This continuing ERIC/CAPS series, entitled Searchlight Plus, consists of two components: first, an in-depth review of cited materials, including prime issues and trends, and implications for helping professionals; and, second, citations from an ERIC computer search on the topic. Series topics are selected in response to user requests. Presented in the review section are types of adult counseling approaches, model programs and projects, educational resources and implications for counselor education. (Author/BMW)

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

For several years ERIC/CAPS has produced Searchlights--computer searches of the ERIC database on topics identified as being of major interest and importance by our on-site users and by helping professionals working in the field. The Searchlights have proved to be highly useful as a synthesis of existing documents on a given topic, and we have been pleased to provide them at low cost for persons desiring packaged, instant information in a particular area. This year we have gone one step further.

Choosing the fifteen topics which were in most demand by our ERIC users, we decided to explore in depth the sources revealed in the computer search and identify prime issues and possible trends from the documents, as well as point out the implications of the information for the work of professionals in our field of counseling and personnel services. In so doing we hoped to provide an even more valuable service to those who recognize ERIC as a rich storehouse of information, but who lack the time to examine in detail and analyze the total collection of data.

The fifteen areas chosen for this special treatment are the following:

Career Development: Programs and Practices
Career Resource Centers Counseling Adults
Counseling the Aging Counseling the Exceptional: Handicapped and Gifted Divorce and One-Parent Family Counseling
Evaluation of Counselor Effectiveness Group Guidance
Mid-Career Change
The computer search is included in each Searchlight Plus as before, but in addition, readers will find an opening narrative which highlights certain documents, identifies issues and trends, and suggests possible implications for the future of guidance and guidance professionals.

We should point out that two of these Searchlight Plus are slightly different from the others. The ones entitled "Mid-Career Change" and "Preretirement Counseling" contain sources from a number of data bases (including ERIC). These particular analyses of the literature were prepared for an international guidance conference and were designed to review sources from as many data bases as possible. Interestingly, however, the most useful informational source in preparing the papers was ERIC, and much overlap was found to exist in the documents brought to light from the many data bases searched.

This explains the difference between our current series Searchlight Plus and the previous series Searchlight. If you find the narrative helpful—more helpful than just the basic search—we would appreciate your telling us so. A major purpose of ERIC is to provide information of genuine value to you, the user.

Coping with Challenge in a Changing Society

A crucial part of meeting the special challenges of the world in which we live is coming safely through the normal crises that disturb our lives and affect us emotionally, physically, and spiritually. At some point we must all deal with disappointment, discouragement, sickness, and death. For many adults, a personal crisis or sense of frustration calls for consultation with a counselor, spiritual adviser, psychologist, or psychoanalyst, depending upon one's personal tastes, needs, and pocketbook.

Today's economic, sociological, and psychological influences encourage many adults to initiate startling changes at mid-life. In this review of the literature, Entine (EJ 147 850) begins the investigation of those influences that inspire and encourage adults to seek mid-life educational, career, and life-style changes. One author highlights that desire for change (EJ 037 796) by addressing the career-changing process, directing attention to sizeable numbers of 30-, 40-, and even 50-year old people who are involved in career changes, either voluntarily or out of necessity.

The career changing process has motivated many adults to return to school. With continuing education becoming a way of life in our society, adult educational problems (ED 033 419) have become increasingly important, not only to students but to counselors as well. Regardless of what motivates nontraditional adult students to return to school, their motivations need to be more readily understood by counselors who can assist with problems such as lack of self-confidence, unrealistic expectations for progress, and attitudes that conflict with those of other students (ED 149 305). As an aid to counselors, authors throughout the literature identify new problems and satisfactions of human life in this society that will become counseling issues deserving of more than a quick review by all human service personnel.

Counseling Issues

Educational and Vocational

In perusing the literature, one soon learns that authors can readily identify the numerous aspects of adult learning that require counseling (EJ 138 960, 160 676, 165 608)—the effectiveness of remedial instruction for adults (EJ 171 258), the need for administrative, educational, and career information (EJ 087 464), and so forth. Although colleges and universities have become more responsive to the older students' needs and are gradually changing their traditional patterns, Thoroman (ED 028 495) applauds the efforts of the junior colleges in taking a large portion of the responsibility for providing the necessary wide range of educational information. As the whole area of vocational counseling demonstrates increased demand due to changing social and economic factors, Thoroman (ED 028 487) pronounces the conventional methods of testing and job placement as inadequate to the task of helping adults reshape their occupational outlook. Grabowski (ED 114 583) strongly identifies counseling in adult education as the most "impoverished, depressed, but developing area." In support of this statement, the author calls attention to the conclusions of a limited number of research studies on counseling adults that more progression is found among counseled groups than noncounseled groups and that existing guidance services for adults are inadequate to meet client needs. He also concludes that counseling in the area of adult education lacks a serious commitment from the educational community. But, even if adults do experience counseling, Hooper (EJ 175 398) is quick to point out that those who obtained continuing educational counseling did not attribute personally satisfying attitudinal or behavioral changes, such as returning to school, directly to counseling. Even though the role of the counselor is significant in adult education and adult vocational development, the literature covers other pertinent factors (EJ 161 788). For example, McMillan (EJ 161 788) takes a closer look at the work ethic and work motivation, major factors related to career change.

Career change. Although serious challenges arise from mid-career changes, Heddesheimer (EJ 147 849) views them as a natural step in a career pattern that an increasing number of adults are experiencing. In fact, a survey (ED 143 993) of the career guidance and counseling needs of 401 representative adults (predominantly female) in the United States determined that 36% of the American population between the ages of 16 and 65 are in a "transition" regarding their careers. Furthermore, adults in transition want career services of all types, but are most interested in specific information on jobs, careers, or educational opportunities. Sinick (ED 109 588), in a more in-depth study, questions why older persons change employment and identifies the obstacles they are likely to face when seeking employment. He also discusses the myths surrounding the employability of older adults, then expands his focus to include the area of preretirement and retirement counseling. Walz (ED 160 905) overviews theories of mid-life crisis and discusses the dynamics of transition and implications for counselors.
Preretirement. The question of whether planning for retirement prevents post-retirement shock is an issue that Ulman pursues (EJ 147 851). Some organizations involved in preretirement planning programs warn about the resultant increased stress in middle-aged employees (EJ 090 748). Despite reports of negative results, retirement counseling continues to offer assistance to persons who lack either the knowledge or skills to define or solve problems that arise in this latter stage of life (EJ 147 851, 178 806). Another positive note is that preretirement education, initiated by community colleges in cooperation with local companies, has been very successful. Included in such education is development of leisure-time activities, and assessment of interests, aptitudes, and skills for persons who wish to pursue a second career. Benjamin (ED 159 541) describes needs of preretirees and programs for meeting those needs.

Job placement and related issues. The literature identifies the job placement process as an area of great concern to all age groups that is open to a variety of approaches. For example, Arbeiter (EJ 177 212) proposed the concept of evolutionary life cycles as an integral part of the placement process. His concept includes the college educational process as the beginning of a lifetime of learning and earning, rather than as a point of departure into an unknown work world.

Employment counselors are willing and waiting to help adults relate their experiences and abilities to the job market (EJ 122 378). Tomita supports this statement by presenting case studies of help given to retirees wanting to return to work, homemakers reentering the business world, and men and women seeking a change of occupation. As an additional aid, Tomita (EJ 112 129) cites testing as a useful tool in the assessment process. But, in their desire for job placement, adults must face the possible issue of age bias. The question of whether counselors are age biased and to what degree is a complex one. Troll (ED 042 939), in her study, indicates that women counselors were found to be generally less age biased. But, other counselor characteristics that were measured—age, counseling experience, or training—did not indicate any significant correlation with age bias. In another article, Troll (EJ 146 012) calls attention to the probability that counselors and psychotherapists share the age stereotypes of other Americans. Kinds of age bias noted are: age restrictiveness, age distortion, and negative attitudes associated with specific ages. Despite this evidence of bias, counselors do have a responsibility to their adult clients to minimize the bias associated with job placement. The need for strength to cope with personal crises that tend to interfere with job performance is related to success in career change and job placement.

Personal. People around us everyday—in school, work, or their home—are experiencing some distress. Most of these adults are intelligent, capable, and successful in many ways, but they all suffer distress that limits their achievements and cripples in some way their ability to cope with the normal crises in life. Throughout the literature, authors allude to special needs of adults and to their crisis points (EJ 018 359, 146 006). Kimmel (EJ 147 847) concentrates on the crisis points in the adult life span that present counseling opportunities and challenges as examples of how counseling needs in adult years are not being met. Unmet needs in counseling, most authors agree, are those involving more emphasis on and preparation for death and dying.
Death and dying. Although society has sought to shield us from the stark reality of death, the subject is currently gaining in popularity. Death is prevalent in all of nature and human life, but despite its commonness, the grief situation is often handled unrealistically, causing devastating emotional upheaval. The literature focuses on death as something that can be systematically explored, resulting in a decrease in the inherent dread that is associated with death (EJ 147 853, 147 854, 147 855). Bascue (ED 094 274) uses a more investigative approach, exploring available clinical research and popular information about the subject and encouraging counselors to analyze their own experiences, emotions, and theories about death. On the other hand, Asline (ED 094 278) emphasizes the necessity for realistic preparation such as wills and burial arrangements. Regardless of individual differences among authors, they all encourage a more realistic and calm approach to the subject of death and dying.

