The career awareness guide is designed to help elementary school children develop an awareness of themselves as persons and as members of a community as well as an appreciation of the richness in variety and choice in the world of work. The lessons are designed to minimize the need for teacher research, contain materials which are readily available, and provide objectives, activities, resources, and evaluation. Topic headings for primary grades (K-three) cover awareness of self in relation to others, awareness of careers in the community, and career choice. A supplementary list of materials for the primary grades includes films, a wish auction, a job application, and a worker evaluation form. Topic headings for the intermediate grades four and five include positive attitude toward oneself and awareness of oneself as a social being, occupational awareness in the sense of knowing the operation of the working world and cultivating good work habits, and active exploration of the world of work. Supplemental activities for the intermediate grades include games, role playing, projects, field trips, and interviews. Appended attachments include: an interest inventory, a background information form, a job application form, a worker interview questionnaire, questions for class discussion, and an employee critique sheet. OVERVIEW - ELEMENTARY

When the writer of this career education curriculum team first got together, we began by asking each other "How is career education meaningful in elementary school?" "How can children aged 5 to 11 begin to make the choice or even to think about the choices involved in career decisions?" "Why did they even need to think about it before high school?"

We were aware that classroom teachers already did a lot to promote awareness of what people do in their jobs so what did we need to add to that?

We decided to brainstorm in order to draw together some concepts that a career education curriculum might develop and then answer our questions about whether this is necessary as part of elementary education. We realized that this might be seen as putting the cart before the horse but we did satisfactorily answer our own questions, so that method worked for us.

We wanted to zero in on making the connection between the individual child, the family and the school and the outside world. So we decided to begin with the child and his/her own awareness of self. If the child can begin to think about and identify likes, dislikes, strengths, limitations, feelings in himself and if he can become aware of choices and how he makes them he is developing the kind of awarenesses and skills he needs to make a career choice when the time comes for such a choice to be made.

When he begins to see himself as an integral part of community, e.g. the family and/or school and he begins to see how his contributions help that community to function, he begins to see the relationship between himself and the concept of work in a community. As his concept of community broadens beyond home and school, he begins to learn about the people in the community, about what a community needs and how people in the community help each other through their work. He becomes aware of the richness in variety and choice in the world of work.

These two basic awarenesses lay the groundwork which will enable him to make career oriented decisions as he develops.

We have compiled a book with several sample lesson plans aimed at these goals. It is by no means a complete curriculum. Rather it is an example of how activities can be set up to meet the goals mentioned above. The lessons themselves are designed in such a way as to involve the teachers in a minimal amount of research work. The materials should be readily available in your school, the public library, the a. v. library, or through your school counselor. A resource list is provided to supplement the sample curriculum. It can also be used to create new curricula to support additional concepts for career education.

EXPLANATION OF DOMAIN I
SELF AWARENESS ACTIVITIES

Goal A

1. What's on your mind?

Have students make a wheel on a sheet and divide it into eight sections. At different intervals during the day, have them write in a segment what's on their mind at that moment.

At the end of the day, have a 20 minute discussion of the students thoughts.

QUESTIONS:

a. Did others have the same things on their minds that you had on yours at the same time?

b. Were your thoughts ever singular?

c. Had you had the same thoughts as others at other times?

2. Preferences

Gather together colored blocks of different shapes, material scraps of different textures, and several simple tools. Have the students take time to handle all of these things with these questions in mind:

a. What colors appeal to you most?

b. What shapes are most appealing?

c. What textures are most appealing?

d. What tools do you like to use?

3. Interest Inventory (see attached).

4. Write down some things about yourself.

1. I am _________________________________. (Number from 1-20 just as shown in #1.)

Note: Child is required to do some real thinking about himself in order to think of 20 things about himself. Real introspectory activity.
5. Missing Persons Report

One of the class members is "missing". Have each student write a description of a class member. Make certain that they include such characteristics as height, approximate weight, sex, ethnic group, mannerisms, habits, and hobbies. See if the rest of the class can discover who is missing.

