden under that one.

Hapapeconpi, it is a game of great psychological skill. The guesser watches the face of the other player very carefully as he moves the stick from one moccasin to another. He hopes to see a smile or a frown on the face of his opponent. This will tell him if the bit of horn is under the moccasin or not. Of course, the other player is aware of this. Sometimes he will try to outsmart the guesser by frowning when the guess is near the empty moccasin and smiling when he is near the moccasin with the bit of horn under it.

3. Hahaka

Hahaka, another gambling game for men is played while hunting for elk. It is played to bring good luck in the hunt.

Only two things are used in the game: hehaka (the elk) and cangleska (the hoop). The hehaka is made of a round rod of wood about four feet long and 3/4 of an inch in diameter. One end is squared or flattened. A small rod of wood about 18 inches long is fastened to the round end. It is bent in a half circle and held in position by a string of twisted sinew or leather. About 18 inches from that, two other sticks are fastened, just like the other two. Then the rod is wrapped with buckskin or rawhide thongs. The hoop is made of buckskin or rawhide and is wrapped with a thong of rawhide.

To play the game, one of the two players throws the hoop up in the air. As it begins to come down, the players try to catch it on the hehaka. It must be caught before it touches the ground and then laid on the ground. But, if it is caught then the other player may take the hoop from the hehaka of the one who caught it before it is laid on the ground. After the hehaka is laid on the ground, no one can touch the hoop.
A special hair ornament is given as a reward for victory in this game. This ornament is a very small gaming hoop or wheel as small as the maker can make it. It has "spokes", like a wheel, ornamented with porcupine quills and tied to a small lock of hair on one side of the crown of the head by a buckskin string fastened to the center of the ornament.

4. Canwiyusna

This is an ancient gambling game played by Lakota men during winter nights. But it is also played by children and sometimes by women. All that is needed is a good number of canviyawa (counting sticks). These are generally made of green sumac sticks, for they are not easily broken by handling. There has to be an odd number of sticks, usually ninety-nine. They may be plain, but many times they are colored. When the game is about to begin, one of the two players picks up the pile of sticks and mixes them as well as he can. Then, he divides them into two piles.

Then, the other player has to choose which of the two piles has the odd stick. If the pile that he picks has the odd stick in it, he wins. If it doesn't, he loses.

5. Takipsice

Takapsice is an ancient gambling game played by men and is their roughest and most athletic game. The game can result in serious wounds and broken bones, but seldom quarrels. It can be played by a few or hundreds. Generally, it is played for a wager which can be quite large. In the old days, one camp would often challenge the other and the contest would turn into days of playing, feasting, and having a good time.

Only two things are needed in the game of tapikapsice, a club and tapa, a ball. The club is made of an ash or chokecherry sapling taken in the spring when the sap is running, and heated in the fire until it is pliable. The lower end is bent until it stands at right angles to the rest of the stick or into a semicircular crook about six inches across. The shape of the crook varies according to the maker. After the crook is made, the thickness of the stock is trimmed to about one and a half inches and its length is such that the player can strike it on the ground while standing erect. Anyone can make a club. There are, however, certain craftsmen and the clubs they make will have special powers.
The ball is made by winding some material into a ball, and covering it with buckskin or rawhide. It is from two and a half to three inches in diameter. The game is played where two goals can be set up with a level track of land between them. The sides must be equal though any number can play. The goals can be stakes or the wall of a tipi. The goals are three hundred yards to a mile apart. At the beginning of play, the ball is placed on the ground halfway between the two goals. It can also be tossed in the air. During the game, the ball cannot be touched by hand or foot. The object of the game is to put the ball across the goal of the opposing team. The first team to do so wins the game.

II.
Amusement Games for Men

Besides gambling games, Lakota men played games of skill and endurance.

1. Tahuka Cangleska

   This is a game played by men in the springtime. It is a very exciting game, and the people gather in great numbers to watch it.

   A tahuka cangleska (webbed hoop) and wahukaze (spear) are needed for the game. The Tahuka cangleska is made of ash wood which is bent into a hoop. A web of rawhide is woven across the entire hoop. But there is a small hole left in the middle called the "heart". The wahukaze is often made of a young willow, about four or five feet long. The smaller end is often forked and is sometimes ornamented with various feathers, beadwork, or something decorative.

