The movement to introduce law studies in the schools has gained great momentum since 1972. This directory describes law-related educational activities and programs K-12 being conducted throughout the United States. In an effort to prevent duplication of effort by providing information about projects, this second edition updates the first by the expanded activities of many ongoing projects as well as 100 new programs. Arranged alphabetically by states, each project description includes the following information: (1) subject areas taught; (2) activities--classroom teaching, training teachers, developing curriculum materials, providing facilitative services; (3) materials developed by the project; (4) teaching administrative staff; (5) number of students reached by the program and grade levels for which the project is conducted; (6) sponsoring organizations which initiated and/or actively support the program; and (7) sources of funding. Also provided are cross-references to teacher training activities and Bar Association activities. An information form for law-related educational activities is included for organizations to submit up-to-date information for the next edition. (Author/RM)
The late Adlai Stevenson said:

"Democracy is not self-executing. We have to make it work, and to make it work we have to understand it. Sober thought and fearless criticism are impossible without critical thinkers and thinking critics. Such persons must be given the opportunity to come together to see new facts in the light of old principles and to evaluate old principles in light of new facts by deliberation, debate, and dialogue."

The American Bar Association Special Committee on Youth Education for Citizenship (YEFC) believes that democracy can only be made to work effectively if "understanding" as called for by Ambassador Stevenson is developed in the elementary and secondary schools of our country. It is not our intention to make every student a lawyer. It is rather to help educators use the substance and process of law as vehicles by which students and their teachers can examine "new facts in the light of old principles and evaluate old principles in light of new facts."

Our goal is to see that law is taught systematically in our schools at all levels. All of our efforts are directed at insuring that such instruction is comprehensive, realistic, and rigorous. We work with lawyers, representatives of the justice system, educational administrators, teachers, parents, and other individuals and groups in the community. Soon, we hope an elementary or secondary school without courses in law will be as rare as a school without courses in mathematics.

In 1972, we published the first edition of our Directory of Law-Related Educational Activities. That book, which described over 170 law-related projects throughout the United States, proved important not only for the information it contained, but also as a demonstration that the movement for law studies in the schools was alive and prospering. Through the distribution of this revised Directory of Law-Related Educational Activities, which lists approximately 250 projects, we hope to stimulate increased interest and encourage further coordination in the field.

YEFC also publishes a series of Working Notes which serve as practical guides for the development and implementation of law studies programs. Earlier this year, we distributed our Bibliography of Law-Related Curriculum Materials: Annotated as a special edition in the Working Notes series. In addition, YEFC has produced a 30-minute film, To Reason Why, which dramatizes in documentary style the need for and effectiveness of law studies programs.

YEFC does not have a proprietary interest in any project models, teacher training programs, or curriculum materials. Our function is entirely facilitative. YEFC provides coordination for all projects in the field and serves as a national clearinghouse for information. We conduct regional conferences at which lawyers and educators learn about law studies programs through active involvement in instructional strategies currently being used in classrooms throughout the country. In addition, members of YEFC's staff spend a portion of their time consulting with community leaders including lawyers, educators, and law enforcement personnel in the development of local programs.

Introduction

In the introduction of our first edition of this Directory, we noted the interest among lawyers, educators, judges, law enforcement officials, and other concerned members of communities throughout the United States in developing new approaches to teaching about law—both its process and its content. We also noted that many of those involved in the field were interested in learning about other projects, thereby avoiding needless duplication of effort and stimulating coordinated and cooperative efforts. We appreciate very much the favorable comments of many of you who have informed us that the Directory has succeeded in achieving these objectives.

During the year and a half since the publication of the first Directory, the movement to introduce law studies in the schools has gained momentum. Though some of the projects listed in the first Directory inevitably are no longer in existence, others have expanded their activities and many new programs have been initiated. Approximately 100 new programs are listed in this second edition.

The description of projects includes information compiled under the following headings:

Subjects: Subject areas taught. Subjects most often offered include the Constitution, Bill of Rights, legal process, and substantive law (e.g., consumer, criminal, juvenile, torts and property law).

Activities: Most of the projects provide classroom teaching of the "subjects". Some also train teachers, develop curriculum materials or provide facilitative services to individuals and groups in this field.

Materials: Materials are noted only if they have been developed by the project.

Staff: This category is divided into two sections, "teaching" and "administrative". "Teaching" staff includes volunteer lawyers, educators, law enforcement officers and others as well as full-time teachers. "Administrative" staff includes only those who are paid in whole or part to administer the project, unless otherwise noted.

Students: Two items of information are included: The number of students reached by the program during the last academic year and the grade levels for which the project is conducted.

Sponsors: The organizations which initiated and/or actively support the program.

$$_$$: Sources of funding (if any).

The Directory also includes a cross-reference to projects involved in teacher training as well as a cross-reference to bar association activities.

Because of the dynamic growth of law-related activities, there are doubtless some projects for which entries are not current or complete. In addition, we have no doubt missed some altogether. In order to keep us up-to-date on activities in the field, please complete the special YEFC Information Form included in the back of the Directory. In addition, we welcome your suggestions on ways in which the Directory might be improved.
