The essentials and techniques of effective communication are presented in the guide designed as a source book for leaders conducting a communications seminar. General suggestions for leading a group discussion and some specific suggestions for activities which involve the seminar participants are presented. Factual information relating to effective communication and providing a basis for discussion is arranged by topical heading. The guide is divided into six units entitled: (1) purposes and people, (2) responsibilities and roadblocks, (3) persuasion and principles, (4) listening and leadership, (5) media and messages, and (6) motivation and management. Appended are supplemental aids including activities, handouts, and transparency originals. (VA)

PREFACE:

Communication begins at a very early age in life and progresses to that point in life where we can speak, read and write, but how many of us can communicate effectively? Effective communication occurs only when there is an exchange and two way understanding of ideas, facts, opinions, attitudes, emotions and experiences with others.

In the area of leadership there is no talent more essential than one's ability to communicate. A person may have powerful concepts, productive ideas and a keen sense of motivation but if he cannot communicate, exchange and have understood those concepts and ideas he will never be a leader.

This leader's guide seeks primarily to help the seminar participant develop effective communicative understandings and to serve as a foundation for continued professional leadership and development. It considers not only essentials and techniques but also activities to stimulate thinking and to develop an understanding of others, thus enabling the participant to more effectively communicate.

TO THE SEMINAR LEADER:

SEMINAR LEADER: It is suggested that the leader familiarize himself with the content and arrangement of the materials in this guide a minimum of seven (7) days before the seminar is to begin. The leader may wish to reproduce and distribute to the group many of the handouts and activities while others may serve as an original or model for overhead transparencies, flipchart or chalkboard purposes.

The leader's guide is not a textbook by any means, but it is intended to be a source book for the seminar. The guide does, however, present some general suggestions on how to lead the group, some specific suggestions on activities that the leader and group may wish to become involved in and factual information, under topical headings, that should provide a good basis for discussion and effective communication.

Rearrangement of materials is suggested to suit leader preferences and group interests.

THE ROLE OF THE SEMINAR LEADER:

The leader plays an important motivational role as facilitator and coordinator of group discussion. He should not be expected to be an expert, specialist, chairman or a teacher but as the term implies...one who leads the group into worthwhile discussion and learning while applying the ideas and suggestions presented in the leader's guide.

The leader's role is to draw from the group their collective and practical experience which will make it possible to eliminate any ineffective communication processes.

Emphasis should be placed on the group sharing ideas that will help each individual formulate his own working principles for effective communication.

Remember, the privilege of leadership carries with it the obligation to actively listen to the group's ideas. Research indicates the participation of the seminar leader should not exceed 25% and that there is a very close relationship between group participation and learning.
HELPFUL HINTS: The following suggestions are listed on the basis of past experience and may serve as stimulants to productive discussion.

- Allow the group to dominate discussion.
- Inject some humor—have fun.
- Be informal—relax the group.
- Make use of "We" rather than "i".
- Start and stop promptly.
- Suggest alternatives rather than advice.
- Remain one step ahead of the group—anticipate questions.
- Ask questions.
- Circumvent questions (if appropriate) back to the group. "What are your thoughts on this?" or "How do the rest of you feel about that?"
- Keep on the topic.
- Proceed to a new topic when it is apparent that the present one has been exhausted.
- Prepare thoroughly.
- Use audio-visual materials when possible.
- Listen to the group's examples and experiences.
- Distinguish between fact and opinion.
- Respect all opinions.
- Give ample time for participants to work on exercises and projects.
- Creatively inspire thinking.
- Be free with praise: "Worthwhile point", "Interesting observation", "That has a lot of merit".
- Remember—allow the group to dominate discussion.
PHYSICAL CRITERIA: The success of any group seminar depends somewhat on the physical arrangement of and the facilities within the room.

- The room should be of adequate size to accommodate ten to twenty members.

- Tables or desks with comfortable seating may be placed in a "round table" fashion or a flexible fashion that will be conducive to small group discussion and projects. Tables should be large enough for note-taking.

- A table or podium as a central place for the leader's pencils, chalk, guide and resource material should be available.

- Adequate space should be provided for flipchart, chalkboard, easel, overhead projector, tape recorder, etc.

- The room should be relatively free from disturbing noise and interruptions.

- Place cards (name tags), ash trays, coffee, and donuts or simply water and glasses should be provided depending on the nature and setting of the group.

PHILOSOPHY: LOOK UPON A LEADERSHIP OPPORTUNITY AS AN ADVENTURE AND YOU WILL HAVE FUN MEETING THAT OBJECTIVE!
Objective:
The leader creates a warm and relaxed atmosphere through introductions and provides reasons for the study of communications.
OPENING THE SESSION

GROUP INTRODUCTION

Create a warm and relaxed atmosphere by having participants introduce themselves, tell of their position and an interesting communicative experience.

LEADER INTRODUCTION

Inform the group of your background, supervisory experience and a personalized story about a "communications breakdown."

ANNOUNCE SCHEDULE

Inform participants of seminar length and agenda.

LEADER'S ROLE

Explain your role not so much as an authoritative expert but more as a facilitator, moderator or coordinator of discussion. "It is hoped that by pooling and sharing our experiences and ideas we will better understand people, effective communications and, the results will be an even more productive climate than is already being enjoyed by you and (name of firm).

REASONS FOR COMPANY INVOLVEMENT AND SEMINAR

...some probably said, "great."
...some probably said, "why?" and
...some probably said, "What's wrong with our communications?"

"Why do you think your company is interested in communications?"

REMEMBER NAMES!

GALILEO SAID: "You cannot teach a man anything... You can only help him to find it in himself."
"Your company is interested in you and your supervisory ability and they knew you would be receptive."

"They are interested in keeping and increasing their strong hold in the market."

...and others

SEMINAR GOALS

Commitments are important in communications. "We will reach every goal."

YOUR COMMUNICATIONS

"During your workday who do you feel your most important communication is with?"

Answers

...with top management
...with fellow supervisors
...with store and/or department managers
...with suppliers
...with clients and/or customers
...with the community
...with others

Resolve: "Is complete satisfaction and company productivity possible without effective communications with all people?"

MISCELLANEOUS LEADER COMMENTS

..."So, look upon me as helping you help yourselves, your customers, your company."

..."Maybe we can all save each other some headaches, time, trouble, embarassment and even a little money."
Unit 1

"PURPOSES and PEOPLE"

Objective: The participant will identify factors that contribute to purposeful communication and begin exploring his personal communicative process.
DEFINITIONS

"How would you define or describe communications?"

Answers

...exchange of ideas, facts, etc.
...transmission
...a two-way process
...interchange of opinions
...speech and writing
...common understanding
...etc.

