ABSTRACT This Module is designed for use by guidance personnel in grades k-12 and at the postsecondary level. These include teachers, administrators, counselors, paraprofessionals, pupil personnel workers and any others who provide services to ethnic minority populations. This module will help each participant to differentiate between behaviors that reinforce stereotypes of ethnic minority persons and behaviors that facilitate greater awareness of people as individuals, to recognize that ethnically different individuals are unique persons, to identify effects of negative stereotyping on behavior, to identify resources that can provide participants with a broader perspective on the history and culture of a given ethnic minority group, and to identify ethnic-related stereotypes present in career materials. The module is designed as a six-hour workshop to be run by a coordinator. In addition to textual material and activities on each of the target skill areas, the module contains abstracts of related state projects and a list of reference materials. (Author/BP)

December 1976

Developed by the National Consortium on Competency-Based Staff Development, in cooperation with the American Institutes for Research, under support by the United States Office of Education, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare under Part C of the Vocational Education Act of 1963.
The initial proposal writing, Module planning, and input throughout the formative and testing stages of the Module development were provided by Garry R. Walz, Director, ERIC/CAPS, and Libby Benjamin, Associate Director, ERIC/CAPS. Throughout the Module development, James Mahrt, Acting Supervisor, State Department of Education, generously contributed his knowledge and expertise. And, finally, the skillful typing of Dawn Uranis made the finished product possible.

Support for these efforts was received through the United States Office of Education, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, under Part C of the Vocational Education Act of 1963. Points of view or opinions stated do not necessarily represent U.S.O.E. position or policy.

INTRODUCTION

ELIMINATING STEREOTYPES OF ETHNIC MINORITIES THROUGH CAREER GUIDANCE

A stereotype is a belief about all members of a human group in which little concern is shown for individual differences and/or facts, even when they are available. Some of these beliefs may be of a positive nature, such as the stereotype that women are nurturing and compassionate. These characteristics are descriptive of many women (and many men), but not all women. It is the woman who does not fit the stereotype that is penalized by society and oftentimes by her own feelings of guilt. Hence, even positive stereotypes have negative implications for some segment of any given group of people. This Module will attempt to examine and explore all aspects of stereotyping.

Terminology

The term ethnic group membership is used throughout this Module, but it is used with the recognition that classifying people is highly complex. Persons can be classified in a number of ways—by occupation, sex, citizenship, political affiliation or ethnic group membership. Membership classifications are not always clear and distinct, and some, like occupations, may change completely. Even in the case of ethnic group membership, the boundaries are not always clear. A person who classifies him/herself as Latino, for example, may have ancestry of English, Cuban and Mexican lineage. For the purposes of this Module ethnic group membership will be defined as a group of people of the same race or nationality who identify with a common and distinctive culture and/or language.

Another term that is employed throughout this Module is the word minority. It is used here in the sense of numbers within the United States. For example, Blacks are clearly not a minority in terms of world population, only in terms of the numbers residing within the United States relative to the number of persons who classify themselves as White.

Participants

It is assumed that each participant experiencing this Module is (will be) involved in some aspect of providing career guidance services for ethnic minority persons. The participant may be a teacher, administrator, counselor, paraprofessional, pupil personnel worker or any other such person providing services. One major purpose of this Module is to help each participant become more aware of the pervasiveness of ethnic minority stereotypes and the effects these stereotypes have on behavior. Therefore, as you work through this Module on ethnic minorities it will help to keep in mind that:

1. Self awareness is an ongoing process, not an event in time.
2. All of us are at different points in this process of self awareness.
3. Forced self awareness, in a sense of being hit over the head, is psychologically destructive, and, hence, accomplishes little.
4. Mutual trust among group members tends to foster an increase in self awareness.
5. The more you become aware of yourself, the better your chances are to affect positively your own life and the lives of the people with whom you work.
ACTIVITY -- SHARE A SECRET

