This guide is an attempt to identify generally the kinds of programs planned by college unions for the spring semester of 1973. The programs are classified by types of events: theater, concerts and artists series, films, recreation, theme series, short courses, food, travel, art exhibitions, outdoor programs, craft shops, building services and facilities, campus constituencies, resource materials, and institutional references. The author has added some introductory and evaluative comments about the programs. The guide is also aimed at identifying trends deduced from information from the various unions. The guide can be used as a checklist by staff and student committees for program expansion and as a source of new and sometimes innovative ideas. (Author/PG)

Foreword

Last summer in anticipation of the newly formed Core Consultation Team's first workshop in Region 12 at Wimberley, Texas, I wrote to a number of unions around the country with a request that they send to me samples of their brochures, flyers or other publicity materials devoted to program events on their campuses. My purpose was part of my homework for the team and our workshop. I was attempting to get as large a perspective as possible on what kinds of union programs were actually being presented. The response to my request for materials was gratifying. With extensive notes, I repaired to Texas to meet with Sue Clagett, Chairman of our Core Consultation Team from the Texas Union, Karen Simopoulos from L.S.U., and Ed Siggelkow of the University of Minnesota. In our planning sessions at the Texas Union prior to the Wimberley workshop, and to make an intense story short, my notes got typed and named, "The Whole Earth Catalog to College Union Programming." The W.E.C. was put to good purpose at Wimberley.

Cheered on by this success, I put out a call for more brochures this past September, and here are the collective results. An Uncommon Guide To College Union Programming (or the U.G., as we call it) is intended to identify generally what kinds of programs are on the boards (or have been in the past year or so) or are planned for the spring semester of '73. These programs are classified, as you can see from the index, as to types of events. I have added some introductory and evaluative comments written as a generalist in college union programming.

The U.G., is also aimed at identifying trends deduced from information from the various unions and from my personal reading, observations, experiences and conclusions. The Guide can be used as a checklist or yardstick by staff and student committees for program expansion and as a source of new and sometimes innovative ideas. The Guide's programming materials are enhanced, I trust, by current examples from the media, arts, social issues, and recreation items. There are also some new program resources and approaches suggested that perhaps some of you may not have used previously.

You are encouraged to use these materials as a base of some of our discussions in the Core Team's workshops, and all readers are encouraged to take this paper home and give the staff and student program committee chairmen the appropriate sections for ideas, references, and exchange of opinions. (I should be very interested in hearing yours and their reactions.) You might wish to use a three-ring binder to maintain the Guide so that you may add your own materials to the appropriate section in the margins and on the backs of the pages. Bear in mind, please, that the U.G. has a good sampling numerically but may be biased by my choices of schools selected for input. I aimed for input from schools on a wide geographic distribution and from unions where the programs were known to be good. Somehow the study got limited to the United States, for no good reason. However, I have accumulated about 150 pieces of mail which have some interesting, marvelous, and, occasionally, innovative program events.

Unions, of course, have press deadlines and calendar schedules to meet in relation to producing publicity materials; consequently, I have missed the spontaneous programs which didn't make calendars or special collections of printed materials. There isn't much evaluation of any of the individual union programs from their sources since the inclusion of such evaluation would constitute another sort of study. You might wish to write to a particular union if an offering of theirs is of particular interest.

Anyway, I hope the Guide will be interesting, helpful reading, and a propelling force to encourage more programming on your campus for the following reasons. I call these reasons "union musts" none of which are mutually exclusive:

1. to help make classroom learning more meaningful by assuming an important role in the educational process. How can we help make Asian Studies, American Studies, and Black Studies, for example, more significant and understandable through our programs?

2. to relate to the concerns of the immediate environment and the world around us through talking about social issues, learning about other cultures, and bringing in the best of our world as represented in the arts;

3. to help program participants to have more fun. Learning to have fun is becoming increasingly important for many reasons as we anticipate more and more leisure time. Americans have never been very good at relaxed sheer enjoyment;

4. to help various groups satisfy personal desires to learn something basic (and sometimes by doing in contrast to the abstraction of the classroom) in the pursuit of the arts and crafts or interests of an avocational or practical nature;

5. to enhance the usefulness of the physical facilities of the union and its service features such as food, drink, companionship and information;

6. to bring together as many interest groups as possible on a common meeting ground so that the participants interact and their values are challenged through exposure to other life styles;

7. to provide opportunities for service and leadership so that students can "turn on," help each other, and also participate in activities involving social responsibility.

What are some of the visible program trends surrounding the union "musts" referred to above? I would list:
(a) the short course on informal learning opportunity by doing instead of being a spectator;
(b) travel;
(c) outdoor excursions and the accompanying cultivation of skills in coping with and learning about the environment;
(d) the all-out fun program;
(e) further cultivation of film programming;
(f) video-tape activity, just beginning to take root.

Because of the abundance of existing materials on pop and rock artists and related concerts and programs, no effort has been made to include information in the Guide on these kinds of programs except incidentally as part of a series. Neither have volunteer service programs been discussed herein since these are apt to be very personalized according to the institution and community involved. No effort has been made to include information on student leadership training programs or programming structures.

THE THEATRE

The present offerings on Broadway, some of which will be available later on as road companies, tend to add to my growing anxiety about lack of student enthusiasm for the theatre. Of the small nucleus of students who still take advantage of the discount student arrangement available at my union, most apparently are drama majors or have courses in the dramatic arts. They, unlike some other students with whom I have talked, agree that the personal interaction that takes place between the cast and the audience—as opposed to such a process in film attendance—makes theatre going a more exciting medium than movies. The theatre, I guess, remains largely a middle-aged, expensive establishment medium whose offerings, with certain exceptions, don’t really attract students in great numbers now. What shows are possibly exceptions?

Among those shows which appear to be good prospects for the road, the winner of the Drama Critics Circle Award for the best musical of 1971-72, Two Gentlemen of Verona, a loose Shakespearean adaptation, is a good bet. A more recent musical, Pippin, has lively staging and character identification with the present student age group through its central character—the son of Charlemagne—and his fill of war, sex, and political revolution, as critic Walter Kerr sized up the character. The plaudits for That Championship Season are well deserved, and this account of the twentieth reunion of a basketball team and their coach will identify and help set forth many of the differences illustrated by the present generation gap. Both Grease a nostalgic and satiric piece of the rock and roll period of the fifties, and Widespell a rock musical, are on the road, recommended, and surviving.

Union programmers must feel generally a certain amount of frustration at not being able to (or at least in my case) attract more students to plays like Sleuth and No, No, Nanette, which I would swear they would like if they would only try them. The only show I caught last season with a sizeable number of students in the audience was Butterflies Are Free. A few weeks ago at a performance of Purlie, there were many black students present. Student reaction this season was interesting to a Philadelphia road company’s performance of One Flew Over The Cuckoo’s Nest, a dramatic adaptation of the Ken Kesey novel. In his first appearance on stage, the character drew applause rather than the star. Status Quo Vadis, Donald Driver’s new play, got enthusiastic student acclaim the other night from students who took a chance with a “try-out.”

The black play for primarily black audiences has come into its own as one of the fascinating developments in the theatre. The last smash in New York is Don’t Bother Me, I Can’t Cope which also has road companies in several major cities.