Spiritual awareness and religion. The subject of religion is not without its stresses. One might ask, "How can religion present problems to men and women?" Most religions provide followers with a set of ideals for personal and social living. Often these ideals come into conflict with societal changes that influence every facet of life causing mental and emotional conflicts to arise. Moberg (ED 057 348) addresses some major issues relevant to the spiritual well-being of adults. Examples of these issues are the need for religious organizations and society to develop and promote services and programs for older adults, and the need to examine goals proposed by previous groups and conferences. Moberg's main purpose in his paper is to encourage the development of recommendations that will lead to the adoption of national policies promoting services.
and programs which will contribute to the spiritual needs of older adults.

Types of Counseling Approaches and Techniques

Various counseling methods and techniques have been suggested to help adults successfully meet life's difficulties. The different types of counseling represented in the literature emphasize the issues which are most significant today. For example, Phillips (EJ 071 004) offers suggestions to the marriage counselor and believes testing material is useful for marriage counseling. A pilot study by Cookerly (EJ 089 281) reveals the outcome of six major forms of marriage counseling and compares them in terms of their effectiveness. Another author, Doyle (EJ 099 106), describes a course in marriage communication which features a melodramatic script that focuses on a single type of marital conflict. Trainer (EJ 071 006) describes the emergence of a new style of family physician whose education incorporates more behavioral science. He encourages closer cooperation between physicians, clinical psychologists, and marriage counselors. Inherent in the review of the material on marital counseling is the need for values clarification with psychological and philosophical implications (EJ 071 010). Fisher suggests a new term to replace "marriage counselor" (EJ 071 005), advocating the use of the less restricted phrase "marriage and divorce counselor."

In addition, the literature reveals the use of newer, different approaches to counseling adults such as:

1. Developmental counseling (EJ 146 011) where counseling intervention is conceptualized as mobilizing resources to facilitate growth;
2. Management development counseling (EJ 095 794) for counseling individuals who need aid in implementing personal management development programs;

3. Systems approach (ED 142.914), used mainly in career selection for adults, but also applicable to high school and college level individuals.

Finally, authors place less emphasis on the still widely recognized and valued peer counseling approach (EJ 075 831).

Subgroup: Adults

The literature indicates a concern by authors for dealing with specific problems of subgroups among adults. Five specific subgroups, women, cultural minorities, veterans, disadvantaged adults, and prison inmates, are discussed in the following paragraphs.

Women. One cannot study specific career programs or needs for women without considering legislation relating to career development. Waters (EJ 177 077) discusses the current status of legislation and the counseling needs of women at various ages. A special need exists for women returning to colleges and jobs (EJ 003 488, 045 515, 085 715, 085 760, 169 327; ED 023 059, 150 479), with added emphasis on group counseling programs (ED 089 805) to assist women in adjusting to their new roles as students. Other issues concerning women involve ways that counselors can be more effective in their efforts to understand and work with women (EJ 085 626, 147 856; ED 014 106). In addition, authors support courses designed specifically to teach women skills, attitudes, and behaviors for coping successfully in the new world of women (EJ 130 572; ED 150 480).
Cultural minorities. Vontress (EJ 147 857) asks that counselors be more sensitive to the culturally different client. He also believes that sensitivity should be displayed to the middle-aged or aging minority group member who constitutes a minority within a minority. Adding to that concern is Furgess who (EJ 147 846) points out that elderly blacks have many needs and problems, and counselors must be trained to deal with them.

Continuing the plea for help for cultural minorities, two authors discuss the need to understand the adult Indian (EJ 095 068). Rollins (ED 113 612) talks about the adult basic education program which attempts to develop a productive interpersonal relationship with its Indian students and concentrates on individual differences.

Veterans. Since many veterans are enrolled in educational institutions, Betts (ED 083 984) proposes a handbook to provide information that will aid in establishing bonds between veterans and those professional persons providing services to them. One author (EJ 082 521) devotes his article to the practical problems confronting veterans who are reentering society. He also includes topics such as college admissions, readjustment to school or college, vocational rehabilitation, experiences of a woman veteran, and the counseling of veterans.

Disadvantaged adults. Giroux (EJ 075 829) provides an overview of research on the subject of disadvantaged adults, noting that many disadvantaged adults are excluded from participation in educational programs. Two authors expressed interest in programs for counselors to become more aware of their responsibilities toward and understanding of the under-educated adult (ED 058 511, 023 015).
Prison inmates. Finally, the literature supports educational programs specifically designed for prison inmates (EJ 089 875).

Model Programs and Projects

An examination of the scope and dimensions of programs designed for specific needs of adults emphasizes two main areas—career education and counseling, and continuing education (including basic and advanced courses). The following is a breakdown of programs in the order of emphasis in the literature.

Career education and counseling. One report (EJ 094 221) describes a program involving phone-in counseling. Through a local telephone exchange manned by trained counselors, adults can seek free career information and guidance. Similarly, Arbeiter (ED 143 992) reports that the Career Education Project (CEP) also offers telephone counseling to home-based adults.

Grothe, also using the telephone as the medium of communication (ED 124 728), reports on a telephone counseling service manned by paraprofessionals. In addition, the article provides information on planning and designing the service, with procedures for counseling clients, recruiting and selecting professional and paraprofessional personnel, training and supervising personnel, and an informational section regarding collecting and recording client data.

Waters (EJ 160 274) presents a more theoretical basis and rationale for various career activities. For example, she discusses a six-session career development program for adults which includes suggestions for adapting standard career materials to meet the needs of the adult population. For an integrated learning experience in career change for adults, Boren and others (EJ 140 876) describe the Second Careers Program which combines academic work, experiential learning, and group and individual counseling, to assist older persons who are contemplating a career change with mid-life transitions.

Still in the career education area, but with a training thrust, the final report of the Northwest Regional Education Laboratory in Portland, Oregon (ED 143 828) gives an account of their special demonstration project to develop, pilot test, evaluate, and disseminate a competency-based, open-entry/open-exit training program model for adult education guidance and counseling personnel known as Skills for Adult Guidance Educators (SAGE). The conceptual model is predicated on an interrelationship among four concepts involving life stage, life-style, life space, and total life planning. The value of this system is in its adaptability to many diverse adult and counselor education settings.

Also in the area of training, Burton (ED 115 742) discusses a special project operated by the City Board of Education in Huntsville, Alabama, to perfect a career decision-model that can be used by Adult Basic Education (ABE) teachers to help disadvantaged adults upgrade themselves educationally and make realistic career decisions based on their personal value systems. Another element in this project is an emphasis on family background, resulting in a more complete picture of the client.

Basic and continuing education. The literature contains descriptions of continuing education programs (EJ 173 082; ED 101 165) for adults, including those involving basic education with remedial instruction and higher education with advanced degrees.

Harrison (ED 134 267) relays information on the Downtown Study Centre, a demonstration project offering service in adult basic education and advisement. The unique feature of this program is its "start anytime," open-entry, open-exit courses in English and mathematics at all levels—from basic literacy through grade 12 equivalency.

Counseling is another basic education issue. The literature reflects the support for programs dealing with adult basic counseling (ED 030 060) including aptitude testing. An added feature is a general outline for a model guidance and counseling program (ED 074 309).

At the other end of the continuum is higher education for adults that places special emphasis on the difficulties personnel services encounter attempting to integrate the non-traditional or older-than-average student into daytime college activities. Plotsky (ED 138 916) also reveals concern for assisting these students in making the adjustment to the student role.

Another program (ED 084 403), described in a report to the Ohio Board of Regents of Ohio University, expresses interest in those adults whose unique needs are not met by existing programs of higher education. As a result, more emphasis has been placed on individualized counseling to recognize each student's unique circumstances and aspirations.

Swatt (ED 122 077) reports on adult business education in the public evening school which provides education for adults who have already entered the labor market and need education to update or upgrade their current employment skills. The monograph also describes methods of planning adult programs and the teaching of methodology appropriate to adult learners. The literature would not be complete without a look at alternatives to traditional classroom learning (EJ 120 621). Examples include universities' acceptance of standardized examination results as evidence of learning, and external degree programs which involve a reorganization of the higher education system.

Other programs and projects. The literature covers other existing programs and strategies that are worth mentioning for their innovative approaches and proven effectiveness. Harrison (EJ 146 013) examines the scope and dimensions of adult counseling programs in the United States, highlighting programs for women, ethnic minorities, and people contemplating mid-career changes. In the area of employment, at least three programs (ED 011 984, 056 282) involve work experience projects, or job preparation for low-income adults. On the subject of preretirement, one author discusses selection and training of facilitators (EJ 178 806) for preretirement planning seminars, and another (ED 054 403) covers consultation and technical assistance in preretirement education and planning for business, industry, labor, government, and other groups. Finally, two authors praise the use of computers to assist in counseling by providing a comprehensive data bank of information (EJ 146 014) on occupational and educational (ED 122 075) matters.

