Epsilon Delta Epsilon is fortunate in that many of its members are among the most honored individuals in Distributive Education. Some of those individuals are responsible for the publishing of this bibliography. Special recognition and appreciation is extended to Dr. Jerome Leventhal, Temple University, Editor. The Fraternity also extends its appreciation to Professor Morton Shenker, Trenton State College, and to Dr. Marvin Hirshfeld, Temple University, for their guidance concerning the publication.

Moreover, the deadline could have never been achieved if it was not for the hard work of Miss Betty Schwartz, National Recording Secretary, and Mr. Leon Jozwiak, National Corresponding Secretary. My personal thanks is extended to Miss Fay Li, Professor Shenker's personal secretary for her time and kindness.

Epsilon Delta Epsilon sincerely hopes that the bibliography acts as a functional guide in the development of Distributive Educators throughout the country.

Specialists engaged in curriculum development have traditionally spent much time in reviewing books that may be used as guides in constructing the curriculum or training plan.

A more contemporary perspective dictates that the emphasis be placed on the learner so that the curriculum is more relevant as well as humanistic. The specialist should spend a major portion of available time in determining the nature of the student and developing curriculum which meets contemporary criteria. To help facilitate this, research has been done in the area of new books and writings in the area of marketing and distribution.

Those who wish to develop curriculum for marketing and distributive education may use this Resource Bibliography and save time researching publications, so that they may develop realistic and meaningful curriculum. Teachers have difficulty in following the new publications which appear in great quantity each year. Publications are included from 1968-1971. In cases where there were few publications for a given area, listings do include earlier dates.
