ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This guide was prepared by Paul Harrington, Research Assistant in the AAHPER Information and Research Utilization Center in Physical Education and Recreation for the Handicapped. Thanks and appreciation are also extended to the many individuals and representatives of various groups who directly and indirectly contributed to the success of this guide. Those who benefit the most from the efforts of all concerned will be impaired, disabled, and handicapped persons who have greater opportunities and enriched experiences through expanded physical education, recreation, and related programs because of these efforts.

The project presented or reported herein was performed pursuant to a Grant from the U.S. Office of Education, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. However, the opinions expressed herein do not necessarily reflect the position or policy of the U.S. Office of Education, and no official endorsement by the U.S. Office of Education should be inferred.

Guidelines for Preparing Grant Proposals. . . . . . . . . . . . .49
Support and financial assistance for programs and activities involving impaired, disabled, and handicapped persons are available from diverse sources. Funds and other support for facilities, equipment, supplies, operations, training, research, demonstration, and manpower for physical education, recreation, camping, swimming, aquatics, outdoor education, sports, athletics, and other related activities for special groups often come from federal agencies, state groups, and local organizations; various foundations also assist in these areas. However, foundations must be contacted often and support actively solicited for such things as programs, facilities, equipment, supplies, and specific activities.

Information about foundations amenable to supporting physical education, recreation, and related programs for persons with various handicapping conditions has been compiled and is outlined in this Guide. Some foundations prefer to give locally rather than nationally or regionally; other foundations are oriented nationally and place no geographic limitations on requesting agencies. Most foundations require an exploratory letter explaining a project or program before a formal grant proposal is submitted. Creativeness and uniqueness of program or activity for which funds are solicited are usually important and often determining factors as to whether or not a proposal is viewed positively by a Foundation. It is important to list agencies that may fund or support a proposed project or program after foundation support has terminated. Foundations are anxious to see projects continued with community and/or agency support.

1The Foundation Directory (Marianna O. Lewis and Patricia Bowes, Editors; New York: Columbia University Press, 1971) provides a comprehensive listing of most all foundations, their purposes, and activities; it can be found in many public and college/university libraries.

Corning Glass Works Foundation
Corning, New York 14830

CONTACT

Richard B. Bessey
Executive Director

NATURE, PURPOSE, SCOPE

Emphasizes improving educational facilities, offers support for innovative programs and community advancement projects that promote the well-being of mankind, and stimulates environmental effects to make communities better places in which to live; emphasizes good design of architecture, landscaping, and urban planning. Health and social welfare programs which meet special needs are major concerns. Historically and currently, this Foundation's normal program does not cover projects in the area of the handicapped, but specific projects in this area may be considered if they meet other criteria and interests. Major categories of involvement include:

- education
- museums and libraries
- health and social welfare
- association, councils, and cultural activities.

WHO MAY APPLY

Organizations and institutions that are exempt from federal taxation, have broad public support, and in the opinion of trustees and staff, make unique and useful contributions to communities or special areas they serve.

HOW TO APPLY

Submit preliminary letter of inquiry before presenting formal proposal.

WHEN TO APPLY

Although each fiscal year ends December 31, applications may be submitted at anytime.

GEOGRAPHIC LIMITATIONS

Focuses efforts on communities where Corning Glass Works has manufacturing plants.

GENERAL LIMITATIONS

Resources go toward major undertakings rather than small projects.

SUPPLEMENTARY RESOURCES

Lists sources of assistance, including publications and other aids for recreation area developers or operators; prospective sources include state departments, agencies and commissions administering parks, recreation, fish, game, forestry, and related resources.

Provides information about federal agencies that assist states, political subdivisions, organizations, and individuals involved in outdoor recreation programs and activities.

Lists nongovernmental foundations and nonprofit organizations that support programs established to maintain or aid social, educational, health, charitable, religious, or other activities serving the common welfare of humanity. Presents detailed information about private philanthropical organizations, offers a general view of special fields, contains information concerning interests and activities of various foundations, and lists grants in specific areas. Affords foundations one means of meeting their obligations of accountability by making available an accurate and brief account of their purposes, limitations, and finances.

Holds fund raising activities and publishes Fund Raisers News. Exposition displays an array of products available for fund raising projects--i.e., light bulbs, carnival booths, novelty gifts. Projects, products, useful tips, and other current news and trends in fund raising are found in the News which costs $4.00 a year for four issues.