Program Evaluation

One demonstration project (ED 052 317) was designed to develop and evaluate a preretirement planning program. The evaluation was conducted through participant evaluation, observation of behavior changes (e.g., having a will drawn or consulting a trust office), and determination of changes in attitudes and adjustments. The findings showed a positive change in adjustment to retirement among the 50-65 age group, as well as increased involvement in activities to prepare for retirement among those attending the program.

Educational Resources and Services

The literature includes many services and resources for clients and counselors (EJ 054 178, 137 546) who require training and information. Several services relating to career matters are described in the following paragraphs.

A collection of materials (ED 124 731), developed by the Home and Community-Based Career Education Project, includes the processes involved in reviewing and compiling information about educational, training, and supportive resources for career-related materials for adults. The principal focus is on materials created by the project's information unit to meet the particular needs of their clients and counselors. Included are three major directories (occupational projects, education and training resources, and supportive services) and four separate packages (career development series, women and the world of work, and others). A manual describes in detail how to develop the directories and how to gather and organize the data for their different sections. The publication by Banks et al. (ED 123 496), presents both a shelf collection list and a series of annotated bibliographies on selected topics in the collection of the resource center for the Education Development Center's Home- and Community-Based Career Education Project. It is intended as a guide for acquiring some of the holdings and as a basis for selecting particular types of career-related materials for home-based adults (individuals ages 16 and over who are not working or attending school full-time).

Another bibliographic collection contains contributions of researchers, administrators, and practitioners in the field of adult counseling (ED 143 885). Another valuable resource is a review of the literature on counseling and information services for adult learners (ED 143 332). Also, Ironside (ED 130 675) discusses a collection of some 286 items relating to counseling and information services as well as trends and issues in counseling.

In the area of career resource centers, Tobin (ED 124 730) indicates that a series of manuals is available through the Home- and Community-Based Career Education Project to cover occupational information and other materials suitable for adult counseling. Finally, resources involving training include competencies needed by counselors of adults (ED 094 124), and guidelines for counselors in community adult school systems (ED 058 558).

Implications for Counselor Education

Most counselor education programs include the basics for counseling adult and student career-changers. Traditional courses are given in educational and occupational information and in administering a series of psychological and educational tests to determine the clients' general and specific abilities, as well as special aptitudes and achievements, particularly in areas where they have had special training and past experience.
But can traditional curricula meet the needs of the nontraditional students who are returning to our educational institutions in increasing numbers? According to the literature, curricula must be updated to include the following emphases:

1. An image of counselors taking on the new challenge of acting as change agents and practitioners reaching out to middle-aged and older persons (EJ 147 861);

2. An understanding of the decision-making process and the salient issues of adulthood (EJ 146 010);

3. A competency-based individualized instructional training system (EJ 122 402).

Finally, Peterson (EJ 069 356) discusses the use of traveling faculty who function as counselors to those adults interested in resuming or changing careers.

Research

The literature covers two main areas of research. First, the role and scope of adult counseling programs (ED 089 821), including one study that investigated the 19 public community junior colleges in Kansas. The purpose was to provide data which could lead to a series of recommendations concerning specific programs and practices which would help to establish guidelines relative to adult counseling and guidance programs in community junior colleges. Second, the consideration of the relationships between successful adjustment to retirement, preretirement counseling, and the psychological, economic, and other background characteristics of individual employers. A preliminary study was conducted at eight medium- to large-sized companies, four with special programs and four without. It was concluded that preretirement counseling programs aided adjustment and weakened older employees' resistance to retirement, as well as improving morale and job-related attitudes.

Conclusions

Adult counseling is in need of a new image. As perceived by many adults it is specifically devoted either to information giving or to assistance in obtaining employment. Some adults shy away from counseling because they perceive it to be an admission of weakness, an indication that they are unable to resolve their own problems. Whatever the myriad reasons for present perceptions of adult counseling, the image is one that does little to attract clients—and those who do seek counseling come with limited goals and expectations. Until there is a more widely disseminated positive view of adult counseling and a clearer understanding of its potential contributions to personal growth and problem-solving, adult counseling will likely remain stagnated at its present minimal level of use and effectiveness.

A popular notion in practice if not in theory is that adult counseling is an ad hoc specialty, one in which students can acquire expertise through proclamation rather than by didactic and field experiences. The minimum essentials of an effective adult counselor preparation program would seem to be specialized instruction and activities in such areas as the physiology and psychology of aging; age bias and stereotyping; adult developmental periods; important adult transitions, i.e., mid-life career change, stages in parenting, or preretirement; and practicum and field experiences in counseling with adults of widely differing socioeconomic levels and presenting problems. The literature contains few references to the presence and operation of such comprehensive programs. To date most would-be adult counselors have had to settle for piecemeal preparation experiences obtained through adding a few catch-all courses to the existing counselor education program. Upgrading both the breadth and quality of courses offered in adult counseling preparation programs is a clear necessity.

"Crisis-oriented," "short-term," and "educationally-focused" are some of the terms that would most frequently be used to describe present adult counseling emphases. Such emphases have served a useful purpose, however, in providing an identity and a focus for a fast developing professional specialty. Current emphases, while continuing to acknowledge the importance of attending to the needs of adult sub-populations for assistance at key periods, stress the desirability of offering a developmental service that capacitates adults to cope more effectively with predictable major life transitions. A developmental orientation includes assisting young adults to acquire a lifelong perspective and to consider the need to accept and plan for their own mortality, as well as to acquire and exercise skill in such areas as decision-making, life planning, and values determination.
Proponents of adult developmental counseling stress the importance of early initiation and continuous utilization of the service. Young adults are helped to see the probability of their having multiple careers in a lifetime and the need to be exploring and preparing for new career opportunities. Retirement is viewed as something to prepare for in the forties, when individuals begin planning and building their reservoirs of physical and psychological resources for the second half of their lives. Crises are thus avoided or reduced in severity because individuals have prepared themselves for significant life events and are equipped with effective life coping methods.

Overall, adult counseling is clearly the right service at the right time. The increasing recognition by our graying population that the mature years can be something more than "maintenance and decline" will surely lead to unprecedented demands for counseling services. The wide range of needs and interests of adults makes the task of providing reliable counseling services formidable indeed. Superficial, generalized, patent adult counseling which is presented as a cure-all for adult ills will hardly suffice. New and imaginative approaches must be developed which are firmly grounded in the emerging conceptualizations and knowledge about adults and the aging process. They must take into account as well the special needs of adult sub-populations such as minorities, handicapped, and women. Most of all, adult counseling must prepare adults with the knowledge, skills, and attitudes to create a rewarding life for themselves now and in the future.

Summary

We live in a time of great change. The evidence is there for us to see in almost every aspect of human life. But because adults have become established in their basic patterns of thought and action, the challenges of adjustment forced upon them by social changes and normal life disturbances are difficult indeed.

Changes in our social institutions encourage adults to keep pace with the times as they make uncertain moves regarding their educations, careers, and personal lives. Counselors, teachers and other personnel who assist with counseling needs must strive to understand, without bias, the motivations... of adults who are returning to schools and colleges in large numbers (ED 149 305). The areas of adult education and counseling (ED 030 060, 074 309, 114 583) are developing rapidly, and the literature emphasizes the importance of understanding the problems of these new students.

Career moves later in life are often the result of educational changes. This creates a need for services of all types crucial to the success of the adult. Informational projects and serices include directories, bibliographies, and reviews of the literature involving career-related and counseling materials (ED 123 496, 124 731, 130 675, 143 885, 143 993).

For those adults interested in early retirement, organizations are participating in the trend to develop preretirement planning programs (EJ 090 748) to lessen the impact of post-retirement shock.

Death and dying predominate the literature concerned with personal issues (ED 094 278, EJ 147 853, 147 854, 147 855) with emphasis on a realistic and calm approach to the experience. Another crucial area is the rights of women and cultural minorities (EJ 177 077) with special emphasis on understanding the needs and problems of elderly blacks (EJ 147 846) and the adult Indian (EJ 095 068, ED 113 612).

Counselor education programs must meet the task of preparing counselors to deal with the needs of the new adult students who require education and counseling. Traditionally, programs include courses in educational and occupational information, assessment, and practicums. However, the literature uncovers a trend toward an interdisciplinary approach to counseling (EJ 161 732), with a thorough understanding of the decision-making process and the salient issues of adulthood (EJ 146 010).
As new programs, models, and services are proposed for adults, evaluation techniques must be studied. At least one program evaluation was conducted through participant evaluation and observation of behavior changes (ED 052 317). Authors stress the value of designing and developing various evaluation techniques. Greater emphasis is being placed on research to provide recommendations and guidelines relative to adult counseling and guidance programs in community junior colleges.

