This third volume of a three-volume final report contains appendixes related to the 3-year project to design, develop, and implement a comprehensive delivery system to meet the career-related information, guidance, and referral needs of home-based adults, those 16 and older neither working nor attending school on a full-time basis. Appendix A describes the project manuals, independent products, and films. Appendix B is comprised of data collection instruments used by the project, and appendix C presents the various occupational classification systems used in the analysis. (Volume 1 of the final report covers the nature, context, and products of the model. Volume 2 presents research and evaluation findings, with primary focus on home-based adults who used the career counseling service.) (TA)

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This final report documents four years of intensive effort related to the development, implementation, and evaluation of the Career Education Project. While the responsibility for its contents rests with the principal authors, we want to take this opportunity to thank the many Project staff members whose dedication and hard work made the Career Education Project a reality. Without them, this report would not be possible.

We especially want to thank Diane Disney for her valuable substantive and editorial contributions, Peggy Gardner for her documentation of the Project's community efforts, Dennis Angelini and John Murphy for their important research contributions, William Dale and Nancy Tobin for their critical review of draft materials, and Angela Daskalos and Virginia Bradberry for typing the final report.

INTRODUCTION

Nature and Characteristics of the Model

The Career Education Project, the National Institute of Education's Home/Community-Based Career Education Model III, designed, developed, and implemented a comprehensive delivery system to meet the career-related information, guidance, and referral needs of home-based adults, those 16 and older neither working nor attending school on a full-time basis. Located in Providence, Rhode Island, since October, 1972, the Project has served over 6,000 adults representing a wide range of employment histories, educational backgrounds and career aspirations. Despite their diversity, many shared similar needs:

- a better understanding of their interests, abilities, values, and goals
- facts about career trends, opportunities, and requirements
- information about the available educational and skill-training opportunities
- information about sources of help in such career-related problem areas as financial support, discrimination, child care, and testing
- help in developing and implementing career plans

Activities of the Career Education Project were designed to respond to client needs and were carried out by a staff organized into five highly interrelated components. Outreach, using mass media and other approaches attracted clients; Counseling provided career information, guidance, and referral by telephone using paraprofessional counselors;
the Resource Center collected and disseminated career-related materials for Project staff, clients, and the community; the Information Unit developed special directories and materials which supported the counseling process and could be sent to clients; and Research and Evaluation provided Project staff with feedback about the clients and the operation of the program.

After the research and development phase, Project staff facilitated local implementation of the Model in Rhode Island through the provision of technical assistance. In order to share its experiences nationally, the Project developed and disseminated a series of "how-to" manuals and client-centered publications for review and reaction by interested professionals. In addition, staff attended and made presentations at a number of professional conferences and conventions.

The Career Education Project was guided by a number of important assumptions about and principles related to adult career development and effective service delivery. First, people are often unaware of the nature and existence of community services which are available to them. In order to respond to this problem, a service should develop a coordinated outreach strategy which informs people of the nature and availability of the service, interests them in using it, and establishes a presence in the community.

Second, people often find it difficult or inconvenient to use services that are remote from their homes, schools, or places of employment. Problems of time, transportation, and scheduling often are major obstacles to the utilization of services, even when people are aware of their availability. This seems to be especially true for people who have not yet made a commitment to use such services, but are primarily interested in exploring the possibility of getting involved. A service should be convenient and easily accessible to its clients. A promising alternative is to attempt in as many ways as possible to bring the service providers to the users rather than ask users to come to them. The use of the telephone is one excellent method for achieving this goal.

Third, people need a better understanding of their personal characteristics and qualities as they make decisions and attempt to cope with the realities of life. However, raising questions about "Who am I?" may arouse feelings of uncertainty and anxiety, particularly for adults and those who have experienced a history of failure or frustration. Often, people feel more comfortable and willing to discuss their ideas and feelings with peers or persons with whom they can readily identify. It is increasingly well accepted that many kinds of social services can be delivered effectively by paraprofessionals, provided that the necessary support mechanisms exist. These mechanisms should include training and supervision by skilled professionals, clear identification of knowledge and skill requirements to function effectively on the job, and training programs that are explicit, relevant, and performance-based.