Deals with theory and reality of selective efforts in the foundation field; planning procedures and helpful approaches that have worked are discussed. Times of the year in which many foundations find it convenient to receive applications to give each quicker consideration are included.

Private foundations support some areas—i.e., medical research, education, and treatment—that relate to impaired, disabled, and handicapped persons. However, it is necessary to interpret for foundation personnel physical education and recreation needs and benefits, particularly as they relate to education of persons with handicapping conditions. It is essential to follow requirements of each foundation in making formal application. Some foundations require a specific outline including:

. Evidence that the applying organization is tax-exempt and that contributions to it are deductible.

. Detailed budget justifying the amount requested.

. Indication that the request is made by action of the governing body of the applying organization.

. Supplementary information to strengthen the application; a financial statement and list of directors are usually required; endorsements by planning groups or by authorities in the field of the work proposed are helpful.
GUIDELINES FOR PREPARING GRANT PROPOSALS

Increasing emphasis on equality of educational opportunity for all Americans has turned national attention toward improving all educational areas for persons with various handicapping conditions. Even though a growing number of state legislatures has subsidized programs for impaired, disabled, and handicapped children in public schools, shortage of qualified personnel and funds has made it difficult for public schools and universities to establish new programs or to expand existing ones in these areas.

The federal government and private foundations have acted to relieve this situation. However, to receive funds from these sources, a grant proposal must be prepared. A first requisite for successful grantsmanship is knowledge of funding agencies and resources. The second requisite is preparation of a good proposal.

In assembling the variety of criteria used for evaluating proposals by different agencies, it has been impossible to apply a rigid formula by which a proposal can be measured—none exists! Hence:

1. Each proposal should specify the manner and degree of its commitment to the proposed program so that it is a self-contained document and complete in every aspect.

2. It should be self-explanatory and tell its own story.

3. It should make special reference to development of the curriculum and other program components, as well as explain and defend its raison d'être in as much detail as necessary.

4. It should identify, for example, individual teachers and other personnel, where possible in relation to the program's instructional content, and where not possible, every effort should be made to indicate to the panel of consultants that will read, evaluate, and rate proposals how the several parts of the program will be taught and by what type of teacher.

5. The burden of proof lies with the quality of the proposal which is submitted, not with the size, past record, or prestige of the institution.

Based on "Preparation of Grant Proposals" by Tony D. Vaughan in Programming for the Mentally Retarded, American Association for Health, Physical Education and Recreation
Detailed directions and precise regulations for preparation are often prescribed for submitting most proposals. However, flexibility and high purpose should always permeate writing a proposal within the bounds described by the guidelines. The sine qua non of proposal preparation is that each proposal must delineate specifically and in detail a program which reflects clear awareness and gives precise analysis of how the program meets needs of the particular area for which funding is requested.

Representative general guidelines used by review panels in evaluating proposals may be described as follows:

1. The institution's or agency's program is of high quality, well coordinated, and shows promise of achieving objectives of the proposal.

2. The full-time instructional or research staff is experienced and competent to conduct the proposed program.

3. Substantive content and organization of required study are appropriate for professional competence and demonstrate an awareness of new approaches, techniques, and instructional materials.

4. Suitable facilities will be utilized for observation, participation, practice teaching, laboratory or clinical experience, internships, and other supervised experiences. Such facilities should be accessible to the institution of higher education and staffed by qualified personnel. The duration of such experiences for each student should be specified. It should be of adequate length and continuity.

5. A proposal should reflect a commitment of the institution or agency to developing the training program or project for which a grant is requested.

CONTENT AND ORGANIZATION OF A PROPOSAL

The following represents a typical outline of content information included in most proposals. Cover page, abstract of the proposal, and appendix, need to be completed in addition to the formal body of a proposal.

1. Introduction

The major purpose of the proposed program should be carefully stated and justified, identifying both immediate and long-range goals. Explanations should not rely merely on general statements of broad need or statistical surveys. Rather, a rationale must be precise and its relationship to the potential program specific. A proposed program should be tailored to the particular levels of assignment and preparation of the potential participants. Whether a proposal plans to serve a local, state, regional, or national area, reasons should be given as to why the particular geographical area is selected, and why it should be offered at the particular institution submitting the proposal.

2. Rationale and Objectives

Include a concise statement of the rationale on which the paradigm for the proposed program is based. In addition, specify the particular objectives which the participants might be expected to achieve within the duration of the proposed program.

