RE: Bibliography for Professional Development

This Bibliography is meant for professional use, that is, to let you know about the most recently published books about North American Indians.

The Appendix of this Bibliography contains a list of publishers and their addresses. Most of these publishers are from the United States. It is not possible to write directly to the publisher to obtain copies of these publications so we are attaching a list of Canadian wholesalers from whom you may obtain these publications. We have placed an asterisk beside the wholesalers that we recommend.

INTRODUCTION

This Bibliography is designed to aid professional development in the field of Education. The Bibliography attempts to categorize and separate fields of interest.

The books selected are those which were printed during the last three years.

Not all the books are contained within the Indian and Northern Curriculum Resources Library. The publishers are provided so that the interested party may personally obtain the materials desired.

The second portion, Appendix A, is a list of publishers and their addresses. The reader may wish to contact them for more information within their field of interest.

The organization of this Bibliography is such that it should make available the most recent books to your existing library.
ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

This Bibliography was amassed as a guide to enable a person to find, categorically, information concerning Indians and Eskimos of America.

The compilation of the Bibliography was done by Mrs. Helen Fehr. The stenographic work was done by Mrs. Beryl McCullough.

Assimilation

Culture

"The author maintains that the present conflict between generations is unique, without a past parallel, and worldwide. She "establishes models of three kinds of societies and their methods of transition from one generation to the other. The oldest she calls 'postfigurative' in which grandchildren, parents, and children exist together. Wisdom resides in the old... The 'cofigurative,' like the United States before 1940... was a society in which adults and children alike learned from their peers, a society of mobility and improvisation. This society we are still trying to perpetuate after its day is past. What we now require and what Mead... believes is coming is the 'prefigurative' society, worldwide in which the role of parents... is only to nurture the child, to be custodians of the world and, the child until he is old enough to teach us." (Harper)

Stenhouse, Laurence. Culture & Education. 1968. 5.00 Weybright.

"Stenhouse, in perceptive wide-ranging discussions, clarifies and illuminates many of the problems which are raised by the consideration of the very nature of culture, its transmission, and the role which formally structured education plays in the achievement of particular ends... This is an abstruse investigation by a highly cultivated mind into the socio-anthropological attributes of culture and the role of education as the agency of transmission. Recommended only for specialized collections in cultural anthropology." (Choice)

Educational Anthropology

The "Berenson Professor of Human Relations at Boston University believes that a sense of tragedy should be an important educational concern. He traces the influence of tragedy in art, literature, drama, and poetry, and shows its relationship to man down through the centuries. He (argues) . . . the need for a sense of tragedy in modern man, and (suggests) its importance in philosophies like existentialism. . . . He outlines ways to bring people to grips with tragedy, such as through the use of the T (or training) Group." (Library J) These essays have appeared previously in such publications as Daedalus, Journal of Social Issues and Adult Education.

This volume of eleven essays by educators "considers the ends of education -- the fundamental purposes for which schools exist. A nation transmits its ideology to new generations through its schools. In the opinion of the educators represented here, the interdependence of nations today demands that this ideology be broad enough to include those universal values as truth common to mankind as a whole. Part One, in essays by Robert Ulich, J. R. Seely, and G. N. Shuster, considers whether such values as truth and justice are good for all men everywhere and asks whether wisdom, like knowledge, can be taught. Part Two, in essays by Barbara Biber, J. I. Goodlad, E. S. Johnson, and H. M. Kallen, analyzes the teaching of human values in pre-school, elementary, secondary, and higher education. In Part Three, P. F. Brandwein, Anne Roe, Van Meter Ames and Ulich explore the relevance of the idea of mankind in particular fields of study—the sciences, behavioral sciences, aesthetics, and the humanities."

A Boston Schoolteacher, author of How Children Fail (BRD 1965) "describes the ways in which bright or normal children tackle learning by themselves, experimentally and as a game. He feels teachers should be patient, let children talk more in school, give them time to figure things out, not press or correct them... This natural approach to learning can begin at 16 months, and, in due course, extend to sports, art, math almost any subject."

"As a teacher of the Maori children in New Zealand, the author found it necessary to experiment with new and different teaching methods to prepare her pupils for the difficult transition at a relatively early age from a simple, rather primitive culture to that of the complex modern world. The first half of the book is an explanation, a justification, of her Creative Teaching Scheme, an organic process based on the intensity of the child's interest, and of her Maori reader series which utilizes the Key Vocabulary of the native youngsters rather than an artificial vocabulary of faraway England or the United States. Her methods are illustrated by brief case studies. The second half consists of stories of the Maori children, their families, their daily activities, their recreation, but most of all, their school life."

Indian - Origin

"This essay concerns the debate over the origins of the American Indians in the two centuries before it became distinguished from the question of the origins of their cultures, and before it began to take on the characteristics of a scientific dispute....Two clearly distinguished traditions have emerged from my investigations: the Acostan and the Garcian." (Introdr.) Bibliography Index.

