The writing of job descriptions is a universal management practice in every type of organization. Whatever the size or type of library, the need exists for written descriptions of every job performed. There are no standard of job descriptions available because work duties differ among libraries. Tasks are grouped differently and jobs are given different titles. The organization of a small library, for example, is quite different from that of the large library having a high degree of specialization. Total work performed in operating different types of libraries is delegated in widely varying ways. This is a fact of librarianship and probably cannot be avoided. The job descriptions presented herein are offered as examples for library directors to use as guidelines in drafting statements to fit their own particular operations. In total, the descriptions attempt to cover most of the major work activities performed in libraries, whether they be in public, college, university, or special libraries. Although the statements were prepared for use in a small college library, they are equally adaptable to any type of library. It is highly recommended that a unique job description be written for every job in every library. Professional management requires the use of such tools in the proper allocation and division of work. PREFACE

The writing of job descriptions is a universal management practice in every type of organization. Whatever the size or type of library, the need exists for written descriptions of every job performed.

There are no standard job descriptions available because work duties differ among libraries. Tasks are grouped differently and jobs are given different titles. The organization of a small library, for example, is quite different from that of the large library having a high degree of specialization. Total work performed in operating different types of libraries is delegated in widely varying ways. This is a fact of librarianship and probably cannot be avoided.

The job descriptions presented herein are offered as examples for library directors to use as guidelines in drafting statements to fit their own particular operations. In total, the descriptions attempt to cover most of the major work activities performed in libraries, whether they be in public, college, university, or special libraries. Although the statements were prepared for use in a small college library, they are equally adaptable to any type of library.

It is highly recommended that a unique job description be written for every job in every library. Professional management requires the use of such tools in the proper allocation and division of work.

PUBLICATIONS FOR THE LIBRARIAN ....................... 42
The job description is a written statement of an individual job and includes the major duties, responsibilities, work performed, and equipment used. It is ordinarily based upon the significant findings of a job analysis.

General make-up of job descriptions vary among different libraries. In most cases, a summary of the job, the work performed, and the qualifications is generally considered essential. A job title is simply a common name for a job. It is often inadequate in identifying the job satisfactorily. The title plus the job content is necessary for accurate identification.

Job descriptions are important for several reasons. They are useful in bringing about better organizational understanding within a particular library. The duties, responsibilities, and qualifications required of the successful employee on a particular job are clearly pointed out. They identify the job and make its content known to all.

They also help in selecting persons best fitted for the requirements of the job, acquaint the new employee with the job to which he is being assigned, and crystallize scattered information into a clear job picture. They are especially helpful in personnel selection work, transfers, and promotions.

Search committees are often used in the process of filling key library positions in college and university libraries. These committees are made up of faculty members, administrators, students, and sometimes professional librarians. It is a fact that faculty members ordinarily have little or no knowledge of librarianship, of the work involved in developing a resource center, of the basic criteria for evaluating a collection, of the sources for recruiting librarians, of the importance of the professional MLS degree, or even knowledge of how to use a research library. Too frequently these individuals select nonprofessional candidates (persons without the professional library degree) to fill key positions. A written job description is needed to help correct this malpractice.

JOB TERMINOLOGY

Jobs are an important responsibility for every library director. A basic knowledge of job terminology is essential. Given below are explanations of 10 important terms relating to the preparation of job descriptions and the organization of work in libraries.

1. Task, Position, Job -
A "task" is created whenever human effort must be exerted for a specific purpose. When enough tasks accumulate to justify the employment of a worker, a "position" has been created. A position is an aggregation of duties, tasks, and responsibilities requiring the services of one individual. The number of positions in a library organization is the same as the number of workers. A "job" is a group of positions which are identical with respect to their major or significant tasks. The job is impersonal; the position is personal.

2. Job Analysis -
A detailed examination of a job to determine the duties, responsibilities, mental and physical requirements, working conditions, required tools and equipment, relationships to other jobs, and specialized requirements necessary for its performance. It involves observation of the job and the reporting of facts obtained in conversation with employees, supervisors, and others who have information of value.

3. Job Classification -
A systematic arrangement of jobs into groups, categories, or classes according to the relative requirements necessary for their performance. It is a procedure involving the grouping of jobs having similar characteristics.
4. Job Content -
The duties, functions, and responsibilities comprising a given job.

5. Job Description -
A written description of the major operations, responsibilities, skill requirements, and duties of an individual job.

6. Job Evaluation -
A systematic procedure for determining the relative worth of each individual job in a library organization. It makes use of job factors (or key jobs) for comparison and measurement. The process seeks to provide for a fair and equitable wage structure.

7. Job Factor -
Any characteristic of a job which influences its relative worth or value and provides a basis for the selection, training, placement, and compensation of library personnel.

8. Job Ranking -
A method of job evaluation in which all jobs in a library organization are compared with each other and ranked in order of importance. Ordinarily, the judgment of qualified persons is used for ranking.