The works of two old-timers in theatre music and musical comedy, Noel Coward and Cole Porter, are enjoying retrospectives. The former has two revivals running in London, and the off-Broadway production of Oh Coward (recently recorded) is just fine with its fifty year review of the 73 year old composer’s witty and touching songs. The late Cole Porter has had a rash of records of his materials released in the last year. The last Cole Porter recording features some hitherto unpublished songs. The wit and sophistication of the 1930s, particularly, seems now a fertile area for student investigation perhaps for the same reasons the early Hollywood film musicals are doing well now with student audiences. Of the period, the stage, of course, had more biting satire and boldness in the work of the stage composers.

It is interesting to see the growth of dinner/theatres in unions which reflect the growing trend of cultural activities in the suburbs and away from center city harrassments. Since there will always be some road companies around, these will help fill out theatre/concert series in unions. I wonder, though, how such forms as street theatre, improvisational groups, theatre by national groups such as the Chinese Theatre (which recently played New York) and the socially-minded Bread and Puppet Troupe might do nationwide and which are more affordable than big Broadway productions. Shouldn’t we be taking stronger looks with our students at some off and off-off Broadway theatre movements such as the Ontological-Hysteric Theatre? Children’s theatre is on the rise.

Listed below are some presentations in the theatre (and some shows are also included in the next section of this Guide under concert series) which appeared as road shows or were local productions in the unions as indicated:

Perhaps we make things too easy for students in bringing shows to campus. In our urban area perhaps we should be doing more about getting students physically into theatres at student rates so that habits are created. Good regional theatres such as those in Houston, Minneapolis, Buffalo, Chicago, Hartford, Richmond, San Francisco, and New Haven are sources of fine plays which should be seen by students.

The approach of the Phoenix Repertory Company during its recent Boston engagement is an admirable attempt to encourage theatre going by college students. The troupe during the day dispersed themselves off to eight universities to give informal lecture-demonstrations.

The February 20, 1973 issue of The Chronicle provides information on an American Theatre Association production survey of campus preferences of playwrights and kinds of productions. The authors conclude that a conservative trend in taste on campus has been clearly evident for the last six years with Shakespeare the favorite and Tennessee Williams, Bertolt Brecht, Edward Albee, and G. B. Shaw ranked high. Comedy is preferred over tragedies. There appears to be fear of an economic factor involved in loss of box office support with the presentation of experimental productions.

CONCERTS AND ARTISTS SERIES

One of the questions I asked the first programming workshop delegates at Winberley was "Why is this series good?" I was referring to a listing which had previously appeared in Variety of the University of Texas (Austin) of the union's 1971-72 Cultural Entertainment Series:

The Proposition
Royal Winnipeg Ballet
Heavy Organ with Virgil Fox and Pablo's Lights
Austin Symphony Orchestra
This series has good, diversified ingredients for all kinds of campus constituencies. Represented are social commentary, improvisation, modern black dance and classical dance, pop selections, a good pianist with a feel for student audiences, a recognized, legitimate folk singer, a classical symphonic program, a first-rate Broadway show, an opera, an old-time jazz group, and a fine organist with a light show. The combination of all of these is difficult to fault since there are parts of the series "low-brow" enough to attract large student audiences who just might be conditioned for the heavier material. My criticism of many union or university artists series is that students sometimes don't get met as to where they are in terms of musical appreciation. We need programs that provide a place to start building one's appreciation. (Incidentally, my friend, Jane Shipton, an A.C.U.-I. regular, after catching Fox and Pablo's Lights at the Old Fillmore East pronounced the production as "simply glorious." )

There are some other interesting and good artists series/music/concert presentations in unions which must have hefty budgets to sustain these expensive series:

UTexAus
Cultural Entertainment Committee Series
It's a Beautiful Day
Harkness Ballet
Robert Flack
Emlyn Williams as Dylan Thomas
Aaron Copeland conducting the Austin Symphony
Godspell
Juliai Bream
Marcie Marceau
Edward Villella Dance Ensemble
George Solti conducting the Chicago Symphony

UHous
Fine Arts Series
Romeo and Juliet
Cologne Chamber Orchestra
Gary Snyder (Poet)

Beverly Sills

UWMad
Orchestra Series
New York Philharmonic (Leinsdorf conducting)
Prague Chamber Orchestra
Minnesota Orchestra
London Symphony Orchestra (Previn conducting)
Chicago Symphony (Solti conducting)
Mozarteum Orchestra of Salzburg

UNC
Carolina Union
Chapel Hill Concert Series
Among the more cheerful sights I have seen recently was the student turnout for an all Mahler program at the Academy of Music in Philadelphia with Ormandy conducting as well as an audience of mostly students in a Greenwich Village club listening to the great jazz pianist, Teddy Wilson. Another is the Smithsonian Institution’s folk instrument exhibition with recordings and photographs in Washington. Small concerts are doing extremely well now with folk instrumentation featuring the harpsichord, dulcimer, mandolin, banjo, guitar, autoharp, harmonica, and bass.

The University of Delaware Fox Fire Series (1973) consists of series of craft demonstrations, films, lectures, and musical program focusing on the folk heritage of the University area:

UD
Talk, Ghost and Witch Tales of the Eastern Shore
Blue Grass Music (banjo, mandolin, bass, and guitar)
Brandywine Valley Ramblers (guitar, banjo, fiddle, autoharp, dulcimer, harmonica, mandolin)
Ola Belle Reed Family (folk tales and music)
Craft displays in rug braiding, quilting, crewel embroidery, bargello

Fridays seem to be good days to visit the Millberry Union (University of California Medical School at San Francisco) for small, interesting, diversified programs with sometimes an off-beat charm and appeal:

UCSFMed
Friday Far Out Programs
Banjo Band and Old Time Comedy Acts
Four Seasons of Love—a concert in song, verse and story
Concert of Classical Ragas
Political Satire
Encounter Theatre
Afro-American Performing Arts Group
Westwind Folk Dance Ensemble
Juggling Act with music and comedy

UCSFMed
Foggy Friday Fun
Poetry Reading with autoharp, sitar, and guitar accompaniment
The Art of the Fugue or Bach as interpreted by flute, cello, and viola
Production of Schisgal’s, The Typist
Jan Ballan, The Chattering Magician
Pianist

Interesting also, both in terms of intent and location is this University of Wisconsin at Milwaukee series, Interplay, in the Fireside Lounge:

UWMil
Interplay Concert Series
(Fireside Lounge)
Percussion Ensemble
String Quartet
Operatic Selections including
Who Wants to Hear Opera?
Jazz
(in cooperation with University Music and Fine Arts staff and students)

Miami University of Ohio lists a Black Truth Percussion group with interesting instrumentation as well as an Appalachian Festival. The University of Pennsylvania’s Houston Hall utilizes the reach-out concept again in presenting straight classical music programs in resident halls. In cooperation with their Music Department, the University of Florida sponsors:

UFla
Winter Quarter Concerts—sponsored in cooperation with Music Department and featuring lectures and musical programs the former category including Liszt, Renaissance Wind Instruments, Aaron Copland, Chinese Art Music, Latin American Music; also, featuring music for a baroque ensemble, pops concert band, bassoons, harp and percussion, piano duo, string quartet, among others.

Perhaps it is too precious an area, but popular music critic Douglas Watt has described the period roughly from 1925 to 1940 as appearing to be the golden age of American songwriting. Why not do some programs in this area particularly with musical comedy scores? You might start with one of Porter
Butts’ favorite shows, Good News, (1927) and work your way up through some of America’s gold scores of Rodgers and Hart, George Gershwin (and Ira), Cole Porter, Dietz and Schwartz, Harold Arlen, etc. The late George Gershwin, incidentally, has recently been cited with a United States commemorative postage stamp.