Finally, as the authors throughout the literature identify new problems and satisfactions of human life in this society, Neugarten (ED 012 055) charges the counselors of tomorrow with the responsibility of developing new expertise in helping adults cope with the obstacles and opportunities that they recognize as significant to the fulfillment of their life goals.
Revitalizing the Career Information Service

Counseling for Life Skills Development in the Disadvantaged Adult: A Review Giroux, Roy J.; Pietrofesa, John J.
Canadian Counselor, 7, 1, 2-8 Jan 73
This article provides an overview of research relevant to the disadvantaged adult. A majority of the disadvantaged are excluded from participation in educational programs because of the nature of current educational programs, e.g., prerequisites to training. Inadequate background is highly related to unemployment and low aspirational levels. A vicious cycle develops. The implications for education and counseling are explored. (Author)

Following a discussion of the need for the service the document presents a proposal for the establishment of a career resource center in order to properly utilize and disseminate career information to students in Grades 8-9 in selected Pennsylvania schools. The career resource center will be involved with the following activities: (1) collection, synthesis, and placement of career information resources available from commercial and other sources; and (2) institution of an organized system for the dissemination of career information to students. The individual responsible for the organization, administration, and implementation of these services will be the career resource specialist who is a paraprofessional employed and trained by the local district. The career resource specialist will work cooperatively with the professional guidance staff in the school. Other staff members include the counselor and supporting staff (community volunteers and students). The paraprofessional will also be responsible for collecting data for the evaluation of project objectives. Necessary information for the planning of the career resource center includes suggestions for the budget and costs and amount of particular equipment and materials. A bibliography is included. (Author/EC)
This study presents a set of opinions on how to obtain rapport with and give preliminary counseling to individuals who have adopted distinct and different aging mannerisms. The nine mannerisms treated were abstracted from the studies of Neugarten and Reichard. The research sample was selected from the members of the Gerontological Society. Six forms of the research instrument were created, each containing three of the nine behavioral mannerisms. Each mannerism appeared on two of the six forms. Combinations of any two stereotypes appeared only once in the six forms. The sample was asked to:

1. Estimate the percentages of the elderly population that could be described by the three stereotypes.
2. Recommend the best way to attain rapport with and resolve the problems of each group, and
3. Suggest motivating appeals for making changes.

Regardless of type of behavior, the individual citizens exhibited, there were three universal rules that the gerontologists laid down for the rapport and counseling process. 1. Every person, irrespective of state of mind or background, must be treated with dignity and respect. 2. Listen, observe, and empathize before making suggestions. Recommendations for each of the mannerisms are presented. (Author)

A survey of adult continuing education needs and preferences under the auspices of the Division of Continuing Education, New York Education Department, was completed by a total of 20,908 state New York adults, excluding New York City. The survey instrument was designed to obtain information from adults (all persons sixteen or older who were not currently full-time students) in personal interviews and focused on six major areas: (1) background information on the adults surveyed, (2) past participation in continuing education activities, (3) expressed learning interests, (4) obstacles to participation in continuing education activities, (5) preferred conditions for participation in continuing education, and (6) potential for utilization of counseling and advising services for adults. The interview data were analyzed for the entire sample and for various subgroups, regions, and local communities. Approximately 94% of the respondents identified one or more subjects of personal interest, with half of these adults naming five or more topics of interest. The respondent selected a first-choice learning interest as well as naming all topics which held some interest for him or her. Ten tables included in this paper summarize the findings in the six major survey areas by the variables of sex, age, and educational background.

This paper describes a three-phase developmental process which often occurs following the termination of an ongoing and intimate relationship. The phases are separation, individuation, and reconciliation. Each phase has a unique but interrelated matrix of psychosocial reactions, needs and potential for personal and interpersonal development. The paper includes a discussion of the dynamics of the three phases and of the role of the therapist in responding effectively to clients in each phase. The emphasis is on perceiving clients' behavior during these phases as inevitable consequences of transition, rather than definitive signs of psychopathology. Guidelines for effective therapy are discussed in terms of a therapist's previous relationship history, current emotional readiness and personal belief system.

Career Transitions: The Demand for Counseling. Volume I.
Fisher, Joseph A.
EDRS Price MF-$0.83 HC-$2.06 Plus Postage.

More and more older adults are returning to college, either to complete academic degrees or to take refresher courses in their professional areas. Educators can accommodate the motivations that bring these students back to school and by providing them with educational counseling that will enhance their learning ability. Some of the adult learner's counseling problems include lack of self-confidence, unrealistic expectations for progress, fixed values and attitudes that conflict with other students' attitudes, impatience with abstract or general learning tasks, failure to seek help before problems got out of hand, and lack of efficient reading and study habits. Drake University's College for Continuing Education has developed an orientation course, called the Back-to-School Survival Skills Program, that helps older adults reacquaint themselves with the college environment and deal with problems they may encounter. The program has been highly successful, receiving enthusiastic support from its students and national attention that should prompt its implementation at other schools. (AL)

Career Transitions: The Demand for Counseling. Volume I.
Fisher, Joseph A.
EDRS Price MF-$0.83 HC-$2.06 Plus Postage.

This is a report of a survey of the career guidance and counseling needs of 401 representative infants in transition in the United States. None were full-time students, and all were either undergoing or anticipating job or career changes. The survey determined that 36% of the American population between the ages of 16 and 65 is in a career transition status, and these adults are predominantly female, white, between 20 and 39 years of age, and married with one to two children living at home. Adults in transition want career services of all types, but are most interested in specific information on jobs, careers, or educational opportunities. Of all adults, the least educated express the greatest interest in services and are willing to pay for them. The adults were asked to indicate their degree of interest in various types of services: information, counseling, guidance and training. Generally speaking, when given the choice as to what kind of help they wanted with a particular topic, adults preferred information to the other three services. (PH)

This is the report of a follow-up study of 400 randomly selected former clients of the Career Education Project (CEP). CEP was an innovative program, funded by NIE, which offered telephone counseling to home-based adults in Providence, Rhode Island. ACP attracted and served clients who were predominantly female, white, and 20-34 years old. They were most likely to be married with one or two children at home, with incomes of $5000-15,000, of varied educational attainment. The few adults using the service were single, under 30, with incomes of less than $10,000 a year. CEP clients were overwhelmingly satisfied with the service they received, with their counselors, and with the telephone as a medium of communication. They felt the Project had helped them accomplish their goals, improve their situations, and develop more self-confidence. The type of counseling considered most valuable was in the area of self-evaluation, goal setting, and career decision making. About half the clients indicated they would be willing to pay for the services they had received, but only a few would agree to pay more than $25. Career Selection: A Systems Approach. Although primarily intended for counseling adults, it should also be applicable to high school and college level individuals. The systems model identifies three groups of individuals who need career counseling: (1) program-selected individuals; (2) cluster-area-selected individuals; and (3) undecided individuals. The model attempts to present a step by step process for selecting a career. The flow-chart approach is used for several reasons. It organizes the necessary steps involved in selecting a career, indicates that the procedure is replicable, and gives the counselor a graphic view of the total process. (Author)

This report discusses the difficulties encountered by student personnel services in fitting the nontraditional or older-than-average-student into daytime college activities. The example of the Services for Returning Students at the University of Texas at Austin offers educational counseling services to persons who have experienced an interruption in their studies. In an effort to form a social group for such persons, student personnel workers successfully implemented the Students Older Than Average (SOTA) program. The Union Program Office at the University provides the financial support while the Services for Returning Students promotes student contact. The operational concept in the approach is based on: (1) planning activities for an increasing subpopulation; (2) assisting these students in making the adjustment to the student role; and (3) promoting the transition for their split-level lifestyle as student, family member, and/or employee. This paper summarizes seven innovative conferences, designed to meet the educational and career counseling needs of adults. The conferences were developed at an urban state university, and can be adapted to and adopted by community colleges, private colleges and other universities. The purposes of these conferences were (1) to give educational and career information and encourage to adults; (2) to give educational and career information to individuals in policy making positions in industry, labor, education and government. The conferences spoke to current needs of adults in a community without committing the adults to the institution to long term programs. The institution by serving the needs of all ages became a more viable part of the community. (Author)

This report describes the 1975-76 operations of the Downtown Study Centre, a demonstration project offering service in adult basic education and advisement. The center offered "start anytime" open-entry, open-exit courses in English and mathematics at all levels, from basic literacy and numeracy through grade 12 equivalency. During 1975-76, 189 adults studied at the center. Of this group: (1) 165 were between 17 and 44 years of age; (2) 14 were unemployed; (3) the majority engaged in studies for the purpose of self-improvement and enhancement of employment potential; (4) 39 received a grade 12 diploma and (5) 60 obtained or returned to a job. Overall, the project was evaluated as successful since it provided adult basic education service to individuals suffering educational handicaps. In terms of the advisement function of the project, it was estimated that the Centre responded to approximately 1,200 inquiries during the year, and that in-depth advisement was performed in approximately 300 cases. Appendixes are a flyer describing the purposes and offerings of the Centre, a background and brief chronology of Centre funding proposals and difficulties, and a statement of operating expenses for 1975-76.

