This document presents an outline and teacher's guide for a community college-level teaching module in Mexican identification, designed for students in introductory courses in the social sciences. Although intended specifically for cultural anthropology, urban anthropology, comparative social organization and sex roles in cross-cultural perspective, the content and objectives are applicable to various sociology and psychology courses. The module focuses primarily on analysis of Mexican social organization, including examination of social class, caste, and family oriented statuses and roles. Academic and psychological characteristics of community college students which must be addressed by the instructor to overcome stereotypes and preconceptions are outlined. Learning objectives, methods whereby students may attain the objectives, and methods for evaluating student performance are listed. Although no suitable text is available, selected readings recommended for both instructors and students are included. The bulk of this document outlines in detail the subject matter that the instructor should present to students during the course of the module. (JDS)

Introduction

This module is designed for students in introductory courses in the social sciences. Although intended specifically for cultural anthropology, urban anthropology, comparative social organization and sex roles in cross-cultural perspective, the content and goals are applicable to various sociology and psychology classes.

The current trend in publishing textbooks is to select books written for a lay public reading audience. Publishers rate the national reading level of community college students at 9th or 10th grade ability. Clear, interesting and organized books complementing class presentations, unfortunately are not available in the field of Mexican social organizations. Publications, therefore, are recommended that may be helpful resources for the student and instructor. However, except for Two Cities of Latin America, there is no book suitable as a text.

The most common learning needs I perceive in students are divisible into two categories; the academic and the psychological. Academically, students generally need help in understanding directions, building a factual base for generalizations, selecting main ideas from supporting details, synthesizing information and appropriately applying new data to a variety of situations and interpretations. Psychologically, help is needed in recognizing misinformation or prejudices, exploring alternative bases for behavior, and then, evaluating their previous perceptions and interpretations.

Although this module focuses on the academic needs, it is designed to incorporate the psychology concerns also. The informal role reversal "test" at the end of the module is one method for interweaving the two categories of needs. The exercises require screening ideas comparing and contrasting them, then critically applying them to familiar contexts.
Factors in Mexican Identification Processes: Teacher's Guide

I. Student Analysis

A. Kinds of student

1. Inarticulate speakers and writers
2. Limited reading ability (9th-10th grade average reading ability)
3. Limited self-discipline in studying or carrying through assignments
4. Little college experience
5. Little contact with other types of cultures or non-middle class U.S.

B. Interests

1. General interest in anthropology because it is believed to cover "exotic" practices of other societies
2. Courses with little reading, easy grading and interesting content and instruction
3. Superficial and impersonal interests in Chicano or other minority "causes"

C. Needs

1. Simple "text"
2. Clear oral and written instructions 3. Help in understanding basic
   a. Instructions
   b. Written material
   c. Concepts
4. Help in developing skills in a. Studying
   b. Writing
   c. Selecting important ideas from supporting material 5. Factual information as a basis for a. Recognizing Mexico is a society with complex social structure rather than a "place" for U.S. tourists
   b. Recognizing the range of diversity within Mexico
   c. Comprehending the ideals and morals of "Middle Class" Mexicans d. Applying the knowledge gained to 1. Understand common interests, fears and behaviors shared by Chicanos and Mexicans
      2. Understand the diversity within the Chicano "category"
      3. Challenge their own stereotypes
D. Materials

1. Short nontechnical but comprehensive and objective "text" type of article or section of book
2. Supplementary
   a. For more interested or able readers-nontechnical case studies or biographies to provide "felling" level experience
   b. Film - "How's School Enrique?"

II. Basis of Content Selection

A. Mexican Caste - class systems

1. General misconceptions commonly expressed by students (e.g., family unit breaks down in urbanizing industrializing societies)
2. Simplistic and stereotypic description of Mexico (e.g., land of fiestas and siestas)
3. Confusion of caste and class concepts with each other or with the concept of race

B. Mexican "Middle Class" Family

1. Stable but flexible basic social unit within urban and industrial context: effective model to begin penetrating stereotype processes
2. Primary socializing unit throughout Mexico, yet complexities, diversities and differences between norms and modes enable comprehension of larger Mexican social organization

III. Organizing Element for Module - Thematic - Identification Processes

A. Caste - Class

1. Appropriate to general goals and methods of anthropology
2. Concentration in current events applicable to students' lives

B. Family - as primary social unit (provides widest range of course applicability: e.g., sociology, psychology, anthropology, urban studies)

IV. Objectives for students

A. General

1. Increase knowledge of diversity of social structures
2. Increase knowledge of universal aspects of human behavior
3. Expand comprehension of Mexican and Chicano values and behaviors
4. Recognize those stereotypes and judgments based on nonfactual data
5. Increase ability to distinguish key ideas from detail
B. Specific Objectives