A. The imparting or interchange of thoughts, opinions or information by speech, writing or signs.
   Webster

B. A two-way transmission and interchange of facts, ideas, feelings and courses of action involving a communicator, a message and a receiver.
   Leland Brown

C. Any behavior that results in an exchange of meaning.
   American Management Association

D. An exchange of information which requires presentation and reception resulting in common understanding among all parties.
   National Society for the Study of Communication

"Is effective communication a natural asset or learned skill?"

Answer

A learned skill like most other forms of self-expression...Eg. Music, Art, etc.
Effective communication then, as one definition implied, requires understanding.

HERE IS PROOF

"COMMUNICATION GAPS"

Picture yourself removed from the United States for several years, such as a POW, returning to the States and trying to get back into the communicative swing of things.

Upon your return, within the first few days, would you understand the following:

Cop Out
Male Chauvinist
Pot
Watergate
Hippie
Pinto
Ms.
Ripped Off
Gay Lib
Pig
Shag
The U.S. Government recognizes communication takes understanding. They have published and distributed to POW's, and other government personnel, an interpretative dictionary and guide to communication changes.

"Have you had similar experiences?"

PROCESSES

A. THINKING-

  effective communication is the result of clear thinking.

B. CONTINUING-

  effective communication is a two-way and continuing process. Even when it stops it may be started again.

C. SOCIAL-

  effective communication requires two or more persons.

"Can a person communicate with himself?"

Answer

"In a sense...yes."
D. REACTIVE-

completion of the communication cycle requires some reaction whether verbal or nonverbal.

"Has your communication ever been reacted to in a nonverbal manner?"

Answers

...facial expressions
...actions
...gestures
...demonstrations
...etc.

THEORY

Communication therefore, requires a communicator, a message and a receiver.

To be effective communication should also be understood and have a response.

REASONS (WHY'S)

"Why do you communicate, what do you feel are the reasons for communication here at (name of firm)?"

Answers

...build attitudes
...implement change
...increase profits
...motivate people
...direct activities
...inform employees
...develop rapport
...etc.

CASSETTE TAPE

"I have a cassette tape I want to play for you. It runs about five minutes and the emphasis is on just how important communication is to the leader and his business."

The tape is entitled, "THE IMPORTANCE OF EFFECTIVE COMMUNICATION IN BUSINESS."

TRANSCRIPT

"THE IMPORTANCE OF EFFECTIVE COMMUNICATION IN BUSINESS."

"What makes a person a successful supervisor and leader? There are of course many attributes we could consider but there is no skill more important than a leader's ability to communicate. Even if he does possess profitable ideas and concepts and has a keen sense of motivation... if he cannot transmit or exchange and have those ideas understood, then he will never be a leader.

Communication is an essential component of leadership and it is that tool which permits the exchange of ideas between people.

NOTE: The reasons listed on the transparency and those drawn from the group are usually quite inclusive.
But communication to be effective is even more. It is the understanding of communication and the realization of the importance of the exchange of those ideas. A lack of understanding may be one of the reasons we so often hear, 'There was a breakdown in communications.'

For example: Dateline-June 1966, Titusville, Florida; Cape Kennedy. "While Gemini 9 was being readied for flight, an Agena capsule was sent up one hour before Gemini 9 was to blastoff. Purpose: Gemini 9 to dock with Agena. But a plastic nose cone cover was not removed from Agena making the completion of docking impossible." Because of a breakdown in ground communication, an apparent misunderstanding, a multi-million dollar project was scrapped.

On a smaller scale, but as equally important to you as Gemini 9, suppose you say to an employee, 'Today I want you to call our supplier and find out why our shipment has not arrived.' The employee responds, understands and acknowledges his understanding. But when you arrive at work again the next day...the call has still not been made. Yes, you've communicated and the employee apparently understood the communicative exchange. So what happened? Someone's lack of emphasis on the importance of that exchange of ideas, the importance of receiving that shipment, may have been the reason for the breakdown.

To understand fully the importance of communication in business we must first understand the supervisory process and reason for communication.
The key words in the foregoing types of work which a supervisor performs include coordinating, evaluating, innovating, motivating and organizing and the prime tool for the supervisor's performing those so called, 'why's' of communication, is communication.

Peter Drucker, in his book, THE PRACTICE OF MANAGEMENT, best says it in this way. 'The supervisor has a specific tool—information. He does not control people; he guides, organizes and motivates people to do their own work. His tool, his only tool, to do all this is the spoken or written word. No matter whether the supervisor's job is engineering, accounting or selling, his effectiveness depends on his ability to listen and to read, on his ability to speak and to write. His successfulness in supervision depends entirely on his communication skills, his ability to get his thinking across to other people as well as his ability to understand people.'

Most of what man has accomplished has been done with other people. A person may work through people, with people or around them but either way, people are almost always involved in everything he does. If a supervisor works through and with people, he must communicate with them. If he works around them, he must understand people and that also requires communication.

Communication however, is not intended to be perceived as a process of controlling and manipulating people through subconscious semantics.
Rather, communication is a process that is affected by the feelings and attitudes of management, employees and the public. It entails an understanding of the feelings and background of the senders as well as the receivers.

Too often, people think of communication as just expressing facts and opinions to someone else. A better answer of course would include an exchange of ideas but that is still incomplete and therein lies one of the biggest roadblocks to understanding. Many times we fail to include three other vital elements.

1. How each person feels about the other's ideas

2. What each person thinks about the other's attitudes towards those ideas, and whether

3. Each person has a complete understanding of the importance of the other's ideas and attitudes.

When we communicate those ideas, feelings and attitudes we often, without realizing it, involve our emotions. Emotions are also a vital part of our communications. Once we understand that and look at our methods of communication as others see it, we will inevitably improve our communicative efforts.

"Are there any questions about anything mentioned in the tape?"
Reference was made in the tape to communications as other see it.

"What one word best describes seeing or understanding something as other people see it?"

Answer

EMPATHY

"Who would like to describe what empathy is?"

DEFINITIONS

Empathy is:

...a mental entering into the feeling or spirit of a person;

...an appreciative perception or understanding;

...the ability to put yourself in the other person's position (shoes).

SELF-ANALYSIS

For self-improvement purposes, keeping empathy utmost in mind, measure your most recent communication efforts.

CONCLUSION

SELF-ANALYSIS and/or discussion concludes Unit 1.
Objective: The participant will better understand factors which promote and prevent effective communication.

RESPONSIBILITIES

Responsibilities for effective communications depend primarily on:

- the communicator
- the medium
- the receiver

ROADBLOCKS

"The communicator, medium and receiver may be somewhat responsible for communication breakdowns but what other factors cause ineffective communication?"

Answers

- how communicated
- why communicated
- attitudes
- atmosphere
- pressure
- listening abilities
- resistance to change

DILUTION OF INFORMATION

Because of these factors, it is possible that as little as 20% of the original communique (message) may sift its way through to the intended receiver.