Continuing the Development of Career: A Symposium

EDRS Price MF-$0.83 HC-$2.06 Plus Postage.
Following a brief introduction by the editor, four symposium papers are presented on continuing the development of career: "Career Development in Adults: Why Do People 35 and Over Change Jobs?" Nancy K. Schlossberg; "Applying Vocational Theory to Adult Problems," John L. Holland; "Career Development of Adults: Why, Where, Now," Elinor Waters, and "A Philogynous Proposal: Up With Women," Mary Lou Randour. Dr. Schlossberg discusses the causes of mid-life career changes emphasizing that they do not necessarily relate to job loss or the downgrading of opportunity. A framework is presented for understanding adult career development and planning career development programs. John L. Holland's paper summarizes his developmental and structural theories on vocations. Several suggestions are presented for the practice of vocational guidance in mid-life career development. Professor Waters describes a six session career development program for adults. The clientele, format, and course content are described. The final paper by Dr. Randour discusses sex discrimination problems and the needs of women in the world of work. A solution suggested in Dr. Randour's paper is the creation of a child service educational reward system based on the concept of the Veterans Administration educational benefits. (Author/BP)

One of a series of manuals developed by the Education Development Center's home- and community-based career education project, the report describes the career and counseling component of the project. The core of the project is career counseling by telephone, provided by trained paraprofessionals. It was found that paraprofessionals can deliver career counseling services effectively by using telephone as a medium of client-counselor interaction. The publication includes information on planning and designing the counseling service, procedures for counseling clients, recruiting and selecting professional and paraprofessional personnel, training and supervising personnel, using resource materials, collecting and storing client records.

The publication presents both a shelf collection list and a series of annotated bibliographies on selected topics in the collection of the resource center of the Education Development Center's home- and community-based career education project (one of the National Institute of Education's four career education models). It is intended as a guide for acquiring some of the materials and as a basis for selecting particular types of career-related materials for home-based adults, those 16 and over who are neither working nor attending school full-time. Contents are arranged in two sections: materials in the shelf collection list of the resource center and annotated bibliographies of some of these materials on seven major topics. Four of these topic categories contain materials of use to both counselors and clients: directories and information on financial aid and educational and training resources, occupational information, and the job search. The other three—on counseling, career education, and women—include materials primarily useful to counselors, educators, and other professionals. The shelf collection list is arranged by 66 subject headings taken from the "Thesaurus of ERIC Descriptors." Both sections provide ordering information for materials cited.

Focusing on adult business education in the public evening school, the monograph first presents a brief history of the educational form and its philosophical foundations for progress and then lists programs of business curriculums, both preparatory and supplementary. The broad preparatory programs offer courses to educate adults for entry into the labor force in a new or former occupation. Courses in the preparatory curriculum cover accounting, shorthand, business data processing, business organization and management, office machines and procedures, system design and development, and typewriting. The supplementary programs, often of short or single courses, provide education for adults who have already entered the labor market and need education to update or upgrade their current employment skills. Planning and criteria for adult business education in several States are presented, along with short descriptions of courses offered. Such courses are conducted by secondary schools, vocational-technical schools, and many postsecondary institutions. Complete vocational guidance services should be available for adults, such as testing and counseling, educational and occupational information, and placement and followup. The monograph also discusses methods of planning adult programs and the teaching methodology appropriate to adult learners. (MF)

The concept of lifelong learning places new emphasis on helping out-of-school adults make their educational and employment choices. Educational institutions are beginning to extend their counseling services to adults who need them. However, other agencies and various educational programs designed to meet specific adult needs, which include educational and/or employment counseling, operate throughout the state of Pennsylvania. This report identifies the types and locations of the various counseling services within the state on a regional basis. While this report focuses on specific services in a single state, it offers guidelines to others, relating to services which might be offered as part of a total state service program to all adults in that state. In 1974, the California legislature directed the California Postsecondary Education Commission to develop a plan for establishing independent postsecondary education counseling centers to serve California residents not enrolled in a college or high school. On the basis of interviews, a review of the literature, and site visits to existing counseling centers, the Commission developed three alternative plans for pilot advisement centers. Each center would provide: (1) a comprehensive testing program to enable clients to assess their educational strengths and weaknesses, career skills, and interests; (2) current information and advice on all public and private postsecondary education opportunities in California; (3) information and counseling about career options, requirements, and opportunities in the state; (4) information on costs of education and opportunities for financial aid; (5) current information about special programs (such as child care) or services of educational institutions and agencies in the community; and (6) a referral service to help clients obtain needed counseling information not directly provided by the center. Included in the proposal is a plan for an information system which would help coordinate and disseminate existing information about local opportunities, programs, and services. (Author/DC)

The purpose of the special project, operated by the City Board of Education (Huntsville, Alabama), was to perfect a career decision-making model that could be used by Adult Basic Education (ABE) teachers to help the disadvantaged adult upgrade himself educationally and to make a realistic career decision based on his and his family's personal value system. Career counselors trained the ABE teachers in the use of the career decision-making model, using preservice, inservice, and on-the-job training. The teacher and the counselor worked with adult learners in developing the thinking processes needed for career decision making. The document explains in detail the adult career decision-making processes and provides an example of a career decision-making chart, briefly describing each of the 18 points on the chart. Also discussed are the four counseling techniques used: (1) behavioral techniques, (2) educational media, (3) group techniques, and (4) vocationally oriented curriculum. The remainder of the document consists of a annotated bibliography covering occupational information, job search, and study guides for job entry; local community resources; and an annotated list of tests useful in counseling adult learners. Educational Counseling of Adults: Where it's At.
Grabowski, Stanley M.
EDRS Price MF-$0.76 HC-$1.58 Plus Postage
"Counseling adults is the most impoverished, depressed, but developing area in the entire area of adult education." This is due to: (1) a lack of serious commitment by the educational community, (2) a lack of adequate literature, and (3) a lack of clear-cut role distinctions. The limited number of research studies on counseling adults concludes that more progress is found among counseled groups than noncounseled groups and that existing guidance services for adults are inadequate to meet clients' needs. The essence of counseling is the relationship between counselor and client which places emphasis on the client's perception of his/her environment. The role of a counselor may be clarified by examining what tasks counselors of adults perform or by studying the competencies identified as needed for counseling in adult education. Of basic importance in counseling adults is to understand the needs of adults. Moreover, adult students bring many anxieties, over and above those in any learning situation regardless of age or level. For the learning situation. Another consideration is counselor attitudes toward the adult counselor, which can influence the counseling process. Abraham Maslow's explanation of self-actualization is recommended as an ideal model for counselors when dealing with adults. (EA)

Many Indians are leaving their communities to seek employment in the cities, but because of lack of education and social prejudice are forced to live under poor conditions. The Indian Education Center in Vancouver has an adult basic education program that includes counseling. The center tries to help all Indians referred to it; so far its assistance about 200 Indian men and women. The center tries, through trust, confidence, and friendship, to develop a productive interpersonal relationship with its Indian students. It attempts to create a friendly center atmosphere with TV, stereo-tapes, ping pong and pool tables. The program is flexible enough to accommodate individual differences, and individuals are Located in a low income model cities area of Cheyenne, Wyoming, the project provided adult basic education and vocational counseling services. The document offers a detailed summary of its staff and their qualifications, the agenda of a staff workshop, and a summary of the center's recruitment activities and problems. A brief description of the center's programs includes its instructional activities in reading, social studies/science, math, and language and programs of employment orientation, English as a second language, and consumer education. A case study illustrating the student counseling program and procedure is presented with the individualized educational program developed to meet the specific needs of the case. The counseling program aimed at enhancing the educational environment, and counselors' activities included recruitment of students, testing, program evaluation, and some teaching. A research project explored the impact of goal specificity on achievement in adult education. Methodology and analysis procedures for this project are described, and findings tabulated. Though generally inconclusive, results provide preliminary information for further research. (MW)

For the elderly client, the adjustment to aging and a realistic perspective toward death go hand in hand. The counselor must help the client to realize the usefulness of his present life and to make realistic preparations (wills, burial arrangements) for his death. Such work can be done effectively via group or individual therapy sessions, discussions with community or church groups or family sessions. Regardless of the modality employed, both the counselor and the client must find some value in old age, resulting in a more realistic and calm approach to dying.

This paper attempts to provide initial perspectives on guidelines for the preparation of counselors in dealing with client problems as they relate to death. Four elements of a training program are presented: (1) sensitizing counselors and prospective counselors to the topic of death and its potential importance; (2) helping those same people investigate available clinical research and popular information about death; (3) promoting the exploration of their own experiences, emotions, and opinions about death; and (4) having them provide actual services to clients for whom death is a possible concern. In addition to the preparation of counselors for direct service to clients, the writer also relates a number of issues which could benefit from investigation, including the frequency with which counselors come in contact with death-related problems, the attitudes and opinions of counselors about death-related issues, and the experiences with death of students who are interested in serving in particular work settings.

