ABSTRACT

Over 2,500 U.S. and 60 Canadian schools provided data for this report on post secondary institutions offering programs in motion picture, still photography, and graphic arts instruction. Included are tables summarizing program-related data such as enrollment, institutions offering programs, and degrees offered. Also included is a directory of those institutions offering instruction in these three areas, organized by state and degrees awarded. The information was collected in 1970-71, and individuals will have to contact the institutions to be certain of current offerings, but the publication should be useful as a guide to counselors, students, and administrators planning school programs. INTRODUCTION

"Where can I study motion pictures, still photography, and graphic arts beyond the high school level?" This question is of primary concern to many students planning their futures, to guidance counselors helping students, and to administrators determining the appropriate curriculum and programs for their schools. A Survey of Motion Picture, Still Photography, and Graphic Arts Instruction was developed to help answer that question.

Dr. C. William Horrell, Professor, Department of Cinema and Photography, Southern Illinois University, Carbondale, Illinois 62901, analyzed the responses from over 2500 United States and 60 Canadian schools. Supported in part by Eastman Kodak Company, Dr. Horrell compiled the material for this edition of the survey. The survey cannot be all inclusive. Some institutions have undoubtedly been overlooked, while others known to be teaching photography did not reply to contacts. This publication, therefore, is intended as a guide.

Curriculum changes occur constantly. The material in this survey was collected in the fall of 1970 and the early part of 1971. When anyone is interested in attending a specific institution, he should write to that institution to make sure it offers the instruction he wants before he makes any definite plans. Also, a student should verify with the institution that they are actually teaching the courses and offer the program they say they are in this survey. Understandably, Dr. Horrell and Kodak cannot answer such inquiries, nor evaluate course offerings, nor make comparative judgments of institutions or their courses.

Every so often we are asked if Eastman Kodak Company conducts a photographic school; it does not. Photographic instruction is given only to those people involved in the sale of Kodak products.

We would appreciate any information that would amplify or correct the data that follow. Write to Eastman Kodak Company, Dept. 642, Rochester, N.Y. 14650.

MOTION PICTURE, STILL PHOTOGRAPHY, AND GRAPHIC ARTS INSTRUCTION 1970 -71 by Dr. C. William Horrell

There has been a population explosion in Motion Picture, Still Photography, and Graphic Arts education in the past six years. In 1963 a survey¹ showed there were about 14,000 students enrolled in photography courses and in 1967-68 the figure rose to over 26,000.² In 1969-70 there were almost 79,000 students who were reported to be enrolled in motion picture, still photography, and/or graphic arts classes. This is more than 560 percent increase in six years. In 1970-71 there were 627 colleges and universities in the United States and Canada reported to be offering one or more courses in the above fields of instruction, compared to 440 in 1968--an increase of 42 percent. A part of the apparent increase may be due to the larger number of teachers reached by the 1970 questionnaires, the addition of graphic arts instruction, and by the inclusion of Canada in the survey for the first time. Other highlights of this report:

- Motion picture, still photography, and graphic arts courses and programs have increased steadily in recent years. Some 1008 departments have increased their course offerings during the past three years. All but five states reported an increase or the same number of schools teaching in one or more of the above fields since 1968.

- Programs leading to a degree in motion pictures, still photography, and graphic arts have more than tripled in the past three years, from 107 in 1968 to 387 in 1971. The greatest number of graduates went into the printing and publishing business. There are over 3063 full-time teachers teaching in the above academic fields.

- The courses are generally taught as a means of communication, and techniques are an important part of the courses. The greatest strength of the courses and programs is the student interest. The greatest weaknesses are characterized as lack of the following: space, equipment, staff, and funds for materials.

- The number of students who graduate from the associate, bachelor, master, and doctoral programs with majors in these courses has significantly increased in the last three years from 761 in 1967 to 3722 in 1970.

DETAILS OF THE SURVEY

NOTE: In the following tables, the abbreviations MP, SP, and GA stand for Motion Picture, Still Photography, and Graphic Arts respectively.

In compiling Table I, we found only five states reporting to have fewer schools teaching motion pictures, still photography, and/or graphic arts in 1970 than were teaching courses in these fields in 1967. Seven states reported the same number of schools teaching in the above three fields. All the rest showed an increase.

Table II shows how motion picture, still photography, and graphic arts instruction is concentrated, and also how it is spread through 68 different academic areas. Art departments have taken over the lead which was held by journalism in the 1967 survey. It should be pointed out that in many schools, such subjects are taught in more than one department.

Departments were asked to indicate the number of credit hours offered in various types of motion pictures, still photography, and graphic arts. The results are shown in Table III. When a department reported quarter hours, we converted them into semester hours for consistency and ease of comparison.

DEGREE OFFERINGS

Academic degrees with a major in motion pictures, still photography and graphic arts range from a two-year associate to the Doctor of Philosophy. The degree offerings have more than quadrupled in the last three years. The number of departments offering a major in the three disciplines above are shown in Table V.