This activity will provide the opportunity for you to share anonymously some of your thoughts about ethnic minorities, thoughts that you may never have expressed to others. The Coordinator will give you the instructions for the activity.
Module Goals

This Module is designed for use by guidance personnel in grades 12 and at the postsecondary level. These include teachers, administrators, counselors, paraprofessionals, pupil personnel workers and any others who provide services to ethnic minority populations. This Module will help each participant to differentiate between behaviors that reinforce stereotypes of ethnic minority persons and behaviors that facilitate greater awareness of people as individuals, to recognize that ethnically different individuals are unique persons, to identify effects of negative stereotyping on behavior, to identify resources that can provide participants with a broader perspective on the history and culture of a given ethnic minority group, and to identify ethnic-related stereotypes present in career materials.

Module Objectives *

When you have successfully completed this Module, you will be able to:

1. Differentiate between behaviors which reinforce stereotypes of ethnic minority persons and behaviors which facilitate greater awareness of people as individuals.

2. Recognize ethnically different individuals as unique persons rather than products of a stereotype(s) about groups.

3. Recognize the effects of one's behavior upon communication when one is acting upon negative stereotypic beliefs.

4. Identify people and data resources that can provide information on the history and culture of an ethnic minority group.

5. Identify common biases of ethnic minority persons present in occupational literature.

*The criteria for achievement of these objectives are found in the Coordinator's Guide for this module.

CROSSARY

Career - The pattern of activities and experiences that make up a lifetime of work, learning and leisure. The term is broadly defined to include occupational and educational choices and patterns as well as other aspects of a person's life—personal and social behavior, acquisition of skills, social responsibility or citizenship, and use of leisure time.

Career Development - The life-long process a person undergoes as s/he gains skills in setting goals and in developing, implementing, evaluating and revising plans to define a career and deal with life problems and opportunities.

Career Guidance - All the various types of assistance provided to help individuals in their career development. These include instruction, counseling, placement, follow-through, evaluation, and support procedures for career planning and development needs.

Ethnic Group - A group of people of the same race or nationality who identify with a common and distinctive culture and/or language.

Latino - A generic term applied to all peoples in the United States with a Spanish culture and/or language. There are many distinct Latino groups, e.g., Chicano, Mexican, Puerto Rican.

Stereotype - A belief about all members of a group in which little concern is shown for individual differences and/or facts, even when they are available.

Prejudice - A predisposition to act toward individuals and groups with a rigid, emotional attitude that is based on inadequate data without regard for individual differences.

Discrimination - The differential treatment of individuals—an overt or covert expression of prejudice.
STEREOTYPING

Stereotypes result in an exaggerated picture of the importance of certain characteristics whether or not they actually exist. They are broad generalizations that simply do not take into consideration the individual differences among minority group members, or the fact that members of the majority group may also possess the same characteristics.

Origins

Stereotypes about groups of people abound in American society. Many of these have occurred as the direct result of distortions presented in movies, television, magazines and other forms of mass media. An obvious example is provided in the many westerns in which the Native American is portrayed as an individual who can speak little or no English, and who is extremely naive and gullible. Another instance is the Amos and Andy portrayal of the Black person as shiftless. The end result of these portrayals has been to produce and reinforce stereotypes of groups of people.

One of the reasons people use these stereotypes is that they have limited experiences with specific minority groups. People who have had little or no interactions with Native Americans, for example, and no incentive to study the Native American cultures, have simply made stereotyped generalizations based upon insufficient and distorted data. Similarly, persons from rural America, far removed from the big cities, often have stereotyped views of safety, or life in general, in large urban areas.

Numerous examples can be cited where the media have stereotyped groups of people based upon occupation, physical characteristics, geographical area, age, or sex, as well as ethnic minority membership. However, the media are only one vehicle for transmitting and reinforcing stereotypes.
Certainly school textbooks have stereotyped, omitted and distorted the many contributions of ethnic minority groups throughout American history. Rarely does one find reference to the extensive contributions ethnic minorities have made to government, social structures, medicine, foods, arts and crafts, technology and military strategy. Omission and/or distortion of historical information create a climate in which stereotypes can grow.