In this book the author sets forth her theory concerning "the origin of Mexican and Central and South American civilizations: These Indian cultures, the author suggests, did not spring up independently but as a result of pre-Columbian transatlantic contact between the Old World and the New. The legend of Quetzalcoatl was cherished by the Aztecs, Mayas and Incas....Where the legend once flourished, archaeologists have unearthed colossal stone negroid heads; reliefs depicting priests with semitic features; indications of snake, sun, and cat cults....All these disparate elements were combined in one ancient civilization -- the Phoenician." (Publisher's note) Bibliographical notes. Index.

This book describes the civilization of the Paleo-Indians, ancestors of the modern Indians, who lived on this continent some 40,000 years ago, and traces the evolution of their cultures. "Grades three to four." (Library J).

Indians - Religion & Mythology

Krickerberg, Walter, et. al. Pre-Columbian American Religions
The four German authors survey the spectrum of religions, and the modern research on them, before the coming of the European. Krickeberg and Trimborn, both archeologists, survey, respectively, Mesoamerica (southern Mexico and north Central-America) and south Central-America and the Andean region. Social anthropologists Muller treats North America and his colleague Zeries deals with the remainder of the southern continent and the West Indies. Originally published in German in 1961 under the title Die Religionen der Menschheit.

Indians, Treatment of

Indians in Literature

Indians

Leonard, Jonathan N. Ancient America (Great Ages of Man Ser.) (IL). (gr. 7 up) 1967. 6.95. Time Life

This volume focuses on the high civilizations of Middle America and South America, including those of the Central Mexican Mayan and Peruvian people. The author has drawn upon "the testimony of the early Spanish chroniclers and missionaries, the... travelers, the sociologists and especially the observations of the modern archeologists and anthropologists." (Intro.) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

Indians of North America

Catline, George. Letters & Notes on the Manners, Customs & Conditions of the North American Indians, 2 Vols. 1970. pap. 2.50 each Dover

"If this book is indicative of Deloria's methods, he's more interested in results than in being tactful. Nauseated by the traditional Indian image, he asserts the worth if not the dignity of the redman and blasts the political, social, and religious forces that perpetuate the Little Big Horn and wigwam stereotyping of his people... Although Deloria's subject is serious, he approaches it non-formally. In fact, he devotes a chapter to Indian humor in addition to generously sprinkling anecdotes and one-liners into his commentary." J.A. Phillips

A "Professor of Anthropology at Indiana University has divided all of the hemisphere between the Arctic and Panama into seventeen culture areas. Thirty-seven maps and more than twenty-five... chapters composed largely of trait lists covering subsistence patterns, clothing, housing, religion, education, property, government, rank, social organization, etc., provide... evidence for the intra-areal similarities among tribes and the inter-areal differences the author has postulated in his introduction to the work." (N.Y. Times Bk. Rev.). Bibliography. Index.

Farb, Peter. Man's Rise to Civilization as Shown by the Indians of North America from Primeval Times to the Coming of the Industrial State. (IL). 1968. 10.00 Dutton

The author's "two principal themes are native North American cultures and social evolution, with a leitmotif of introductory anthropological theory interwoven throughout the book's chapters. Most of its pages are taken up with ... descriptions of ten American Indian societies presented in order of social complexity from Shoshonean hunters and collectors of the Great Basin to the highly evolved Aztec state. After thus outlining the ... range of variation of Indian societies and placing them within evolutionary categories, the author considers their histories, as evidenced by archeology, physical anthropology, and linguistics. A final section covers the cultural and physical destruction of the American Indian by European settlers." (Sat. R) Bibliography. Index.

Indians of North America

Gridley, Marion E. Indian Legends of American Scenes. 3.50 Donohue.

Haines, Francis. The Buffalo. 1970. 7.95 T.Y. Crowell

The author "relates the history of the buffalo from prehistoric times up to the 20th. Century. He emphasizes the buffalo's habits, primitive man's hunt for the animal, the introduction of the horse to the Plains tribes, and the flowering of Indian culture." (Library J) Annotated Bibliography. Index.

Hough, Henry W. Development of Indian Resources. 1967. 4.50; pap. 2.50 Green Mountain

This is a history of the American Indian from the earliest pre-Columbian migrations up to the present day. The book surveys the origins, migrations, cultures, religion, history, wars, adversities, and other aspects of the Indians' story, and clarifies the uncertainty of their tomorrow. Bibliography. Index.

"This is not a history but rather a guide book to Indian archaeology. Miss Marriott shows how an archeologist organizes a 'dig,' how he dates the objects found, and how the latter can be made to tell the story of a civilization. We are taken to a mound to see how the digging should be done and, just as important, how it should not be done. The book ends with advice for those who would like to dig, either as a career or as a hobby." (N.Y. Times Bk. R) State antiquities laws. Bibliography. Index. For age twelve and up.