The purpose of this study was to investigate the role and scope of adult counseling and guidance programs in the 19 public community colleges in Kansas. The study is specifically concerned with providing data which could assist in establishing guidelines to adult counseling and guidance programs. The data was collected from two groups in each community college: (1) counselors working primarily with adults, and (2) administrators of adult student personnel programs, adult or continuing education programs. The research procedures are explained in detail including the development of a questionnaire. Research findings, recommendations and personal observations are provided and a bibliography concludes the report. (Author/SW)

A group counseling program for mature women students with family responsibilities was established to assist women in adjusting to their new roles as students. Participants were selected after undergoing an individual interview screening and orientation to the nature and purposes of the program. This approach was used to select only those individuals whose needs were similar and who would seem to benefit from this type of activity. Eight participants were ultimately selected. The program consisted of six sessions held on a weekly basis. Session topics included: Developing Listening Skills; The Community College: A New Experience; Friendships and Family; Careers; and Sexuality. A post-session evaluation instrument was completed by each participant, in addition to an individual participant diary kept for each session. All participants felt that the program was valuable. Reinforcers, Values and Vocational Maturity in Adults.

The purpose of the study is to test the notion that job reinforcers and occupational values are related to vocational maturity. The importance of 21 reinforcers and 11 values were rated by 207 vocational rehabilitation clients and 59 graduate students. The dependent measure was the Adult Vocational Maturity Index. Older subjects with more education were more vocationally mature. Those subjects who considered -- (a) getting a feeling of accomplishment, (b) doing work without feeling it is morally wrong, (c) having steady employment, (d) independence, (e) opportunity to use special talents, (f) challenge, and (g) self-satisfaction -- important, were high in vocational maturity. Subjects who considered such things as -- (a) telling other workers what to do, (b) having the position of somebody in the community, and (c) prestige -- important, were low in vocational maturity. The data indicates that choice of occupational reinforcers and preferences for specified values are reflected in the individual's "vocational maturity." (Author)

An overwhelming response to the model Extended Learning Programs in the greater Cleveland area and in southeastern Ohio, under the leadership of Ohio University, has indicated that there is a sizable group of adults with interrupted college programs and unfulfilled career plans whose unique needs were not or could not be met by existing programs of higher education. The program has placed much emphasis on individualized counseling and has recognized the uniqueness of circumstances and aspirations of each student. The report reviews the organization of the project and the necessary procedures for communication and public relations. One section provides a student profile, compiled from questionnaires, of information about people who applied to the program. Other sections describe the course and credit possibilities presently available to extended learning students, counseling and referral process, types of degree programs conducing to independent study approaches, faculty, inter-institutional cooperation, and financing. Also included is an appendix of case studies of four students. (EA)

RECOVER is a developmental effort involving teams of professionals and paraprofessionals organized to serve the total person with versatility. Coordinated expertise of the team was focused on providing action-type opportunities for starting developmental processes in clients. Methods included counseling, groups, crisis intervention, cluster apartment living, social milieu, education, job-samples, recreation and meeting clients' needs through knowledge of community resources with active involvement and field work. The aim was to start positive snowballs. Then the aim was to keep them rolling. Comparisons between different groups and pre- and post-program functionally showed improvement for graduates in terms of rehospitalization rates, employment, social functioning, and self-concept. The majority also were judged by staff to have attained objectives and made gains. Most clients require years to consolidate gains and develop further; thus, a program must endure itself if growth is to continue. By becoming part of a mental health center and taking advantage of relevant titles of the Social Security Act and DVR case costs, the program can continue starting new clients and backing-up graduates. Personal relations, comprehensive aid, persistence and opportunities for learning by doing are seen as essential aspects of effective psychiatric rehabilitation (Auburn) and Color.

Many needy elderly residents of New York City are unable to seek help of one kind or another, because of the lack of awareness of existing services, inability to complete the application process or hesitancy in accepting assistance from others. Significant unmet needs exist in the areas of housing, health, finances, home services, transportation, loneliness and personal adjustment. During a 40-month period, experiences with 2620 needy elderly residents of four different neighborhoods showed that volunteers from the communities to be served could effectively be trained as 'middlemen' to seek out the hidden older person, determine his needs and help him reach services. Responses were analyzed by categories and numerical responses to the questions asked. The categories were: age, education, employment, occupations, years on job, different jobs, student use of other services, and positive and negative statements. Results of the study show: (1) more women than men seek counseling; (2) the Career Workshop is the only counseling available to many adults; (3) there is a movement from job to job by those of high school and college experience, with both seemingly working in the same occupations; (4) the Career Workshop is of great value to adults of all educational levels. Three appendixes contain: A. Statement of the Problem; B. Questionnaire Schedule; C. Tables of participants' responses; D. Evaluation--Career Workshop 1971 The schedule for the eight meetings of the workshop concludes the report. (DU)

A study was made of eight former Area Winning Community Clubs in Middle Tennessee. Sixteen club representatives and five County Agents were interviewed for the purpose of identifying and describing certain factors that contribute to the organization and continuation of community clubs. The study revealed that every primary reason for original organization and/or continuation came from within the group that constituted the club. The most important single reason for the above, as viewed by club representatives and agents, was that the community as a whole was interested in a specific project and felt that through group action their goal could be more easily attained. The primary reason for continuation of organization over time was because of a desire for recreation and fellowship which could be enjoyed by the group. The community improvement program was shown to be an important channel for Extension teaching. During all three time periods studied, the primary problem was to get members of the community interested in the organization. During the original organization year, the projects undertaken initially were usually simpler, less expensive, and required less time to complete than in later years. (Author/DB)

This paper on Spiritual Well-Being provides information for leaders concerned with the problems of older people. The first four sections of the paper discuss: the need for religious organizations and society to develop and promote services and programs that will contribute to the spiritual needs of the elderly; goals proposed by previous groups and conferences; information on knowledge available in this area; and vital gaps in meeting such needs. The fifth section identifies several major issues relevant to the spiritual well-being of older people. The purpose of the issues is to focus discussion on the development of recommendations toward the adoption of national policies. A bibliography is provided. (Author/DB)

The countries discussed in this paper are the francophone countries of West Africa and the Republic of Congo, with comparative references made to North Africa (mainly Morocco, Algeria, and Tunisia). Obstacles to the adoption of family planning in the countries of tropical Africa are: (1) the high mortality rate among children; (2) a socio-economic structure which favors high fertility: very low levels of literacy; infrastructure and female participation in non-agricultural jobs; an inadequate health infrastructure; an acute lack of health personnel; and governmental opposition to the idea of population control. If family planning were introduced as an integral part of maternal and child health (MCH), it is believed that the program would have some chance of success.

Potential areas of assistance by donor countries in creating a network of MCH centers are:

(1) if desired by the countries, building up a "post-partum" family planning program in major hospitals of major cities;

(2) stimulating the development of MCH centers in both rural and urban areas;

(3) offering scholarships for the training of nurse-midwives and developing local facilities for their training;

(4) offering assistance in the fields of census taking and demographic sample surveys. Ten tables present population, demographic, and mortality data. Two appendixes are reprints of two articles. An annex presents a summary of the meeting proceedings. (DB)

Project ENABEL (Extern Network of Adult Basic Education Leaders) was launched as a pilot project: (1) analyze the essential character of the Adult Basic Education (ABE) problem, (2) identify individuals and institutions whose functions are critically related to the ABE problem, (3) identify personal qualities and professional competencies required of individuals, (4) resolve the question of the appropriate role of the university, and (5) conceptualize a systematic scheme for appropriately relating the university to ABE programs. Each state extern was invited during a summer workshop to develop a plan for improving his own performance and/or the operation of his own local program in ABE. Project staff members visited the home school of each extern for consultation at least once during the project. Interns, other staff members, and selected externs solicited and honored requests for consultation and in-service training from schools not otherwise involved in the network. Conclusions indicate that most participants in the program benefited positively with respect to understanding ABE students, their problems and needs, and the cultural differences between adult education and childhood education. The Social Sciences, as they relate to the aged and the aging, are discussed. Social gerontology seeks to discover the role of the social environment as a determinant of aging and of the behavior and position of older people in society. In the United States, some 20 million people are over 65 years of age, and the median age of the elderly has risen to age 73. There are suggestions that there may be a direct relationship between successful adjustment in old age and educational attainment. It is estimated that about one-sixth of the elderly are functionally illiterate and only five percent are college graduates. It is believed that the solutions to the complex problems in gerontology will require the application of research techniques of practically every scientific discipline. A program in Cleveland, Ohio, utilizes retirees as "Gatekeepers," who act as liaison between health personnel and the elderly in the neighborhood. Communities need to offer a variety of alternatives to match the variety of individual needs among our aged and aging population. Services should include prevention, early diagnosis, and treatment of health problems, and rehabilitation services. Each individual should be offered education tailored to his needs. (DB)

The Pre-Retirement Program Section of the Division for Senior Citizens, Department of Human Resources, Chicago, is charged with providing consultation and technical assistance in pre-retirement education and planning for business, industry, labor, government, and other groups in the area. Current activities of the section include serving as a consultant to employers who are interested in or are presently conducting retirement counseling programs. The section staff members fill speaking engagements to discuss facets of retirement planning. Research is being conducted by the section on types and levels of pre-retirement programs in the area. 100 organizations are presently involved. The division's workshop program is a vital part of the on-going training program for pre-retirement planning counselors. Plans for the future include: (1) exploring the feasibility of a cooperative division/university-sponsored field work program for training college students to become retirement planning counselors; (2) effecting greater cooperation between labor and management in retirement program preparation; (3) stimulating interest in retirement planning among smaller employers; (4) developing a program cost-analysis form for use by clients; and (5) assisting colleges in offering retirement planning courses through adult education and evening courses. This demonstration project was designed to develop and evaluate a pre-retirement planning program, and to train representatives of various organizations to develop their own programs. The seven-session pre-retirement program involved 1,329 participants during its 3 years of operation. The program was evaluated through participant evaluation, observation of behavior changes such as having a will drawn or consulting a trust officer, and determination of changes in attitudes and adjustments. The second phase of the project, involving training in program development, was carried out in a 2-day seminar-workshop held during the project's third year operation. As a result of project activities, a guide book was developed for each of the two phases. The findings show a positive change in adjustment to retirement among the 50 to 65 age group, as well as an increased involvement in activities to prepare for retirement among those attending the program.