COMMUNICATION GOAL-SETTING

"With your participation in the personal self-analysis and having identified those factors which prevent effective communication, you should have a little more insight as to what the company's and your own personal goals are."

An important part of any self-analysis involves following through with goal-setting. One way in which to achieve those goals is to identify and list both the goals and steps for achievement.

"The following activity is designed to do just that."

In attempting to do a better job of communicating, it is well to recognize and apply these eight essential elements in communication.

#1 KNOW YOUR COMMUNICATIVE GOALS

Is your message intended to inform an employee of a new policy, to acquire suggestions, change attitudes or to precondition employees in advance of some change? By focusing the message on the goals the receiver will be left with a more clear picture.

#2 KNOW YOUR AUDIENCE

Are you using language suitable for those with whom you are communicating? A message that talks down to or over the audience may leave the audience with a negative impact.

#3 KNOW ALL THE FACTS

Have facts been separated from opinions? Give the receiver the Who, What, Where, When and Why of the message. These 5 W's of communication will enhance the receiver's clear understanding of the message.

#4 DETERMINE YOUR MEDIUM

How best to communicate a message can be an involved decision but nevertheless it should be a preplanned process. If it is orally and face-to-face, small or large group meetings may have to be considered. If it is printed should it be by way of hand written personal messages, company newsletters or formal business letters? Regardless, the medium or multi-media will have some influence upon the effectiveness of the communication.
#5 DETERMINE TIMING

Should the message be communicated early in the day or near the end of a work day? Would Friday be good or might Wednesday be better? Timing can often make or break the effectiveness of any communicative message.

#6 ANTICIPATE THE RESPONSE

How the other person will interpret the message and how it can be presented most favorably are also important considerations. Putting yourself in the other person's shoes, using empathy in your communications, is an ounce of prevention that could save a pound of communication.

#7 KEEP THE CHANNELS OPEN

One goal of any business enterprise is the flow of information. Establish channels for communication and keep them open. To get information from the top to the bottom of an organization is an important essential but equally important is the development of ways for information to flow freely from the bottom to the board. Is communication flowing freely in all directions and as directly as possible?

#8 MEASURE RESULTS

Has the message brought about the intended response? Measuring the response and related results with feedback devices ensures that a mutual understanding has been achieved and the message has been acted upon. Measuring results may include questioning, formal surveys or just listening intently.
The effective communicator, through instinct and practice, considers these essentials for his day-to-day casual communication and for his preplanned communication.

"Are there any essentials that were not identified that you feel might be appropriate for (name of firm)?"

"Is there any one of those eight essentials that you would like to discuss because you feel it may extremely benefit you or (name of company)?"

CONCLUSION

Conclude with questions and discussion and/or the story below which confirms Essential #4 "KNOW ALL THE FACTS."

STORY

In reference to Essential #4, "KNOW ALL THE FACTS", the following story was related by the president of The Cleveland Electric Illuminating Company.

"A man was walking along. He looked down at his suit and saw a hole in it. In a minute he was dead."

"What picture comes into your mind?"

"Can you explain his sudden death?"

"What other facts would you want to know?"
"If I led you to the conclusion that the man was walking along a street, that the hole was a bullet hole, and that he died of the wound, you have reached the conclusion of the vast majority. That is a normal conclusion considering you did not have all the facts."

The facts are these: The man was a deepsea diver; he was walking on the ocean bottom; the hole was in his diving suit; and he died by drowning.

"Each of us probably translated this story differently because we did not have all the facts."
Unit 3

"PERSUASION
and PRINCIPLES"

Objective:
The participant will be introduced to the principles, practices and processes of persuasion in communication.
INTRODUCTION

There are many different forms of communication and these forms differ depending on the many variables.

Examples might include whether our communication is aimed at individuals or groups, at friends or colleagues and for what reason(s) we are communicating.

Regardless of the many forms, we usually hope for some specific result from our communicative efforts.

REASONS

The desired end results from our communicative efforts, or reasons why we communicate, include those five "WHYS" previously mentioned in Unit 1.

...to coordinate
...to evaluate
...to innovate
...to organize
...to motivate

"What other reasons or purposes (end results) do we have for communication?"

Answers

...to direct
...to control
...to command
...to reprimand
...to convince
...to inform
...to develop
...to coach
...to demonstrate
...to induce

NOTE: Recap "REASONS" (WHY'S) from Unit 1.
"Many of these examples you have given indicate a desire to obtain action—or inaction as the case might be."

"Is it possible then that some or many of the end results you have mentioned, indicate a certain degree of persuasion?"

DEFINITIONS

Persuasion has many meanings to many people.

"Let's see if we can arrive at some common agreement by describing or defining what you think persuasion is and how important you feel it is in communication."

Answers

...influencing thoughts or actions
...prompting a person to act
...obtaining action through incentives
...a delicate finesse
...artful management
..."winning over" someone

Persuasion is:

A. "Winning over" a person to a certain course of action by appealing more to the reason and understanding.

Webster

B. In communicative action, persuasion occurs when the listener moves from one belief, attitude, mood or commitment to another.

Robert Oliver
RESISTANCE

"Do you always find it easy to persuade people? Why or why not?"

Answer

...people have a tendency to resist change

MISCELLANEOUS LEADER COMMENTS

..."People resist change yet it is the only thing that has brought about progress."

..."Nothing is as permanent as change."

..."Nothing is as sure as death, taxes and change."

UNDERSTANDING RESISTANCE

If persuasion is one of the many purposes of communication, a study or discussion of resistance to change (persuasion) should be a prerequisite.

#1 PRINCIPLE—UNDERSTAND REASONS FOR

"Could we discuss for a few moments the reasons why people resist change?"

Answers

...age
...habit
...security
...workload
...does not see benefits
...fear (loss of something)
...cannot adapt, adjust, etc.
...lack of knowledge (education)
SIMPLY STATED:

People resist change because they either:

A. don't know how to change which includes lack of job knowledge, education, preparation, training, etc.

B. don't care to change which includes lack of proper attitude, motivation, unable to see benefits, etc.

#2 PRINCIPLE-KNOW THE 5 LEVELS OF HUMAN NEEDS

Experts say the biggest job in communicating involves persuading for the purpose of securing action.

Being knowledgeable of the 5 levels of human needs can help the communicator better prepare for persuasive communication.

Dr. Abraham Maslow from Brandeis University has devised an interesting chart of human needs which he says are placed on a 5-rung ladder in order of importance, with the most important priority on the top rung.

A. SELF-FULFILLMENT NEEDS (EGO)

Includes being appreciated, recognized, approved of, important and self-satisfied.

B. STATUS NEEDS

Includes status, prestige and pride.

C. SOCIAL NEEDS

Includes a desire for affection, belonging and protecting loved ones.
D. SECURITY NEEDS

Includes self-preservation, health and job security.