Morey, Sylvester M. ed. Can The Redman Help The White Man. 1970. pap. 1.95 Gilbert Church

This is a "study of 10 Indian tribes: the Chipewyan Beothuk, Kuskovagamiut (Eskimo), Cahuilla Fox, Pawnee, Tlingit, Hopi, Iroquois and Natchez. An historical introduction precedes an explanation of the tribal culture: [with a] statement pertaining to the tribe's presentday condition ... A description of each tribe based upon such items as clothing, settlement pattern, household, economy, ceremonies, and life cycle follows in so far as ethnographic materials allow. The chapter on the Beothuk, for one, is much shorter than the one on the Iroquois. The final chapter points out 'various perspectives,' past and present, in American Indian life. Among the items treated: treaties, legislation, land, Federal policies, and pan-Indianism." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

Alaskan Eskimos. pap. 4.00. Chandler Pub.

"This well-conceived book is a synthesis of recent data from several investigators, collated with selected historical sources ... The evidence presented reinforces the current anthropological view that there is no single 'Eskimo culture' spread across the vast North American continent ... The book merits scholarly attention and should also attract a wide audience among public administrators, teachers, and others working in Alaska generally." V. I. Smith.

This volume is "intended as a general introduction ...[The first section contains] articles on archaeology, linguistics, and physical anthropology. The core of the volume consists of eight sections devoted to various aspects of Indian life arranged by culture areas (the Eskimo-Aleut Region, the Northern Hunters, the Basin-Plateau, the Northwest Coast, California, the Southwest, the Plains, and the Eastern Agriculturists) with a ... section on the Indian in the modern world." ABSTRACT Participants in the library Services Institute for Minnesota Indians compiled an annotated bibliography of materials about American Indians which had been evaluated from an Indian frame of reference. Materials were evaluated in terms of artistic quality, reader appeal, and potential contribution to the study of American Indians.
Included in the bibliography are over 500 entries representing library books classified by educational level, pamphlets, maps, slides, and records. Most of the materials were published since 1960, although some date back as far as the 1930's. Names and addresses of Indian craftsmen in Minnesota, contemporary Indian artists, museums with permanent exhibits of Indian artifacts, and speakers knowledgeable in phases of Indian affairs and history are also included. "Mountain Wolf Woman, a Winnebago Indian, was born in 1884 and lived to be seventy-five. In the last year of her life she was persuaded by Nancy Lurie, [an] ... anthropologist, to dictate her story to a tape recorder. She dictated two versions, one in Winnebago, one in English, and she and Mrs. Lurie discussed both versions and amplified them. The text is taken from these recordings." Sat. R.

Mrs. Ethel Brant Monture, a descendant of Joseph Brant has observed that Indians have been portrayed as murderers, "instead of looking at us as a people struggling to hold an identity in our land against the incoming hordes". Today's Indian is calling attention to the image which has been portrayed of him and is re-asserting the dignity and validity of his past.

Dr. E. Palmer Patterson of the History Department of the University of Waterloo has written the first complete and comprehensive history of the Canadian Indian. He has lived with these people, studied their traditional past and worries about their future. His book is written for everyone who shares his concern about the Canadian Indian.

In this anthology the reader "will find selections from the oral literature of the Indians in the northern Rocky Mountain region of the United States ... The tribes that have lived [there] since white men came to the region, according to John R. Swanton of the Bureau of American Ethnology, are the Nez Perces, Coeur d'Alenes, Flatheads, Kalispels (or Pend d'Oreilles), Kutenais, Shoshonis, Bannocks, Arapahos, Gros Ventres, Blackfeet, Assiniboines and Crows. Because the Sioux frequently came into Montana and Wyoming to make war or to hunt buffalo, two of their landscape legends are included." (Intro) Bibliography. Index.

Indians of North America - Medicine

"Vogel's discussion, not history, of American Indian Medicine is an amended and expanded version of his doctoral dissertation. It bears the common flaws of many such works. The first six chapters substitute rambling description for careful analysis ... Throughout, but especially in the first six chapters, there is excessive quotation; in many places it amounts to space filling ... As concrete description Vogel's book is adequate; as formal or abstract analysis it is weak ... [but it] provides a useful reference and is equipped with ... extensive footnotes."

Popular is in quotes because only the absence of citations, footnotes, detailed descriptions of apparatus and processes and exhaustive analysis separate this graceful work from the scientific category. Social Adjustment

This book "explores the basic organization of face-to-face interaction. It describes and analyzes the ordering and patterning of conduct that people tacitly cooperate to sustain whenever they are in one another's presence. It argues that, although this order is made up of small rulings regarding 'proper' conduct, failure to abide by these norms of social intercourse is at the core of what we call mental disorder." "This excellent volume by a fine anthropologist and American Indian specialist contributes to theories of social and cultural change in social anthropology and provides historical perspectives on Morgan, American anthropology, and American Indian problems ... There is no completely comparable book ... Although of greater interest to the anthropologist and American Indian specialist, the book is also for history or social science graduates and advanced undergraduates who have some anthropological background."

"Natural selection requires variety to provide alternatives. Those alternatives which are favored by circumstance will give directions of further development. Among humans, opportunities are provided by novelties created by geniuses with vision, and made effective (where they exist) by 'clusters' of such creators and their followers. To increase the number and effectiveness of such clusters is to provide the social inventions required to move our evolution in favorable directions. At each step there will be increased knowledge on the basis of which a new vision will be possible and a cluster of men will initiate a new favorable direction." (N. Y. Times Bk R) Bibliography.
