Intended primarily for Michigan administrators, this document presents a variety of information on administrator evaluation. A survey of Michigan superintendents revealed, among other things, that there is a very high interest in administrative evaluation, that 45 percent of the responding districts have no formal evaluation system, that 36 percent have a formal evaluation system, that 19 percent have no formal or informal administrator evaluation system, that 30 percent base administrator evaluation on a job description, and that 46 percent include an appraisal conference in the evaluation process. Along with the results of the survey, the document presents a listing of the types of evaluation, an outline of strategies for implementing an administrator appraisal system, an argument for using facts rather than opinions in evaluation, an overview of four sources of information, and nine models of administrator evaluation programs. ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

It is virtually impossible to accurately list all of the administrators who in some way contributed to this study. The committee, nevertheless, extends sincere appreciation to every one of them, for without their support this study could not have been made.

Special thanks are due the many busy superintendents who took the time to send samples and completed questionnaires.

In addition, the Sub-Committee is indebted to Donald M. Currie, Executive Director, W. L. Fleet, Chairman, the Membership Services Committee, and the MASA staff for support and encouragement in making this report possible.

INTRODUCTION

MASA provides many different services. One of the most important concerns effective administrator evaluation. The present study includes a review of the latest report of Educational Researches Services on that subject, along with an analysis of trends and practices, as well as recommendations from workshops in the state of Michigan.

The present level of interest in the subject grows out of a widespread quest for more effective appraisal systems, influenced by recent trends in business and industry and the thrust toward accountability in the state. Moreover, it reflects a diffused national trend toward mandatory personnel evaluations for educational administrators.

It continues the work of the committee chaired by Robert C. Sloan in 1973. That Administrator Evaluation Committee recommended the following:

1) Promote in-service meetings on administrator evaluation.
2) Promote with MASB the need to evaluate services of the Superintendent's office in various school districts.
3) Offer to help MASB membership with procedures of administrator evaluation.
4) Share General Electric Company procedures of administrator evaluation.
5) Survey MASA membership concerning needs for improved administrator evaluation.
6) Contact MASB (and other associations) to see if coordinated efforts would be appropriate.
7) If good material is developed . . . it could be printed and disseminated to the membership.
8) (Provide samples of) administrator evaluation material disseminated by Western Michigan University.

With the publication of this report, most of these recommendations will have been implemented.
Educators are viewing evaluation increasingly as a means of organizational coordination and improvement, as well as development for the individual administrator. The most recent ERS Report expresses it this way:

... Assessment procedures are used to stimulate self-development, encourage individual and organizational planning, sensitize the district administration to needs of the school building administrator, facilitate communication between administrators and their staffs, integrate organizational and administrative objectives, clarify job expectancies, and in general encourage the development of the administrator and school organization.

To paraphrase, there are many, varied, and complex reasons for appraising administrative performance; and the most valid is the desire to improve the educational system.

Skills can deteriorate; attitudes change; and knowledge becomes obsolete. Changes in district goals may require different skills, new attitudes, or different knowledge. Periodic personnel evaluation is therefore essential to the accomplishment of district goals.

Survey of Trends in Michigan

Purpose of Survey

The purpose of the survey of 'Trends in Michigan' was to estimate the administrative evaluation trends as perceived by superintendents in 580 school districts. Administrative evaluation has been a concern to this committee and has been a major task throughout the 1974-75 school year. Therefore, in order to assist superintendents in the State of Michigan in the process of improving administrative evaluation it appeared that an assessment of what current administrative practices are would be appropriate.

Survey Development

The survey was developed by the committee and had two major divisions with a number of sub-divisions which were included in the survey.

The two major divisions were: 1) Data about school districts that had no formal evaluation system; 2) Data was collected from school districts that had a formal administrative evaluation system.