1. Summarize basic characteristics of caste, class and family oriented statuses and roles
2. Describe ideal intrafamily roles
3. Compare and contrast castes, classes, family statuses and rules
4. Explain Mexican concepts within context of that society
   a. Clase media
   b. Educación
   c. Cultura
   d. Macho

V. Values of Objectives

A. Meet stated needs and interests of students

B. Provide opportunity to
   1. Practice reading, screening, speaking, writing skills
   2. Build up reservoir of factual knowledge
   3. Begin to examine previously held knowledge, attitudes and beliefs in terms of newly acquired data

VI. Sequence of learning skills - stresses

A. Knowledge

B. Comprehension

VII. Methods for achieving objectives

A. Lecture and discussion in an informal setting

B. Reading material supplemented by guided studies and visual aids

C. Personal contacts between instructor and student to 1. Arrange supplemental reading
   2. Discuss special interests and problems

D. Evaluating procedures
   1. End unit with series of role playing (e.g., Mexican students from various Clases medios trying to learn range of diversity within U.S. middle class and ideal intrafamily within one of these classes (e.g., middle Middle Class)
   2. Test
      a. Required portion
         1. Skills in summarizing and screening for key ideas; by comparing and contrasting (multiple choice questions)
2. Skills in summarizing - (short answers)

b. Optional portion

1. Skills in comparing, contrasting and separating key ideals from supporting detail
2. Skills in explaining clearly and accurately (short essay)

3. Optional projects - oral or written - choice of students

a. Individual--summarize article in form usable to rest of class
b. Group (2-4 people)--exchange in information with overall summary or conclusion presented in format usable by class (e.g., dittoed outline, informal class discussion, skit)

Additional Methods

1. Read optional assignment to help expand range of reading experiences about societies other than U.S. |
2. Redefine concepts in own words |
3. Draw generalizations from facts at hand |
4. Think through examples illustrating personal norms vs. actual behaviors |
5. Find examples from ads illustrating normative portrayals of "the" U.S. family |
6. Draw upon data at hand to describe or explain limits to generalizing on the basis of broad categories or idealizations |
7. Compare ads with known variations from the ideal |
8. Orally or in writing, describe or explain weaknesses in generalization processes |
9. Participate in role playing--take the part of Mexican college students from various classes medias interviewing various middle class U.S. college students to find out their perceptions of social classes and ideal family statuses and roles within these classes.
Factors Associated with Mexican Identification

I. Analysis of Caste-Class Factors

A. Problems analyzing caste and class

1. Statistics not systematically collected 2. Distinctions between caste and class unclear
   a. Criteria not consistent (e.g., physical features, socio-economics, linguistics, nationality)
   b. Boundaries between and within caste--class categories not clearly isolatable
   c. Categorizations used in literature, incorporated into folk categories
   d. Perceptual differences associated with folk classification processes

B. Caste categories--commonly used in literature

1. Spanish (both in the literature and general speech, equated with "old aristocracy" class)
2. Mexican
   a. Focus of modern literature and art forms--search for psychological and social identity
   b. Incorporation of
      1) Mestizo (used synonymously for Mexican)
      2) Spanish - Indian ancestry
         a) Behavior patterns compatible with urbanization and industrialization b) Minimum education-primary school
      3) Mestizo-European (new subcategory) see a) and b) above
      4) Creole (Spanish-Black ancestry) see a) and b) above

3. Indian
   a. Bases of caste assignment
      1) Physical appearance
      2) Language-non-Spanish
      3) Socio-economic patterns such as:
         a) education, occupations, wealth, residences, dress
      b. Lowest caste, least vertical mobility, equated with lowest ranked class
C. Classes

1. \textit{Alta sociedad} (folk category)

   a. \textit{Clase alta por abolengo}

      1) Material cues

         a) Live in major cities (Mexico, Guadalajara, Monterrey), have summer and resort houses

         b) Houses—old mansions

            (1) Plumbing and electricity in various degrees of modernness

            (2) Tiled kitchen and baths, modern fixtures

            (3) Formal sitting and dining rooms

            (4) Victorian or modern furniture mixed with antiques

            (5) Silver and china service

         c) Servants—several—trained in formal serving and international cuisine

         d) Mercedes Benz cars

         e) Dress—modern, British made, conservative

   2) Nonmaterial cues

      a) Education

         (1) Private schools

         (2) University Mexico, College Mexico, Europe and U.S. for postgraduate work

      b) Social behaviors—stress on courtesy, finesse and lack of ostentation

      c) Recreation

         (1) Nonpublic—family centered

         (2) Restauranting with family, fictive kin (e.g., Godparents) friends

         (3) Theaters—especially afternoons for females

      d) Club membership

         (1) Auto

         (2) Country

         (3) Golf

         (4) Tennis (new)

   b. \textit{Mozzou Riche} (borrowed term—"new rich") emulate aristocracy

      1) Material cues

         a) Live in new large houses in newer areas of cities and have summer houses
b) Emulate European materialism

