The document is a guide to a consumer education course; the course format is a series of several activity-based miniunits for each of 15 instructional areas: components of life styles, decision making, settling conflicts, budgeting, handling and controlling family income, credit, interest rates, savings institutions, family financial security, investment, effective consumerism, advertising, consumer aids and protection, legal relations, and consumer guides. There are more activities listed for each instructional area than can be completed in the time indicated, so that teachers may choose the activities most effective for their own situations. Each instructional area is introduced by its course goal and behavioral objectives, followed by several miniunits, and an annotated resource list. The one-page miniunit format is: area, topic, time, behavioral objective, performance objectives, activities, and resources. The learning activities teach effective consumerism by student participation in the marketplace, either by hypothetical or actual selection, comparison, and evaluation. A community resource list for the Greater San Diego (California) area and suggested uses for such innovative materials as the telephone book and the mail order catalog complete the guide. (AJ)

CONSUMER EDUCATION

PREFACE

The need for consumer education in our consumer oriented society is a vital part of our youth's education. The students must have a broad understanding of the marketplace in relation to themselves, their homes, and their families. This kind of learning is a continuing, life-time process, or consumer education.

The course is structured to be student activity oriented; thus, the students will learn to be effective consumers by participating in the marketplace, either by hypothetical or actual selection, comparing, and evaluating.

This guide is to be used as a tool for experimentation and implementation of ideas. The performance objectives in each case should be met, yet evaluated. There are more activities listed in each area than can be completed in the time allowed; however, each teacher will need to choose the most effective activities for her own situation.

The format has been structured into mini-units thus allowing any behavioral objective to be pulled out and used in any applicable subject area. Special features of the guide are color coding of course goal and objectives pages; community resource list; suggested innovative materials; and the supplementary book which includes supplements and packets.

AREA: Consumers' Guide

TOPIC: Clothing

TIME: 3 days

BEHAVIORAL OBJECTIVE: The learner will be able to evaluate and select clothing according to quality, cost, appearance, and need. 15.02

PERFORMANCE OBJECTIVES:

Given a hang tag with only the generic name of the fiber, the learner will complete in writing all the information required by the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act.

Given two hang tags, the learner will compare in writing the useful information available on fabric finish, fabric construction, and care instructions.

The learner will name in writing one animal, vegetable, and man-made fiber and give general care instructions for each.

Given one clothing item, the learner will state in writing three criteria for judging quality.

Given three clothing items of the same type, the learner will be able to compare in writing the quality of workmanship according to the criteria discussed in class, to the cost.

Given $25.00, the learner will display on notebook paper a wardrobe of five completed outfits by choosing four separate pieces of clothing from the catalog stating cost per item.

ACTIVITIES:

Students view filmstrips Understanding Today's Textiles and Care of Textiles.

Display garments with hang tags plus additional separate hang tags. Evaluate for useful information.

Reports on comparative shopping of a specific clothing item.
Examine cheap, medium, and expensively priced clothing items of the same style.

Discuss use of thrift stores—purchase an inexpensive garment, alter or fix it.

Use AHEA Helps Packet #18, Clothing Expresses You

Organize a bulletin board display of different types of fabrics and characteristics of each.

Teacher wear something poorly made or matched; then students do the same and see if they can identify these garments.

COMMUNITY RESOURCE LIST

The purpose of this part of the guide was to survey the community to ascertain what assistance various business establishments could give in teaching Consumer and Homemaking Education. Eighty-one letters, including a questionnaire (see attached) were sent out to reputable business places throughout Greater San Diego. There were 23 replies. These responses were compiled and a list attached stating what services each business could provide.

Suggested techniques to improve the experience with community resources:

1. Let students locate resource people. Given guidelines to follow, the students have an opportunity to make some decisions. The suggested names and places can then be screened by the teacher.

2. Clearly indicate to the resource person your objective.

3. Receive permission from school principals concerning the presence of resource persons on campus.

4. Send thank you notes following the visits.

5. Have students evaluate the speaker, field trip, or program as a part of their learning experience.

6. Keep a file card system of resources contacted.

Summary:

It was found that businesses which did respond were ready to offer whatever help they could. Some of them have materials available and some would be able to order material if given advance notice. The response to speakers being available to the classroom was very good. Past experience has shown that many businessmen feel that they are in a small way repaying the schools for the education they received themselves and are proud to show the measure of success they have attained. All teachers should feel free to approach businessmen for assistance in teaching consumer education.

USE OF MAIL ORDER CATALOGS IN THE CLASSROOM.

Catalogs can help the teacher to individualize instruction in classes where there are both low-income and affluent-income levels, slow and fast learners. They can serve as resource material for an individual to make consumer choices.

Mail order catalogs can be of value to the ill person confined in her home, to the elderly who cannot shop around, to anyone when the weather is a handicap, to the consumer who does not have easily accessible transportation.

1. Using the catalog, plan a basic wardrobe for 1) first year in college, 2) first year on a job, 3) new baby, 4) businessman, 5) housewife.

2. Take an inventory of clothes you own and list items needed to complete your wardrobe. Estimate costs of new purchases... check estimates against actual catalog prices ... set up a spending plan for buying things you need.

3. Ask students to set up a plan for furnishing a three room apartment on a low, medium, and high budget. Use the catalog for prices and illustrations of furniture.

4. Set up clothing requirements for a working girl in an office, boy working as a salesman in a department store, or a new baby. List only necessities, and estimate costs for each item. Suggest ways to save money on clothing purchases.

5. Shop in at least five places for one of the following items: TV, record player, typewriter. Report to the class on prices, features, guarantees, services, and treatment received in different stores. Include the mail order catalogs.