The sub-divisions were then included for the purpose of identifying the major variables related to both formal and informal administrative evaluation. Examples of the other items asked relating to the two major sections were: 1) Was there a self-appraisal component in their system? 2) Was there a formal board evaluation related to their system? 3) Was their system based on MBO's? The other variables which were surveyed are presented in the "Summary of Responses to the Administrative Evaluation Survey."

Number of Surveys Sent

There were 580 survey cards sent by MASA and placed in the May Fortnighter. This seemed to be the most convenient vehicle, and the MASA administrative office was most helpful in assisting us in the dissemination of the survey.

Number of Responses

There were 409 responses included in the survey which represented a return rate of 70.5%. In the opinion of the committee, this was a very high return rate and indicated possible high interest in administrative evaluation. There were 113 surveys returned from school districts with enrollment of 1499 and under. There were 123 surveys returned from districts with an enrollment of 1500 to 3499. There were 186 surveys returned from school districts of 3500 and larger. Fifty surveys were returned with no enrollment shown, and 17 surveys were returned from intermediate school districts. The data on the summary table is divided into the categories just mentioned above, plus a total response category.
Results of Survey

The results of the survey are briefly presented here for the total response category only. The response information is provided by district size for a more detailed analysis.

The total responses by number and percents are as follows:

Responses to the survey are also presented for those districts that indicated they had no formal evaluation system and also for those districts indicating that there was a formal evaluation system. This data is presented by district size and survey item. Also a listing of all comments by district size that were written in are presented in a section called Responses to "Other".

Some Conclusions

1. From the survey responses it appears that there is a very high interest in administrative evaluation by superintendents in the State of Michigan.

2. From the surveys received 45% have indicated they have no formal evaluation system.

3. Thirty-six percent of the surveys indicated that there was a formal evaluation system in their district.

4. There was 19% of the surveys which indicated there was no formal or informal administrative evaluation system.

TYPES OF EVALUATION

There are essentially five different approaches to assessing the quality of administrative performance. Each has unique features which commend it; and each has definite limitations. Deciding which method, or combination of methods, best suits a particular school district, staff, or individual, occasionally becomes a problem. These methods include the following:

The Conference -- In this method the evaluator discusses a subordinate's performance and suggests ways by which the administrator might improve. It is more effective when followed by a written report.

The Checklist -- In this type a number of characteristics, traits, or functions are assessed with weighted adjectives or numbers on a scale (charts and graphic rating scales are forms of this method). Overlong checklists tend to eventuate in guessing and conjecture instead of reliable ratings.

The Forced-Choice Rating -- This is a special type of checklist in which the evaluator chooses from two or more statements the one that best or least describes the evaluatee.

The Descriptive Essay -- The evaluator here presents a descriptive narrative of the strengths, weaknesses, and potential of the evaluatee with a subjective account of how well the administrator has done his job. It has the disadvantage of frequently being overly centered on the superior's point of view.

The Assessment of Objectives -- In this method the evaluator assesses the degree to which pre-determined objectives have been achieved within a stated period of time. It is a form of management-by-objectives (MBO), patterned after practices in business and industry.

Users must not permit their objectives, on one hand, to degenerate into trivial routines, easily accomplished for the sake of ratings; or, on the other, through naivete, inflate their aims beyond the possibility of realistic achievement within a stated time.
In actual practice these approaches are varied and are combined into more than five different methods. The 1971 ERS Report identified twelve basic types in the 84 reported. They differed in many ways -- in sources of input, the method of indicating the manner of performance, and the degree to which the evaluatee was a participant in the process. For example, an essay might be attached to a checklist; an administrator might be evaluated by a team; or a system might require the administrators to submit a form of self-evaluation. Conferences could be an integral part of any method. In addition, "client centered" evaluation reverses the process and permits the traditional evaluatee to appraise the evaluator. This method is only for the secure and the strong of heart. Finally; for do-it-yourself administrators, there may be some value in a "transactions audit" to assess interpersonal relations and their implications for managerial effectiveness.