Ways of helping coaches to counsel unemployed adults in the solving of their personal problems are explored in this manual. Originally printed as two separate volumes, this reprinting of the study has bound the two together. Volume I involves a general discussion of life's problems and of the need to solve them. This volume contains four parts. Part 1 discusses problem-solving practice in a group situation and probes into the problem-solving practice as a whole. A self-test for counselors is included at the end of Part 1.
Part 2 deals with individual behaviors, both helpful and harmful, in the group situation. Part 3 covers useful techniques for the coach to use in his counseling activities, including such activities as brainstorming and role playing.
Part 4 discusses personal development in the problem-solving groups, such as opportunities and responsibilities of the group member and the acquiring of problem-solving skills.

Volume II refers back to Volume I and contains Parts 5 through 6F. Part 5 covers the life skills coaching process and discusses the learning of life skills and the process of behaviour change. Part 6 examines six important coaching activities: motivating, planning, informing, leading discussions, counseling and evaluating. Seven appendices are included. (CG)

Overview Of Needs, Programs, and Implementations of California, April 30-May 1, 1970

The author begins by overviewing some recent criticisms of the vocational guidance field: (1) too little collaboration with industrial personnel; (2) an emphasis on processing masses of people rather than on the individual; and (3) the need for a systems approach to counseling. His impressions, from the vantage point of industry (i.e., the placement end of the vocational counseling sequence), suggest flaws in the educational-counseling system, resulting in inappropriate, ineffective, and unqualified job applicants. The differences between a counseling approach and the industrial personnel approach to job seekers/holders are enumerated. Trends and circumstances which may affect the infusion of counseling into industrial relations systems are discussed. The paper concludes with a consideration of "lifelong counseling" whereby adults would have vocational counseling throughout their work histories and even into retirement. (FL)

This study analyzed relationships with successful adjustment to retirement, preretirement counseling, and the psychological, economic, and other background characteristics of individual employees. A preliminary study in the western states showed no small companies, and relatively few other, with preretirement counseling programs of any consequence. Eight large and medium sized companies, four with and four lacking such programs, constituted the sample: 648 retirees and employees were interviewed. Most retirees (75%) accepted retirement as such, but many retirees and employees opposed mandatory retirement policies. Finances, health, activities, retirement attitudes, previous retirement planning, marital status, and other background characteristics measured, correlated with income, activities, financial planning, health, enjoyment of activities, retirement attitudes, and marital status.

A study was made to determine the extent of age bias among counselors working with adult clients in educational settings. An Age Norms Inquiry questionnaire was sent to counselors in 55 urban colleges and to members of the Adult Development Guidance Association (381 questionnaires were mailed), either by gu" or officials or the teacher. The typical counselor interviews students, functions at group meetings, keeps records, and gives tests. When the teacher acts as counselor, he must relate teaching goals to guidance objectives. The effective counselor makes advance preparation, listens carefully, asks one question at a time, is sensitive to helpful clues in the pattern of questions and answers, understands nonverbal communications, and is friendly and interested. This report describes counselor aide training activities in the Operation Mainstream project conducted in Vermont, New Hampshire, and Northern Maine. It evaluates the effectiveness of the training program and identifies some significant and effective educational principles, concepts, and techniques. Its overall objective is to suggest a design for educational activities that will impart problem solving and helping skills to nonprofessionals wishing to improve their ability to help others solve their own problems. Content on rural poverty in Northern New England, interaction between counselors and clients, and related matters includes (and is derived from) data consisting largely of opinions and self-reports by community aides, supervisors, and trainers. The document includes 10 tables and figures, a questionnaire, guidelines for data collection, examples of training schedules, reporting forms, and procedures for selecting aides. (Author/LY)

The Office of Education Guidance and Counseling Project for Adult Basic Education in Region VII includes five state programs. Each run somewhat autonomously, in Arkansas, Louisiana, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Texas, for which joint training preparations were made. In Phase I the Project the central staff gathered statistical data on students, classes, and teachers from the individual states and summarized this data, and also drew together descriptive materials on the guidance functions of various personnel in each state; in Phase II each state outlined a proposed guidance and counseling program which would be effective at the local level. During the first year (fiscal year 1969) a guidance and counseling master unit was prepared, using audiovisual and printed material. Summer training workshops for counselors, and the establishment of large and small pilot centers in each state, are now part of the project. A questionnaire has been designed to be administered to guidance personnel and to adult basic education students, in order to attempt to pinpoint elements which increase the likelihood of student success in adult basic education programs. Educational counseling for Adults. Fisher, Joseph A. Drake Univ., Des Moines, Iowa.

69. 16p. EDRS Price MF-$0.76 HC-$1.95 PLUS POSTAGE

Educational counseling applied to adults as a distinct group is becoming increasingly more important because education is fast becoming a way of life in our society. People are more and more desiring to further their education; out of their motives for education comes the emotional significance. There is an interesting relationship between personality problems and educational problems. The learning styles of individuals seem to be seriously affected by their personality. Types of educational counseling problems include: (1) the timid learner, (2) the fickle learner, and (3) the sporadic learner. Each of these types do not know how to learn and thus eventually fail at their educational task. The most common educational counseling problems encountered with adults are: (1) lack of self confidence in one's ability to learn, (2) unrealistic expectations of progress, (3) conflicting values and attitudes, (4) theoretical or irrelevant learning tasks, (5) seeking help too late or in the wrong places, and (6) lack of efficient reading and study habits. Persistence in pursuing educational goals can, however, be helped to meet the ultimate goal. (KJ)

Undertaken by Eastern Wyoming College, this pilot program of adult basic counseling and testing sought to stimulate the enrollment of school dropouts in adult basic education courses, help enrollees discover their vocational interests and capabilities, and aid them in their personal and social adjustment. A full-time counselor took charge of recruiting students, testing them for class placement, counseling them after enrollment, and offering subsequent vocational counseling as well as academic counseling. The General Aptitude Test Battery, five other diagnostic and achievement tests, and a self-image questionnaire proved especially useful as measurement instruments. Student interviews and a definite enrollment increase, with fewer dropouts and a higher percentage of General Educational Development Test completions, gave evidence that the project had achieved many of its objectives. (The document includes adult basic education program guidelines, recommendations, test scores, enrollment data, and the questionnaire.) (Ly)

The adult school counselor's function is to facilitate interaction between the educational needs of the counseled, his circumstances as he sees them, his goals, and the means to reach them. He must provide sufficient information to the counseled to facilitate his making realistic choices. The Handbook for Community Adult School Counselors, prepared by Los Angeles City Schools' Division of Adult Education, offers guidelines for these counselors. It aims to make uniform the services offered in all adult schools. The Handbook focuses on the following topics and their relations to adult counseling: (1) administrative policies, (2) interviews and suggestions for their improvements, (3) testing (uses, types, and limitations), (4) credit evaluation, (5) records (purpose and types), (6) citizenship and visa students, (7) counseling veterans, (8) vocational counseling, (9) graduation requirements for four-year adult schools, and (10) use of community agencies as resources. A number of factors indicate an increased need for vocational counseling services for adults, chief among them being the economic factors of increased material needs, inflation, and technological change; the social factors of unemployment or underemployment; and the increase of women in the job market. The conventional pattern of testing, profile interpretation, prescription, and placement is not adequate to the task of helping adults reshape their occupational outlook. A philosophy centered on the individual, dynamic self-concept of the client is more contemporary. The place of the counselor within this philosophy is to be versatile, well informed, and flexible in helping clients to shape their goals. These goals must be: (1) immediate in time, (2) clearly defined, (3) intellectually attainable, and (4) contributory to the client's ego satisfaction. (8P)