6. Find out what credit plans are offered by at least three different retailers including catalog order houses.

7. From a catalog or retail store get a credit application form. Fill it out as though you were applying for credit. Explain why creditors want the information requested on the form. What type of information would you want before selling merchandise on credit to a stranger?

8. In the catalog find at least ten items for sales that would require installation and servicing after you buy them. Tell some problems that could develop if a consumer bought a washer and dryer without finding out about installation and servicing.
9. In the catalog find several examples of guarantees. Explain what consumers need to know and do to make guarantees work in their best interests. On what types of purchases do you think guarantees are most important?

10. Use catalog for co-ed classes to find out how much it would cost to equip a kitchen.

11. When planning houses and studying furniture arrangement, use catalogs to obtain sizes of different pieces of furniture.

12. Look up items in catalog and compare prices with stores.

13. Find out what information is given in catalogs about fabrics, garments, and furniture.

14. Use pictures of toys from catalogs for studying selection of toys for children.

15. Compare the cost of unfinished furniture with finished furniture.

16. Study the good, better and best qualities of things, such as mattresses, carpeting, sheets, etc.

17. Use the catalog to get ideas in clothing for trimming, styling, and accessories for garments.

18. Look through the catalog to find out what general and specific information is available on fabrics. Explain how information can affect clothing prices.

19. Find general and specific information on sizes and measurements of ready to wear clothing. How can accurate measurements result in greater consumer satisfaction?
INNOVATIVE MATERIALS
USE OF NEWSPAPERS IN THE CLASSROOM

1. Use newspaper ads to plan menus for market order.

2. Use newspaper ads to study price range of homes, apartments, and mobile homes in different areas.

3. Compare prices of discount stores with other stores. Quality will need to be considered.

4. Compare prices of stores giving trading stamps with those that do not.

5. Use newspaper for buying seasonal foods and for stocking up on canned foods and other supplies when they are on sale.

6. Analyze ads:
   - Why do stores give coupons?
   - Circle the important facts in the ad.
   - List characteristics that make the ad appeal to the consumer.
   - Are there misleading statements?

7. From magazines or newspapers cut out five advertisements which are pleasing to look at. Underline the concrete information of facts given in each ad.

8. Compare six different advertisements of clothing in different price ranges with two from exclusive fashion magazines, two from newspapers and two from catalogs or mail brochures. Tell how they are the same, how they differ, what appeal is each using to tempt the buyer and what is emphasized in each ad.

9. A good shopper must know when the good sales occur so that she can plan ahead. She must also know where she can count on getting reliable bargains. She has to judge whether a sale offers any real savings.

   Analyze the different kinds of sales ads:
   - Seasonal
   - Clearance Sales
   - Stimulation Sales
   - Going Out of Business
   - Imperfects, Irregulars, Seconds
   - Traditional Sales

10. Gather cartoons which present a humorous side of economic and consumer issues. Use them for a bulletin board or make into transparencies to use in introducing new material to students.

11. Collect several articles on a specific topic such as credit legislation. Analyze each article as to author, source, slant or bias, authenticity, relationship to consumer and business.
12. Make a bulletin board of articles, ads, columns, and pictures related to a specific topic such as fall fashions or trends in home furnishings.

13. Use the newspaper to compare prices of apartments for rent and the cost of buying a home in different areas of the city.

14. Use newspapers to study beneficial and false advertising.

15. Use ads to study meat—cuts, grade, price comparisons.

16. Use ads to find out what jobs are available and discuss what a couple might be able to earn.

17. Teach how to use want ads in the newspaper. Learn what part of the paper ads are located.

18. Use house advertisements to study real estate. Make up a list of vocabulary words to become familiar with.

19. Use newspaper articles written by the home advisor to learn how to use commodity foods. This could lead to learning about the home advisor and the services they give to the homemaker.

20. Look for fiber content in clothing ads.

21. Use a city map and locate the different grocery stores and then discuss whether it would pay to go to buy up the sales advertised in the newspaper.

22. Save newspaper ads of particular foods and see what happens to seasonal food prices.

23. Use food ads to study sizes of cans and what foods come in the different sizes.

24. Use food ads to study brand names and quality of canned foods.

25. From the food ads learn about different laundry supplies and the vocabulary of the different products on the market.

26. Obtain three or four articles on a single topic such as inflation or consumer protection. Compare the articles and discuss ways in which they differ in outlook.

27. Organize a comprehensive card catalog of articles published on various topics related to consumer interests.
INNOVATIVE MATERIALS

TELEPHONE BOOK

1. Study the telephone book for the services it offers.

2. Use the telephone book to learn about telephone etiquette.

3. Use the yellow pages to find out about community services, such as churches, recreation facilities, consumer protection bureaus, libraries, police, fire department, county and city offices, and others.

4. Given a telephone book find out how to use the telephone book for shopping.

5. Using the yellow pages find out about loan companies, savings and loan companies, finance companies, and others.

6. Use the telephone book for buying information, such as:
   - Who deals in a certain commodity or service?
   - What is the address or telephone number of a recommended business firm?
   - What firms carry a brand name product?
   - Whom to call in an emergency?
   - Is there a dealer in my neighborhood?

7. Teach students how to be able to use a telephone book to do shopping.

8. Use the telephone book to be able to locate consumer protection agencies such as the Better Business Bureau.

USE OF STAMP BOOKS IN THE CLASSROOM

1. Compare prices in stores that give stamps and those that don't.

2. Give stamp books to students in class. See what teenagers would buy in the stamp book. Are they useful or useless items?

3. Find out if you can buy articles cheaper than using the $3.00.

USE OF PLAY MONEY IN THE CLASSROOM

1. Using play money, give the student a budget amount for a young married couple. Student will show how we would spend it. Figure taxes, insurance, social security, etc.

2. Given $200 of play money, plan a basic wardrobe.