The number of semester hours required for a major in motion picture, still photography, and graphic arts varies considerably from 3 to 10 hours to over 71 hours. This distribution can be seen in Table VI.

It is good to know that there are student assistance programs available for needy and capable students. Table X shows the number of students receiving assistance in 1970 - 71.

If a student finds he qualifies for assistance, he should apply to the department or school to which he plans to go.

One of the questions often asked is, "What equipment will I need and how much will my photographic materials cost me?" This is a question which would be difficult to answer since it will vary from course to course, from department to department, and from student to student. In an effort to give some indication, the question was asked of the respondents, "What equipment and materials does your department furnish your students?" The results are shown in Table XI.

GUIDING PHILOSOPHIES OF EDUCATION

Each respondent was asked to check his philosophy in teaching motion pictures, still photography, and/or graphic arts in a series of common goals. Although it is very difficult to express one's philosophy in a few short words, Table XII does present an interesting range of expression regarding teachers' goals.

HISTORY AND FUTURE PLANS

A majority (549) indicated they had added new facilities, while 229 said they had not added new facilities within the past three years.

Almost all departments (597) are planning to expand their course offerings. Only eight indicated they plan to reduce their course offerings in the future.

NUMBER OF GRADUATES

In 1967 there were only 791 students who were graduated with a degree with major emphasis in photography. These graduates included associates, bachelors, masters, and doctorates. In 1969-70 there were 3722 graduates as shown in Table XV. This represents almost a 470 percent increase in just 3 years.

Total	3,722

It is obvious from the figure in the last category (above) that many teachers and administrators are not in touch with their graduates. The printing and publishing business appears to be absorbing a large proportion of the graphic arts graduates. If we total the three teaching areas of motion pictures, still photography, and graphic arts, we find teaching--with 774--to be the next field into which the graduates are going. It does seem surprising that the sales and field engineering is at the bottom of the list.

What positions are departmental graduates taking? Students graduating from art departments which teach motion pictures, still photography, and graphic arts were taking a variety of positions. Twenty-four reported going into free-lance photography, 24 to graduate school, 16 into fine-arts photography, 16 into teaching still photography, 14 into advertising illustration, and 13 into the armed forces.

Of graduates from journalism departments, 30 took jobs with newspapers, 14 went into graduate school, 13 were free-lancing, 11 in television, and 9 went into magazine photography.

The departments of Industrial Arts and Technology said 34 of their graduates took positions of teaching graphic arts, 13 joined the printing and publishing business, 9 were teaching still photography, and 9 went to graduate school.

Graduates from photography departments reported 22 to be in free-lance, 19 went to graduate school, 17 to the armed forces, 16 to newspapers, 12 went into advertising illustration, 11 into television, and 11 into teaching still photography.

Those graduates from communications departments reported that 9 went into newspaper work, 8 into television, 7 to graduate school, and 6 reported teaching motion picture production.

DISCUSSION

How can a department report they have a major when they offer only 3 to 10 semester hours of course work in their major field? This writer pointed out in 1968 that there was a need for some organization or group to set up an accrediting agency for schools offering a major in photography. Three years later, in 1971, there is still no agency which has been set up to evaluate and to say to a student that this school or university has met the minimum standards of: faculty, facilities, and curriculum for a major in motion pictures, still photography, and/or graphic arts. The Professional Photographers of America is beginning an accreditation program, and it is hoped that this will be a start toward setting up the minimum standards for a department offering a major in at least still photography.

There are a few departments that are offering undergraduate minors in motion pictures, still photography, and graphic arts. It may be added that the departments have all the students they can care for, who want to major in the fields, and cannot meet the demands for students who want only a minor.

The philosophies of teaching motion pictures, still photography, and graphic arts have remained basically the same since the 1968 study. The teaching of these courses, as a means, medium, or tool of communication is the number one goal, followed by the category of techniques being an important part of the course.

Although this study did not go into the problems of getting into a department of motion pictures, still photography, and graphic arts, there are many reports that departments are limiting enrollments and have waiting lists for students who want to major in one of the three fields. It may not be a question of where to go to school but what department will be open. A student should check with the school or department to determine the entrance requirements and if there will be a place for him in the face of enrollment curtailments.

The chances are that a student will have to furnish some of his own equipment and materials if he is going to major in one of the fields. Before considering a school, a student should check with the department to find out what equipment and materials will be furnished for him and which he will be expected to supply.

Where are 3722 graduates going to find jobs? The answer is that probably not all of them will find jobs in their field of academic preparation. All of those studying in the departments of journalism and art, for example, do not go into positions in their respective fields. It appears to this writer that if a student expects to make a living in the field in which he is preparing, he should have a rather broad background which will give him a foundation to move into one of the several positions that may be open to him upon graduation.