E. PHYSICAL NEEDS

Includes food, clothing and shelter.

It is not as important to fully understand these needs as it is to just be aware of them.

If a person senses that any one of these 5 needs are threatened he may resist change.

#3 PRINCIPLE-PERSUADE POSITIVELY

Another prerequisite or principle for getting someone to take action on your persuasive message is to:

APPROACH HIM POSITIVELY BY

"THINKING ABOUT HIS NEEDS AND INTERESTS"

To communicate with a person and persuade him to take action for your sake is to approach him negatively.

To communicate with a person and persuade him to take action because it will fulfill his goals and benefit him and the company is to approach him positively.

"With these principles (prerequisites) in mind, think of a person here in the company whom you wish to persuade by way of face-to-face communication. Think for a few moments how best you can persuade him to take action while keeping in mind his and the company's interests, needs and goals.

"PERSUASIVE COMMUNICATIONS"
See SA#12 (Individual Activity)

Have each participant fill out SA#12 using his own personal situation.

Then discuss each case individually. Have each participant read the message. Ask the others to identify all the positive approaches and suggest others.
Persuading others to take action is a real art. When you "win over" the cooperation of another person you increase your working resources...and that's what supervision is all about.

"Of course we have only discussed some of the many principles of persuasion. The tape we are about to hear now is entitled, "OBTAINING RESULTS THROUGH PERSUASIVE COMMUNICATIONS." and it lasts about 3 minutes."

"OBTAINING RESULTS THROUGH PERSUASIVE COMMUNICATIONS"

No phase of leadership is as important as persuasion. To persuade an employee, to "win him over" towards the company's needs and goals while identifying his own interests, is a supreme art and the basic foundation for leadership.

Persuasion is that basic elementary unit that, multiplied thousands of times, spells out the very function of leadership.

Here then are 8 ways a supervisor can become more communicatively persuasive when persuasion is needed.
#1 BE POSITIVE

Whenever possible, communicate your message with an attitude of positiveness. A positive approach can often influence the reaction and it can be persuasive in itself.

#2 BE CONCISE

If a persuasive message can be put in one or two concise sentences... do so.

For example, "Miss Jones I would appreciate your Xeroxing 100 copies of this document before our two o'clock meeting."

How many times have you heard it like this? "Miss Jones could you run off 100 copies of this? I think 100 copies will be enough because we probably won't use more than 90, so that should do the trick. But of course it's easier to run off more now than to do it later, so maybe you could do a few extra ones."

Simplicity promotes clarity and secures action.

#3 BE TACTFUL

In the delicate art of persuasive communication...saying the right thing, at the right time, to the right person, in the right manner can produce desired results.
TRANSCRIPT (Cont.)

#4 BE RIGHT MOST OF THE TIME

True...everyone makes mistakes but if those whom you communicate with realize you are generally correct they will generally be receptive to your persuasive communications.

#5 DETERMINE DEFENSIVENESS

Learning to anticipate defensiveness before you communicate can help you win a person over through reason and understanding.

#6 BE COMPLIMENTARY

An occasional compliment or recognizing a job well done can reinforce persuasion when it is needed. More people are moved by appreciation than they are by patting themselves on the back.

#7 BE CONCERNED

Showing genuine concern for your people will induce more positive results than all selfish interests can. Creating an atmosphere of "I am my brother's keeper" can gain respect, loyalty and productivity for you and the company.

#8 LISTEN WITH INTENT

A person can often be just as persuasive when he is listening. A persuasive message that seeks action requires an understanding of the other person and listening with an open mind can be a great help in discovering and understanding the other person's point of view and interests.
These 8 principles are not exhaustive by any means but they do provide some of the most important "know how" for persuasive and effective communication... and each small gain in effectiveness enriches not only the supervisor and his people but the enterprise as a whole.

CONCLUSION

Persuasion is an essential part of daily democratic living because it allows people to "win over" others attitudes and ways of thinking.

Communication, after all, allows for opinions, but no matter what your opinion is of persuasion just remember...

"THE MIND CAN NEVER REPLACE THE HEART IN SINCERITY"

BUZZ SESSION
If desired, divide the participants into three equal smaller groups and ask them to discuss the benefits of tactful, honest persuasion to:

a. employees
b. supervisors
c. the company
Objective:
The participant will recognize the characteristics of good listening and develop an awareness of its importance in leadership and communication.

Studies indicate that approximately 90% of a supervisor's time, on the job, is spent just communicating. 90% probably is not that startling since practically everything a supervisor does in business involves communication.

What follows may be somewhat more eye-opening.

"Considering 90% of a supervisor's time is spent in communication, let me ask you to estimate a percentage breakdown of the relative amount of time a supervisor spends in the different forms of communication."

"What percent of time do you think you spend, on the job, in writing, reading, speaking and listening?"

Dr. Paul Rankin of Ohio State University, after maintaining a careful log for two consecutive months, discovered how much time white-collar workers spend in verbal communication. Here is what he found:

LISTENING HABITS

Dr. Rankin's study apparently indicates that people in supervisory capacities spend almost one-half of their working day listening yet very seldom are we consciously aware of the importance of listening.
Management spends millions of dollars and man hours striving for better communication and only pennies and minutes researching how best to exchange meaning by listening.

SELF-ANALYSIS

"A suggested beginning for such research would be an appraisal of our own listening habits."

"No one will see your scores but yourself, so be honest."

POOR LISTENING HABITS

Dr. Ralph Nichols, professor of speech at the University of Minnesota and a national authority on listening habits, suggests to people interested in the study of communications, an analysis of personal listening habits by comparing these ten illustrations of poor listening.

"How many 'no' answers can you compile for each of these ten illustrations?"

1. "Science says you think four times faster than a person usually talks to you. Do you use this excess time to turn your thoughts elsewhere while you are keeping general track of a conversation?"

Only the perfect listener, a rare individual, can answer "no" to all these questions.

Each "yes" answer indicates a need for improving that poor listening habit.
William F. Keefe, executive director of the Action Research Institute writes in a text entitled, LISTEN, MANAGEMENT!, that too frequently people say "I can't listen" or "I don't have time to listen."

He goes on to say, in essence, such an attitude reveals:

"first, inadequate comprehension of what listening involves and, second, lack of understanding of the reasons for listening: its purposes and goals.

What does good listening involve?

Answer

In terms of time, it adds little or nothing to the typical manager's work load.

We are suggesting that the manager learn listening, in sum, to know what he is doing as he communicates.

Initially, of course, the manager going into listening to learn may invest more time in practice. The learning listener may seek out more opportunities for listening; he may broaden the range of his listening to include many who earlier stood along the wayside of his communication road. But while listening to any given individual he will typically spend no more time than before, when he listened unprofessionally. Eventually he may spend less time as he winnows more skillfully the valuable information from the valueless."
Robert Tannenbaum and Warren Schmidt wrote in a Harvard Business Review article, entitled, "How To Choose A Leadership Pattern", five generally accepted goals for listening.