One of the most powerful forces for perpetuating stereotypes is verbal and non-verbal communication, subtle or otherwise, from family, friends and significant others. People identify with the beliefs, values and attitudes of those persons whom they admire. When an influential person makes discriminatory statements, i.e., tells an anti-minority joke, the listener may believe the presented stereotypes in a literal sense. Many stereotypes are learned at a young age, believed and never challenged. This situation produces people who know many things that are not true.

A stereotype:
1. Is a belief that one holds that is ascribed to all members of an ethnic minority group.
2. May be real or unreal.
3. Does not give a complete picture of an ethnic minority group.
4. Does not take into consideration individual or group differences.
5. Does not include the fact that many majority group members share the same characteristics.

Altering Beliefs

Once beliefs about people or groups of people have been established, individuals may find it very difficult to alter them, even when challenged. The tenacity with which we cling to such beliefs also invades areas besides those involving ethnic minorities. The following incident illustrates this.

Student Bill came in to see Dr. Johnson, his instructor in an introductory guidance course, toward the middle of the semester. Bill approached the secretary:

Bill: I'd like to speak with Dr. Johnson.
Sect: I'm sorry, but we don't have a Dr. Johnson in this department.
Bill: This is the guidance department, isn't it?
Sect: Yes.
Bill: Well, then, you have a Dr. Johnson.
Sect: No, we don't!
Bill: Yes, you do. He teaches Guidance 567 on Monday nights at 7:00 P.M.

After some further exchanges between the secretary and Bill, he was admitted to Dr. Michaels' office.

Dr. M.: Hello, Bill.
Bill: What a dumb secretary you have!
Dr. M.: What do you mean?
Bill: She tried to tell me that you were Dr. Michaels. I was right! You are Dr. Johnson.
Dr. M.: No, I'm not...

After a number of "Yes, you are!" and "No, I'm not!" statements and a display of identification, Bill hesitantly accepted the name change. It was discovered that Bill had walked into the first night of class a little late and the name Dr. Johnson had been written on the board. Dr. Johnson from another department had used that classroom the previous class session.

Because we hold a number of beliefs about various groups of people that are often founded upon incomplete data, perceptions of others, distortions of facts, and misinformation, it is important that we begin to examine our personal stereotypes. Once these stereotypes are uncovered we can begin the difficult process of altering them. Altering beliefs, honest communication, meaningful dialog and the development of authentic relationships require a commitment from all of us. An authentic relationship is one in which there is a full acceptance and recognition of differences and a mutual appreciation and valuing of these differences. Some behaviors reinforce stereotypic thinking and block communication. Other behaviors facilitate greater awareness of people as individuals and the development of authentic relationships. The following behaviors represent examples of both kinds.

BEHAVIORS THAT BLOCK AUTHENTIC RELATIONS

1. Interrupting minorities when they talk.
2. Offering help or advice where not needed or wanted, or being patronizing.
3. Avoiding contact (eye to eye and physical), or excluding minorities.
4. Being annoyed at minorities' behavior that differs from our own.
5. Giving insincere expressions of acceptance and friendship.
6. Talking about—rather than to—minorities who are present as well as joking about or laughing at minorities.
7. Making generalized statements about minorities.
8. Trite conversation.
9. Dishonesty in expression of feelings. Giving answers one thinks the other person wants to hear.
10. Rejecting honest expressions of acceptance and friendship.

BEHAVIORS THAT FACILITATE AUTHENTIC RELATIONS

1. Expressing honest feelings directly and openly.
2. Assisting majority persons to understand and confront feelings, and to experience unaware areas of stereotypes, prejudice and discrimination.
4. Listening without interrupting.
5. Demonstrating a sincere interest in learning about minority perceptions, point of view, culture, etc.
6. Taking risks, e.g., being first to confront the differences.