6. Self Improvement List

Students think about two of their personal behaviors which they want to improve for a two week period.

7. The Ungame - Tell It Like It Is

It is not a game, but people having fun while sharing real thoughts, ideas and feelings. Tune-in to one another; no losers. Learn how to communicate more effectively. As you share your thoughts, ideas and feelings, you will develop a deeper understanding of others and yourself. Ability to respond and become involved will improve as he continues to Tell It Like It Is.

8. Self-Improvement Technique

Have each child develop a confidential "self-improvement" list. Allow each child the chance to establish one or two reasonable self-improvement goals for the next two weeks. Plan a Behavior Contract signed by student and teacher.

SAMPLE BEHAVIOR MODIFICATION CONTRACT

The purpose of this contract is to set good behavior goals that you and I will achieve in this class. In signing this contract each of us agrees to do his part.

Pupil __________________________ (His or Her Name)

I, _______________________________ agree to:

1. Be on time for school for 2 weeks.
2. Stop pestering others during work sessions.

13. I get mad sometimes. YES  NO
14. I help with jobs at home. YES  NO
15. I like to do odd jobs. YES  NO
16. I cooperate with others. YES  NO

Write a paragraph on your strengths and weaknesses.

10. Workbook - "Being Me"

A workbook from SRA Focus on Self Development Series, Stage 3 - "Involvement". This booklet encourages expression of feelings involving self and others. It provides open sentences, statements and topic headings combined with graphic designs that provide a stimulus for this expression.
11. Pupil Photos or Self-Portraits

Use a regular photo or self-portrait of each child and let students find words in magazines to describe themselves and paste under pictures. Fingerprints may be put on the same page as the picture and words.

12. "Who Am I" Exercise

Teacher or child gives 3 or 4 clues about a person in the room and others are to guess who the person is.

Variation: Pupils may be called upon to describe themselves. They may pretend that they are to meet someone that has never seen them before. Meeting place may be in a crowded airport or bus station.

Variation: A child that is being described stands up when he has recognized himself from the description.

13. Circle Game

Ask students to say one or two positive things about the people sitting on each side of them: i.e. always on time, likes to share, never pushes in line, smiles a lot, works hard, good singer, dances well.

14. Pupil of the Week

The pupil of the week will be a special person. His name and picture and some important information about him will be put on the bulletin board, such as collecting papers, choosing a class activity, and leading morning exercises. Every child in the class will have a turn.

They might become "Pupil" in order of their birthdays, or by drawing names. The method of selection should be as objective as possible so that the last child chosen won't feel disliked.

15. Open-End Sentences

1. Sometimes I feel like________________________.

2. Times when I wish I didn't have feelings are______________________.

3. Something that can really make me sad is__________________________.

4. Something that can really make me happy is________________________.

EXPLANATION OF DOMAIN I
SELF AWARENESS ACTIVITIES
GOAL B

1. Picture Completion Exercise

This activity is used to show the children that differences in perception and interpretation are aspects of their uniqueness and that people interpret things differently.

Give each child a piece of paper on which a symbol or symbols have been drawn. The same symbol(s) should be on each child's paper. Each child is to complete a picture letting the symbols suggest the subject and become part of the picture. Compare the pictures, emphasizing differences in perception and interpretations.

2. What I Like About People

The children could write down the names of five persons they know and beside each name write something they like about that person. How similar were the five comments? The teacher could point out that the qualities we think are very important we seek in all people, but that most of us value money traits and there is no set group of qualities that all people admire. To illustrate the variety of traits the class values, the teacher could collect the papers and select from them qualities to write on the chalkboard. As she writes each one, the children can raise their hands if it's a trait they admire in others.

3. Story - Don't Call Names

This is a story on cassette taken from DUSO Kit 2 (Developing Understanding In Self and Others) and it helps to illustrate the problems that can arise when people do not accept individual differences. It emphasizes that uniqueness should be accepted and valued. The discussion that follows should explore ways of accepting differences in ourselves and others.

