Bibliography of Psychological, Linguistic, and Philosophical Research on the Psychological Reality of Grammar.

This unannotated bibliography consists of 160 citations of books and journal articles dealing with linguistics (traditional grammar, semantics, syntax, morphology, inflectional rules, transformational grammar, generative phonology), language usage, language acquisition, psycholinguistics, verbal behavior, psychology, and the philosophy of language. (CPM)
BIBLIOGRAPHY OF PSYCHOLOGICAL,
LINGUISTIC, AND PHILOSOPHICAL RESEARCH
ON THE PSYCHOLOGICAL REALITY OF GRAMMAR

Compiled by

© Amy Sheldon
Department of Linguistics
University of Minnesota, Minneapolis

1976

———, J. Lackner, and R. Kirk. The underlying structures of sentences are the primary units of speech processing. Perception and Psychophysics 5, 225-34, 1969.

———. Postscript. In Explaining Linguistic Phenomena. op. cit.

The psychological reality of tone sandhi rules in Taiwanese.
Papers from the Sixth Regional Meeting Chicago Linguistic Society.
489-503, 1970b.

On the psychological reality of the so-called embedded sentences.
Ms., Department of East Asian Languages, University of Hawaii, April, 1973.

Hutchinson, L.G. Grammar as theory. In D. Cohen, op. cit.

Mehler, J. and P. Carey. The role of surface and base structure in the perception of sentences. JVLVB 6, 335-8, 1967.

Skousen, R. Evidence in phonology.  Ms., University of Texas at Austin, 1972.

Psycholinguistics. Scott, Foresman, 1971b.

Acknowledgement

I would like to acknowledge the contribution of Jon D. Ringen, who suggested philosophical works included in this bibliography.