Fourth, people need reliable, up-to-date, and localized information if they are to make informed plans and decisions about their lives. Despite their experiences, adults often are not aware of the options available to them, uncertain of the factors to consider when examining alternatives, and need specific information about the many institutions, services, and agencies that exist in their communities. Because people are frequently unclear about the relationship between education, work, personal characteristics, and constraints. They sometimes ignore the fact that career development often involves dealing with problems related to self-concept, life style, relationships to family and community, and many other factors. An effective service should identify major informational needs, determine the existence or adequacy of existing resource materials, and when necessary, create new materials that are comprehensive, targeted to the specific client groups, and useful to both clients and service providers.

Fifth, people need to feel a sense of psychological safety in order to talk about themselves and their concerns. They need to feel that their views and reactions are being solicited and heard by those who provide them with service. Because users often approach service providers feeling uncertain or vulnerable, the service should train its staff in interpersonal communication skills and continually assess their competency in these important areas. These skills, such as question-asking, probing techniques, paraphrasing and summarizing, and responding to affective and cognitive needs, can be defined and taught systematically.

Sixth, services should be able to provide assistance without making clients dependent. People derive a greater sense of internal control over their lives when they are taught to help themselves, rather than to expect that someone else will assume responsibility for their plans and decisions. However, at certain times, people do require advocates who can speak more forcefully for them or with them as they meet institutional or personal obstacles. A service must be flexible enough to include brief information-giving as well as sustained relationships over time.
Finally, in the process of helping people, a service should actively learn about the target population, the results of its efforts, and the reactions of the people who are served. Therefore, a management information system is necessary to inform staff about who uses the service, how services are being delivered, what happens to use the service, and how users view the adequacy of the service in meeting their needs.

Organization of the Final Report

This final report is organized in three volumes. Volume I begins with a brief history of the Model, tracing the Project's evolution through various stages of development and describing major events related to the process of planning, operating, and evaluating the program. The next section describes the major activities and accomplishments of each of the Model's five major components: Outreach, Counseling, Resource Center, Information Unit, and Research and Evaluation. The following section on the Rhode Island community describes the characteristics of the pilot site and how the Project interacted with the community, including the Project's role in local adaptation after the research and development phase. The final section of Volume I discusses the Project's efforts to share its experiences and findings with potential adaptors of the Model and other interested persons outside Rhode Island.

Volume II presents the Project's research and evaluation findings, with primary focus on home-based adults who used the Career Counseling Service. Section two details the demographic characteristics of 2979 home-based adults who called the Service between August 8, 1973 and March 31, 1975, and examines the extent to which the nature of the callers changed over time. It presents data regarding how people learned of the Service, the relative drawing power of various outreach modes over time, and the relationship between types of outreach mode and the characteristics of callers. Section three answers the question "What are people like when they enter the Service?" It discusses the characteristics of 1157 home-based clients (home-based adults who spoke one or more times with a counselor) who used the Service between March 4, 1974 and March 31, 1975. Demographic data are presented for all clients as well as for subsets of the client population. Clients are also described in terms of their initial career objectives, thoughts about education and training, previous educational and work experiences, and constraints to be resolved. This section also explores the relationship between information collected by counselors during the initial counseling interviews and selected demographic characteristics of clients.

Section four presents data related to the nature and extent of activities engaged in by counselors and clients during the process of counseling. Specific aspects of the counseling process discussed in this section include the number of interviews; major issues, occupations, and constraints discussed in counseling; resource materials used by counselors and clients; and referrals to educational and training resources and supportive services. In addition, this section examines the relationship between selected counseling process variables and client characteristics.

Section five examines the clients' career status at termination. The career decisions and actions of clients are described in terms of Education and Training (ETR)-related outcomes, Job-related outcomes, and decisions not to enter an ETR or the world of work. This section also analyzes the relationship of client characteristics and counseling process variables to status at termination. Further, this section reports on clients' career objectives at termination, their unresolved constraints, and their immediate school and job plans.

Section six describes how clients reacted to and evaluated the services they received from the Project. Data are based on 831 clients who were interviewed by staff of the Project's research and evaluation component between one and seven weeks after their termination from the Service. In addition, this section examines the relationship of selected client characteristics, counseling process variables, and status at termination to client evaluation variables.