Is vaudeville coming back? Variety, in a recent article, allowed as how this might be the case with the coat-tail effect of the success of the new legitimate play, The Sunshine Boys. The recent success of the Shenyang Acrobatic Troupe plus the presentation of Emmett Kelly’s Circus “might” help support vaudeville’s return!

Variety, again, makes the observation that there is a spillover of rock fans into the classical music groove since much of rock music has been influenced by the classical tradition. This point was made in connection with a midnight concert announced for Radio City Music Hall (New York) featuring organist E. Power Biggs, music synthesizer Walter Downey’s Chafed Elbows, among others. The experimental film movement in its approximate ten-year history had proliferated wildly in terms of numbers of filmmakers using all sorts of techniques such as Vanderbeek’s collage animation, for one. Union programmers who don’t follow this field closely would do well to seek out teaching staff in film for their recommendations of such experimental film names as Brakhage, Brailie, Anger and Emswihlter (in addition to those named above) for innovative and suitable works for general campus audiences.

In the commercial film area, the emergence of the black film in recent months with dramatic substance cutting across racial lines—and I refer to the excellent Sounder—is another step forward in helping identify “the black esthetic.”

FILMS

When anybody asks me what I think are the ingredients of a good film program, my response first-off is that students will very nicely manage a good commercial series of American films. They will also handily inaugurate student competitions in film making. Student film committees invariably come up with provocative and catching names for series. The University of Tennessee Union’s Cans Film Festival is dandy for a film competition title, and does it matter “what’s on” at the Ohio University Union’s Movies to Cuddle By on a Cold Winter’s Night?

In this period of unprecedented interest in the motion picture as the preferred art form on campuses, union programmers can get all the “volunteers” they need from campus faculty and student film buffs to come up with a robust selection of the works of the directors of best foreign films currently dominating the screen. Pick from Italy’s Antonioni, Fellini, Visconti, De Sica, Bertolucci, and Pasolini. Presently from France, the works of Chabrol, Rohmer, Resnais, Godard, Truffaut, Clair, Renoir, and Ophuls are very much in evidence. Three Japanese directors, Ozu, Kurosawa, and Mizoguchi, are good representatives. Sweden’s Bergman is probably the most heavily featured director in campus foreign film scenes, and, of course, Bunuel with his films on France, Spain and Mexico. Some of the current and critically acclaimed works from the above distinguished group of directors are Bergman’s Cries and Whispers, which was recently selected as the best film of 1972 by the New York Film Critics group. Other notable film productions now appearing commercially are Rohmer’s Chloé in the Afternoon, Bunuel’s The Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie, Ozu’s Tokyo Story, and the controversial Bertolucci film, The Last Tango in Paris. Another relatively new film, The Emigrants, directed by Sweden’s Troell should be added to the above list.

I heartily recommend a review of the documentary film as a highly essential film program element. For starters perhaps, Pare Lorentz’s The River, along with some of the Flaherty works and winding up with some of the contemporary pieces of de Antonio and Wiseman. The best documentary film I have ever seen is Ophuls’ The Sorrow and The Pity. What a program this is to make more meaningful student insight into the horrors of World War II and the values illustrated by follow-up interviews more than a quarter of a century later with some of the residents of Clermont-Ferrand, France who lived under the Vichy regime.

Some of the most popular film evenings on campus are derived from the vast area of the underground, experimental, or new America cinema, whichever term you prefer. My first evening of films of this new movement was in connection with a visit to my campus by Jonas Mekas some seven years ago. He accompanied his commentary with such examples of the emerging film movement with some of his own works including Circus Notebook, along with The Flicker by Conrad and Kuchar’s Hold Me While I’m Naked. Along with these presentations I became hooked on some of the earlier films such as O Dem Watermelons by Nelson and Downey’s Chafed Elbows, among others. The experimental film movement in its approximate ten-year history had proliferated wildly in terms of numbers of filmmakers using all sorts of techniques such as Vanderbeek’s collage animation, for one. Union programmers who don’t follow this field closely would do well to seek out teaching staff in film for their recommendations of such experimental film names as Brakhage, Brailie, Anger and Emswihlter (in addition to those named above) for innovative and suitable works for general campus audiences.

In the commercial film area, the emergence of the black film in recent months with dramatic substance cutting across racial lines—and I refer to the excellent Sounder—is another step forward in helping identify “the black esthetic.”

Reading the film offerings below is not unlike the excitement generated by going through film catalogs in anticipation of organizing next semester’s film program:

SUNY/Buff

The Move Toward Open Forms in the New American Cinema: Baillie, Brakhage, and Mekas
The American Film: Ford, Hawks, King, Huston (of the last 35 years)
Expression, Revolution, and Hitchcock (History of cinematic expression)
Soviet Cinema (as part of a workshop)
The Primarily American Series of 30s, 40s, 50s, 60s in action, suspense, and comedy

Selections from erotic film festivals and non-rated films (as well as the X-rated variety) are being offered by film rental houses. The union's program structure people need to be on the lookout and anticipate how to deal with the legal and social ramifications of exhibiting or not these films. The most publicized, allegedly pornographic film of oral sex (and a film which has broken box office records in a number of commercial theatres) is now a subject of campus controversy at a midwestern state university. University authorities denied a campus film society permission to exhibit this film on the grounds of obscenity and posed the question of the "cultural" purpose of the student film society. One of the questions which has evolved from this situation was whether or not the University actually controls its own facilities in relation to the content of a film. (As of March 2, 1973, the film was judged 'to be obscene in a New York City Criminal Court.)

Along more conventional programming lines, isn't it about time the British cinema got reviewed again? The Japanese film is on the rise along with directors' retrospectives such as Orson Welles. I would predict that union programs will embrace more and more student creativity in 8mm. What can your students do in utilizing film without camera in creating abstract designs by scratching the film and/or placing objects on the film's surface?

RECREATION

(See also Outdoor Programming)

It will come as no surprise to you to be told that across the nation there have been dramatic rises in recreational areas involving pleasure boating, tennis, bicycling, and skiing. What might amaze you is the intensity of the boom in participation sports. According to a recent release of United Press International, Americans in 1973 will set another record, as they did in 1972, in numbers pursuing recreational activities. In 1972, as opposed to 1971, boat sales rose twenty-five per cent, tennis players increased in number by... twenty per cent, fifteen per cent more bicyclists took to the road, and there were ten per cent more skiers on the slopes, according to the UPI release. Also cited as preferred activities are golfing, jogging, snorkeling, and camping, along with just plain relaxing. Some new sports are emerging such as cliff diving (with jetta-wing kites attached to the diver's body) and snowmobiling. This last activity is drawing increasing scrutiny from state legislators because of noise and danger of the snowmobile and with the tendency of drivers to invade private property. The leisure time market of sales is also booming for products associated with recreational activity. Some sales of products on the increase include all weather tennis court enclosures, the ten-speed bike (with a high theft rate, too), motorcycles, travel trailers, and snorkeling equipment. The UPI survey reports, also, that at home pool tables may soon outnumber pianos. Other news items cite chess and backgammon making strong comeback as home activity. (In commercial establishments such as resort hotels chess and backgammon are increasingly featured along with gin rummy revivals.) I think these developments are closely related to trends which influence our union programming.