7. Assuming responsibility for examining own motives.

8. Treating each person on an individual basis.

9. Including minorities in group participation.

10. Acknowledging that there are some majority and minority persons committed to bettering inter-ethnic relations.
This activity will give you the opportunity to examine stereotypes of ethnic minority persons and to understand how certain behaviors block communication and how other behaviors facilitate communication and authentic relationships. You will begin by reading the following five incidents as told by Mary, a member of the White majority group. Your Coordinator will give you further instructions for this activity.
I grew up in a small midwestern farming community. My first contact with persons of another race occurred when I was about 13 years old. My girl friend and I were at the local restaurant having a coke when a Black family walked in, sat down and ordered lunch. I remember staring at them with feelings of curiosity, like "Are they for real?" and I remember my girl friend and me giggling. We weren't very nice. Eventually the family left after finishing their lunch; then we left. I went home and told my mother about the incident, and she responded by saying, "I wonder how they could afford to travel?" Her words puzzled me at the time.

I finished high school, then attended a small college not too far from my home. I do not recall any Black people there, but I do remember two men from Puerto Rico. They were in a class that I was taking. One day after class, one of the two men, Jose, came up to me and invited me to join him for a cup of coffee at the Student Union. I didn't know what to say, but before I could think the words tumbled out, "I'm sorry, but I promised a friend of mine that I would help her with a project." That incident bothered me for days. First, I had made no such promise, and second, all he had done was to ask me to join him for a cup of coffee at the Union. I really began to start looking at myself and my attitudes toward people. I vowed to myself, then and there, that I would accept Jose's offer for coffee if he asked me again. He didn't, though, and I was too embarrassed by my behavior to approach him—and I really didn't know what to say if I did.

After graduating from college I obtained a teaching job at Kennedy High School. It was a good job, just what I wanted, teaching math. Kennedy has about 2,500 students and is located in our moderately large Capital City. I remember that first day of school, before the students came, when the principal met with all of the staff. I looked around and suddenly realized that there were Black teachers at Kennedy. I had known that about 10 percent of the student body was Black and that the school had a small population of Chicanos and Indians, but it had never crossed my mind that there would also be Black teachers. Then I remember wondering if there were any Chicano or Indian teachers as well. Anyway, I decided to get to know some teachers who were Black. So, after the meeting was over, I went up to two Black teachers who were talking with each other and said, "Hello." They responded likewise, then returned to their conversation. I felt awkward and didn’t know what else to say so I left.

For the first few weeks of school I was pretty busy organizing my classes and spent little time socializing with the other teachers. I really wanted to do a good job. As I began to feel more comfortable with my classes, I sought more contact with the other teachers. Two doors down and across the hall was a Black teacher named Thelma. We chatted a number of times and developed a friendship. Then one day Thelma asked me if I would like to attend a symphony concert with her. She explained that a friend of hers had given her the tickets since he could not attend. I was surprised but accepted with no reservations, until the day of the concert. I remember feeling a little uneasy attending a social event with a Black person, but I also felt pleased with myself for having accepted, and also glad that she thought enough of me to invite me. It was a great experience. Not only was the concert excellent but we had a really good time. It made me wonder, though, had I been given two tickets, would I have thought to invite Thelma.

As the year progressed I became acquainted with many of the teachers at Kennedy, making a number of friends. One day when I was in the lounge Don Fox came in and sat down. I knew that Don was a Cherokee Indian but I had never sat down and talked with him. We began chatting about school and some of its problems. Then, suddenly, I became aware that I was talking about something other than what I was thinking. I was thinking that I sincerely wanted to get to know Don as a person and to understand something about his cultural background. And so I decided to ask him. It was kind of scary. What if he became offended and dismissed me? I decided to risk it, to take the chance. I said very simply, "Don, I really don't know what it is like to be a Cherokee Indian, and I know very little about the history and culture of your tribe. I'd like to learn." He responded quite positively to me. It was the beginning of real communication.