2. Evaluating Administrative Performance, p. 18.
Dean Speicher and Donald Shebuski, two fairly well known consulting superintendents, both advocate district-wide personnel evaluation. Both have incorporated components of Management by Objectives in the plans for their own districts. They have exchanged and shared many other ideas and both recommend ten identical steps for the district initiating formal evaluation for the first time. These steps are presented for consideration.
STRATEGIES FOR IMPLEMENTING AN ADMINISTRATOR APPRAISAL SYSTEM IN YOUR DISTRICT

STEP # 1 - Develop and recommend a comprehensive policy statement on personnel appraisal for school board review and future adoption.

STEP # 2 - Develop a professional library and bibliography of research and literature related to administrator and supervisor appraisal.

STEP # 3 - Appoint an Advisory Committee consisting of Administrative Team members and other appropriate individuals to study and draft an appraisal plan.

STEP # 4 - Charge the Advisory Committee to:

(1) Design a plan that meets the test of the school board policy statement on personnel appraisal.

(2) Review and study appraisal plans currently being used by other school systems.

(3) Develop objectives for the plan which are compatible with organizational goals.

(4) Identify and develop an appraisal plan which has as its major thrust the improvement of performance.

(5) Determine who will be evaluated and who will do the evaluating. Determine other procedures.

(6) Determine how data will be collected to implement the plan and design or acquire instruments for this purpose.

(7) Design the evaluation steps and time schedule.

(8) Develop a system for decision-making.
STEP # 5 - Provide the Advisory Committee with adequate supporting personnel, consultant help, secretarial assistance and other necessary resources to achieve the committee charge.

STEP # 6 - When details of the plan have been agreed upon, designate specific personnel responsibility for writing a preliminary draft of the plan.

STEP # 7 - When the preliminary draft is completed, request the Administrative Team to provide the Advisory Committee with written recommendations for the plan's improvement. Develop final draft with appropriate modifications.

STEP # 8 - Design and conduct staff in-service for the purpose of implementing the new plan.

STEP # 9 - Design and administer a client evaluation of the new plan.

STEP #10 - After the first several years of each appraisal time period, the Advisory Committee should study the summary results of the client evaluation and make appropriate design modifications.
PERFORMANCE APPRAISALS: LET THE FACTS SPEAK FOR THEMSELVES

It's one thing to give an opinion of a subordinate's performance, and another to back up that opinion with solid evidence.

"So you say Tom Dickson shows outstanding initiative." Your immediate superior may say, "What do you mean? Let's have an example."

You may not be able to pluck an instance of Tom Dickson's initiative out of your memory just like that -- and your superior -- or board -- will wonder if your evaluation is worth much. That's why your performance appraisals should be loaded with facts -- not just opinions.

Collecting specific examples of an employee's performance will first help you evaluate him more accurately and then permit you to document your evaluation. Such examples will also help the employee to improve his performance by showing him in specific, tangible terms, where his shortcomings lie.

DON'T GET PERSONAL

Too often, a performance appraisal is weak on facts because it does not deal with the employee's performance. Personality appraisals are notoriously troublesome and unreliable: They lead to generalities, worthless comparisons, and fruitless counseling. The supervisor can help employees to improve their job performance. But he can't -- and shouldn't -- try to help them to improve their personalities.

A performance appraisal should be just that -- a look at the employee's performance on the job as it stacks up against the requirements of the job. Work-centered appraisals are far more consistent and constructive than personality appraisals. The more appraisals deal with the facts and specifics of performance, the more useful they are for coaching the employee and making decisions on raises, promotions and other personnel actions.

A fact-filled appraisal is not something you can just sit down and dash off without any preparation. The facts must be collected beforehand, through constant observation of your subordinates every working day.
Develop the habit of alert observation. An administrator must watch for "proof" of performance. Look for examples of both good and bad performance.