On the campus, there is growing popularity of the "custom developed" package of imaginative recreational activity and happenings in a concentrated period. These marathon type programs frequently referred to as 'all night bashes," "spring thing," or "Student Center Day," involve a variety of elements. Examples of these programs are provided in the listings below. The recreational theme programs such as Oktoberfest and May Day provide desirable diversity in union programming along with special, one-shot events such as trivia bowls, and frisbee competition. Games tournaments in billiards, bowling, table tennis, chess, and bridge are so common as to be practically a certainty at any given union. Foosball and air hockey are coming into their own, also, as standard items in union recreation areas. Several unions such as those at the University of Florida, The University of South Carolina, and Indiana University have camps or retreats for recreational activity and camping away from the union and campus.

If indeed students are becoming more proficient at creating recreational diversions because of the need for "escapism", they are doing a good job—and helping the union fulfill one of its fundamental goals—in a calmer campus era following the activism in the past few years.

A run-down of the listings of recreational activities looks like this:

USouFla
A Night of River Boat Gambling

UTexAus
After Football Game Dances

Illini
All Nighter with music, movies, bowling, billiards and other special events

UWMil

THEME SERIES, SPEAKERS, AND ACADEMIA

As a union programmer, may I strongly suggest to you again that you get as firm a beach as possible at your institution on the innovations taking place in curriculum development and reform. To paraphrase an old Jimmy Durante remark, "Everybody's getting into the act." Possibly some unlikely academic bed partners of a few years ago now find themselves embracing, figuratively speaking, to provide a high level of excitement and intellectual challenge for students through course cross-fertilization. Many of the new academic programs now being developed or refined are fraught with possibilities for the union in the way of informal back-up learning opportunities. What is your reaction to such inter-departmental course listings as:

Vietnam and the Young: What Do We Tell Our Children?
(Education and Political Science)

Self, Energy, and Culture (Anthropology and Dramatic Arts)

Sports in American Society: Literature, Culture, and Philosophy (English and Physical Education)

Contemporary Religion in America (Sociology and Philosophy)

Chemocology: Integrated View of Chemical and Ecological Concepts (Chemistry and Entomology/Applied Ecology)

Consumer Behavior and Marketing Research (Business and Economics)

Urban America: Processes, Problems, and Projects (Geography and Economics)

The above courses are a part of a list comprising new academic offerings called "The Integrated Learning Semester" scheduled at my institution for the fall of 1973.

I am greatly intrigued by what's being presented by museums of correlations of art and other academic areas such as the National Gallery's program on "The Mathematics of Art: The Art of Mathematics."

I hadn't realized until I read the President's annual report the other day of my alma mater of the extent of their development in new academic programs. These offerings include not only familiar ones in Asian Studies, Afro-American Studies, and Russian Studies but some I didn't know about, namely, environmental sciences, urban design, landscape architecture, and biomedical engineering. There's a lot of substance here from which the union can draw for associated programs.

What about the attitudes of students now in supporting causes reflecting social issues—with the ending of the Vietnam war—and the support of academic reform? Tom Wicker, an Associate Editor of The New York Times observes that there seems to be missing on campuses now a vital sense of involvement by students in great public issues. He believes that they have lost their taste for personal activism "to do battle with the lions of imperialism, irrelevance, and immorality." In his article of late January of this year, the columnist concludes that the students no longer have confidence in personal involvement. This lack of confidence exists in spite of the fact they turned public opinion against the war. The students, however, were unsuccessful in their central objective of attempting to force two administrations out of the war.

The above view supports the trend to conservatism as reflected in the action and attitudes of students. A recent American Council on Education Study of 17-19 year old freshmen reveals that two-thirds of the first year class members describe themselves as middle of the road or conservative in political orientation. With the Vietnam war out of the way, the two broadest areas attracting the largest spectrum of student support are pollution and consumer protection. There is also substantial interest in promoting more school desegregation and concern about courts excessively promoting the rights of criminals. On campus, those freshmen believe that colleges are "too easy" on student protestors. A very very high percentage of the freshmen support equality of rights for women. A high percent of the freshmen sample group believe that colleges should not exclusively promoting the rights of criminals. On campus, those freshmen believe that colleges are "too easy" on student protestors. A very very high percentage of the freshmen support equality of rights for women. A high percent of the freshmen sample group believe that colleges should not concern themselves with off-campus behavior.

In this period of transition from activism to "growing" conservatism here are programs you can consider in perspective of what is happening to student attitudes and tastes:

Student Conference on National Affairs—(SCONA) (Tex-A&M)

18th Program: "The Controlled Society" to examine the control of crime and the protection of basic freedoms, big business control of government policies and consumer behavior, federal regulation of the mass media, the implication of social control through behavior modification and psycho-surgery, and biological control resulting from genetic engineering and asexual reproduction. Committed speakers are Acting Director of the F.B.I., Patrick Gray, Arthur R. Miller, Harvard Law School, Nicholas Johnson, Federal Communications Commission, and Jack Michael, Western Michigan University.

SCONA is an annual 3 1/2 day program consisting of a forum for students to discuss issues of important national concerns and to further students' awareness of the complex nature of national issues of importance. Previous SCONA themes have been "Impact of the University" and "Student Responsibilities in the Seventies."

Paramount to the union's responsibilities is the obligation to inform and to enlighten as well as to question values so that learning is taking place, and the union is an arena of exchange of many different points of view.

A growing obligation of the union is to help with programs in support of trends having to do with selection by students of their academic programs. Citing again the A.C.E. study I mentioned above, a press release of about a month ago tells us that the freshman preferences are away from engineering and science towards medicine and law, and that forestry and farming are on the rise as fields of concentration by students. These shifts of interest are influenced by the job market conditions and students' personal taste away from technology to people oriented work. Such trends have great implications for the union in helping provide more information and discussion points for students involved in this humanistic direction.

THE SHORT COURSE
In the October, 1972 issue of the Bulletin, "Belly Dancing to ESP," there was compiled a list of many of the informal, mostly non-credit classes or informal learning opportunities being presented in many of our unions. Unions have timely and sometimes unique opportunities in presenting these short courses to help students round out their scheduled curriculum experiences. In the present era of greatly expanded knowledge, students' tastes are broadening, and their increased curiosity and interests are reflected in the desire for further discovery, additional skills, and more personal awareness. Through short courses, students can learn by doing in contrast to the abstraction of the classroom. Personal values, avocational pursuits, environmental study, social concerns, interpersonal relations, consumerism, other cultures and life styles, physical activity, and the arts and crafts are areas, among others, being vigorously pursued by students outside of the formal course structure. Sometimes these courses are offered as part of a union's craft shop program so you might relate this section of the Guide to the comments I have included as part of the organized crafts programs. One shot demonstrations in the arts and crafts, for example, are popular, and several unions have incorporated this commendable approach as part of a "reach out" concept by presenting these demonstrations in resident hall lounges. There are some exotic and esoteric offerings as well as some informal classes at unions of professional schools which might well constitute undergraduate course offerings albeit in more depth at a liberal arts undergraduate college. Some of these informal learning opportunities parallel existing academic offerings. Anyway, it's all very exciting. Using some of the Bulletin classifications and some of my own (and overall classifications are difficult to formulate and might appear to be arbitrary), here is a lengthy list of unions' short courses which just might amaze you with its length, sampling, and variety of approaches. Course descriptions are provided in those cases where apparently appropriate. Union brochures sometimes do not indicate costs at all, while others simply state the activity is open for the cost of materials:

The next time you get asked to dinner where there are some guests whom you’ve never met and somebody asks “What do you do?” come on strong and ask for their suggestions for short courses. Here are some interesting results stimulated by marvelous food from my hostess’ dinner table on the Maryland eastern shore the other evening:

Oyster Tonging
Denizens of the Chesapeake Bay
The Icelandic Fishing Village at Crisfield, Maryland
Decoy Carving Demonstration
Pennsylvania Dutch
Tole
Speech Patterns Identification—particularly Elizabethan in North Carolina and West Virginia
Gourmet Living for Dietetics
Archeology Digs in Delaware

By any acceptable social means cultivate the long term residents in your area particularly in rural and semi-rural sections. These people can be a gold mine of knowledge of county lore and of the natives and some of their picturesque ways.