Section seven deals with utilization of the Resource Center. The principal analysis is based on 268 non-institutional visitors who used the Center in 1974. This section reports on who they were, their occupational and educational interests and plans, the materials they used, and their evaluation of the helpfulness of the materials and the Center.

The final section of Volume II lets the clients speak for themselves. It is a presentation of information collected during in-depth interviews with forty former clients conducted by Project staff in 1975. This section presents the thoughts, feelings, and actions of clients before they entered the Service, while they were participating in the Service, and after they left the Service.

Volume III consists of three appendices. Appendix A describes the Project manuals, independent products, and films. Appendix B is comprised of data collection instruments used by the Project, and Appendix C presents the various occupational classification systems used in the analyses.
APPENDIX A

DESCRIPTION OF PROJECT MANUALS, PRODUCTS, AND FILMS
PROTOTYPE MANUALS

In order to obtain feedback and to help others interested in creating a similar program, the Career Education Project produced experimental editions of a series of five manuals, each describing ways to plan, establish, and operate one of the Project's major components. The series as a whole was designed to show how to plan, establish, and operate a comprehensive career counseling service for adults. However, individual manuals could be used independently by a wide variety of audiences.

ATTRACTING CLIENTS TO SERVICE-ORIENTED PROGRAMS

PURPOSES

- To describe methods and techniques to attract clients to an adult career counseling service
- To describe ways to attract clients to any service-oriented program economically
- To share the Career Education Project's Outreach experiences with potential adopters of the service
- To serve as a prototype manual about which the Project can gain insight and feedback from other practitioners

SUMMARY

As its title suggests, this manual can be used by any service-oriented program needing to attract clients. In addition to discussing the principles and issues involved in both public service and commercial advertising, it explains the methods and procedures used by the Project; provides samples of the advertisements, commercials, brochures, and other materials produced here; discusses the staff, skills, and materials required to attract clients; and suggests ways in which others can profit from the Project's activities.

The first part of this manual stresses the importance of adequate preparation before recruitment or advertising efforts begin. This section deals with the need to define the service, the audience, and the advertising outlets; determine the budget; and prepare to evaluate effectiveness. The manual then discusses specific ways to use information from these initial activities to create a unified campaign. It also deals with the use of advertising agencies and other outside sources of help.

The major part of the manual concerns the creation of products for the mass media: television, radio, and the press. In addition to presenting the advantages and limitations of each of these types of advertising, the manual provides guidelines for creating each type of mass media product and describes those techniques used by this Project. There is then a discussion of ways to distribute television and radio spots, place newspaper ads and articles, and arrange for guest appearances on radio and television shows.

Reinforcing the message is the theme of the next section, which first discusses using a variety of collateral products and techniques, such as brochures, posters, exhibits, and a telephone canvass. It then deals with the need for creating general community acceptance of a program and presents suggestions about implementing a community information program.

The final segment focuses on staffing an advertising component. Here, as in all the other sections, an emphasis is placed on economic considerations, in view of the minimal budgets available to most service-oriented programs.
DESIGNING AND OPERATING A CAREER COUNSELING SERVICE FOR ADULTS

PURPOSES

- To describe the principles and issues involved in designing and operating a career counseling service for adults
- To explain the methods and procedures used and evaluated by the Career Education Project's Counseling component
- To describe the staff, skills, and materials necessary to have paraprofessionals provide career counseling by telephone
- To serve as a prototype manual about which the Project can gain insight and feedback from other practitioners

SUMMARY

Focusing on the Project's Counseling component, this manual deals with the design and operation of a telephone career counseling service using paraprofessional counselors who are supervised by professionals. After a brief description of some of the factors involved in planning such a service, the manual discusses the Service's design, including (1) an overall model of service-client interaction; (2) methods for use in intake and initial counseling interviews; (3) a supervisor-counselor-client process for identifying client needs and counseling issues; (4) specific counseling procedures used in responding to client needs; and (5) methods for termination and follow-up of clients.

The manual then discusses the recruitment and selection of paraprofessional counselors, identifying a variety of criteria for selection and providing guidelines for use in interviewing applicants and making selection decisions. A section on the Project's approach to training and supervision briefly presents the training model employed and illustrative training objectives.
In dealing with the nature and use of career-related resource materials in counseling, the next section provides summary description of a number of specific materials and directories developed by Project staff and used by counselors and clients.