   Two sides are chosen, and there can be as many players on each side as desired. Often the members of one tiospaye will play against another tiospaye. The hoop is thrown by one of the players towards those on the other side. As the hoop comes at them, they throw their spears at it. If the hoop is speared through the heart while it is still in the air, then the count is five. If it is speared through the heart while rolling on the ground, the count is three. If it is speared through one of the other openings, the count is one. Nothing else counts. At the end, the side with the most points wins.
2. Hutanacute

This is a game played by Lakota men in the winter time on snow or ice. It is also sometimes played by boys. All that is needed to play this game is a hutanacute (a winged bone). It is made from the rib of a large animal. At the wider end, two holes are drilled in the bone. Into these holes two rods are stuck. Each rod is around 14 inches long. The smaller end of the rods is made to look like a feather.

To play the game, the players fix a mark. Then, they throw the hutanacute so that it will glide across the ice or snow. They take turns throwing their hutanacute until every player has thrown his. The player whose hutanacute lies farthest from the wins the game.

3. Canpaslohanpi

Canpaslohanpi is another game played by Lakota men in the winter on snow or ice. Each player has a canpaslohanpi or throwing stick. It is made of ash and is about four feet long. One side is rounded, and the other is flat. The stick is held at the smaller end, between the thumb and the second, third, and fourth fingers. The first finger is across the small end, and the flat side of the stick is held upwards. By swinging the hand below the hips, the stick is shot forward so that it will slide on the snow or ice. The game is to see who can slide their stick the farthest.

4. Ogle Cekutehni

This is a game of skill played by Lakota men. The necessary things are an ogle (coat) and a itazipa (bow) with wakinkpe (arrows). But this is a special arrow that is either painted black, or wrapped with a black strip of buckskin, or has a tag on it. The game is played at shooting the ogle high into the air so that it will fly about 50 to 75 yards away. Then, the players stand at the spot, where it was shot from and shoot at it with bow and arrows.

5. Pteheste

This is a game played by young men and sometimes boys. The only thing needed is a pteheste, (cow horn). This is made from the tip of a buffalo or cow horn. It is usually about three or four inches long. The men trim it down until it is very straight. They, then, put plum tree twigs into the end of the horn or fasten a feather tipped arrow into the base of the horn. It is then thrown along the surface of the snow. The player who throws his the farthest wins the game.
III.
Gambling Games for Women

Lakota women have their own games. They are gambling at times in their games and they also have games of skill and chance.

1. Icaslohe

Icaslohe is a gambling game played by Lakota women. All that is needed is: Tapainyan (stone ball) and canmibi (a wooden can). The stones can be any kind of stone, and the cans can be made from any kind of wood.

Usually the game is played on ice, but it can also be played on the ground. There are two players and two lines are drawn on the ice about 10 to 30 feet apart. Each woman takes her position behind one of the lines. The object of the game is to bowl the tapainyan so that it will knock the opposite canmibi away from the line.

2. Tnkpapsicapi

This is another gambling game played by women. The equipment and the rules for it are the same as is the men's version of shinny, Tnkpapsice, the only difference is that the women's games are much milder and not as rough.

3. Tanpan

This is a game played by older Lakota women. It is a very absorbing game, and some of the women play all day and all night. There are three things necessary for this game: tanpan (basket), kansu (dice), and canwiyawa (counting sticks).

The tanpan is made of willow twigs and woven into a basket about three inches in diameter at the bottom. It gets wider near the top. The kansu are made of plumstones. One side of each stone is left plain. The other side is carved with some figures or with straight marks. These carvings can be a spider, a turtle, a face, a thunder-hawk, a bear track, and so on. There are six stones in each set, but not all of them have carvings on one side. Some are plain on both sides. The canwiyawa are rods of wood about the size of a pencil. There are usually about 100 of them in a set.
The game is played by old women, who divided into two sides with the same number of players on each side. Before the beginning of the game, they all agree on how many points each carving is worth. To play, a player puts all the kansu into the tanpan and covers it with her hand. Then she shakes it and throws out all the kansu. Then, the count is made and she takes the number of counting sticks from the pile that she has won. When the counting sticks are all taken, the side which has the greater number wins the game.

4. Tasiha

This is another gambling game. Sometimes men, boys, and girls play it, too. Usually, the women would sit on the ground as they played. Other people gambled on the game. Sometimes the bets were very large. To play the game, two things are needed: tasiha (foot bones) and tahinspa (an awl or needle).

The tasiha are made from the short bones of the foot of the deer or an antelope. There are usually from four to six in a set. Each of the bones is worked into the form of a hollow cone, so that the top of one will fit into the bottom of another. In this way, they could be stacked on top of each other like cups or glasses. From four to six holes were drilled through each bone at the wide end. They were all connected by a thong or string. Four loops about \( \frac{1}{2} \) inch in diameter are fastened to the end of the thong next to the top bone. The tahinspa is made of bone, and is the same length as the tasiha when they are fitted together. One end of the tahinspa is drilled to make a hole. The other is shaped into a slender point, so that it will easily pass into the holes drilled in the wide ends of the bones.