Won't your subordinates resent being closely observed on the job? The chances are they won't resent the fact that you're taking an interest in their work -- in fact, employees often feel that their boss doesn't know enough about their job and its problems. However, they may resent the way in which they are observed. Snooping is just as bad as complete disinterest. Being overly concerned with picayune details of a job is as bad as not caring how it's performed.

But if the supervisor makes it clear that his concern is constructive, his fact-gathering will be accepted. He should point out that it means their good work is being seen and appreciated, that he will be better able to catch little problems before they become big ones, and that he will also be in a better position to spot employee talents that can be developed.
When you have gathered these examples of job performance, use them. In your appraisal, don't simply refer to them, but give the details. Two pages of solid, factual examples of job performance can say more than ten pages of vague generalities.

When writing your appraisal, focus on the measurable tangibles whenever possible. Describe events, give figures, places, names, dates.

A BASIS FOR INTELLIGENT DECISIONS

Without overloading the appraisal with examples, you should include enough to form a basis for intelligent decisions on raises, promotions, reprimands, performance improvement, and so on. The number of examples you use should depend on your specific purpose. If your appraisal is going to be the basis for unfavorable action, you might be wise to use all the examples you have to support your recommendation. If it's a positive rating, you might use one or two examples for each phase of the employee's job. Sometimes, a single example will support the evaluation of more than one aspect.

Make sure you have enough time for a reasoned consideration of the employee's total performance. After you collect the factual material, try looking it over, then putting it aside for a while to "cure." When you get back to it, you may have a perspective on the employee's performance that you didn't have before. You can then form your judgments.

OVER-ALL PERFORMANCE

Such judgments should be based on the employee's over-all performance, not just individual incidents. Balance the specific incidents against the employee's day-in and day-out work that may not be notably good or bad. Measure his total performance against the total requirements for a well-rounded job, rather than emphasize production, accuracy, or any other single aspect.

To support such an evaluation, you need a well-balanced selection of examples in your appraisal. When you're recommending a high rating or a raise, make sure the incidents cited to support your recommendation are typical. If there are examples that could be given more weight than they deserve, you should explain their relative importance.
CONCRETE EXAMPLES

Devote the major part of your performance appraisal to describing the employee's performance rather than evaluating it. In other words, let the facts speak for themselves. Your direct observations will have more impact than your generalized opinions -- both on your boss and on the employee himself. It's one thing to point out to an employee several examples of errors he's made in his work, and another to simply tell him he's careless. Challenged by this general criticism, he may defend himself against the charge instead of trying to improve his accuracy.

Vagueness has no place in a performance appraisal. The supervisor who carefully observes and records specific examples of an employee's job performance will turn out appraisals that provide an accurate, concrete basis for making wide decisions on the employee's future.

To facilitate this type of appraisal, the evaluator might observe performance indicators in the eight following areas:

INDICATORS OF EFFECTIVE PERFORMANCE

I. PERSONNEL ADMINISTRATION

II. INSTRUCTIONAL LEADERSHIP

III. STAFF DEVELOPMENT

IV. PLANNING AND EVALUATION

V. BUSINESS MANAGEMENT

VI. AUXILIARY SERVICES

VII. SCHOOL AND COMMUNITY RELATIONS

VIII. ACCEPTANCE AND PROMOTION OF SYSTEM GOALS, OBJECTIVES AND POLICIES.

The ERS Report: Evaluating Administrative Performance is probably the most useful publication on administrator evaluation to appear in the last school year. In the words of the director, it is "A National Resource for the Administrative Teams of School Systems." It includes a selective review of the research supporting current theories and practices. It also includes surveys of local school and state-mandated evaluation programs, as well as a comprehensive bibliography of books and articles published since 1970.

This report offers no simple definition of evaluation; however, the section entitled "The Evaluation Process" offers much to practicing school administrators. It spotlights a correlation between certain characteristics or behaviors and effective school management, the results of which suggest a need to change the focus and method of evaluating local school personnel in some districts.