The final section concerns record-keeping and data collection procedures and covers such related matters as methods of scheduling counseling interviews, storing client records, and collecting information at various stages of the counseling process.

ESTABLISHING AND OPERATING A CAREER RESOURCE CENTER FOR ADULTS

PURPOSES

- To describe the principles and practices involved in planning, establishing, and operating a resource center of career-related materials for adults
- To share the Career Education Project's experiences with others interested in developing or expanding a reference library of career-related materials
- To serve as a prototype manual about which the Project can gain insight and feedback from other practitioners

SUMMARY

This manual offers specific guidelines to those interested in establishing or expanding a resource center of career-related materials for adults as an adjunct to a career counseling service. On a broader scale, it offers suggestions about creating and operating any type of resource center or reference library by addressing several areas of general concern.

The first section of this manual stresses the importance of determining who will be using the collection and what types of materials they will need. It then discusses the available sources from which to acquire the necessary materials: computerized information sources, federal agencies and publications, state and local agencies, periodicals, pamphlets, catalogues, and books.

The manual also indicates how the operating practices should be designed to accommodate the ways in which the clients, staff, and general public will be using the collection. This leads to a discussion of staff requirements and procedures for ordering; record-keeping; determining space, furnishing, and equipment needs; cataloguing and classifying materials; and disseminating and circulating parts of the collection. In each instance, the manual addresses these considerations in terms of the methods and procedures used by the Career Education Project's Resource Center. But it also offers suggestions for possibly adapting the procedures for other situations.

Detailed appendices to the manual's text provide ordering sources for free and inexpensive occupational information, a list of books most frequently used by visitors to the Project's Resource Center, and a partially annotated list of the over 120 periodicals to which the Resource Center subscribes.

DEVELOPING CAREER-RELATED MATERIALS FOR USE WITH AND BY ADULTS

PURPOSES

- To describe the principles, formats, and procedures used to create the Career Education Project's curriculum materials for use with and by its adult clients
- To discuss procedures for adapting or replicating the Project's career-related products
- To serve as a prototype manual about which the Project can gain insight and feedback from other practitioners

SUMMARY

This manual describes the activities and production of the Project's Information Unit, the component charged with the development and presentation in useful formats of an information base about local educational, training, and supportive resources and developing career-related materials for use with and by the clients.

After discussing the rationale for the Information Unit, the manual briefly deals with the processes and guidelines used to create the materials. It then provides an overview of the contents and uses of the Unit's three major directories (Educational and Training Resources, Supportive Services, and Occupational Projections) and four instructional pieces (The Career Development Series, Women and the World of Work, From Liberal Arts and Sciences to Careers: A Guide, and External Degree Study: A New Route to Careers). It also explains how these seven can be used together to form a career education curriculum and presents suggestions for adaptation of the materials for use in other settings.

Because the directories required such specialized formats and research techniques, the rest of the manual is devoted to the steps in their development. First, the manual discusses ways to gather, organize, and present data on occupational projections, and mentions the limitations of such data. The next section focuses on developing a Directory of Educational and Training Resources which relates education and training to careers. This section provides detailed guidelines for gathering, organizing, classifying, displaying, and updating the appropriate information. The same type of information is then provided for a Directory of Supportive Services, as well as for a card index system to the latter two directories.
Sample format pages and data collection instruments are included for all three directories.

INTEGRATING RESEARCH AND EVALUATION INTO THE OPERATION OF SERVICE-ORIENTED PROGRAMS

PURPOSES

- To describe the principles and issues involved in integrating research and evaluation into the operation of service-oriented programs
- To discuss the procedures and formats employed by the Research and Evaluation component of the Career Education Project
- To provide guidelines and materials for use or adaptation by evaluators or human service administrators
- To serve as a prototype manual about which the Project can gain insight and feedback from other practitioners

SUMMARY

Experience has shown that when research and evaluation are incorporated into a service-oriented program, a number of difficulties generally arise that can adversely affect the delivery of the service, limit the usefulness of the evaluation, or both. Decision-makers, whether they be funders, administrators, staff, or evaluators, therefore, need to be made more aware of the issues and problems that arise when evaluation is interfaced with a service program. This manual attempts to increase that awareness by presenting a model in which research and evaluation have been integrated into the operation of an ongoing service program.