I have come into possession of three very interesting pamphlets, apparently not union related, entitled The Free University from the University of Pennsylvania, University for Men from Kansas State University, and an Experimental College brochure from San Jose State. There are fascinating course areas in informal learning opportunities in these publications, and many courses in addition to the listings above. You might like these, too.

Where are we headed with the informal short course? I suppose we are limited only by imagination, time, the resources of our campus, and the intellectual interests of the students.

FOOD

As a natural outgrowth of the increased interest in the cultures of other nations (although these cultures have been promoted for years in programs using international themes), food of other nations has begun to take on new dimensions as a program item and appears to be something of a comer in the short course area, along with the organic varieties. The recent upsurge of interest in domestic wines has also helped make food as an item more interesting.

Several of our larger unions such as Wisconsin at Madison and the Illini operation regularly feature international dinners. I am particularly intrigued by the University of Arizona’s program of special dinners featuring food and entertainment: Chinese sweet and sour items with Chinese folk dances and entertainment by a Chinese dragon, Indian curries accompanied by flute music and Indian dances, and strolling musicians with Italian delicacies both from the north and the south of Italy. Also featured at the Arizona union are favorite foods of American presidents—accompanied by fife and drum, Lady Bird Johnson’s lima bean dish with bisque, Lincoln’s blackberry pie, Jefferson’s jambalaya, etc.

Many of the students I know eat cafeteria food between 5:00 and 5:30 in the afternoon and are back in the snack bar for hamburgers at about 9:00 o’clock. Since food cultivation by students is training the expansion of their intellectual pursuits, I recommend ethnic eat-ins at all unions of simple provincial favorites in addition to those above such as Greek moussaka, French coq au vin, German weiner schnitzel, Spanish paella, Mexican enchiladas, and Russian beef stroganoff (plus wine where circumstances permit). All are relatively simple to prepare, delicious to eat, and a fine way to learn about other peoples tastes and habits.

How about a Chinese tea party in celebration of the Year of the Ox?

TRAVEL

(See also Outdoor Programs)

As a teaser for its publicity materials for an excursion to Hawaii, the Student Activities Committee at the University of Missouri has captioned their flyer, How About A Nice Let? Who could refuse this opportunity?

The student traveler is getting more and more help from his college union in the way of predeparture programs designed to acquaint him or her with the appropriate logistical details, hints, and the most pertinent information involved in visiting particular countries. The LaSalle College Union, for example, has made available to its students a pamphlet, Travel Information for College Students, 1973, and La Salle’s Union Director, John Veen, at our Region 3 Conference last fall distributed his paper, Planning a Travel Program for the College Community. Other unions have presented travel short courses or weekly seminars featuring speakers, panelists, authors, travel agents, and government officials who advise the student traveler in such matters as securing passports and making medical precautions, selection of appropriate charter arrangements, shopping for accommodations and potables as well as other ground negotiations. There are suggestions on getting around and spending time in foreign countries including considerations of hitchhiking and opportunities for foreign study. Certain other types of information have been made available to prospective travelers, namely, that as of last spring arrests have increased by six times (since 1969) of young Americans apprehended for violation of drug laws. The literature of travel information materials is increasing substantially to accompany the increased numbers of students going abroad. 700,000 American and European sightseers under 26 was the anticipated number to cross the Atlantic last summer. This figure for the summer of ’72 was twenty-five per cent over the number of student-age travelers of the summer of ’71, according to an article from The New York Times entitled Airlines, in Flight of Fancy, Offer Under 26 Travelers Rock and Organic Food. There are presently rather involved negotiations among international carriers trying to reach new agreements of fares and kinds of group flights through the International Air Transport Association. These developments are being watched by the Civil Aeronautics Board to protect passengers and carriers to and from the United States from inequities.

Incidentally, in its issue of February 25, 1973, The New York Times included in its Travel Section, A Traveler's Directory: Where to Get Information Before You Go. This directory indicates government offices representing countries of Europe, the Middle East, Asia and the Pacific, Africa, and the Western Hemisphere to which travelers may apply for official information.

Here are some samples of recent international union-sponsored travel:

UWMil
University Travel Center—Mexico, Zermatt, Hawaii, Spain, Paris

UHous

Where are we headed in the travel area? Apparently, the globe is the limit now that moon shots seem to be sidetracked for a considerable time in the future.

ART EXHIBITIONS

(See also Short Courses and Craft Shops)

Several years ago when I was a regional representative and traveled a fair amount to visit schools who were not ACU-I members or did not have very much Association contact, some of the questions I was asked most frequently had to do with sources of art exhibitions—inexpensive ones, mostly. How to hang shows and means to discourage theft from exhibitions on view were points frequently raised by many hosts. I had a strong feeling that this was one of the program areas with which union staff felt least comfortable. It was great fun to try to answer their questions and to point out that the Association's Committee on the Arts has excellent materials dealing with these matters of sources (such as Pat Kreuger's Do It Yourself Exhibitions), hanging, etc. The matter of art exhibitions is a difficult area with which to deal particularly when there is a gallery on campus maintained by professionals in the academic world. On the other hand, old hands like me—if you wish—can point out some of the factors involved in formulating a desirable policy in extending invitations to community artists to exhibit in your unions. This can be a tricky process, and I urge the involvement of your art department.

Many of our unions are using canned shows and, again Association's resources, including the regional arts coordinators, can help in attesting to the suitability of many of the better known sources. With the advice and consent of our University Art Department, I frequently book Smithsonian Institution exhibitions, and I can testify to the quality of much of their catalog. Incidentally, have you looked over the SITES (Smithsonian Institution Traveler Exhibition Service) catalog recently included in a mailing with the Union Wire?

Here is a mixed bag of shows I have jotted down from the union brochures collection, and I have not listed simple media term such as acrylics, oils, watercolor, serigraphs, photography, intaglio, etc., but rather those exhibitions which can be identified somewhat more readily as to source or particular exhibition feature:

UTexas
- Olympic posters
- Student graphics
- Union collection of graphics and original prints
- Union art rental library
- Photo journalism
- Drama Department designs for the theatre
- Faculty one-man shows
- Fisk University Collection, Black Images
- Albrecht Durer Exhibition
- Jewelry
- Rock musicians portraits, sound equipment, and photographs

Utena
- Children's Art
- Graffiti wall
- Student competition

UMoSA
- Antique greeting cards

RutNB
- Batik by Bambang Oetoro with lecture

USFla
- Segy Gallery African Sculpture

USouthCar
- Antique jewelry

UWMil
- Art work created by emotionally disturbed children

NYU
- Comic art by students

And on the lighter side:

RutNB
- Art Happenings: finger paintings, balbon sculpture, watercolor painting, origami, body painting, Macke machine painting, dippy flowers, and Sumi ink painting.

UCalifDavis
- Fantasy clothing and body ornament

Ulowa
- Towels and beads

NYULoeb
- Baler twine sculpture

More artists in residence are appearing on campuses to set up shows along these lines:

Ulowa
- Sculpture workshop in glass blowing, figurative modeling in clay, wood carving and laminating, metal casting and welding.