"If this group were responsible for selecting the five most important goals of supervisory listening...which five would you suggest?"

Answers

1. "To raise the level of employee motivation
2. To increase the readiness of subordinates to accept change
3. "To improve the quality of all managerial decisions
4. To develop teamwork and morale
5. To further the individual development of employees."

QUESTIONING (EXPLORATORY LISTENING)

The type of listening we employ determines, to some degree, the quantity and quality of communication (or lack of it) we have with the other person.

One way in which to assure receiving the proper message and to improve listening includes employing a variety of questioning techniques generally categorized as exploratory listening.
A. PRIMARY EXPLORATORY QUESTIONS

1. Direct Questions

Questions which begin with:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Direct Question Words</th>
<th>Corresponding Response</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Is</td>
<td>Shall</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Do</td>
<td>Will</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Can</td>
<td>Has</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

tend to elicit primarily a "yes" or "no" response.

Examples:

...Is there something wrong in the department?
...Do you want to talk with me?
...Can I be of help?

2. Open Questions

Questions which begin with:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Open Question Words</th>
<th>Corresponding Response</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>What</td>
<td>Who</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>When</td>
<td>Where</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>How</td>
<td>Which</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

are more conducive to constructive elaboration.

Examples:

...What can you tell me about the atmosphere in the department?
...When do you want to talk with me?
...How can I be of help?

Remember, although the words used are important, of equal or even more importance is the sincerity of the intent.
B. SECONDARY EXPLORATORY QUESTIONS

1. Encouraging Questions

   Purposes: to convey interest, encourage other person to keep talking.

   Example: "What else can you tell me about the situation?"

2. Clarifying Questions

   Purposes: to get more information, helps speaker see other points of view.

   Example: "How can we get the information to the consumer?"

3. Restating Questions

   Purposes: to check meaning and interpretations, shows attempt to understand.

   Example: "If I understand correctly, you don't think the procedure is practical. For what other reasons don't you think it will work?"

4. Reflecting Questions

   Purposes: to show the listener understands how the speaker feels.

   Example: "I understand what you are saying. How can we remedy this?"

5. Summarizing Questions

   Purposes: to review progress, pull together facts, ideas, etc.

   Example: "What other ideas, besides these three, do you have?"
LISTENING GUIDELINES

If you are seriously interested in becoming a better listener, it will require concentrated effort and consistent practice. It is the actual practice (with all its attendant successes and failures) that will improve your listening skill.

"The last cassette tape in this series runs less than 4 minutes and it offers 12 summarizing guidelines to help you analyze your listening habits."

"The tape is entitled, "BECOMING A BETTER LISTENER."

TRANSCRIPT

"BECOMING A BETTER LISTENER"

Through listening in day-to-day contacts, in casual and formal conversation, a progressive management can learn what employees are thinking and how they feel. As a link in the company's communication program, management should develop the ability to receive as well as send messages.

Dr. Jack F. Rhode of the Applied Management Science Institute of Minneapolis, Minnesota offers the following twelve guidelines for improving your listening immeasurably.
#1 LISTEN FIRST—TALK LATER—

Listening while you are talking is quite difficult. Listening is only one-half of the communication process and the speaker should share partial responsibility too.

#2 EMPATHIZE WITH THE OTHER PERSON

Putting yourself in the other person's position will help you hear it from his point of view.

#3 ASK QUESTIONS

When you want to show the other person you are listening, ask questions when you do not understand or when you need further clarification.

#4 REFRAIN FROM INTERRUPTING

Giving the speaker time to say what he has to say may clarify ideas and facts.

#5 FOCUS YOUR ATTENTION

Concentrate on his words, his ideas and his feelings related to the subject of conversation.

#6 SIDE STEP YOUR EMOTIONS

When possible try to push outside fears, problems and worries aside. They may prevent good listening habits.

#7 REFRAIN FROM MENTAL ARGUEMENT

Mentally arguing with the speaker sets up a barrier between you and the speaker and it makes listening more difficult.
#8 WAIT FOR THE FACTS

When you jump to conclusions you may tune yourself out. You then run a grave risk of misunderstanding the entire conversation because of an erroneous conclusion which you drew prematurely.

#9 LISTEN FOR PERSONALITY

One of the best ways of finding out information about a person is to listen for his personality. As he talks you can begin to find out what he likes and dislikes, what his motivations are, what his value system is and what he thinks about everything and anything.

#10 EVALUATE FACTS

As you listen, try to identify not only the significance of the facts, evidence and ideas, but also how they relate to the main points the speaker is trying to make.

#11 USE YOUR THOUGHT POWER

On the average, we think at a rate of four times faster than we speak. That’s a 4:1 ratio in favor of you, the listener. Use that "thought power" to your advantage by making periodic mental summaries as you listen.

#12 LISTEN FOR WHAT IS NOT SAID

Sometimes the listener can learn just as much by determining what the other person leaves out or avoids saying as he can by listening.
And one final note that goes right to the heart of the case for listening...the supervisor who employs effective listening will undoubtedly understand better the human material with which he is dealing. The supervisor learns listening for the same reason that he learns communication of any kind: to be able to supervise and manage his people better.

Unit 5

"MEDIA and METHODS"

Objective:
The participant will examine the wide choice of communicatory media available.
INTRODUCTION

Another important factor, requiring the supervisor's serious consideration, is choosing the media of communication most suitable for his communication strategy and objectives.

MEDIA FORMS

"Of the two basic forms, oral and written, which would you say the supervisor uses most frequently in his daily on-the-job activities?"

Answer

Oral communications

ORAL COMMUNICATIONS

Most supervisors probably prefer oral communications when the objectives are to motivate, obtain action (or inaction) or change attitudes.

"Previously we have discussed face-to-face, personal and individual communications with those objectives in mind."

"Written communications can achieve the same objectives, to some degree, but before we discuss the written media let's discuss the oral medium or channel of communication."

"What channel of communication does not involve face-to-face communication but may still be used for communicating on a 1:1 oral basis?"

Answer

The telephone
Almost everyone has a telephone and that may just be one explanation for problems in telephone communication.

We tend to take the telephone for granted. Few people are consciously aware of the potential impact a telephone can have.

The telephone is a strong link in the communication chain. It can even make or break a business.

OBJECTIVES

"Besides improving general communications what can the telephone do for you and your company?"

Answers

...increase sales
...increase public exposure
...decrease potential communication problems
...build morale and motivate
...save time, money, etc.

NOTE: For additional information on proper telephone usage write for leader's guide entitled, "TELE-TECHNIQUES MEAN BUSINESS"

SEE communication goals in Unit 1 for others
The following procedures are recommended as guidelines for effective (efficient) telephone communication.