The manual discusses each research and evaluation activity of the Career Education Project in relation to the program's evolution, and associates the issues and problems of evaluation with the Project's response to each through its processes and products. The process discussion includes the various types of research activities (needs assessment; goal definition; research design; data collection, processing, and analysis; and information dissemination) and the interactions among coworkers. The products described include data collection instruments, coding formats, and other documents. Numerous samples of these products are also included.

The manual further discusses the skills and abilities necessary for a research and evaluation staff to perform effectively within a service-oriented program, and presents some suggestions for alternative approaches for other programs.

INDEPENDENT PRODUCTS

WOMEN AND THE WORLD OF WORK

PURPOSES

- To provide an overview of the present state of women in the world, the problems they face, and the socio-cultural factors that explain their present position
- To discuss nontraditional career opportunities for women
- To provide a career planning approach for use with and by women
- To serve as a prototype booklet about which the Project can gain insight and feedback from other practitioners

SUMMARY

During the past two and a half years, the Career Education Project has concentrated much of its effort on providing information, guidance, and referrals to an often neglected group needing special assistance with career plans: women who are not yet in the full-time labor force. Not only do these women face the usual pressures of acquiring skills, choosing a career, and finding a job; but they also face the additional obstacles of sex stereotyping, discrimination in hiring and advancement, societal pressures to remain in the home as wives and mothers, and the absence of sources of unbiased career information and guidance.

Although the Project has been able to help thousands of such women cope with these problems, millions more remain throughout the country. Women and the World of Work has been prepared to assist those who are involved in helping women with their career development, as well as to help the career-concerned women themselves.

This product provides an analysis of the state of women in today's work world, examines their options, and presents some practical suggestions for action to overcome obstacles in planning for and implementing career decisions. Focusing on the concerns of women who seek to begin or resume a career, it specifically addresses those problem areas which the Project's clients and counselors have most frequently confronted, issues which face most women in their career development.

After profiling today's working woman and examining the impact of sex stereotyping on her life, the product discusses non-traditional career opportunities in a variety of areas. It then discusses ways a woman can progress by taking stock of herself, learning about the world of work, finding appropriate training to prepare for a career, and then proceeding to enter the work world. Sample resumes, application forms, and interview questions are included as illustrations. The next section deals with methods of coping with such problems as fears, doubts, child care responsibilities, financial need, and illegal discrimination.
This is followed by a discussion of attitudinal, societal, employment, and legal changes which are beginning to alter the position of women in the work world. Finally, a detailed appendix summarizes recent laws and executive orders relating to working women.

THE CAREER DEVELOPMENT SERIES

PURPOSES

- To introduce and explain the basic steps in career development: self-assessment, exploring the world of work, finding appropriate training, dealing with obstacles, and conducting a job search
- To provide a career planning guide for use with and by adults
- To serve as a prototype booklet about which the Project can gain insight and feedback from other practitioners

SUMMARY

During the past two years, the Career Education Project has produced a series of career-related booklets for use with and by adult clients. Every person scheduled for counseling has been sent the introductory booklet prior to the first counseling session. The other booklets have been used by the counselors during the counseling process and, when appropriate, sent to the clients for additional information or reinforcement. This product, a single-volume adaptation of that series, contains information and practical suggestions on several major areas of career development, with each section also including a short listing of other materials to consult for further information.

The first section of this booklet presents an overview of the career development process and provides suggestions as to how people can locate sources of help for developing their own careers. The next section, on self-assessment, describes the importance of learning about oneself and suggests techniques to use in defining one's interests, abilities, values, and goals. This leads into sections on exploring the world of work and finding the appropriate training. The fifth section is devoted to identifying and dealing with such problems as meeting educational expenses, locating child and adult care, overcoming doubts and pressures, and coping with illegal practices, especially discrimination and educational "rip-offs." The final segment concerns the job search, particularly job-hunting techniques, presenting qualifications in writing, and the interview. It includes sample resumes, cover letters, application forms, and interview questions.