DISCUSSION QUESTIONS

1. Were you ever treated as a category, not as a person, because of your sex, age, size, socio-economic status, education level, or ethnic membership? Because of another reason?

2. Can you describe any incidents where you found it difficult to change your beliefs even when presented with contradictory data relative to people in occupations; with certain physical characteristics; from different geographical areas; or with respect to age, sex or ethnic membership?

3. Can you describe one incident in which you either facilitated or blocked authentic communication in an inter-ethnic situation?
THE UNIQUENESS OF INDIVIDUALS

No one would argue the fact that all of us are unique and distinctly different from each other. There is no one value, belief or characteristic behavior shared by all members of any given group or culture in the United States. For example, varying attitudes exist toward career aspirations and expectations within the majority population just as among Latino members, Native Americans or Blacks. Some people in each group are highly committed to the pursuance of career goals, some in each group have little commitment, and some in each group are in between the two extremes.

Monolithic Thinking

One factor that has given rise to such monolithic thinking has been the blocking of career opportunities for persons of ethnic minority status. Blocked career opportunities resulting in dead-end jobs depress aspirations and expectations and create a sense of powerlessness. Many persons then give up hope and in defense decide that they really don't want a better job after all. The majority group often misinterprets this hopelessness as a lack of commitment and ambition.

It is a fact that wide variations among any group exist by regional location, length of residence in the United States, types of place of residence, age, and social class. However, many research studies of ethnic minorities have ignored such variations; have focused their research on one small sub-group, often a low socioeconomic ethnic minority group; then have generalized the data to the larger group. Again, these data have served to perpetuate the stereotype that various ethnic groups have a monolithic culture. There is no universal Anglo culture, no universal Black culture, no universal Native American culture, no universal Latino culture within the United States.
"I have never understood why Whites should be so surprised that twenty million Blacks do not think alike, act alike, or support the same political party when they themselves do not think alike, act alike or support the same political party."

None of the above denies the fact that we are products of our social and cultural traditions, and as such, are imprinted by these experiences. Our cultural and ethnic backgrounds are often expressed through unique life styles, values and language. Since each of us has had different individual experiences in interactions with our cultural backgrounds and since there are great differences among members of any group, ethnicity must be examined on an individual rather than on a group basis. The cultural dimension must be used for reaching and understanding the individual as an individual, not for burying the ethnic minority person behind generalizations.

Our differences, our uniqueness, the rich diversities among us contribute to the whole of American life. America is not a melting pot, rather it is a multi-lingual and multi-cultural society, and it is ever changing.

I am a person of distinction.
I am I. I am that I am.

NEGATIVE STEREOTYPING

Negative stereotypes are beliefs that ascribe negative behavioral characteristics to all members of a group of people. For example: "Native Americans do not speak English fluently." "Latinos lack motivation for upward mobility." "Blacks are undependable." These and other negative stereotypes are internalized and influence the behavior of the majority group and minority group members toward each other. Discrimination is the outcome. The important question is how behavior is affected.

Receivers of Negative Stereotyping

Looking at ethnic minority persons who are usually stereotyped negatively, we can see several patterns emerging. Sensitive to negative treatment, yet feeling powerless to change things, the ethnic minority person may acquiesce to the behavioral expectations and assume certain roles for survival. Some persons may have learned to rationalize or deny the existence of negative treatment, and others may have absorbed it as a negative self-concept. The end results are fear and anger, directed at both self and others. The ethnic minority person may perceive every majority person as a potential source of pain ranging from a social snub to outright violence. Some minority persons have reacted by demanding to be heard and insisting that justice be done—and have moved beyond rhetoric into action. They have resisted strongly the assumption that they are guilty until proven innocent. In any event, ethnic minority persons will tend to assume a very defensive attitude when responding to an inter-ethnic situation.