1. BE PREPARED TO RECEIVE CALLS

   Paper and pencil is a must for effective communication and desk organization.

2. ANSWER PROMPTLY

   Effective communication means efficiency too. A first impression may come across even before the telephone is answered. Prompt answering allows more calls on the same equipment, thus increasing the amount of communications.

3. PROVIDE PROPER COVERAGE

   When the regular user is not available someone should be assigned to answer the telephone.

4. ANNOUNCE YOUR IDENTITY

   Saying "Good morning, ACME Company" or "Hello, purchasing, Bill Jones" for example, may save time and misunderstanding.

5. RESPOND TO OPENING STATEMENT

   If the conversation begins with a question communicate a willingness to help.
6. DEVELOP INFORMATION

Active listening will ensure the obtainment of all the information.

7. USE TACT WHEN LEAVING AND RETURNING

Use tact at all times but especially when leaving the line temporarily.

Examples:

"Can you hold while I call him to the phone?"
"It will take a while to check that out...would you care to wait or shall we call you back?"

8. TERMINATE THE CALL COURTEOUSLY

Courteousness is another key to effective communication.

Examples:

"Thank you for calling."
"I am very sorry we cannot get it out to you today."
"Good to hear from you."
"Enjoyed talking with you."

9. TAKE MESSAGES ACCURATELY

Request details rather than demanding.

Examples:

"May I ask who is calling?" rather than "What's your name?"

10. SHOW REAL INTEREST

A service oriented communiqué reflects a proper attitude and can enhance communication.
"What bothers you the most about telephone communications and what recommendations would you offer for avoiding such errors?"

Answers

"Let's try and avoid such errors in this next activity we engage in."

ROLE-PLAYING

...articulation
...emphasis
...inflection
...poise
...tempo
...volume
...pause
...pitch

WRITTEN COMMUNICATIONS

There seems to be a failure somewhere in our society. People are more educated and can think better these days but for some reason(s) people do not use that "thought power" to transmit those thoughts to others.

You can probably summarize most people's writing problems with this little story.
"An executive walks up to the main gate to his plant and is shocked to see weeds growing everywhere. He thinks to himself that he must dictate a memo immediately to the maintenance department, instructing them to kill the weeds. But in the short walk to his office something happens. He thinks "kill the weeds around the building," but it comes out: "MANAGEMENT HAS BECOME COGNIZANT OF ELIMINATING UNDESIRABLE VEGETATION SURROUNDING THE PERIPHERY OF OUR FACILITY."

And that probably is an exaggerated example, but appropriate, as one of the reasons we have so much trouble with the written medium in communication. We tend to write too much.

"What is going to happen, of course, is the maintenance department will read this and misunderstand it, and pull out $15,000 worth of landscaping."

"What difficulties are associated with written forms of communication that might be reason for not achieving the proper objectives?"

Answers

...Difficult to write as you speak
...less chance to ask and answer questions.
...semantics and understanding.
...difficult to project personality.
...messages might be misplaced or lost.
...little room for emotion and feeling.
...and others
INTRODUCTION

"We will be talking primarily about two types of written communication:
A. for management
B. for employees

"But before we do, let's discuss some general principles appropriate for all forms of communication regardless of who we are writing to."

SEMANTICS

"What does the word 'semantics' mean to you and why is an understanding of it more important in written rather than oral communications?"

Answer

"Semantics is the study of word meaning and changes in meaning."

Webster and oral communication allows more opportunity to ask questions about meaning.

Many of the breakdowns in communication are caused by the words in the message.

On the average, the 500 most commonly used words in the English language have 18 different meanings, thus it is quite easy to understand why so many misunderstandings occur.

Example:

The younger generation uses the word "heavy" to indicate approval of something. "Try telling your secretary she's 'heavy.'"
What then is the solution to decreasing misunderstandings in written communication?

Answer

Use only those words that are generally understood by those people with whom you are communicating.

BUSINESS GRAMMAR

Recently the New York Life Insurance Company discovered that its written communications were not doing the job they should do. Consequently they conducted a four year study to determine ways in which to make written communications more effective (insurance policy language was not included in the study).

The study helped develop the following four simple rules:

A. USE YOUR OWN LANGUAGE

Forget business English. The proper language is the language the receiver of the message will best understand. Use only those technical terms that are absolutely necessary and the message will be understood.

B. WRITE YOUR OWN WAY

There is no such thing as a standard way of writing. Develop your own style that is distinctively you.

C. DON'T WORRY TOO MUCH ABOUT GRAMMAR

Use words in the way your listener is accustomed to hearing them—sometimes instead of the way the grammar book says.
D. LET YOUR PERSONALITY SHOW

The personality of a company is the extension of many individual personalities. The communications writer is one of those personalities. Let the written message show it.

"In addition to these four principles, what other techniques have you found valuable that can make our written communications more effective?"

Answers
...clear
...correct
...concise
...complete
...courteous
...considerate
...confident
...cheerful
...conversational
...clever
...careful

PERSUASION AND VOCABULARY

In an age when so many are competing for communication it is extremely important for an institution to understand that it prospers largely because it is able to communicate effectively with the people.

New York Life's study also indicates that persuasion and the proper vocabulary are important considerations in written communications.
Inclusion of both persuasion and proper vocabulary can:

...give strength and vigor to writing
...make messages more understandable
...motivate

As a result, the following words, and groups of words, were published to help the message writer reach a higher level of persuasiveness and effectiveness in his communication.

MULTI-MEDIA

A wide choice of printed word media are available to supervisors for communicating quickly, effectively and inexpensively.

"Maybe one of these media will supplement your present communicative efforts."

A. FOR INTER-MANAGEMENT PURPOSES

1. Organization Announcements

Necessary for transmitting information which supports the structure and basic workings of the formal organization. Example: Policies, procedures and general administrative communication.

2. Special Management Bulletins

Used by companies to get emergency type information to the desks of all managers or equivalent personnel within one hour.

SEE SA #23 (Handout)
"MOST PEOPLE LIKE AND DISLIKE THESE WORDS" and SA #24 (Handout) "SAY GOOD-BY TO THESE"

SOURCE: New York Life Insurance

SOURCE: Managing by Communication
3. Management Newsletters

Used by companies to communicate less urgent information to management rapidly. It may be distributed weekly or more often but usually on a consistent basis.

4. Formal Reports

An upward feedback device to help improve planning, organizing and integrating work.

5. Supervisor’s Handbooks

A written guide normally constituting a summary of legislation, company policies, procedures, job benefits and related information which a supervisor needs in his day-to-day work.

B. FOR NON-SUPERVISORY PERSONNEL

1. Employee Bulletins

An informal method of conveying urgent spot news to all employees within an hour or two. Usually distributed to supervisors or posted on bulletin boards.