This booklet is being produced with the understanding that career development is a process unique to each individual, with no two people facing the same issues at the same time or in the same way. Therefore, the booklet is designed so that a person can use any part of it as his or her needs dictate.

FROM LIBERAL ARTS AND SCIENCES TO CAREERS: A GUIDE

PURPOSES

- To provide an overview of the problems liberal arts and sciences graduates face in the labor market
- To illustrate ways in which a liberal arts and sciences program can be adequate preparation for many careers
- To introduce career planning approaches to an LAS education
- To provide possible career options for LAS graduates
- To serve as a prototype booklet about which the Project can gain insight and feedback from other practitioners

SUMMARY

Designed to assist people who have been considering, engaged in, or graduated from programs in the liberal arts and sciences (LAS), this booklet is based on the concept of identifying and developing competencies—what people know and can do as the result of their study and experiences. This approach suggests that students can develop skills which are applicable to a wide spectrum of careers while studying an arts or sciences discipline.

The booklet briefly discusses how the general state of the labor market and a lack of career planning skills have resulted in unemployment, underemployment, and relatively low earnings for LAS graduates generally and special additional problems for women and minorities. It then concentrates on ways of coming to grips with this situation.

The first step it discusses is finding a career focus. This section includes suggestions on self-assessment and learning about occupations. This is followed by a section on developing a plan of action, with particular hints for prospective and current LAS students and for LAS graduates. The booklet then deals with ways of acquiring skills and knowledge after graduation through graduate schooling, professional training, non-degree study, and other methods.

The remaining third of the booklet is concerned with the job search. After dealing with a number of ways to locate a job opening, the booklet discusses ways to answer a lead and to present one's qualifications through the resume, the application form, and the interview.

To illustrate various concepts, the booklet includes sample letters and resumes, charts of possible career options for liberal arts majors, and a chart suggesting ways LAS students can plan their course of study to acquire particular competencies.

EXTERNAL DEGREE STUDY: A NEW ROUTE TO CAREERS

PURPOSES

- To familiarize adults with external degree study as a non-traditional form of education
- To help adults determine whether or not external degree study will meet their career needs
- To help readers select an external degree program appropriate for their needs
- To illustrate ways in which external degree study programs can be designed to meet career objectives
- To provide a listing of major external degree programs in the United States
- To serve as a prototype booklet about which the Project can gain insight and feedback from other practitioners

SUMMARY

This booklet has been designed for people who are considering a college education for career preparation but who find it difficult or impossible to participate in a traditional campus-bound college program. As its title indicates, the booklet discusses external degree study, an alternate form of postsecondary education whereby one can earn college credits for study done at home, on the job, in field work situations, and in part-time courses, as well as by traditional on-campus coursework. Emphasis is placed on what external degree study is and how it can be planned and used for exploring careers, beginning and progressing in a career, and changing career direction.

After defining external degree study, its benefits and limitations, the booklet discusses 13 important points to consider in choosing an external degree program, including objectives and philosophy, assessment of prior learning, residency, curriculum and learning options, and methods of evaluation. It also provides detailed descriptions of nine established external degree programs in New York and New England, along with the names and addresses of other such programs across the country.

The next section provides guidelines for planning a learning experience through assessing prior learning, designing a study plan, and incorporating career goals. Several case studies of present and former external degree students are included to illustrate various ways such study can be arranged. The text concludes with a section on ways to use an external degree to acquire additional skills or to get a job.

Because external degree study is such a relatively new concept, the booklet includes a glossary of commonly used terms in the field. There is also an appendix of eight resource sections covering such topics as further information on external degree study, self-assessment and goal setting for the college student, and locating learning opportunities.

BIBLIOGRAPHIES OF CAREER-RELATED MATERIALS

PURPOSES

- To offer a basis for selecting career-related materials
- To provide a comprehensive listing of the catalogued materials available in the Career Education Project's Resource Center
- To serve as a prototype booklet about which the Project can gain insight and feedback from other practitioners

SUMMARY

For over two years the Career Education Project has maintained a Resource Center of career-related materials for use by the Project's clients, counselors, and other staff members, as well as the general public. This product presents both a shelf collection list and a series of annotated bibliographies of the Resource Center's catalogued collection.