3. Statement Describing Institution's Commitment to the Program

The extent to which an institution of higher education is committed to developing a program for impaired, disabled, and handicapped persons should be noted. Such a statement should encompass past as well as current efforts of the institution.

4. Program Content and Its Organization

Describe content of the proposed program in full and indicate how it will be organized and why this particular arrangement is suitable to those who will be selected to participate. Relationship of the content and its organization with that of the rationale and stated objectives should be made clear. Distinguish carefully between what is new, and what is old, and what part of the proposed program, if any might be considered different, new, special, unique, or innovative.

The purpose here is to learn where and how a proposed program fits into the regular or normal organizational pattern of the institution. Innovation is not mandatory but may be helpful. There is no assumption that certain institutions are not already prepared to offer programs in this area without pause or change in their offerings.

But this fact should be so declared, and reasons for whatever is proposed in relation to what exists should be given in detail.

5. Practicum and Field Experience

Where this is part of the proposed program, indicate provisions for cooperative relationships with a local school system, residential facility, day care center, recreation department, park board, voluntary agency, service groups, professional associations, or governmental organization with reference to supervised or practical experience.

Describe in detail different kinds of practicum, internship, field, and research experiences that are, or will be, made available. Indicate goals and sequence of all practicum and field experiences. Explain in detail integration of such experiences with content of training programs.

6. Instructional Staff Members Participating in the Program

Name staff members who are or will be directly involved in the program for which the proposal is submitted. Individuals should be listed in an order determined by the amount of time they will devote to the program.

Each staff person's responsibilities in the proposed program should be clearly defined. When responsibility for supervision of various practicum experiences lies with personnel in local schools, be sure to indicate a description of their role as well.

7. Institutional Resources and Facilities

Indicate all related institutional resources such as library, laboratories, community relationships, and other projects having specific bearing on the proposed program—e.g., total number of volumes in the library is not considered meaningful. Indicate also what facilities will be made available to enhance the program in terms of the particular group of individuals to whom awards will be made.

8. Selection of Fellows

Outline specifically criteria for selecting fellows by your institution, including standard institutional procedures showing characteristic and periodic steps in obtaining admission to a graduate program. Include any special or unique criteria appropriate to applicants for the proposed program. Be sure selection criteria are relevant to stated purpose and to declared nature of the program.

9. Program Improvements, Expansions, and Changes

Comment on any improvements, expansions, changes, and innovations planned and achieved during the past year, and those planned for the coming year.

10. Accrediting or Approving Agencies

List agencies and organizations which have accredited or approved your institution's programs in education, special education, physical education, or recreation.

11. Provision for High Quality

By way of summarization, indicate what is built into the program which will provide for highest possible achievement of the stated objectives. Indicate provisions for continuing self-evaluation of the program and for improving it while it is in operation. To the degree possible, state implications that such a program might have on campus, in the community, and throughout the state.

Time and thought are required to prepare a properly written proposal, especially when imagination and creativity are required. Sufficient time must be devoted to the task so that clarity and details necessary to communicate excellence are not lacking. In preparing a grant proposal, it has been found useful to have all staff members who will eventually participate in the program meet and review the nature and content of the proposal. This process results in a better prepared proposal as well as assures staff support for the project.

Another area that should be mentioned is implementation of the proposal project if it is approved and funding is awarded. A great deal of thought must be given prior to submission of the proposal regarding budget, staff, and other program implications. The submitting agency or institution must be prepared to live up to all commitments and arrangements it writes into the application. This latter point requires a process of self-evaluation, an assessment of the existing programs' strength and weaknesses, and potential resources for developing a program in the area of application. The institution program must be strong enough to be able to follow through on the commitments contained in the application.
SUMMARY

The following areas are presented as a brief check list for those preparing grant applications. One of the most important concepts in grant preparation is that of understanding and following application guidelines.

Check list for Grant Applications

1. Introduction (background and purpose of the project)
2. Rationale and objectives of the proposed program
3. Statement describing institution's commitment to the program
4. Description of program content and its organization
5. Description of practicum and field experiences
6. Description of instructional staff members participating in the program
7. Description of institutional resources and facilities
8. Criteria for selection of fellows
9. Program improvements, expansions, and changes
10. List of accrediting or approving agencies
11. Provisions for high quality of program
12. Indication of administrative support
13. Indication of cooperative community relationships
14. Well-prepared and detailed budget
15. Provisions for continuing evaluation of proposed program.