To play the game, the player holds the tahinspa in one hand and tosses the tasiha with the other hand. The tasiha must be caught on the point of the tahinspa. If just one tasiha is caught on the tahinspa, this counts one point. If one tasiha is caught, and another falls on top of it, then this counts two. If two fall on top of the one that is caught then the count is three. And so on. If they all fall on top, the game is over. If a tasiha is caught through one of the holes in its wider end, the count is two. If the tahinspa passed through one loop, the count is one. If through two loops, the count is two. And so on. As soon as a player fails to score, she passes the tahinspa and the tasiha on to the next player.

Amusement Games for Boys

Lakota boys have many games that they play for fun. They also learn in these games the value of the Lakota way of life. Boy's games often imitate what their fathers and older brothers do and what they will probably do—hunt and make war.

Some of the games are played at special seasons of the year, while others are played anytime during the year.

1. Itazipa Kaslohan Iyeva Ecunpi

This game is not played with a real bow but with a long piece of wood made flat by cutting it with an axe. It has a curve at the lowest part, and is sharpened on the other side. The other end, the one that is curved, has a head carved on it, usually snake's head. The player will grasp it at the other end and throw it, making it glide rapidly over the snow. These sticks are very hard to make, and valued highly by the owner.

2. Paslohanpi

The Lakota boys play this game in the spring time for excitement and amusement. Each of them has a wahukezala (javelin). It is made from a willow and is from three to six feet long. The bark is stripped from it and then it is rewrapped with bark in a spiral manner, leaving an exposed strip about ½ inch wide. Then, it is held to the smoke from a fire until the exposed part is all black. After this the bark is removed again. This marks the javelin with spiral stripes of black and white. The object of the game is to see who can throw the javelin the farthest.

3. Hlihila Unkicicininpi

In the spring, when the ground is soft like putty, Lakota boys play this game.

Each boy presses a lump of mud around his stick and lines up on one side facing the opposing team.
When the two teams are close to each other, they charge each other. Each boy hurls the end of the stick with the mud towards one of the opposite players. The players chase each other around as they throw their mud balls. Sometimes, this game is played in the very early spring when the earth is still frozen. The game is the same, except that it is very dangerous, because the lumps of mud are frozen. Many players are seriously hurt in playing like this but they continue to play.

3. Anakicitanpi

   This game is played in the spring when the leaves have opened, the small birds are singing in the forests, and the meadow larks are singing on the open prairie. The boys form into two groups and play war. With wooden knives they will pretend to kill and scalp each other. Sometimes, they take prisoners.

4. Maka Sunkawakan Skatani

   During the springtime, Lakota boys get some mud from the bank of a river or stream and shape the mud into the image of a horse or buffalo. They play with these models as the men of the tribe would use horses or buffaloes.

   Once in a while, they will make men who dance the sun dance or fight each other. Whenever they become tired of the models, they destroy them.

5. Peji Wokeya Kahipi

   In the springtime, Lakota boys imitate the older men. They go off by themselves and make a grass lodge. They cook food for a feast and while the food is being prepared, they dance, have horse races and so on. Later, they will pretend to go on war parties, hunt buffalo, and dance the sun dance.

6. Tamniyohpeya Kagapi

   Lakota boys play this game along the banks of a stream. They take two clumps of mud and press each against their elbows. Then, they press the two clumps together and make it into a hollow ball. The ball is then thrown into the stream as a target. When the target ball is hit by other clumps of mud or sticks, it bursts open with a loud sound.
Summer

1. Magakichiyapi

   In the summer, Lakota boys make their way down to the water in the creek. One of them is the hunter and another is the goose. All the rest are ducks. They swim around in the water, slapping it with the palms of their hands. Sooner or later, the hunter catches the goose and dunk him a few times. The only escape for the goose is to climb on shore.

Fall

1. Ipahotonpi

   In the fall, when the wind blows the leaves down from the trees, Lakota boys make pop-guns out of ash wood. The gun consists of three things: Tancan (the body), iwopopa (the ramrod) and iyopuhli (the wadding). The tancan is made from a piece of ash sprout, about six to ten inches long. The pith is removed. The iwopopa is made of tough wood, a little longer than the tancan, but narrow enough so that it passes through easily. The iyopuhli is placed in one end of the tancan. Then a more loosely fitting wad is forced quickly through the tancan by means of the ramrod. When this is done, the first wad flies out with an explosive noise. The boys use this toy to play hunting and war.