Adelphi
- Wood and stone sculpture and painted beads and jewelry

From what I have seen at my union and at our regional conference several years ago plus reports from other institutions, the Roten Gallery Exhibition of prints combined with a sale is a good source of shows plus some potential income for the union from commissions.

In terms of structure for exhibitions, the St. Louis University Busch Center lists a program entitled, Art In the Air which is an open invitation to faculty and art students to exhibit and sell paintings as well as perform craft demonstrations. The University of Florida Union conducts an all-state undergraduate art competition. An art lending library is a part of the resources of the Ohio University Union. The Delaware Student Center, which I know best, participates annually with a faculty/community committee in the presentation of a large, juried show.

I had the feeling in looking at the many union brochures that I received that the University of Iowa, the Arizona State Union and the Illini Union materials, among others, showed real affection for exhibitions from the variety and number of flyers devoted to their shows. The Illini Union Mem-Brain multi-media experience with its "air supported envirom ment” and quadraphonic sound slides I found interesting when I saw it at the St. Louis Conference. I have had some interesting conversations by telephone with the Studio Museum in Harlem about their programs when making inquiry about Black artists and their exhibitions.

Department stores are now into the act, and those of you in metropolitan areas are likely to find sales and exhibition areas devoted to Indian crafts, professional art school creations, as well as crafts of other nations.

The supergraphics pointing the way to the Smithsonian Institution’s print-making exhibition were first-rate, I thought. I would like to see the University of California at Davis’ Union exhibition of Forms of the Spirit of African, Indian, and Polynesian photographs, paintings, prints, and decorative art pieces denoting the spiritual character of three primitive societies. At our last Region 4 conference at Stony Brook, New York, there were some interesting kinetic sculpture pieces.

From my perspective in the union, I think student preferences are likely to run to the less traditional media and to the crafts so popular now plus conceptual art, environmental art, posters, photography shows, functional sculpture, sculpture in industrial media, kinetic sculpture, and, of course, student shows in virtually any media.

Have you read about or seen the New York City Arts Program which encourages residents of particular neighborhoods in company with artists to beautify the city’s low income areas with wall paintings or murals? These works done in acrylics depict such concerns as the drug abuse problem, “Black Women of America Today,” and Chinese immigration; also, ceramic work consisting of intricate mosaic patterns including peace signs, zodiac symbols, and flowers. In addition to beautification, the program has an education function particularly for youths.

Among the possibilities for display cases (and I find three dimensional shows least accessible to come by conveniently) are ideas from the recent Yale Library exhibition of comic books of “yesterday” and turning a page a day in each comic book exhibited. Newspaper articles recently have mentioned such unusual items as nuts (and their by-products), beer cans, the post card (dating from the late nineteenth century), postal, identifications of envelope collections of unique names of towns and villages, shells, dolls, etc. I would conclude by saying that probably we’ve only begun to scratch the surface of sources of interesting articles for our display cases (and I realize all the above items aren’t three dimensional) from the dozens of museums that I suspect would be willing to lend things around the country.

OUTDOOR PROGRAMS
(See also Recreation, and Building Services and Travel)

Of the union “musts” which I mentioned in the opening section of this Guide, I think that the fascinating expansion in the union’s outdoor programming area seems most to meet in a variety of exciting ways the union’s primary aims. Getting back to nature to relax and learn reflects the increase in leisure time, the mounting interest in the environment and its processes, the need to learn and apply physical skills, and the ever increasing drive for new adventures and stimulating things to do whether involving land, water, or air, or a combination thereof. Technological improvements in recreation equipment are facilitating outdoor activity and providing more encouragement and comfort to take to the outdoors. Camping is a good example of a family venture greatly helped by product improvement all the way from back packs to motor homes. According to the American Camping Association in a report of last summer, lovers of the outdoors are spending three billion dollars yearly on trips and equipment. The number of campers—reflecting a nationwide trend—numbered forty-five million in the northeast United States alone.

On the campus, the interest in outdoor recreation activities has led to the creation of credit courses, and I cite a Wilderness Education Workshop under the joint sponsorship of the Erb Union of the University of Oregon and Outdoor Programs of Idaho State University. These courses are aimed at the acquisition of wilderness pursuit skills and a working knowledge of how to organize, administer, and conduct college outdoor programs. Wilderness education, scuba and skin diving instruction, white water floating, canoe-camping and aquatic ecology, and mountaineering leadership are featured in this combined institutional effort.

Each of the co-sponsors of the above stimulating project has individual program listings, and the Erb Union’s brochure, Cooperative Wilderness Adventures included forty some trips scheduled this past summer for both beginners and experienced outdoorsmen in Oregon and neighboring states plus Canada. Erb also has suggestions for general equipment gear for the trips in the way of clothing, accessories, boats, and cooking. An Idaho State flyer lists outdoor activities for each season of the year. Western Washington State College in a special brochure offers outdoor programs plus equipment rentals including framepacks, stoves, sleeping bags, rock helmets, crampons, tents, rucksacks, cooking pots, ensolite pads, snowshoes, and ice axes, among other items. The University of Missouri Student Activities group also makes available for outside enthusiasts umbrella tents, tarps, canteens, first-aid kits, hatchets, compasses, and other varieties of tents.

Additional interesting outdoor programs include:

NYULoeb
Nature Study Tours
High Falls, Hudson Valley, New York for thrust faults, anticlines, synclines
Montauk Point, L.I., pleistocene and cretaceous moraines and outworks
Bear Mountain, N.Y., for environmental interaction
Red Bank, N.J., for fossil dig

UCSFMed
Yosemite Valley Exploration

FlaSU
Deep Sea Fishing
At the Association’s Fifth Student/Staff Assembly in January of 1973, Ron Hatchet, Region 8 Representative, distributed an interesting checklist of considerations for outdoor programming:

Land Based Activities
- Archery
- Back-packing
- Bicycling
- Camping
- Conservation
- Dog Training
- Geology Caravan
- Spelunking
- Survival Training
- Gathering and Preparation of Wild Foods
- Guide Clubs
- Hiking
- Horseback Riding

CRAFTS AND CRAFT SHOPS

(See Also Art Exhibitions, Short Courses, and Building Facilities)

For several years now the Association’s arts Committee has helped implement the great interest presently in the crafts through special exhibitions at our conferences both at the Greenbrier and at St. Louis. These exhibitions were of craftsmen representing local color and achievement. Several unions whose brochures I have looked at feature folk festivals which include exhibitions of crafts of their respective areas. In my union’s neighborhood the work of the Pennsylvania Dutch and the natives of the eastern shore of Maryland are popular. Along with its blue grass music, Southern Appalachian work is in great demand. The last issue of The Bulletin included a story of Indiana University’s Folk Festival Weekend which featured a colonial crafts exhibition. Indian crafts are extremely popular now and greatly influencing fashions and furnishings.

