EVALUATING THE PERFORMANCE OF NON-TEACHING PROFESSIONALS

By Charles W. Laffin, Jr.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING IN NEW YORK STATE

Under the provisions of the Public Employees Fair Employment Act, otherwise known as the "Taylor Law," employees of the State University of New York exercise the rights of organization and collective representation concerning the determination of the terms and conditions of their employment.

Enacted into legislation in 1967, the Taylor Law, while prohibiting strikes on the part of public employees, permits a mechanism whereby public employees may designate an agent to bargain collectively on their behalf. Prior to the enactment of this legislation, professional employees of the State University of New York were without representation and negotiated terms of employment on an individual basis.

EVALUATION OF PROFESSIONAL EMPLOYEES

On May 4, 1972, representatives of the State University of New York and the Senate Profession Association (which then represented State University professional employees) signed a Memorandum of Understanding concerning the establishment of a procedure to evaluate the performance of all professional employees in the "Professional Services Negotiating Unit." Included in this unit are members of the non-teaching professional staff, such as counselors, registrars, and other administrative personnel who are not designated as managerial or confidential employees. Managerial employees are defined as persons who formulate policy, assist in the preparation and conduct of collective negotiations or play a major role in the administration of agreements or in personnel administration. Confidential employees assist and act in a confidential capacity to managerial employees. The State University annually publishes a list of job titles excluded from the negotiating unit.

FARMINGDALE AND THE SUNY SYSTEM

The State University of New York comprises 69 separate institutions with a total enrollment of over 161,000 full-time equivalent students. The various units of the State University are widely distributed across the State and include:

4 University Centers
2 Medical Centers
13 Four Year Colleges
2 Specialized Colleges (Forestry and Maritime)
With the exception of the 37 community colleges, which are locally sponsored and have local boards of trustees, the units of the State University are governed by a central board of trustees and operate under the leadership of a central administration which is located in Albany, the State Capital. The State University of New York was established by an act of the State Legislature in 1948.

The Agricultural and Technical College at Farmingdale is located at the southeast end of New York State in an area which is popularly called Long Island. Long Island is in reality a peninsula which juts approximately 140 miles into the Atlantic Ocean. The area is bounded by New York City on the west, by Long Island Sound on the north, and by the Atlantic Ocean on the south and east. Nassau and Suffolk Counties, which Farmingdale's campus straddles, have a combined population of over 2,700,000 people.

The eastern end of Long Island still contains some of the country's largest potato and strawberry farms, while the western end borders on New York City.

Founded in 1912, as the New York State School of Agriculture, Farmingdale has experienced many changes over the past 63 years and today offers a variety of full time and part time programs in agricultural and engineering technologies, human services, business and arts and sciences. The academic programs are made up of 30 separate and distinct curricula and enroll over 6,500 full time and over 7,100 part time students. Farmingdale has over 300 full time faculty and over 100 non-teaching professional employees.

PERFORMANCE PROGRAMS

As established by the Policies of the Board of Trustees of the State University of New York, the performance of each non-teaching professional employee must be evaluated in writing by the person's immediate supervisor once each year during the term of appointment. This annual evaluation must be based upon the employee's Performance Program. Employee Performance Programs are determined jointly by the employee and the immediate supervisor and constitute a written document which is kept on file (See Appendix A). The Performance Program lists the employee's duties and responsibilities, supervisory relationships, and functional relationships. Each of the employee's functions are stated in terms of performance objectives with criteria for evaluation. Long term goals are also developed and stated.
EVALUATION CRITERIA

The criteria for evaluating the performance of non-teaching professional employees are as follows:

(a) Effectiveness in Performance - As demonstrated by success in carrying out assigned duties and responsibilities.

(b) Mastery of Specialization - Indicated by degrees, licenses, honors, awards and reputation in professional field.

(c) Professional Ability - Shown by invention or innovation in professional, scientific, administrative or technical areas; such as the development or refinement of programs, methods, procedures or apparatus.

(d) Effectiveness in University Service - Demonstrated by such things as successful committee work, participation in local campus and University governance and involvement in campus or University related student or community activities.

(e) Continuing Growth - Evidenced by continuing education, participation in professional organizations, enrollment in training programs and research.
As part of the annual evaluation process, the comments of the employee's immediate supervisor are recorded (See Appendix B) and the employee is given a copy of the supervisor's written comments. At this time, the immediate supervisor must discuss the performance evaluation and possible modification of the Performance Program with the professional employee. In his overall evaluation, the immediate supervisor must indicate whether or not the employee's performance is satisfactory. In the event of an unsatisfactory rating, the employee may request review of the report by a professional staff committee established for this purpose.

EFFECTIVENESS OF THE EVALUATION PROCESS

Overall, the formal evaluation process has not proven difficult to administer, nor has it created any observable negative effects. Well developed Performance Programs clearly indicate the expected functions and levels of professional performance and help eliminate the possibility of arbitrary evaluations. The evaluation process itself gives the non-teaching professional employee the opportunity to respond to his supervisor's comments and the continual annual review process has the effect of setting performance goals on a year to year basis providing the flexibility of altering professional performance objectives.
to meet the changing needs of the college. All in all, our experience with the process has been positive and we would recommend it to institutions seeking to develop a program of evaluation for non-teaching professional employees.