2. Wicapeca Un Kacapa

   When the grass is full-grown, young Lakota boys gather on the prairie in two groups. They chase each other with the sharp grass, trying to stick the grass in the neck or ankle-bones of their opponents. They throw the grass in bunches, not one at a time. They pretend to be in a real war, and the pain from the grass is sometimes very fierce.

Games Played During No Definite Season

1. Mato

   There are two different versions of this game. In the first one, a young boy acts as the grizzly bear and digs a hole in the ground and waits for the others. The others choose a leader and walk towards the bear. The leader will take hold of the hair of the bear, then the bear springs up and chases the players. They scatter in all directions.
When the bear overtakes one of the boys, he tickles him. When he stops laughing, then the tickling stops.

In the other version of the game, two dagger-like sticks are held in the hands like claws. The other boys have houses represented by a stick. The bear cannot go over a stick but he can go under it without using his hands. To do this, he digs with the wooden claws like a dog. When he gets under the stick, he chases the boy who had the house. The object is to touch someone with the claws. Then the person touched must become the bear, and the bear will again be a man.

2. Tate Yuhmupi

This is a toy that many of the young Lakota boys play with anytime. It consists of a blade of wood, usually red cedar. It is usually quite thin, but is about a foot long. One end of this is fastened to a wooden handle by a thong about twelve to eighteen inches long. The handle is about two to three feet long. By holding the handle about the head and swinging it rapidly with a circular motion, the blade is whirled rapidly and makes a buzzing noise. The object of the game is to see who can keep it buzzing for the longest time.

3. Huhuyamupi

This is a toy that is used in "buffalo fighting". It is made from the short bone of the foot of a large animal. It is fastened to the middle of a string of sinews about twelve to eighteen inches long. At the end of each string, a short stick is fastened to serve as a hand-hold. These sticks are taken, one in each hand, and the bone is whirled around to twist the string. The two strings are pulled apart, and this makes the string to rapidly untwist. As it untwists, the bone twirls rapidly. When this is done, the motion of the bone makes a buzzing noise. Then, a number of boys, each with a bone whirler, begin to buzz and imitate the actions of fighting buffalo bulls. The buzzing of the bones represents the bellowing of the bulls. They come near each other and strike the bones together, and if the bone of any player is stopped from buzzing, he is defeated and out of the game.
4. Canwacikiyapi

This is a game of tops. The things needed to play are canwacikiyapi (tops) and icapsinte (whips). The canwacikiyapi is round with a point and is made from ash, cedar, buffalo horn, red catlinite or a stone. Some are painted with bands of red, blue, or yellow. Sometimes they are decorated with a scalp-lock. The icapsinte has a handle and at the narrow end there is fastened from one to four lashes of deer hide. The handle is at least 1 ½ feet long and the lashes are from 12 to 15 inches long.

To play the game, a square is first marked off on ice or hard ground. There is only one entrance to the square. The player starts his top spinning either by his fingers or by the whip. He starts his top outside of the square and he tries to force it inside by the use of the whip. Once the tops are inside the square, they cannot be touched. When they stop spinning, the one nearest the side opposite the entrance will win.

In another game, a circle is marked off about six feet in diameter. Near the center, four holes are dug. Then, the players spin their tops outside the circle, and while they are spinning, they are guided towards the circle. If a top enters the circle, it cannot be touched. The player whose top lies in one of the holes, when it stops spinning, wins the game.

5. Peji Yuskiskita Kuteni

In this game, grass is wrapped around a piece of bark until it begins to look like a large egg. The grass ball is used by throwing it into the air. Everyone shoots at it with bows and arrows. There is a small mark on the ball which is called the heart and everyone tries to hit it. The one who sends his arrow nearest the heart gains the right to toss the ball into the air. The boy who hits the heart can throw the ball along the ground. This game is played for a long time, often until darkness comes.

6. Tokelecon Kin Eceleconni

This game is like follow-the-leader. First, the leader is chosen. Then one of them says he will be second, another third, and another fourth, and so on. Then, following the leader, they all walk in single file in, out, and over the various obstacles. As soon as one misses his footing or falls, he is out of the game. The last one is made the leader for a new game.
Sometimes, when there are not enough trees or gullies to make the obstacle course difficult, the leader will jump or turn somersaults. No matter what the leader does, all the rest have to follow.

7. Unkcela Kutepi

All the boys gather on the prairie. One of them is a fast runner who takes a stick and thrusts it into a cactus. Then, he runs around holding the cactus above his head. While he does this, the others will shoot at it. When one of the boys hits the cactus, the boy who is carrying it will chase him. When he catches him, the game ends.