2) Nonmaterial cues
   a) Linguistic--most derogatory of classes toward "lower" classes
   b) Social club membership
      (1) Golf (3) Rotary (2) Lions (4) Tennis (new)

2. Middle class--(nonfolk category used in literature)
   a. General information
      1) Least studied
      2) Most complex, diverse, heterogeneous and flexible, therefore, valid generalizations difficult 3) Membership based on a) "Race - Caste" concepts (Mestizo, Mestizo-European and Creole)
         b) Occupations
            (1) Managerial--government and private
            (2) Proprietorship--land or business (3) Skilled crafts or technological (4) Self-employed professional
               (a) Traditional--highly valued professions
                  (1) M.D., law, business management, dentistry
                  (2) Clase media pobre and Los Pobres--regard above professions associated with alta sociedad
               (b) New prestige occupations--engineering
   b. Folk categories
      1) Clase media acomodada ("comfortable") emulate Nourou Riche
         a) Material cues
            (1) Large modern houses or condominiums throughout cities (especially southern part Mexico City), but not in areas of alta sociedad or los pobres
            (2) Expensive and modern furniture, fixtures, appliances, clothes, cars
            (3) Luxury items (especially transistorized sound equipment from U.S. and Europe Maids
International cuisine and prepared foods

b) Nonmaterial cues

(1) Private school education
(2) Social, church and civic club membership (a) Lions   (c) Chess   (e) Knights of (b) Rotary   (d) Shooting   Columbus

(3) Recreation
   (a) Family oriented (e.g., birthdays, anniversaries)
   (b) Movies, T.V., reading

2) Clase media sin dinero ("educated but not wealthy") emulates clase acomodada

   a) Material cues
      (1) Live in small houses or apartments throughout cities
      (2) Modern furniture and fixtures--locally produced
      (3) Cars
      (4) Modern dress and cleanliness--highly valued

   b) Nonmaterial cues
      (1) Occupations--any nonmanual labor
      (2) Education, especially private--viewed as critical for vertical mobility
      (3) Multiple working members--including females before marriage
      (4) Club membership--most fearful of losing rank
      (5) Support government efforts raise living standards

3) Clase media pobre--(emulates class above it)

   a) Material cues
      (1) Pseudo modern houses or apartments throughout cities
      (2) Material goods--symbol success
      (3) Public dress important

   b) Nonmaterial cues
      (1) Occupations
          (a) Small entrepreneurs
          (b) Skilled laborers
          (c) Low paying salaried
(2) Education--highly valued but can afford public education only

(3) Recreation--family oriented

(a) Public sports events
(b) Strolls, family treats (e.g., ice cream, snacks)

c) Self-perception--as do clase media sin dinero and clase acomoda--label selves "pillars of society" and people with "cultura i educacion"

4) Clase sin cultura i educacion--derogatory label used by all above classes for any class not demonstrating social and material cues regarded as expected, in good taste or moral

3. Los pobres, clase trabajadora, clase humilde ("the poor," "working class," "humble class") U.S. label "lower class" considered by speakers and in literature as debasing

a. General information

1) Emulates clase media pobre to extent possible
2) Composed of Indian caste almost exclusively
3) Health sustained by government subsidized medical care and basic traditional foods--cornmeal and beans 4) Infraclass ranking on bases of a) Education--limited to elementary schools

b) Ownership of business or specialized tools
c) Special training--especially in tool use

b. Material cues

1) Rented room(s) in large buildings or squatters' huts throughout cities--characterized by a) Insufficient light, ventilation, space

b) Minimal furnishings, fixtures, appliances
c) Presence of birds and potted plants

2) Dress

a) Stress on neatness and modernness--especially in public
b) Shoes and stockings for adults--especially women
c) Combination western and "traditional" dress

   (1) Men--cotton pants and shirts, cowboy hats
   (2) Women--cotton dress and apron, braided hair
   (3) Children--cast-off clothing, barefooted
3) Occupations--based on small entrepreneurship, low paying salaries, manual labor, services

4) Recreation--family oriented

   a) Public events
   b) Parks with local treats purchased from street vendors or market stalls

   c. Upper mobility limited to class sin cultura i educacion

D. Conclusions

1. Mexican social structure analyzable within its own context only
2. Class distinctions complex and related to physical, social and economic factors
3. Interclass mobility limited yet each class emulates cues of 4. Alta sociedad--Old World oriented
5. "Clases medias"--searching for a national identity providing self-perception--compatible with the normative expectations of a powerful, industrialized nation
6. Intraclass recognition dependent upon contacts, money, education, occupations, club membership and social behavioral cues