The Poster, I'm O.K., You're O. K. should be discussed as to how it relates to the story and to the children's own lives. It may be a good idea to display the poster in a prominent place throughout the week.
4. Our Emotional Needs

Discuss the word security and what it means to "feel secure". A class chart may be prepared which children list the things that make people "feel secure".

i.e. Knowing We Are Liked Can Help Us Feel Secure
Knowing We Belong To A Group Can Help Us Feel Secure
Knowing We Can Do Things Well Can Help Us Feel Secure
Knowing We Are Loved Can Help Us Feel Secure

This discussion can lead into other areas of emotional needs such as the needs for accomplishment, affection, attention, and self-acceptance.

Have children discuss or role play some situation which occurred during the day and try to get to the bottom of "why" it happened in terms of social or emotional needs that may not have been satisfied.

i.e. Why a child ruined a game that others were playing.

Children should search for finding alternative ways of handling situations.

5. Does It Bother You?

For a look at some of the reasons children reject each other, a questionnaire might be prepared that asks, "Does It Bother You if someone .....?" Yes, no, sometimes could be answered to such phrases as: acts bossy, takes a lot, never talks, won't do what you want to do, has to have own way all the time, won't let you borrow anything, doesn't return what he borrows, cries, loses his temper a lot, seems sad a lot, is neat and tidy, etc.

The last question might be "What are some other things that bother you about people?"

No need for children to put names on paper. The teacher can collect them, summarize the results, and list on the chalkboard from most to least the things that bother the class about others. The class might then discuss possible reasons for objectionable behavior and for their dislikes.

6. Game: The Feeling Bee

This game helps children become more aware of their own and other's feelings.
Divide the group into two teams and have them line up in two rows, facing each other. Ask the first person on one team to name something that makes him feel happy. If he responds, he may sit down. If he does not respond within thirty seconds go on to the first person on the other team. Continue until everyone has had a chance to respond. The first team to be seated wins. Take time after the game to discuss responses.

Game may be repeated with a variety of feelings, such as disappointed, disgusted, hopeful, angry, frightened.

7. Role Play - Thoughtless Behavior

The children could role play any of the following examples of thoughtless behavior, discuss what rights were violated, and then role play better ways of handling the situation.

1. Two girls discuss a party in front of a third girl who wasn't invited.
2. Betsy and Linda planned to meet after school. Half an hour later, Betsy is still waiting.
3. Two team captains argue at a baseball game about which one will have to take a bad player for his side.
4. Two children giggle, point and talk loudly about someone they see on the street.
5. Joe borrows his brother's baseball mitt without asking and returns it a week later. Jim's been looking for it all week.

The teacher and class may want to add other situations.

8. What Do You Spy Dear

Read this book by Sesyle Joslin. Discuss its contents. List the following or similar incidents on the chalkboard and ask the children to draw a picture about one of them. When they have finished, have them write or dictate a caption telling what they would do or say to the person in the situation in order to make him or her feel better.

1. A girl has just finished painting a picture and accidentally spills paint all over it.
2. A boy had a part in a play and forgot his lines while everybody was watching.
3. A friend missed a fly in the outfield during an important game.
4. Your friend was scolded in front of the class.

5. Your friend has just been told that he is not good enough for the baseball team of his choice.

6. A classmate is being bothered by bullies.

7. One of your friends was not invited to another friend's birthday party.

8. Someone has passed you a note with an ugly drawing of a girl in your class and the girl has seen it.

The purpose of this activity is to help children empathize with people in difficulty and to help them learn how to express encouragement.

9. People I Need
   People Who Need Me

Have children make a list entitled "People I Need". One list may be read aloud and others may add people not already mentioned. The list may be written on the blackboard.

There should be a discussion on how we depend on others to survive. Emphasize the fact that this list could be endless.