The first section of this booklet presents a complete bibliographic citation for each catalogued publication in the collection. Each citation includes such information as author, title, place and date of publication, publisher, ordering source (if different from publisher), number of pages or volumes, price and type (hardcover or paperback). The approximately 1,400 entries are arranged by library classification numbers, based on the ERIC system. They are supplemented by a subject index which covers over 60 major terms, including adult counseling, career planning, employment projections, testing, financial aid, counselor training, evaluation, occupational information, paraprofessional personnel, working women, minority groups, and educational research. The publications in the list have been acquired from commercial publishers, the ERIC system, private agencies and organizations, conferences and seminars, professional associations, and state, local and federal governments. The list also indicates which items are annotated in the second section of the booklet.

Section Two presents annotated bibliographies of materials in seven major topic areas of the catalogued collection. Four of these categories include materials of use to counselors and clients: financial aid directories, educational and training resources directories, occupational information, and the job search. The other three—counseling, career education, and women—contain materials primarily useful to counseling, educational, and other professionals.
REPORT ON FIFTY SELECTED CENTERS OFFERING CAREER COUNSELING SERVICES FOR WOMEN

PURPOSES

- To provide an overview of centers across the country providing career counseling services to women
- To describe 50 such centers, as well as the Career Education Project, in detail
- To serve as a mechanism for the exchange of information among such centers

SUMMARY

At the Career Education Project, paraprofessional career counselors have been providing information, guidance, and referrals to career-concerned adults for over two and a half years. During this time, the Project has evolved into a unique research and development model consisting of five major components. The core component, Counseling, is supported by three others--Outreach, Information Unit, and Research Center--and the effectiveness of these four is gauged by Research and Evaluation.

As part of the effort to improve this model, the Project has collected and reviewed literature in numerous related fields. Also, in the spring of 1974, the staff conducted a telephone study of 50 selected career counseling centers for women across the country. This product is a report of that study.

The 50 agencies, programs, services, and centers studied were identified from four primary information sources: the U.S. Labor Department's Women's Bureau, the International Association of Counseling Services' Directory, the Catalyst network, and materials collected by the Project's Resource Center. Each of the centers offered career counseling services to at least 30 women a year; none of them had placement as its sole or major purpose. In all, they had a variety of sponsors and fees, and were located in 23 different states and the District of Columbia.

In addition to an overview of the findings, the report provides two-page summary descriptions of each center. The factors covered include the agencies’ origins, organizational structure, budget, sources of support, clientele, staffing, office hours, publicity, objectives, career-related services (such as individual and group counseling, courses, seminars, testing and library facilities), evaluation data, and plans. The report also includes a similar description of the Career Education Project.

PURPOSES

- To identify the components of the Home/Community-Based Career Education Project
- To illustrate the ways these components relate to and reinforce each other to meet clients’ needs,
- To depict the experiences of one client to illustrate the impact of career decision-making on her life

SUMMARY

For over two and a half years, the Career Education Project has been developing and testing ways of meeting the career-related needs of adults. The core of the service has been the use of paraprofessional career counselors to provide information, guidance, and referrals by telephone. Their efforts have been supported by those of a Resource Center which collects and circulates career-related materials, an Information Unit which packages this information in useful formats for clients and counselors, and an Outreach component which informs the public of and attracts clients to the service. A Research and Evaluation unit has continually informed the rest of the staff about the program’s development and described the client’s characteristics, needs, and outcomes.

This 25-minute film, Chris Begins Again, has been produced to illustrate the ways these components relate to and reinforce each other to meet the clients’ needs. In semi-documentary fashion, it traces the current daily activities as student and mother of one of these clients, 30-year-old Christine S. She explains her reasons for contacting the Project and the changes career counseling has helped her make in her life.

For additional perspective, the film provides interviews with her paraprofessional counselor, the Project Director, and the people in charge of the five major components. The film also includes one of the Project’s televised public service spots and shots of the components in action.