2. Employee Newspapers

A newspaper format frequently issued on a weekly or bi-weekly basis to inform employees of:

a. company policies, practices, plans, regulations, problems, successes and failures.
b. economic, social and political news which may affect them and their jobs.

c. work employees are doing, products they are making or reasons for various changes.

d. recent promotions.

e. employee activities and social news.

3. Monthly House Organs

A magazine format permitting in depth treatment of special topics.

4. Daily News Digests

A one-page publication, issued midday, which includes local and national news and interspersed with appropriate management messages.

5. Letters To New Employees

A friendly, human touch type letter of welcome, many times personally signed by the chief executive.

6. Letters To Employees' Homes

A monthly, bi-monthly or quarterly letter written by the chief executive.

7. Payroll Envelope Inserts

An insert usually dealing with changes in pay, compensation or closely related topics.
8. Employee Booklets

A popular medium used for new employee orientation. The booklet often includes company history, code of ethics, benefit plans, recreational facilities, etc.

9. Reading Racks

Found most often throughout factories and in lunchrooms of many other businesses. Topics range from interest and hobbies to work attitudes and company products, goals, etc.

10. Annual Stockholder Reports

Many times distributed to all employees.

11. Bulletin Boards

If properly designed, located and utilized, this medium can be effective for lending emphasis and consistency to appeals and topics which have been covered in greater depth in more effective media.

12. Audio-Visual Media

Films, slide programs, flannel boards and various media are used to aid management in communication.

MEDIA SELECTION

"Is there any one best medium that achieves its objectives more frequently than others?"
Effectiveness in written communications depends on many variables, for example:

- size of company
- importance of message
- scope of message
- type of business

CONCLUSION

Regardless of how much emphasis is placed on written communication it must be consistent with oral communication.

GROUP ACTIVITY

Seminar leader may wish to conclude Unit 5 by permitting participants to organize into small groups for the purpose of discussion about written communication problems within the organization.

...Objective should be to search for and suggest ways for improving written communication.

...A spokesman for each group may then read his group's suggestions.
Objective:
The participant will recognize, understand and be able to communicate supervisory skills that will enable him to increase employee cooperation and motivation.
Unit 6
"MOTIVATION and MANAGEMENT"

BUILDING THE WILL TO WORK

There are many ways a supervisor can make his employees work just a little bit harder for him and the company.

"In Unit 3 we discussed the importance of persuasion in communication and now we are about to discuss the role of motivation in communication.

"Would anyone care to distinguish between the two or would you say they are used synonymously?"

Answer

All answers are correct because both are used in the same context and yet there is a slight difference.

Behavioral scientists and industrial psychologists generally agree:

...both can attain the same end results, but

...persuasion indicates an extrinsic means of motivation or a philosophy of "winning someone over" by way of outside forces

Examples: rewards, money, security, fear, etc.

...motivation indicates an intrinsic means of force, commitment or behavior which is usually more self-motivated by the employee

Examples: a humanistic, warm, employee centered, sensitive approach.

RECAP FROM Units 1 & 2

--------- QUESTION?
Simply stated, it means this:

Most people are somewhat work-centered and at the same time, self-centered.

Maintaining (motivating) a happy medium containing both can be of great benefit to the employee, supervisor, and the company.

Managerial motivation and integration of:

...Work Attitudes and Self Image = Commitment
...Commitment = Productivity
...Productivity = Survival and growth of the employee and the company

KNOW YOUR EMPLOYEES

One of the most effective ways to motivate an employee is to show him (through communication) that you are conscious of his ambitions, needs, skills, fears, etc., and most importantly that you have a genuine concern and interest in him as an individual.
Each employee is like a different lock having many similar features and yet each is intricately unique.

Each leader (supervisor) has access to the keys (skills) enabling him to open those different locks and thus, open the doors to opportunity.

"A supervisor's keys are of little value unless he begins searching for the key that fits the lock and that means knowing your employees."

"Not knowing your employees is a barrier to effective and motivational communication. This next activity will help confirm how much you know about your employees."

"Did this help you discover anything about your supervisory, motivational or communicatory skills?"

"Which of the last ten questions is the only one with a negative slant?"

"What can the supervisor do to rectify defensiveness and build commitment through motivation and communication?"

"Why is it important for the supervisor to know as much about his employee as possible?"

MOTIVATIONAL COMMUNICATION

"Knowing your employees is important but of equal importance is knowing yourself and your style of motivational communication?"

"Chances are great that you as a supervisor employ varying communicative techniques to motivate your employees."

"Let's identify the four basic styles of motivational communication that are used most frequently."

"Can you identify the style you use most frequently with your employees?"

FOUR STYLES

A. Autocratic Communicator

Claims to hold absolute authority, communications are usually work (task) oriented.

Example: "I want this done"
"Get that out now"

B. Bureaucratic Communicator

Abides strictly by the book and all policies in it, communications portray no room for mistakes.

Example: "Do it this way"

C. Idiocratic Communicator

Enjoys playing one employee against others and builds individual spirit through competition.

Example: "If you do a better job you'll get promoted before Bob."
D. Democratic Communicator

Communicates team spirit through freedom and employee creativity, employees help set goals and suggest ways to help reach those goals.

Example: "What's the best way to get this done?"
"What do you think about this?"

"Is anyone style of motivational communication best?"

Answer

Not if every employee is different and every occasion unique. The alert supervisor may utilize every style depending on the employee and the occasion. Of course each supervisor may have developed a style that works best for him and that is the correct answer.

"Did you recognize the motivational style that you use most frequently and could you tell us in what types of situations it works best?"

BOSS OR LEADER

Regardless of the style(s) that you use there are certain ways that a "boss" communicates to his people as compared to a leader and his style(s) of communication.

IDENTIFYING COMMUNICATION PROBLEMS

"Along with the motivational styles and employee communications we have been discussing, maybe you have given some thought to some specific communication situations you would like to deal with."

REVIEW AND REVISION

A periodic self-review of motivational styles is important before any revision in communication can be made.

"Keeping in mind the case problems we just worked on, give some thought to the following questions. Some of these questions will not be simple to answer but do try and answer them honestly (to yourself) and see how many you can answer yes to."

"Do you take time to casually talk with your employees about topics other than business?"

"What have you done to make the work for your employees more interesting and challenging? Could a change in communication styles help decrease apathy or discontentment?"
Have you considered why some employees are more highly motivated than others and do you feel most of your people are performing near peak levels of efficiency? Why or why not?

Do you feel you know yourself quite well, your motives and expectations and do you communicate those expectations to your employees?

Are you providing your employees with support and guidance and are you communicating that support to them?

Do you have a genuine human concern for your employees and do you communicate that concern to them?

Are you striving for greater employee commitment, communication, cooperation and work performance from your people?

Do you periodically inform your employees of where they stand, of their successes and failures?