This study summarizes the results of two previous surveys (1968, 1971) and reports national trends as follows: a gradual increase in formal evaluation, greater use of performance objectives, more references to MBO, and an increase in state-mandated evaluation. In addition, it includes state instruments for personnel evaluation and samples of local school district procedures. It is the kind of reference that every superintendent should review.

ADMINISTRATOR IMAGE QUESTIONNAIRE
(Client-Centered Evaluation)

The "Administrator Image Questionnaire" is an instrument devised by the Education Feedback Center at Western Michigan University to provide educational administrators with confidential feedback designed to help them work more effectively with people. This feedback, based on the perceptions of groups with whom the administrator works, is tabulated into an image profile representing the reactions of relevant groups with respect to the effectiveness of the administrator.

On a five point scale from poor to excellent, respondents indicate their perception of a leader's technical, conceptual, or human skills. Questionnaires are analyzed at the Center and a leader image profile is developed and returned. In addition, the Center sends an interpretive discussion of factors that might be causing trouble along with suggestions for "possible behavioral changes designed to improve leadership effectiveness".

An incomplete copy of the Image Questionnaire and a sample profile follow this description.

The cost for the service to administrators is $10.00 for each group of reactions. The cost for two groups is $20.00, etc.

A WORD ABOUT MANAGEMENT TRANSACTIONS AUDIT

The Management Transactions Audit is based on the model of interpersonal transactions developed by Eric Berne, M.D., called transactional analysis. It is designed to sensitize administrators to the way their reactions to others affect the quality of managerial transactions.

The material is presented in three parts, each of which lists the same questions, complaints, and challenges. The participant reacts by assigning limited weights to the different responses to subordinates, to colleagues, and to superiors. Answers are transcribed on attached carbons containing instructions for scoring and interpreting results.

Encounters are organized into three general modes of behavior:
P (parent)--Described as judgmental, critical of self and others, moralistic, directive, and "how-to" oriented . . .; A (adult)--Described as logical, non-emotional, rational, objective, fact-oriented . . .; C (child)--Described as spontaneous, fun-loving, curious, creative, impulsive, stubborn, . . . self-centered, and self-pitying.

A score of thirty is standard on each of these interrelated categories; and the sum total is ninety. The distribution of the scores determines the predominant pattern of behavior. For example, a score of P-20, A-50, C-20 reflects a strong tendency to logical, objective, fact-oriented behavior, possibly strong decision-making ability. In addition, the "Interpretive Guide" furnishes insights into the way predominant patterns can trigger reactions in others. Properly used, this kind of information can facilitate the improvement of interpersonal communication and thus improve managerial effectiveness.

Reproduced here is the form used in Hawaii.

In this system, the administrator and the evaluator have conferences during the evaluation period. The administrator is rated on predetermined performance skills and characteristics and may attach a dissenting statement to the evaluation or request a conference with his evaluator's superior.
INSTRUCTIONS: Fill in the boxes to the right of the factors with the descriptive words unsatisfactory, fair, average, good, or excellent. You will note that the factors are arranged in outline form. Every factor that is a heading is a summary of those subfactors specifically subsumed under it as well as those not specified but implied in the heading. Not all of the factors are of the same importance nor are identical factors of the same importance in every school. It is not intended that this form yield a “score.” It is intended merely as a reminder that each of these factors needs to be considered objectively before making an overall judgment. Do not feel compelled to start at the top and work down. Start with factors about which you have the most information. If you do not have sufficient information to rate a factor, leave it blank. Individual items may be evaluated and dated during the semester.

The performance review conference to be held with each administrator shall be based on, but not be limited to, the documentation contained in the performance review form. The performance review form is designed to maximize the participation of the administrator in the review process and is intended to serve as a structured medium to establish a formal communication link between the administrator and his supervisor regarding the supervisor's evaluation of the administrator's performance.