Purposes

- To make young people aware of some of the problems and solutions in the search for training for careers

Summary

Many issues are brought out in this film: that women cannot rely on the myth of "happily ever after;" that counseling and career training are available and useful; that it is never too late to begin working toward a career; and that even great obstacles to self-determination can be overcome.
Clorae Prince and Elvernoy (Albie) Holland are friends in their early twenties. They met in Upward Bound, where they describe themselves as having been very "tough" young girls— even ringleaders. Both had been poor students at Cambridge High and Latin, the public high school in this city of 100,000 adjacent to Boston. Both dropped out but their lives have been very different since.

Clorae fell in love with a glamorous jazz musician. They had a big wedding, but it soon became apparent that no support of any kind was coming from this man and Clorae found herself burdened with all the responsibility for the household plus entertaining her husband's friends. They were divorced. Clorae works hard to care for her three young children.

Clorae is getting her high school diploma on a scholarship at Shaw Prep, a private alternative high school. She plans to be a nurse and knows how she will get her training.

When Albie dropped out of school, the jobs she got were boring and ill-paying. She finished her high school work at Shaw Prep and took the SATs. She did very badly, but it happened that Marlboro College in Vermont was trying to recruit black students at that time, and Albie found herself with a scholarship there. She was one of two blacks and found the whole situation very difficult. She stuck it out for two years and learned a lot. Then she came back to Cambridge and again had a series of low-level jobs. Finally, she enrolled in the University of Massachusetts-Boston's new College Three—which emphasizes social and community services. She has her own apartment and earns money to support herself through a research job with the Boston Women's Collective.

APPENDIX C

OCCUPATIONAL CLASSIFICATION SYSTEMS
OCCUPATIONAL CLASSIFICATION SYSTEMS

The two occupational codes discussed in this report are a modified version of Roe's field and level system for classifying occupations and the U.S. Department of Commerce's Classified Index of Occupations, which was used during the 1970 Census.

Roe's Occupational Classification System

The Roe system for classifying occupations is based on two dimensions. The first dimension is the level of functioning related to responsibility, capacity, and skill. Roe has defined six (6) levels: Professional and Managerial I; Professional and Managerial II; Semi-Professional and Small Business; Skilled; Semi-skilled; and Unskilled. The second dimension is based on the primary focus of activity of the occupation. There are eight (8) groups of occupational fields: Service (serving the tastes, needs, and welfare of others); Business Contact (face-to-face sale based on personal persuasion; i.e., commodities); Managerial (concerned with the organization and efficient running of an organization); Technology (concerned with all aspects of commodity and utility manufacture and use); Outdoor (occupations associated with natural resources); Science (concerned with scientific theory and its application); General Culture (occupations primarily concerned with the preservation and transmission of general cultural heritage); and Arts and Entertainment (associated with the use of special skills in arts and entertainment).

The staff of the Career Education Project used a modified version of Roe's system, with four rather than six levels: Professional and Managerial I, Professional and Managerial II, Semi-Professional and Small Business were collapsed into one group called Professional. This system was devised by Donald Super and his associates at Columbia University for use in evaluating the computer-based Educational and Career Exploration System (ECES).

1970 Census Occupational Classification System

The U.S. Department of Commerce Classified Index of Occupations, which was used for the 1970 Census, has four broad occupational areas. The four areas are: (1) white collar workers; (2) blue collar workers; (3) farm workers; and (4) service workers.

There are four occupational groups associated with white collar workers. These white collar occupational groups are: (1) professional, technical, and kindred workers, which includes all types of professionals from accountants to writers; (2) managers and administrators of any organization, except farm related organizations; (3) sales workers; and (4) clerical and similar workers, from bank tellers to typists.

Occupational groups associated with blue collar workers are: (1) craftsmen and kindred workers, such as bakers, electricians, and tailors; (2) operatives, except transport, such as assemblers, dyers, and riveters; (3) transport equipment operatives from bus to truck drivers; and (4) laborers, except farm-related laborers.

The third occupational area, farm workers, has two occupational groups. They are: (1) farmers and farm managers, and (2) farm foremen and farm laborers.

The last occupational area, service workers, includes two groups of occupations associated with service. The first is personal service workers, such as flight attendants, barbers, and ushers. The other group of service workers is private household workers, including cooks and maids.
The remainder of this appendix will provide a listing of the specific occupations comprising the categories used in these two occupational classification systems.