Majority Persons and Stereotyping

When interacting in an inter-ethnic situation majority persons face a dilemma. They have been given conflicting messages by society. One message is that ethnic minority persons are inferior to them in ways that are important in the working world. The second message is that in today's democracy all people are equal relative to career opportunity and that no one should be the recipient of discrimination.

How do they go about reconciling these two concepts? Some majority persons deny that discrimination really exists. Or they justify any actions that ethnic minorities perceive as discrimination, by seeing only those actions of ethnic minority persons that fit into their negatively stereotyped picture. Other majority persons, concerned with discrimination and fair play, have reacted, perhaps out of guilt or conscience, with tokenism and charity—sometimes to the extreme. However, this behavior is often communicated as paternalism and as an attempt to foster a dependency relationship. Anger is the end result when charitable actions do not seem to be appreciated by the ethnic minority person. Certainly there are majority persons who have moved beyond this situation into mature relationships with members of ethnic minority groups, but they did not simply jump into instant relationships.

The emotions of guilt, fear, and anger are potentially present in any intergroup interaction. These emotions interfere with the acquisition of knowledge and distort judgment. Judgments are produced by learnings beginning in childhood, by actions, and by past experiences.
ACTIVITY -- THE INTERVIEW

This activity will give you an opportunity to experience the feelings of being negatively stereotyped on the basis of ethnic minority group membership. You will work in triads, role playing job interviews. Each of you will have the opportunity to experience the roles of interviewer, interviewee and observer. Your Coordinator will give you the instructions for the activity.
OBSERVATION SHEET

Be as specific as you can in noting your observations. Be aware of both verbal and non-verbal behaviors.

RESOURCES

The roles that ethnic minority groups have played throughout the history of America have been both distorted and omitted in textbooks. Even though printed literature is increasing about Black, Latino and Native American cultures and contributions, very little of the information has been incorporated into traditional textbooks used in schools. An interesting example of an omission/distortion of a White, non-Anglo person is John Cabot. He was a man hired to explore America so that England could lay claim to territory in the New World. His real name, Giovanni Caboto, which reflects his ethnic background, is omitted from history books. This distortion of Anglicizing his name denies Italian American peoples a part of their heritage. This one example is not atypical. Unfortunately, far more examples could be cited relative to the contributions of ethnic minorities.

Effects

The effects of omission/distortion treatment of the contributions of ethnic groups in the historical picture of America are many.

1. The ethnic minorities' sense of identification with America is reduced. What does July 4th mean to an ethnic minority person?

2. The ethnic minorities' identification with their own ethnic background is stifled and denied.

3. The ethnic minorities' recognition of being different and of being excluded results in feelings of shame for their ethnic background, followed by anger and guilt.

4. Majority persons are left with the belief that only they were the creators of America. This can and often does lead to feelings of superiority. Is English the superior language?
Knowledge

It is important that all persons learn of the many contributions of people of all ethnic backgrounds. More important, it is imperative that individuals working with persons from ethnic backgrounds different from their own learn and understand the cultural and historical backgrounds of those persons. If one is ignorant, s/he cannot expect to communicate effectively.

Knowledge is the beginning of understanding. There are many books available from which to acquire additional knowledge. It is up to each of you to obtain materials, to read, to talk to others, to learn more. Some materials may be available in:

1. School Libraries
2. Public Libraries
3. College of University Libraries
4. County/Regional Media Centers
5. State Departments of Education
6. Ethnic Organizations or Associations

Oftentimes a media-sharing relationship exists among these different agencies.

Another method of learning more about specific cultural groups is through persons in your own communities. These are people that have a great deal of knowledge based upon personal experiences and/or research. They may be in leadership positions within the community as a whole or within an ethnic minority group. Many are willing to share their knowledge, perceptions and experiences. Who are they? How can you learn from them?

