This list of films for use in a basic college speech communication course has been drawn from films available through the universities of Michigan, Michigan State, and Iowa. These collections were selected because of reasonable rental rates, their midwestern availability, and the comparative fullness of the collections. Many of the films are old and in black-and-white. Some are "trigger" films--films meant to explore some situation, problem, or idea to trigger discussion or a specifiable psychological response. (TO)
PARTIAL LIST OF FILMS AVAILABLE FOR USE IN THE BASIC COURSE

Bruce E. Gronbeck
University of Iowa
1974 Conference of the Directors of the Basic Speech Communication Course of Midwestern Universities

The list below has been drawn from films available through the universities of Michigan, Michigan State, and Iowa—relatively large distributors of educational films; these have been selected because of reasonable rental rates, their midwestern availability, and the comparative fulsomeness of the collections. To preview and/or order films, order catalogues from The Media Library (Basement, East Hall, University of Iowa, Iowa City, 52242), Audic-Visual Education Center (The University of Michigan, 48104), or the Instructional Media Center (Michigan State University, East Lansing, 48823).

Many of these films are old and in black-and-white. They cannot be expected to replace classroom instruction. The instructor and the film should become a team; if the teacher cannot join it, it should not be shown. Note, too, that some of these represent so-called "trigger films"—films meant to explore some situation, problem or idea, so as to "trigger" discussion or some specifiable psychological response. Only one professed trigger film (Job Interview) is listed here, although films such as Language of Advertising and the Making of the President series can lead to discussions of rhetorical effectiveness; beyond these, a near-infinite variety of documentaries, pieces of social commentary, and the like, can be employed by the creative teacher to trigger discussions of rhetorical principles.
