June 1975

The importance of and necessity for understanding and resolving conflict becomes more evident as each day passes. The authors of the endeavor have attempted to compile a bibliography that will provide, to those interested, an extensive reference list from which to obtain information on conflict and conflict resolution. This reference list also can serve as a basis for communication scholars in establishing courses for the role of communication in conflict and conflict resolution.

The bibliography is divided into two major parts: Books and Articles. These parts are arranged alphabetically and listed under five categories: Intrapersonal and Interpersonal Conflict; Group and Societal Conflict; Organizational Conflict; Political and International Conflict; and Theoretical Basis of Conflict.