1. Identify specifically what you want to know.
2. Find out where you can obtain the information.
3. Find out how you can obtain the information.
4. Determine how you can best utilize the information.
ACTIVITY -- LEARNING FROM MATERIAL AND PEOPLE RESOURCES

This activity will provide the opportunity for you to select material and people resources that might further enhance your knowledge of a particular ethnic minority group. Although this is an exercise, it is hoped that you will pursue your selections with actual contact following the completion of this Module. Your Coordinator will give you the instructions for the activity.
MATERIAL RESOURCES GROUP QUESTIONS

1. Upon which ethnic minority group are you going to focus your attention?

2. Can you identify specific areas in which you need more understanding? Historical perspective? Contributions? Culture? Others? What are the areas?

Select one of these areas to investigate and list it here.

3. Of the materials listed in this Module section and/or the Appendix, which seem to be most appropriate for your needs? Check those most appropriate, then jot down the eight most promising.

4. Does anyone in the group know of other materials that would be appropriate?

Select five resources that you would like to obtain from among those resources listed in Question 3 and 4 and write them in Question 5.
5. How can you go about obtaining these materials?

BIASES IN CAREER GUIDANCE MATERIALS

Bias is prejudice—the favoring of one group over another, creating distortion of facts. This bias has too frequently been present in career materials that inaccurately portray ethnic minority persons. When career materials have been designed for use in career planning and decision making, both the subtle and overt stereotypes and biases must be identified and communicated to students if the effects are to be negated.

Pictures in Career Materials

Pictures have a great impact on students since they reinforce stereotypes and convey official sanction for the way things are and ought to be. Pictures are also the key to whether or not the student will read the printed matter. How does one evaluate bias in pictures? Where does one begin? The following are some questions to consider:

1. Are pictures of ethnic minority persons included in the materials if majority persons are also pictured? Is there an appropriate balance? Does the minority person(s) appear to be an add on rather than an integrated part of the whole?
2. Are ethnic minority persons pictured with a variety of facial expressions? Are Black workers, for example, pictured as grinning, whatever the occupation depicted? What are the facial expressions of majority workers?
3. Is there only one minority person working with a group of majority co-workers? If so, is that person working alone?
4. Are minority workers pictured as indecisive, or confused, rather than self-confident and in control? How about majority workers?
5. Are minority persons shown as unskilled rather than thinkers, planners or highly skilled workers? How about majority workers?
6. Are minority workers shown as being supervised or taking directions from majority workers, or as supervisors and trainers of majority workers? How about majority workers?
7. Are minority persons shown serving minority persons, or are minority persons shown serving majority persons? What is the responsibility level of the occupations involved?

Content Analysis

The content of career materials is even more difficult to assess in terms of stereotyping and bias. In general, no literature today uses such derogatory words as boy when referring to an adult male; however, subtle reference is often made to proper attire or proper diction. The implication is that anyone who is different from standardized White (whatever that is) need not apply.

Another area deals with occupations that have traditionally been closed to ethnic minorities. If the career materials do not make specific reference to that fact, and to the fact that ethnic minorities should consider that occupation as a viable career in today's world, then the materials are perpetuating discrimination against ethnic minorities. Evaluating career materials for negative stereotypes and bias is not an easy task because the messages conveyed are all too often subtle in nature. Nevertheless, both stereotypes and bias exist and affect students and their career choices.
ACTIVITY -- EVALUATING AN OCCUPATIONAL BRIEF

This activity will provide the opportunity for you to evaluate a sample occupational brief for stereotypes and bias toward ethnic minority people. Major publishing companies of occupational materials have made sincere efforts to eliminate stereotypes and bias against ethnic minorities in all of their recent materials. Schools, however, have not always had the financial resources to update their career materials. Throughout this exercise it is hoped that you will keep in mind the many published materials that you daily use in your classroom, materials that do contain many of these stereotypes and biases. Your Coordinator will give you the instructions for the activity.
RECREATION CAREERS

The Travel Agent

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN MANAGING OTHER PEOPLE’S FUN???