In general, the approach is designed to accomplish two major objectives. These objectives are:

1. To establish a clear understanding of the responsibilities of the job on the part of both the administrator and his supervisor. This is a step which is often taken for granted, is frequently misunderstood, and, if not properly accomplished, undermines the process from the outset.

2. Proceeding from the uniform baseline of a common understanding of job responsibilities, the process is intended to secure a commitment from the administrator to accomplish specific assignments against which subsequent performance will be evaluated. The commitment is gained by more clearly defined communication (two-way) on what is expected and through the process of involvement in setting district objectives which are supported by his individual job assignments.

Purpose

The specific aims of the performance review program are to:

1. Satisfy each administrator's need and desire to know how well he is doing by apprising him of his supervisor's assessment of his work performance.

2. Enhance understanding of the specific duties of the assigned job through mutual exchange of information, which encourages improved administrator performance.

3. Determine the administrator's job satisfaction and work preference.
Frequency

In general, the performance review should be completed on an annual basis. Interim reports, either at six months or when some specific event occurs, (for example, completion of a significant work assignment, transfer, etc.) are at the discretion of the supervisor.

Relationship to Objectives

The supervisor should insure that there is a meaningful relationship between (1) the job assignment as understood between the parties and the specific work accomplishments that are being evaluated; and (2) the formal objectives established for the administrator's particular functional responsibility.

Procedure

The performance review program utilizes the following forms:

A. Administrator Development Discussion Guide
   - The purpose of the development discussion guide is to notify the administrator of the planned performance review, its date, and the specific topics to be covered. Advance notice of this kind permits both the supervisor and the administrator the time to adequately prepare for the discussion, underlining its importance as a developmental tool which has as its basic aim improved performance.

B. Performance Review Form
   - The performance review form provides a vehicle for mutual understanding (administrator/supervisor) of the administrator's responsibilities and assignments, as well as for evaluation of his performance of these assignments on the part of the supervisor.

   - The administrator's development discussion guide and the performance review form should be distributed to the administrator a minimum of two weeks prior to the planned performance review discussion.

   - The administrator will complete the first section of the performance review form (calling for his description of his job assignments) and return it to his supervisor at least one week prior to the planned performance review date.

   - The supervisor, upon return of the performance review form from the administrator, will review the statement of job assignment completed by the administrator for conformance with his own understanding. If discrepancies exist, they should be discussed during the performance review session.
-- The supervisor will complete his portion of the form dealing with comments on job assignment, evaluation of specific results which were expected to meet approved objectives, and specific actions required to improve performance in preparation for the performance review.

-- The supervisor should schedule adequate uninterrupted time for the performance review discussion (this will vary with the individual administrator but should be a minimum of one hour). In the conduct of the meeting, care should be taken on the part of the supervisor to make it a two-way discussion. He should not enter the meeting with a "closed mind" attitude which would for all practical purposes limit the discussion to a one-way downward communication.

-- Should the discussion reveal discrepancies in job assignment understanding and/or the existence of circumstances which affected performance (about which the supervisor had previously been unaware), these conditions should be discussed and a follow-up meeting scheduled. Prior to the follow-up meeting, the evaluation form should be revised in accordance with the results of that discussion.

-- The supervisor should offer the administrator the opportunity to enter his comments on the performance review form in the space provided.

SUGGESTIONS TO THE REVIEWERS

Evaluate the performance in relation to factors or aspects of factors that are applicable to the person's job.

Do not give the most recent happenings undue weight, but try to arrive at a balanced evaluation of performance during the entire period under review.

Consider each factor separately without letting your decision be influenced by your rating on other factors that may be quite unrelated.

Do not let mere length of service or purely personal considerations influence your thinking.

