ABSTRACT: The purposes of this directory are to provide a ready reference for individuals and organizations with rural interests; to provide a sense of perspective on the various professions, ethnic groups, and special concerns represented by national organizations with rural interests; and to facilitate cooperation among organizations with similar priorities. Each organizational entry (N=approximately 130 entries) is coded according to lobbying, membership, research, and/or service categories, and the code(s) appear at the bottom of each entry and in the index at the back of the directory. Each entry includes: organizational name and address; contact person's name and phone number; a brief description of the organization including membership, staff, and other relevant statistics; and organizational publications. Information regarding these organizations is drawn from a number of individuals and a few published sources including; the Encyclopedia of Associations, Volume I, tenth edition, Margaret Fisk, Editor; Who's Involved with Hunger: An Organization Guide, Patricia L. Kutzner and Timothy X. Sullivan, Editors; and the Research Centers Directory, fifth edition, Archie M. Palmer, Editor. (JC)
ABOUT THE NATIONAL RURAL CENTER . . .

The National Rural Center (NRC), which opened in March, 1976, is an independent, non-profit organization created to develop policy alternatives and to provide information to help rural people and their communities. The well-being of rural poor people is a principal concern of the NRC. The NRC also is committed to the proposition that all people should have a real choice in deciding where they want to live and a chance for a decent life in the community they choose.

Through its policy development and information programs, the NRC seeks better ways for people in rural areas to voice their concerns and desires, to shape policies affecting them and to gain access to federal agencies and private organizations. It seeks, also, to build public awareness of the mutual interests rural and urban dwellers have in solving rural problems.

A major component of the NRC is the National Rural Information Center. The Information Center maintains a specialized library of research and data on rural affairs, including Congressional and Executive-branch documents. Its computerized information retrieval system enables the staff to respond to requests for bibliographic information and other data on a wide range of rural-related issues. As a clearinghouse, the Information Center helps state and local officials, community organizations, and individuals with rural concerns gain access to government and private organizations which can provide financial or technical assistance relating to community development and revitalization programs.

ABOUT THE DIRECTORY OF RURAL ORGANIZATIONS...

...One of the first tasks of the National Rural Center was to call together representatives from a number of national organizations for a series of briefings and an exchange of ideas about rural concerns and the specific mission of the National Rural Center. At that time a number of representatives expressed the need for more complete information in regard to organizations and agencies interested in rural development and revitalization. In response to that request, the NRC has prepared this directory of major national organizations involved in various aspects of rural development and policies.

The purposes of this directory are varied: to provide a ready reference for individuals and organizations with rural interests; to provide a sense of perspective on the various professions, ethnic groups, and special concerns represented by national organizations with rural interests; and to facilitate cooperation among organizations with similar priorities.

Each organization has been coded according to these categories:

- Lobbying (L)
- Membership (M)
- Research (R)
- Service (S)

The code appears at the bottom of each entry and at the index at the back of the directory.

The loose-leaf format was chosen because the NRC plans to supply periodic updates, and new sections which might include lists of rural-interest foundations and federal/regional contacts.

Although the goal was to develop a reasonably comprehensive listing of major national organizations involved in rural affairs, omissions are almost inevitable. It is hoped that omissions and any errors will be brought to the attention of the National Rural Center for future updating.

This brochure was prepared and printed with funds from a grant by the Department of Commerce Economic Development Administration's Technical Assistance program. The material is the result of a tax-supported program and as such is not copyrightable. It may be freely reprinted with the customary crediting of the source.