8. Tahcaha Kiciyapi

In this game, some boys bring deer bones and some bring ashes or dust. Those with the deer bones act as deer, and the rest will chase them. The ashes and dust are used for shooting at the deer. They pretend that the clouds of dust which arise, are coming from a gun. If a deer is hit, then it is dressed and skinned on the spot. Then, the hide is carried home. (the hide is a blanket)

9. Hosnasna Kicunpi

For this hopping game, a starting place is set up. One of the boys hops as far as he can and returns. When he is hopping, he cannot hold his foot with his hand. Then, the other boys try to go farther than the first one. When they get tired on one foot, they can change feet. This will make them very tired, but it strengthens their legs.

V.

Games Played By Girls

Lakota girls have games they play for fun. In their games, they can learn the value of the Lakota way of life. Girl's games often imitate what their mothers and older sisters do and what they will grow up to do - take care of the home and children.

1. Tipi Cikala

The girls will make their own toy tipis. They vary in size from little ones to others that are large enough to enter.
2. Hoksiounpa Skatapi

Lakota girls love to play with dolls. The dolls are sometimes made of wood, but usually they are made of buckskin and stuffed with hair. The faces are painted and the dolls are dressed with either male or female clothing. Often, the little girls will make baby carriers, like those used by their mothers. They carry their dolls on their backs, just like mother.

3. Hepaslohanpi

This is a game played in winter on ice or snow. The hewahukezala (horned javelin) is about four or five feet long. It is thinner at one end than at the other. A tip of elk horn about four to eight inches long is fastened to the larger end. Then, the javelin is thrown so that it will glide over the snow or ice. The girl whose javelin slides the farthest wins the game. There is no limit to the number of players.

VI. Games Played By Both Boys and Girls

There are a number of games that either boys or girls can play or that both can play together. There is no special season for these games, they can be played anytime.

1. Tegleska

This is a game played by Lakota boys and girls together. At the beginning of the game, the girls scatter around a field or some open area. Then, the boys call out four times: "Kill the buffalo". After this, the girls drop on the ground. The last girl to fall is the buffalo. Or if a girl falls before the call is made four times, then she is the buffalo.

All the other girls surround the "buffalo" and skin her. They take hold of her and lift her up four times. The girls will divide her up into parts. These parts are given to the players; the head, a leg, an arm until everyone has something. Then, the game is over.

2. Hosisipa

Both boys and girls play this game of handpinching. Each player grasps the fold of the skin on the back of another player's hand using the thumb and the forefinger. This is done until all the hands are connected in a pile.
While the hands are swung back and forth, all the players shout the word "hoshishipa. The first person to let go is tickled so hard that he can't stop laughing. All during the game, each player uses the other three fingers of his hand to tickle the hand of the other person. While they are swinging the pile of hands back and forth they continuously lower them until they touch the ground. Then, the game is over.

3. Cap Onaskiskita

This game of "trampling on the beaver" is usually played by both Lakota boys and girls. Each of the players gathers his blanket around his neck in a roll. The one who is the beaver lies on the ground with his blanket around himself. The others form a circle and walk around him chanting "Cap Onaskiskita! Cap Onaskiskita! As soon as there is a break in the singing, the beaver quickly gets up and chases the others. Whoever he catches has to come and lie down in the middle of the circle. The game will continue until all have been caught.

4. Wayaka Kiciyazapi Skatapi

Either boys or girls may play this game. In the beginning, two sides are formed. Each side tries to capture the players on the other side. The person who is captured must remain just where he has been captured. When all the players on one side are captured, then the game is over.

5. Napayuskiskitapi Skatapi

Sometimes a boy or girl will take a cord and tie it in a very complicated way, so that the ends of the cord cannot be seen. Then, he will ask someone else to find the ends. At other times, the player will go to a tree that has it bark stripped off or has smooth bark. Here he will make marks all over the tree, with lines crossing each other everywhere. Then, he will ask someone to find the ends of the lines. This can also be done in snow or dust.

6. Hinhankaga Skatapi

This game is called the ghost game. The children build a small lodge or tipi a short distance from the village. Then, all the children, except one, gather in the lodge or tipi. One of them whitens his face and puts red coloring around his eyes and comes scratching on the lodge or tipi.
Conclusion

The Lakota people played a variety of games. Each age group of men, women, children had their own games. All the games were quite simple and required little in the way of preparation to play.

Although the games were played for fun and great enjoyment was gained, the games also taught very important values of Lakota life.

Among the values learned, perhaps, risk was the most important. It showed in how people dealt with each other and the situations around them. Risk was the values at the root of the call to greatness issued by other people, by tribal leaders, and in emergencies.