II. Analysis of Community Factors

A. Cities

1. Per Mexican definition--city-areas with 2,000 or more people
2. Government efforts now to decentralize services, bureaucracies, industries
3. Mexico City

   a. Still focus for all major political activities and influences, education, jobs, goods, services
   b. More seven times larger than Guadalajara
   c. Guadalajara and Monterrey only other major cities

4. Contrary to generalization that city life leads to break up family

   a) Family

      (1) Selected from family or kin members
      (2) Religious support for psychological, social and economically mutually binding relationships

   b) Nuclear family plus ritual Godparents--base for social economic interactions III. Analysis of Family Factors

A. Problems

1. Extensive variations in sizes, types, patterns of interpersonal interactions or value systems even within single folk category make generalizations about "the Mexican family" invalid

2. No systematic, comparative nor statistically reliable studies

3. Data in this outline
   a. Synthesize from limited and noncomparable sources (e.g., sociological- anthropological studies; popular fiction, slogans, songs, government publications)
   b. Stress
      1) Idealized patterns (norms) rather than actual--i.e., statistically supportable) patterns (modes)
      2) Relationship between urbanization and families as social units
      3) Affects of urbanization--on families in the clase media acomodada, clase media in dinero and clase media pobre.

B. Current Patterns

1. Normative and modal consistency

   a. Nuclear families
   b. Close intrafamily moral, economic, social bonds
   c. Importance of obedience and respect for elders
   d. Retention of family honor in personal behaviors
   e. Individual and group socialization processes--responsibilities of nuclear family plus real and ritual kin

2. Processes reinforcing normative patterns

   a. Commercial and political ads or slogans
   b. Inflation rates requiring joint incomes
   c. Employment and loan practices based on nepotism
   d. Informal social pressures for conformity to ideals
   e. Religious myths and ceremonies

      1) Holy family--model for family interrelationships
      2) Virgin Guadalupe--silent, suffering, giving mother holding her loved ones together
      3) Compadrazco system--fictive (ritual) kin acting as extension of family rather than socio-economic class, business or peer associations

3. Relationship urbanization--industrialization and family units

   a. No significantly measurable changes in normative nor modal family roles
b. Except for \textit{class media acomodada} professionals, no social category changing faster than any other

c. \textit{Class media acomodada} females most active in women's liberation movements for changes in

1) Psychological social, economic perception of females
2) Rights to publicly accompany spouses in public places

d. Age at time marriage associated with

1) Amount of education
2) Economic factors
3) Family obligations

e. Number of children not perceived especially by males as associated with income, occupation, age nor community

C. Statuses and roles in family context

1. Age status

   a. Elders

   1) Ideal roles to be acted out by elders

      a) Source of open generous affection
      b) Source of informal joking relationships with youngsters
      c) Source discipline of youngsters
      d) Intermediaries between parents and children

   2) Ideal roles elders expect from other family members

      a) Obedience and respect
      b) Financial security
      c) Inclusion in decision making--at least

   b. Adults--(parenthood socially defines adulthood)

      1) Protect family honor
      2) Provide financial and psychological security for elders
      3) Provide moral model for children

   c. Children

      1) Older

      a) Provide model for younger children
      b) Help in routine chores of caring for younger
      c) Support parents financially and socially

      2) Younger

      a) Incorporated into adult conversations
b) Very young—(preschool)—center of attention and affection

2. Sex statuses
   a. Female
      1) General roles
         a) Instrument and repository for class and family values—such as femininity and innocence
         b) Perservering unselfish provider of warmth and support
         c) Alter ego for male
         d) Aid for elders, parents, younger siblings
      2) Family associated statuses and roles
         a) Mother
            1) Socializer of children
            2) Model for children
            3) Hub of activities in house
            4) Enduring support—especially for daughters
         b) Wife
            1) Silent and perservering "reflection of male's will"
            2) Reserved, decent, pure under all circumstances
            3) Responsive to husband—sexually, psychologically and socially
            4) Wants subordinate to those of husband and children.
      3) Stereotypes
         a) Per males (female self stereotypes concur with males')
            1) General
               a) Emotional
               b) Easily disturbed or distracted c) Potentially destructive or uncontrollable
               d) Less logical rational and intelligent than men
               e) Extension of male 2) Positive attributes to seek in wife a) Faithfulness and chastity
               b) Good mother
               c) Content with home life
               d) Good health
               e) Neatness
f) Agreeable personality
g) Piety
h) Western standards beauty (slim, attractive light skin

3) Negative attributes
a) Aggressiveness
b) Independence

b) Per literature and paintings
1) Long and silent suffering mother figure 2) Perservering and enduring interpersonal relationships

b. Male

1) General roles
a) Source for economic security and decision making
b) Aloof autocrat
c) Container of worldly knowledge and authority