Do you motivate and create a feeling of team spirit among your employees by communicating 'we' rather than 'I'?

The professional supervisor may very well find that by asking himself similar questions he will become better equipped to communicate with and motivate his people.

5 MOTIVATORS

Securing peak performance requires positive action. Each one of the following motivators may help the capacity to motivate.

The professional supervisor may very well find that by asking himself similar questions he will become better equipped to communicate with and motivate his people.
They are not one-shot answers or cure-alls, but on the whole they will lead to effective motivation and management.

"There are only five of them and if you have any you would like to add, please do."

A. AROUSE SELF-INVolVEMENT

The concept of self-motivation should be thoroughly mastered by any supervisor who hopes to lead his people. It is that concept which enables his people to do a more effective job.

Lack of involvement is often the reason for an employee's psychological withdrawal from his job.

Arousing self-involvement may be accomplished through recommending and suggesting rather than ordering. Communicating with the employee about the outcome of his work is often effective, too. Performance reviews, whether casual or formal, can increase motivation.

B. SHOW CONFIDENCE

If the supervisor has doubts about his department, his staff or his company he may dishearten his people, destroy their confidence in him and decrease their motivation.

The supervisor who communicates, by his behavior and speech, that he is confident in his people, will improve his own image and his peoples' self-image.

Demonstrating confidence is strong enough to override fears, doubts and lack of motivation, thus giving a sense of security to his people.

</tbody>
</table>
Those who follow need to have faith and confidence in the supervisor who leads them.

C. GIVE PRAISE

Countless studies show that giving credit, where credit is due, is one of the most significant factors contributing to the motivation of people.

Praise and appreciation, in fact, have been found to be more important than responsibility, salary, advancement or work itself. Properly handled, praise can increase an employee's sense of security.

The pitfall of praise is praising too much. Praising every little thing employees do can quickly lose its effect and may even demotivate the employee.

Sincere praise, rather than exaggerated, is the most motivating.

D. IDENTIFY WITH OTHERS

The supervisor who communicates interest in his employees will positively motivate them. Building social bridges and adding the personal touch will help any supervisor identify with his people.

Chitchat and casual conversation with employees can motivate, build commitment, make friends and create a healthy working atmosphere.

E. ENCOURAGE CREATIVITY

Encouraging creativity on-the-job, fosters employee motivation.

RECAP: SA #11 "ABRAHAM MASLOW'S HIERARCHY OF HUMAN NEEDS"
Creativity gives the employee a chance to learn and provides him with a feeling of progress and an opportunity to make contributions which the employee can call his own.

A certain amount of control is always advisable but the supervisor who motivates an employee to accept challenge with creativity is a very valuable asset to his firm, as is the employee.

Opening doors for the employee and rewarding him when he gets through, creates good feelings for the employee.

"Do you have other motivators you can share with the group?"

CONCLUSION

With consistent motivational communication the supervisor can develop employees who will:

...assume greater responsibility
...work with enthusiasm
...correct many of his own errors and deficiencies
...use more initiative
...follow directions better
...achieve goals more efficiently and
...keep the channels of communication open.

"I consider my ability to arouse enthusiasm among the people the greatest asset I possess, and the way to develop the best that is in a person is by appreciation and encouragement."

CONCLUDING THE SEMINAR
The difference between a progressive enterprise which extends opportunities to its customers, investors and employees as contrasted with a static enterprise which is barely surviving, is often due to differences in effective communication. It is likely that a hundred business firms might be examined before could be found with effective communication.

"In this seminar we have discussed only a few of the many elements that improve communication. There is one danger though, in a seminar such as this and that is leaving with the impression that we are fully prepared to meet with all communicative situations."

The process of communication is an ever changing process which requires consistent commitment to improve it. "To help you meet that commitment I will distribute a list of communication bibliographical resources which you may find helpful in continuing your long-term effort to study, practice and improve your communications."

"Perhaps as a result of this seminar, you will be sitting down with some of your people to discuss your goals in terms of performance, productivity and communication effectiveness."

Commencement is defined as an act of beginning rather than the end.

"Remember, the gains you make in communication can only become known through some avenue of feedback."

"Feedback being an important part of communications...I would appreciate seeing your opinions on the helpfulness of this seminar."

THANK YOU

"Banana-Smoking Clan Takes Trip Together"*

It's very hard to be a parent of a teenager these days. You have to keep on your toes all the time. Just the other morning I walked into the kitchen and I caught my son taking a banana out of the fruit bowl.

"What are you doing with the banana?" I shouted.

"I'm going to cut it up and put it on my cereal," he replied.

"A likely story," I said. "You weren't going to smoke it, were you?"

"Smoke the cereal?"

"No, smoke the banana, smart aleck. I read all about you kids going around smoking bananas behind your parents' backs for kicks."

He became very interested. "How do you smoke a banana?" he wanted to know.

"You don't smoke the banana. You smoke the skin."

He looked at me in amazement. "What have you been smoking?"

"Now don't try to be smart with me," I said. "You know very well what I'm talking about. You take the skin and scrape it out and then make a paste out of it and then you bake it and then you smoke it."

"What for?"

"So you'll have hallucinations, that's what for. First it was marijuana, then it was LSD and now it's bananas. Don't you kids have any shame?"

"Look, all I want to do is have breakfast. I'll eat the fruit and you can keep the skin if it bugs you that much."

"How do I know you didn't scrape off the skin before I came in?" I said.

"Search me," he yelled.

Just then my wife walked in to find out what the commotion was all about.
Satire (Con't)

"I caught him eating a banana," I said.

"Well, what's wrong with that?" she demanded.

"Don't you read the newspaper? Kids all over the country are smoking bananas so they can take trips."

"Take trips where?"

"Wherever bananas will take them."

My wife looked scared. "Are you feeling all right?"

"Why does everyone think I'm crazy because I don't want my kids to smoke bananas?" I cried.

"Well, if you feel that strongly about it," she said, "I won't buy any bananas again."

"Sure, and then they'll sneak up to the fruit store and buy them behind our backs. At least this way we know they're getting good quality bananas."

"Why don't we let him smoke a banana in front of us to get it out of his system?" my wife suggested.

"I don't want to smoke a banana," my son yelled. "In fact I don't even want to eat my own corn flakes."

"That's a good idea. We'll all smoke bananas together and that way we'll know what the kids are experiencing. You're lucky you have modern parents."

I started scraping out the skins and making a paste. Then I baked it and then I chopped it up and passed out three pipes.

The three of us sat around the floor of the living room and started to puff.

In about 10 minutes I asked my son what he saw.

"I see Mom getting green."

"That's no hallucination," my wife said.
Satire (con't)

"You don't look so good yourself," my son added.

"Maybe I didn't bake it long enough," I said.

Five minutes later we all retired to our respective washrooms. This was the "trip" that everyone was talking about.