Choose one or two people on the list and discuss what their list would be like and how long it would be. This helps to show that everybody depends on a lot of other people.

Have children make a list entitled "People Who Need Me". Children can be shown that others in addition to his family and friends depend on them. They can be shown that Dr. Seuss or book writers depend on them. T.V. commercials, shoe salesmen, etc.

10. Service Projects

The purpose of this activity is to encourage altruistic behavior.

Discuss with the children a variety of things that we can do to help other people simply because they need help, not because we are expecting payment. If the children have trouble identifying possibilities, start them by listing such things as:

a. Playing with a young child so that his mother can do something she has been wanting to do.

b. Reading or playing with someone confined to bed.

c. Walking a dog for someone.
d. Watering the lawn for someone on vacation.

e. Shoveling snow for someone who is not feeling well.

Challenge them to perform such a service solely for the personal satisfaction of performing a humane task. Allow children to discuss the experience and their feelings about it.

EXPLANATION OF DOMAIN II

OCCUPATIONAL AWARENESS ACTIVITIES

1. Room Jobs (School Jobs)
   a. Have students complete Social Security forms. (Forms may be obtained by writing local Social Security Office). Opportune time for explanation of Social Security.
   b. Give provocative names to the jobs available in the room
   c. Fill out job application (See copy attached)
   d. Go over each part of application with students.
   e. Help them to complete individual application.
      This project may take several days.

   Part II
   a. Take time out to discuss term interview. Conduct interview. Let students interview each other.
   b. Have short interviews and hire personnel.
   c. Pay may be whatever teacher decides upon.

2. Discussion of good qualities for a worker.

3. Invitation to Personnel Director.

4. Role playing - students assume role of job applicant and personnel director, also, students also assume roles of employer and employee. (Teacher or student may set up work situations and role play them.)
GOAL: Students, after exposure to previous activities, will begin to actively explore the World of Work.

EXPLANATION OF DOMAIN III
CAREER AWARENESS

1. Develop a slide show. Have students take pictures of people at work. Have certain students interview workers and narrate show.

2. Invite parents in to talk about their jobs.

3. Hobbies are a way of discovering vocational interests.

   Survey neighborhood and school workers as to:

   a. Hobbies as a child?

   b. Did hobbies help you decide what you wanted in the way of a career?

4. Public Interview - Have class decide occupations they are interested in. Then develop a set of informative questions to ask persons. Select a class member to interview worker.

5. Field trips to community businessess (Barber Schools, Beauty Colleges, retail stores, etc.) can be connected with Number 9.

6. Role playing - have students role play different workers after they have basic job information.

7. Who Am I? (Game) Descriptions of careers are read and children have to guess what career or job it is.

8. Write short reports on careers, duties, education, advantages, disadvantages. Why one would or would not like the job. Supply and demand for job.

9. Career of the Week

   Feature a career on a bulletin board, one of student choice. Children who are interested in the featured career find out about training, why job's important, and what the workers do in the job. This is shared in class. Newspaper articles, pictures, tools or instruments related to the career are displayed on the bulletin board. A resource person may be invited to discuss the career, or a field trip planned to visit a worker on the job.

10. Paper Dolls

    Students interview their parents about their jobs after major points of interest have been discussed in class. Each child makes a paper doll replica of his parents in their work clothes. These are shared along with information from interviews. (Can be shown at Parent Conferences).
As an evaluatory project for these three units we will ask the student to:

1. Tape a private interview with the teacher. This will include observation of the student on himself. Specific questions about his early feelings about himself regarding his strengths and weaknesses, abilities, etc.

Sample Questions

a. What do you see yourself doing 10 years from now?

b. How or in what ways do you feel you know yourself better.

c. Are you more or less definite about your chosen career now than you were in September? If more definite, why? If less definite, why?

Write an autobiography at end of unit. Compare it with the one written earlier. Keep in mind the questions above and try and answer them in the autobiography. Include any new feelings you have about yourself.