The trend to get back to the nation’s roots and explore our early cultures is handsomely illustrated by the work of Colonial Williamsburg. Having lived in Williamsburg for a number of years, I know pretty well this organization’s stunning restoration program including a series of shops and programs devoted to the colonial crafts, some of which you seldom see in crafts exhibitions:

- spinning and weaving, blacksmithing, apothecary products, millinery, musical instruments, windmill operation, silversmithing, jewelry making, brass foundry products and brass casting, gun making, printing and paper marbling, shingle making, dyeing thread wool and linen, hatcheting flax, basket making, cabinet making, pewter casting, cask making (cooper’s craft), flower drying and arrangements

There are films available on some of the above activities, and these make splendid additions to union’s craft presentations. I wish that Colonial Williamsburg would put together a traveling exhibition from their superb collection of photographs, artifacts, and mock-ups. Such an exhibition would be, I am sure, eagerly sought after for the same reasons that the exhibition materials used in the Colonial Williamsburg Information Center are so much admired and appropriate to contemporary interest in the crafts. The Colonial Williamsburg organization trains staff in the various crafts for demonstrations of their specialties in the restored area. Occasionally, these people speak in various cities as part of the Colonial Williamsburg sales program. A combination of an exhibition and personnel representing a high level of expertise would be terribly exciting.

The craft shop programmers in unions now find themselves in the enviable dilemma of what to do next in response to the growing special interest of students in the arts and crafts, whether this expansion of activity lies in quiltmaking, rigid urethanes, or survival kits, to name a few of the more recent activities.

The Crafts Center at California State Polytechnic at San Luis Obispo has put out a very engaging pamphlet containing policies, some process drawings, and explanations of their Center's offerings. Various kinds of workshops are also described in jewelry, ring casting, lapidary, silkscreening, photoet ceramics, macrame, tie dye, batik, leather, photography, weaving, sand candles, stained glass, and bike repair.

An unusually full selection of crafts activities including graphic service is described in an attractive folder from the Ohio State Union with some of the "heavier" activities:

Sign Shop, Woodworking, Silk Screening, Ceramics, Welding, Lathe Craft, Dry Mounting, Offset Lithography, Embossograph, Billboard Jet Spray, Lapidary, Jewelry, Blockprinting, Leathercraft, Enameling, Painting, Photography Darkroom, Photo Silk Screen, Showcards

The University of California at Davis Memorial Union also has a good detailed booklet with drawings in their crafts activity (including many of the items described above) in addition to film making, handspinning with a spinning wheel, weaving with frame loom, card weaving or tablet weaving, indie loom weaving along with table and floor looms. The Davis Union also offers displays and exhibitions in their craft area. The Indiana University Union, also reporting in an attractive folder, adds wire sculpture, picture matting and framing, and wood and stone carving in addition to other activities.

There are interesting structural variations in the crafts program as illustrated by the University of Wisconsin Milwaukee Union's Craft Center program for families featuring finger painting, water color, and work with construction paper, popsicle sticks, mosaics, beads, shells, small leather-craft items, candlemaking, decoupage, silkscreening, wire-craft, artificial staining, and creative use of styrofoam remnants. The Idaho State Craft Center works closely with their outdoor program in providing equipment such as ski bindings, outfitting of rubber boats, and the sewing of many items of clothing.

The woodcut, Sculpting in marble (with a three dimensional display of sculptor's tools and process explanation), Decoupage, Puppetmaking, Egg crafts, Sculpting in Industrial Media (such as urethane), Christmas crafts

How about sculpture to wear or small reproductions of adaptable well-known art works? Earrings for men? Dada-, Surreal-, and Pop-derived art forms as crafts are popular for children, particularly, and for students.

Video Tape

At the St. Louis Conference last year, there was an interesting session on the potential and uses of video tape in the union. I regard this technological development as one of the program facilitators which is providing and will continue to provide some fascinating and revolutionary dimensions of events in the union. As one of the speakers at the conference session pointed out, just think of the possibilities that video tape can contribute with internal control in the union of programming and transmission. Here are some of the sample applications of the exciting possibilities for which video tape can be used:

1. "You Are Here" kinds of campus programs including taping of visiting scholars' talks, concerts, etc., along with campus news;
2. Leadership training programs in order to provide an instant replay of the interaction taking place on the union programming board. It is a revealing experience to see one's self in action or inaction;
3. "Propaganda" and publicity materials of the union. A film on damage to union furnishings was shown at the video tape session at St. Louis and dramatically pointed out the union's dilemma. Union programs can be recaptured through tape or special events devised to capture campus interest or to inform the students of upcoming union events;
4. Reinforcement of experiences for students during such process activities as orientation. I am told that at one institution random shots taken during orientation were played back during a union open house, and there was always a mob in front of the set.

The possibilities for tape appear to be almost limitless. From external sources there are to be considered for the union's future the present development of video cassettes. These can put a whole new slant on your movie program planning. The impact last year of Groove Tube went far beyond our expectations in terms of numbers of people who crowded the lounge four or five times a day to watch the various showings. There is a lecture series being marketed by one of the major management agencies, and this series features well known speakers and issue-oriented programs.

Although I do not see much mention in union brochures of video tape facilities, there are beginnings indicated. I read with great interest of the availability of equipment for campus uses for video taping local productions at the University of Rhode Island and also at the University of Minnesota's West Bank Union. Mountain View College in Texas has hosted a video tape seminar.
BUILDING SERVICES AND FACILITIES

Over the years I have been appreciative of the fact that in a great many encounters with the alumni they are apt to comment on very personalized kinds of ways that the union had been of help to them. I refer to such things as lending jumper cables to help a student start his car, calling to let a student know that his I.D. Card has turned up in lost and found, or helping a first year student through a maze of registration information. These are the kinds of things that are indispensable to the union's goals and to help create an image of a resource on campus which cares and isn't impersonal. As part of the total union concept any of the union's facilities should be a program in itself and as a component of the union's over-all effort. As part of the materials developed in celebration of the opening of their new building a few weeks ago, the students and staff at Queens College included in their brochure this statement of purpose:

"The meaning of service will be greatly liberalized in the Queens College Union setting. For here, service will not simply mean same day pick up or quick waiters. Rather it will be a total effort to make the union work for the community it serves...and withal, facilities have been planned to enhance the campus-wide services while avoiding useless duplication."

This statement sums up very well an objective of the union to make all of the union's operational parts contribute to its overall program. The many kinds of small ways in which the union can provide services seems to be almost limitless. Too frequently, I suspect, the services in one's building suffer from lack of sufficient and imaginative publicity. I would think that the Student Activities Group at the University of Missouri must have attracted a lot of readers with this flyer for guitar rentals:

G STRINGS FOR RENT (Sorry, guitars cannot be kept out overnight for serenades)

In pulling together from my collection of brochures the following list of services and facilities, I have not included general areas such as information desks, games areas, music listening rooms, ballrooms, snack bars, etc., but rather adjuncts to the commonly found building features.

My observations about expansion of present union facilities for the future would include more video-tape facilities such as a studio and equipment rental, as I have stated elsewhere in this guide. Travel centers and the implementation of travel service are expanding and will demand more attention. The implementation of craft center activities not only to supplement much of the present arts and crafts activity listed in the section of short courses, but also to enhance increasing outdoor activity.

I see other developments for the future as being film processing studios, particularly for 8mm work by students, more commodious commuter facilities, "jazzed up" book stores with more art objects, posters, framing materials, and high fidelity components. Cultural or interest groups composed of program units for women, minorities or ecology will occupy more office space.

How is "hotelvision" going to affect our union operation? For a little lagniappe, here are some coffee house names:

CAMPUS CONSTITUENCIES

(See also Theme Series and Speakers)

In a session entitled For Whom Do We Program? at the Texas workshop, I proposed that staff and student programming boards must find a way to identify more completely the various campus constituencies. These groups' needs are important program considerations for the union. Constituencies align themselves in a variety of ways, and there are relationships, too, in faculty and staff groups whose professional and personal interests should be evaluated by the union for program ideas. The larger community also has groups who ought to be cultivated in carrying out program goals.