9. Job Specification -
A written statement of the abilities and personal requirements for a job.

10. Job Title -
A distinctive, designative term for a particular job.

Work simplification is an important activity deserving the continuing attention of every library director. This is a matter of finding the most economical use of human effort, materials, time, machines, procedures, and space so that easier and better ways of doing work can be employed. Thomas Edison said it another way: "There's a way to do it better - find it."

Analyzing and reviewing job duties with the purpose in mind of writing job descriptions can bring about considerable improvement.
in service, production, and use of manpower. Job descriptions must, of course, be tailor-made to satisfy the specific requirements of each library. Hopefully, the descriptions given in this manual will not only save the director's time and assist him in preparing thorough descriptions, but also trigger an idea or two that will result in eliminating, modifying, or re-combining certain tasks.

Generally speaking, the larger the library the greater the degree of specialization. In a small college library, for example, personnel at the Circulation Desk may have the responsibility for a large variety of tasks, including the filing of catalog cards. In a large library this work is usually done by Technical Services personnel. Everyone in the small library participates in book selection, whereas a specialized group of people usually handles this work in the large library. The cataloging of audiovisual materials is another example. Depending upon size of staff, the work may be performed by professional catalogers, audiovisual personnel, library technicians, trained nonprofessionals, or by student assistants.

Despite these differences, all libraries are alike in much of the work that must be performed. The tasks are simply grouped differently. It is the function of library directors and supervisors to originate more efficient and less costly ways of doing things, and to devise standards and controls to see that important objectives are achieved. This is the real meaning of efficiency - to utilize human energy so that essential tasks are completed according to standards in the least possible time and space, and with the least possible effort. Carefully written job descriptions help librarians to achieve this goal.

An important point to remember when discussing the organization of work in any library is that the job is created first. Qualified personnel are then selected and hired to fill that job. It is not good management practice to hire a person first and then attempt to design or create a job for him. Personnel should be hired to fill established library positions as called for by written job descriptions.

EXAMPLES OF LIBRARY JOB DESCRIPTIONS

Descriptions given in the following pages cover jobs in the organizational areas of administration, cataloging, acquisitions, circulation, reference, and audiovisual media. Statements covering library work areas for student assistants are also given.
JOB TITLE:

Library Director (Professional)

1. A Master's Degree in the field of Library Science. A second Master's Degree in another subject field is preferred and desired.

2. A minimum of eight years of experience in the field of professional librarianship, administration, and teaching. This experience should have been gained from time spent in each of the major areas of librarianship, rather than in just one area.

RESPONSIBILITIES AND DUTIES:

The Library Director is responsible to the Vice-President for Academic Affairs for the following activities:

1. Assembling and organizing library materials and resources needed by the college, its faculty and student body; organizing these materials for use when and where they are needed; carrying out plans and objectives of the library; and keeping the faculty informed of library resources and services.

2. Establishing procedures, policies, and systems that make for efficient library operation.

3. Planning, organizing, coordinating, and measuring the work activities of all library personnel.

4. Hiring, training, and supervising all library personnel, representing the staff in contacts with the administration, and assuming overall accountability for work performed in all areas, including:

   A. Administration - Directing the educational role of the library; appointing and instructing personnel; purchasing supplies and equipment; preparing various types of reports relating to library operations; planning library services and layout; working with administrators, faculty, students, and the Library Committee; participating in professional organizations; communicating orally and through written correspondence; selecting and screening the purchase of library materials; assuring proper maintenance of library facilities; cooperating with other libraries and community organizations; planning future needs of the library in the areas of finance, building, equipment, staff; etc.; keeping informed of changes in the curriculum, methods of teaching, and administrative re-organizations which could affect the library.

B. Acquisitions - Ordering books, periodicals, recordings, filmstrips, tapes, film loops, supplies, and other library materials; verifying bibliographical information for ordering; checking bibliographies against library holdings; accounting for gifts; maintaining accurate acquisitions records.

C. Cataloging - Cataloging and classifying all types of learning media and library materials according to professional standards; searching for catalog information; typing, revising, and filing catalog cards; preparing books and materials for the shelves; maintaining cataloging statistics.

D. Circulation - Advising patrons on general use of the library; preparing periodic reports on circulation operations; developing and implementing circulation procedures covering reserve books, fines, overdues, etc.; creating exhibits and displays; participating in library inventory.

E. Reference - Answering reference questions; preparing bibliographies; securing inter-library loans; teaching and promoting use of the library; selecting reference books to maintain a current and comprehensive reference collection.

F. Periodicals - Maintaining accurate records and complete runs of periodical subscriptions; preparing renewal orders for subscriptions; recommending and ordering microfilms of periodicals; sending selected periodicals to the bindery; contacting jobbers and publishers when subscriptions are not received; assisting patrons in the use of indexes and periodicals for research purposes; cataloging, processing, and maintaining material in the pamphlet collection.
G. Audiovisual - Acquiring, organizing, and promoting the use of instructional media and equipment; coordinating film, recording, video, photography and other non-print activities.

5. Assisting in development of the annual library budget.

6. Cooperating as a team member with the library staff in performing any professional or non-professional duty essential to the achievement of efficient library operations.

LENGTH OF CONTRACT:

The Library Director is employed on a twelve-month basis, with four weeks for vacation.