Read each question given on the following pages, place a check mark in the appropriate box to the right of each question. The rating scale, 1 through 5, is the same as that appearing at the top of each page. After you have considered the applicable questions in a group, give your overall rating on that factor by checking the proper box to the right of each main heading.

EVALUATION OF THE SUPERINTENDENT BY THE BOARD OF EDUCATION

This document is to be used to prepare a composite estimate by the Board of Education of the performance of the Superintendent. It is intended that it will indicate the opinion of the Board regarding the Superintendent's performance in his many areas of responsibility. It is recognized that there are some aspects of the Superintendent's job that cannot be accurately evaluated by the Board of Education. A poor evaluation result in some area, therefore, may indicate a number of things other than poor performance.

Probably the major benefit that can be realized from this evaluation is the input it will provide the Superintendent regarding the Board's view of his activities and performance. To get the most information of this type it was necessary to expand the questions to cover more than just the Superintendent and his responsibilities. There are some questions about his assistants, the staff in general and the District.

Plan
The Superintendent of a modern public school system is the top administrator of the system and as such is responsible for almost all aspects of system operations. The responsibilities require that the Superintendent have a good understanding and considerable expertise in a wide range of activities. The following are subjects considered in the questionnaire to provide evaluation results in these activities.

I Dedication and Industriousness
II Directing Educational Activities
III Personnel Matters
IV Business Administration
V Public Relations
VI Negotiations
VII Participation in Professional Organizations
VIII Relations with the Board of Education

In the following a number of questions are asked about each of these eight major subjects. Nothing is intended or implied regarding the relative importance of subjects by the order of the list.

Instructions
Each part of the evaluation has a section title and a brief elaborating statement which is intended to clarify just what aspect of total responsibility is being considered. The evaluation is performed by answering the questions in each section. It will be noticed that each question is followed by a line with five calibration marks. The Board Member is requested to put an "x" on the line in the position that in his opinion will indicate the Superintendent's performance. If no answer is selected, it will be assumed that the Board Member does not understand or does not wish to answer the question.
I. Dedication and Industriousness

... the concern the Superintendent has about doing a good job and how hard he is working.

1. How concerned do you feel the Superintendent is about meeting the obligations of his position? How do you rate his dedication?

   Excellent  Good  Average  Below Average  Poor

2. How hard is the Superintendent working? How industrious is the Superintendent when compared with other Superintendents?

   Much Greater  Greater  Similar  Less  Much Less

3. How industrious is the Superintendent when compared with others with a similar salary in industry, business and other professions?

   Much Greater  Greater  Similar  Less  Much Less

4. How can the Superintendent make more efficient use of his time? Rate his success in using each of the following means of reducing his own work load:

   a. Effective use of subordinates and assistants

      Excellent  Good  Average  Below Average  Poor

   b. Establishing priorities so that the number of items requiring his attention are reasonable

      Excellent  Good  Average  Below Average  Poor

   c. Organizing procedures so that the amount of time for each item is reasonable

      Excellent  Good  Average  Below Average  Poor

   d. Rationing of the time devoted to "side issues" and distractions

      Excellent  Good  Average  Below Average  Poor

5. If you have any comments or suggestions you would like to make regarding the Superintendent's dedication or industriousness, make them here.

The interest in administrative evaluation reflected in the recent survey supports the subcommittee's recommendation that seminars be provided for the purpose of further familiarizing superintendents in the state of Michigan with current administrative evaluation procedures and for assisting them in determining an appropriate implementation process for their school district.
A BIBLIOGRAPHICAL NOTE

This extremely useful publication brings two previous reports up to date. It is based on a search of published and unpublished literature related to the appraisal of administrative and supervisory personnel in education. The seven pages of bibliography are a handy reference for the busy administrator. It is well worth the $7.50.

This reference contains several useful examples of "client centered" evaluation practices in a single reference.

NOTE: Because of the comprehensive coverage in these two references, the committee agreed that these are all the busy administrator really needs.