Here are some student groups I believe we must consider in our program designs. I am sure that there are others you can name to add to this list:

international students, married students, commuting students, part-time students, students older than the average, handicapped students, graduate students, working students, super-intellectual students, minority students, transfer students, veterans

Each campus has its own roster of interest clubs. These are easily identifiable, but don't forget the service groups, social sororities and fraternities, living units such as La Maison Francaise, German House, Home Economics House, etc.

By all means cultivate the faculty from a broad spectrum of academic departments for programming help. This faculty input is absolutely essential to the success of your program.

Other groups such as alumni and staff professionals and non-professionals have special interests and needs with which the union can help through programs and services. Frequently within the traditional Office of Student Affairs framework there are administrative units such as placement, financial aid, the health service, admissions and records, etc., whose services can be greatly implemented via the facilities of the union.

Although there are many programs included in my publicity materials centered around international students and minority students and their respective cultures, the "pick-ins" get a little thin with special reference to other campus groups. Here are some programs with special constituencies in mind in addition to the programs or events listed in the section on theme series:

George cites interesting tastes and programs presented in oriental music including the use of the gamelan and the presentation of Chinese Comic Opera which he describes as the seventeenth century equivalent of rock and roll enjoyed by the masses! He also claims most symphony orchestra programs are "too organized". He relates better to African drumming and dancing with audience participation and free wine. He admires natural environmental sounds acquired via a tape recorder, electronic devices attached to traditional musical instruments, the Moog Synthesizer, American Indian music including Navajo vocal techniques, and Coltrane for contemporary jazz. He reads John Barth, Anthony Burgess, Terry Southern, Tom Wolfe, and John Ciardi. A preferred political figure is Bella Abzug. As suggestions for short courses, he proposes the philosophy and history of chess, Elizabethan programs, science fiction, bridge for mathematicians, and, in jest, Armed Robbery I. As recreational items, he proposes that the television formats for Password and Concentration be adapted to be played by students and faculty.

Seeking out this kind of student is well worth the effort, as I think you would agree in George's case.

PROGRAM RESOURCE MATERIAL

As a variation on the old philosophical party game of naming and stating the reasons why you would most want a certain individual to occupy the hospital bed next to yours, why don't you apply this premise in terms of picking the one program resource item which you'd most like to have available to the exclusion of all others? Fortunately, union programmers don't have to put their resources into this perspective, but I pose the question just to emphasize and to recommend forcefully as I can my preference: The New York Times. I don't make this selection simply on the basis of "all the news that's fit to print". From the straight, excellent coverage of national and international news accompanied by editorial opinion and focus articles by distinguished columnists (with whom you may or may not agree), I think the whole ingenious Times umbrella of quality and depth makes this newspaper the single most valuable resource there is for the union staff member.

The Times news requires what I call activity at one of the highest levels of program development, namely, using the newspaper's reporting as sources of basic information or clues or tips from which to build one's own union events. This procedure is not always easy, but it's infinitely rewarding and valuable. It contributes much to your professional development as a programmer to use these news items to help shape your own program directions and content. The intellectual responsibility and hard work of interpretation and application are awesome. Through this process of news item selection the creative doer can strengthen his craft in contrast to the less demanding task of being a canned program follower.

The Sunday Times is particularly rewarding for The Week In Review which includes summaries and special articles about national and world developments, editorials, law, education, and medicine. Touring and recreation at home and abroad are featured in the Travel Section, and the part of the Sunday paper I always look at first is what I call the “Drama Section” but also includes items on architecture, art, coins, dance, gardens, home improvement, films, music, recordings, photography, stamps and TV. Periodically there are reviews of recordings by categories—opera, symphony, rock, among others—and suggestions for a basic library along a periodic supplement on high fidelity equipment. The Sports Section also includes materials on automobiles, boats, dogs, cats, and other pets as well as transportation news items. There’s also the Magazine with its diverse feature articles including puzzles, food, fashions, home decorations, and bridge. To round out the Sunday features, the Times Book Review and a section on Business and Finance are a part of the huge weekly package. The daily versions include U.N. proceedings, meteorology, chess, and surely some of newspapers' most glamorous daily ads. I go into all of this detail in an effort to encourage you to subscribe by mail if you don’t have this resource available on a daily or weekly basis. It’s well worth it.

For some months now I have clipped the newspaper daily, not only to keep pertinent items of information on the arts which appealed to me, particularly, but to explore with student committees and staff what possibilities there are for us based on recent news items. Here are some recent examples from my clippings collection having to do with higher education and/or obvious application potential for union programs with dates of the news items:

The Times' Annual Education Review Section of January 8, 1973 includes some very thought provoking pieces with great inferences for the college union. Among the many articles in this special section are:

What is an Educated Person?

Courses Tailored to Student Interests

New Interest Awakening in Foreign Studies

Engineering Schools Try to Mold a Broader, More Humanistic Graduate

Business Schools Shift from Theory to Practice

The Humanities, Viewed as a Crucible for Higher Education:

Hot Courses on Campus: Dreams, Yoga and 'I Ching'

The above do make you want to call a meeting of the program staff, don't they? My clippings collection of the last six months now numbers about 300 pieces. These accumulated items are something of a gold mine for a variety of reasons. Why not start your own, if you haven't already?

In a maneuver not unlike sneaking a little "Kitchen Bouquet" into the red eye gravy preparation when no one is looking (just to play the game further about expressing a preference for source of material), why don't you fold a copy of New Yorker Magazine into the Times in order to have available Pauline Kael's superb film reviews as well as some profiles of experts on such items as visceral learning or noise pollution to name a few, or a recent piece on science fiction in Onward and Upward With the Arts? Within the past few months, the magazine carried a profile on Dick Cavett whose television show in its attempt to entertain and inform frequently is good program source material. In other profiles, The New Yorker as of late has featured such personages in the arts alone as Jonas Mekas, the filmmaker, Marian McPartland, the jazz pianist, and Jacques Tati, the French actor, all of whom are good union program references.

Some Additional Comments

When I started working on the U.G. this past fall, I had intended to include a section of comments and program listings as these related to events presented in a certain area of the union. Other than some obvious approaches such as the use of a lounge for an informal concert, special food representing a theme or a culture in a dining area, or variations on tournaments and promotion approaches in the games area, I didn't really find that much material in my brochures collection about programming for specific union locations. I would urge you, however, to draw into your programming all the union's physical resources which are suitable means of helping achieve maximum impact for your calendar of events. In tours of other unions (and in my own), for example, I do not see enough book store promotions related to the union's speaker or theme series programs or film series. Are we missing out on creative use of space in faculty dining rooms which lie idle after the lunch hour? How is the coffee house being used other than for weekend entertainment? How are the operational personnel of the union being drawn into the over-all program of the union?

Although slow going and sometimes difficult to interpret such items as all campus events calendars in terms of union participation, the pursuit of the brochure I have collected for the U.G. has been a real joy. Many of our unions have overall marvelous programs. As I stated earlier, these listings in the guide are intended for you to use as a checklist or ideas or points of departures for your own program development. It would be fun and interesting to hear from those of you whose programs I have listed as to your evaluations of the programs were actually received on your campuses.

I very much appreciate the cooperation of those of you who sent me materials. If there is a subsequent edition of the U.G., please respond again. In the meantime, please let me and the Core Consultation Team know your reactions to The Uncommon Guide.