Today, fun is a serious business. Last year alone, Americans spent over $100 billion dollars on various forms of leisure and recreation. And, it is expected that Americans will spend even more this year and the next. Americans have increasing use of more leisure time and greater incomes. Other factors include population expansion, earlier retirements and longer life spans.

Occupations related to recreation are many as well as diverse. In general, these occupations deal with travel and tourism, sports, entertainment, amusement, non-profit recreational facilities and natural resources such as parks. This occupational brief will review one recreation career related to travel, that of the travel agent.

A travel agent arranges trips for people whether or not the trips are for business or pleasure. They may also make arrangements for car rentals, hotel accommodations and sight-seeing tours.

TRAVEL AGENT BILL

We talked with Bill, a typical travel agent. He is 30 years old and has been working at Johnson’s Travel Agency for five years. He is always well groomed and wears a suit and tie to work every day. As he says, “I deal with many kinds of people all day long and so I must look my best.”

We asked Bill what he did with his time. He said, “Well, this week started with the planning of a Carribean Cruise and a trip to San Francisco for some hard-to-please customers. Next I arranged for a group departure of a tennis club to Miami for participation in a tennis meet. This trip was a headache in terms of scheduling. The airlines were heavily booked at the time when they wanted to leave. Finally, I arranged for a trip to Hawaii for a group of 100 senior-citizens. I not only arranged for their air transportation but I also arranged for ground transportation once they arrived, hotel accommodations and some sight-seeing tours.”

“If anything goes wrong with the arrangements I hear about it from my customers. That rarely happens with me because I do a lot of double checking on the arrangements. I pride myself on doing a good job.”

REQUIREMENTS FOR A TRAVEL AGENT.

A travel agent must:

... have good organizational ability
... have a broad knowledge of cities, climates, recreation facilities, hotels and tourist attractions in many areas of the country and the world
... be able to read and understand maps
... have a knowledge of math to figure out fares, rates and tax changes
... be able to work with all kinds of people

EDUCATION:

Travel agents are usually required to have a high school diploma and in many cases at least one year of college. To advance to supervisory or managerial positions a college degree in business administration or liberal arts is helpful.

It usually takes from two to five years to become an experienced travel agent. Experience comes from study, on-the-job training, actual travel experiences and travel lectures.

BENEFITS

A self-employed travel agent can expect to make $9,000 or more a year. In addition, he enjoys free or reduced-rate travel benefits.

JOB MARKET

Agencies vary in size from large operations where many people are employed to small agencies in which one or two people handle everything. The job outlook is good for the future.

Further information may be obtained from the American Society of Travel Agents

APPLICATION

You have now worked through this Module and have acquired some skills in identifying stereotypes of ethnic minority persons, as well as in discriminating between behaviors that facilitate authentic communication and relationships and those that do not. You also have information on resources to increase your knowledge. You can enhance your effectiveness in providing career guidance services for a particular ethnic minority population by putting both your knowledge and skills into practice. The following section will help you to personalize your understandings, knowledge and skills so that you may extend them to your own situations, and positively affect the lives and dreams of the people with whom you work.
PUTTING IT ALL TOGETHER

I. Describe an unfortunate incident with an ethnic minority person involving you or someone you know.

A. What stereotype may have contributed to the difficulties experienced in the encounter?

B. List two blocking behaviors that took place in the encounter by either person.
   2.

C. For each of the behaviors listed in B, state a way(s) in which the behavior could be changed so that it would become facilitative.
   1.
   2.
II. How are you like the person sitting next to you? Values, interests, beliefs, etc.?

1.

3.

4.

5.

How are you different from that same person?

1.

2.

3.

4.

5.

III. What stereotype(s) of groups of people have you held in the past that may have changed during your experiences in this Module?
IV. In order to seek out further information regarding an ethnic minority cultural background, to what resources will you go?

What specific information do you hope to gain from these resources?

V. What textbooks do you currently use in whatever capacity?

What specific things will you look for in order to evaluate them for ethnic minority stereotypes and/or bias?