There is a growing demand in all areas of business and education across the nation for increased, and continuing education. Junior colleges have taken a large portion of the responsibility for providing this wide range of education. As community-responsive institutions, they will continue to expand in this function. The junior college aims of providing (1) a general academic education for transfer to four-year schools, and (2) a variety of terminal technical courses, and continuing adult education for job maintenance or upgrading, imply a need for a wide, flexible curriculum and counseling services. The students at a junior college will also range widely in age, intelligence, motivation, and goals. Counseling must adequately fit the individual into this heterogeneous structure. Junior college counseling involves a broad base of information than senior college counseling in several areas: (1) admission, (2) educational planning, (3) personal adjustment, (4) vocational counseling, and (5) employment assistance. The theme of this convention was counseling the adult student. Jerrold I. Hirsch, the convention chairman, introduced the theme, and presented briefly a report of a six-year study on higher adult education calling for further expansion of existing educational opportunities for adults. Robert Mosley summarized the extent of student personnel services presently available to evening students. The keynote address was presented by Alan B. Knox, who discussed interrelationships between counseling and program development for the adult student. Kathryn S. Randolph concerned herself with the nature of the adult student, who he is and his special problems. Goldie R. Kocab presented two papers, one discussing problems and procedures in training counselors for adults, and the second, exploring implications for counseling adults. Peter Moyer addressed himself to the ideas and challenges involved in counseling adult students. (BP)

The Department of Adult Education of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education is involved in a project to document programs and services in continuing education for women in other countries as a frame of reference for policies that would facilitate more adequate provision for such education in Canada. Included in this document are descriptions of selected programs in the United States chiefly concerned with occupation, preparation or upgrading and largely in occupations traditionally considered female, with practically unanimous acceptance of the key role of counseling. Many programs involve research to evaluate program effectiveness and to determine equivalency of life experience and formal educational experience. Eighteen programs at colleges and universities are included, such as Barnard, Cornell, Oakland, Radcliffe, Sarah Lawrence, Syracuse, and Wisconsin. Five community college programs include Cuyahoga, Corning, and Hudson Valley. Also described are programs of the Council for the Continuing Education of Women (Miami, Florida), the National Council of Negro Women, New York State Guidance Centers for Women, and Women's Talent Corps. a discussion between two panels of eight men of the role of counselors and educators in working with adults. The adult male returning to college is about 40. A part-time student working for a degree in liberal arts or, if not that, in education or business administration. There is a need for further study of the adult as a learner and for more comprehensive models of adult development which include provisions for self-exploration taking place all through life. Reassessment of academic requirements and bureaucratic processes to encourage rather than discourage college attendance by adults is needed. Separate adult counseling centers should be established. (The document includes 33 references, 12 tables, the questionnaire, and an occupation code.) (aj)

This report presents the background papers and evaluation of a workshop on college personnel services for the adult. Tests found particularly useful with adults are discussed in the following categories: (1) admissions, (2) placement, (3) remedial, (4) vocational-educational planning, and (5) creativity or innovation. A review of financial aid programs show little aid is available to the adult returning to college. The differences between the adult college students and other students are important to the development of both a counseling philosophy and co-curricular activities in continuing education programs. In 1967, several two-day institutes were held in Indiana for counselors of adult basic education students, and, in addition, a one-week residential institute for selected counselors who had attended a spring institute. Primary emphasis was on awareness of responsibility and understanding of the under-educated adult. Situational and Q-Sort tests were used to determine participant's perception of the role of counselors of educationally disadvantaged adults. Participants entered with a high degree of skill and knowledge about adult counseling which was maintained, but not significantly increased, by the programs. Counselors' perceptions of the undereducated adult as an educable entity increased after the institute, but there was a slight decrease in the perceptions of the adult as an economic unit and as a human being. The selected group who attended the residential institute did not differ from the total group. (Document includes several resource documents--purposes and objectives of the institute, Adult Basic Education in Indiana. Counseling the under-educated adult, the social-psychological sphere of the undereducated adult, Outline of an orientation and guidance training session for teachers and counselors of undereducated adults, and a look to the future.) Because the bulk of professional attention to middle-age change has concentrated on women, and because there is a need for data on differences in career options and alternatives between men and women, a study focused on the processes of adult development, men-in-transition and adults experiencing discontinuity. Data were collected by means of (1) a questionnaire returned by 322 of the 420 male students 35 and over enrolled as undergraduates at Wayne State University in 1967, (2) semistructured group interviews with eight men which explored the reasons for change and stresses involved, and (3)

THIS PROJECT DETERMINED SUCCESSFUL COUNSELING TECHNIQUES AND THE LENGTH OF TIME NECESSARY TO PREPARE EMPLOYMENT COUNSELORS TO WORK WITH WOMEN 35 TO 54 YEARS OLD, AND PRESENTS A GUIDE TO HELP OTHERS INTERESTED IN SUCH A PROGRAM. RESEARCH WAS CARRIED OUT BY A DIRECTOR, THREE FACULTY MEMBERS WHO PLANNED AND PRESENTED THE EIGHT WEEK CURRICULUM, CONSULTANTS FOR SPECIAL TOPICS, AND 20 WOMEN STUDENTS. THESE PARTICIPANTS HAD CLASSES IN THE MORNING AND COUNSELING EXPERIENCE WITH ADULT WOMEN IN THE AFTERNOON. THE FIRST CURRICULAR AREA EXPLORED THE HISTORY, PLACE IN SOCIETY, PSYCHOLOGY, AND EDUCATION OF THE ADULT WOMAN. IN ALL AREAS, COMPARISONS WITH MEN AND WOMEN OF OTHER AGE GROUPS WERE PROVIDED. *PRINCIPLES BASIC TO COUNSELING WERE PRESENTED IN "COUNSELING TECHNIQUES AND PRACTICUM." CONCLUSIONS FROM TAPED INTERVIEWS BETWEEN PARTICIPANTS AND COUNSELEES INDICATE--(1) THERE WAS NO DIFFICULTY IN ESTABLISHING RAPPORT. (2) THE TWO MAJOR COUNSELEE PROBLEMS WERE LACK OF SELF CONFIDENCE AND LACK OF INFORMATION, AND (3) MOST WOMEN DID NOT RESPOND WELL TO THE EXCLUSIVE USE OF THE CLIENT-CENTERED APPROACH. GROUP METHODS WERE INVESTIGATED, AND ARE SEEN AS AN ADJUNCT, RATHER THAN SUBSTITUTE, FOR INDIVIDUAL COUNSELING. OCCUPATIONAL AND RELATED INFORMATION, HEALTH, RELEVANT LEGISLATION, AND VOLUNTEER JOBS ARE ALSO DISCUSSED. RECOMMENDATIONS FOR FUTURE PROGRAMS ARE PRESENTED. (PR)

A CAUSE OUTSIDE OF THEMSELVES. THEY EXPERIENCE FULLY, VIVIDLY, AND SELF-ASSIGNED WITH FULL CONCENTRATION AND ABSORPTION. AT THE VARIOUS CHOICE POINTS PRESENTED TO THEM, THEY MAKE THE CHOICE FOR GROWTH. THE INTRINSIC LEARNING MODEL IS ESPECIALLY ADAPTIVE IN WORKING WITH ADULTS IN WHICH THEY ALREADY HAVE CAPACITIES, TALENTS, DIRECTIONS, MISSIONS, AND CALLINGS. THE COUNSELOR'S JOB, THEREFORE, IS TO HELP THEM TO BECOME WHAT THEY ALREADY ARE MORE PERFECTLY AND TO REALIZE WHAT THEY POTENTIALLY CAN BE. tO COUNSEL ADULTS WITHIN THE NEXT 20 YEARS, ADVANCED PLANNING AND ACTION BASED ON LONG-RANGE ASSESSMENTS MUST TAKE PLACE NOW. HIGHLY RATIONALIZED MANAGEMENT TECHNOLOGIES, CYBERNETICS, SOCIAL ENGINEERING, AND BIOLOGICAL ENGINEERING CAN POTENTIALLY AFFECT THIS PLANNING. SOCIAL AND DEMOGRAPHIC CONDITIONS INTERACTING WITH THESE TECHNOLOGIES WILL INFLUENCE THE CHARACTERISTICS OF WORK, LEISURE, EDUCATION, VALUES, AND DECISION MAKING. VALUES AND BEHAVIOR THAT EMPHASIZE COMMITMENT TO TASK, FLEXIBILITY IN LEARNING, AND EFFECTIVE USE OF INCREASED LEISURE MUST BE LEARNED IN CHILDHOOD AND MODIFIED THROUGHOUT LIFE. DEALING WITH SOCIAL PROBLEMS AND UTILIZING THE OPPORTUNITIES WHICH TECHNOLOGIES AND SOCIAL GROWTH AFFORD WILL REQUIRE THAT PRIORITIES BE ASSIGNED, AND THAT MORE EFFECTIVE CRITERIA FOR CHOICE BE DEVELOPED. THE INCREASING OLDER POPULATION WILL EXERT POLITICAL PRESSURES TO PROTECT IT AGAINST MATERIAL, IDEOLOGICAL, AND EMOTIONAL DISPOSSESSION. BELIEF IN MAN AS BEING UNIQUE IN HIMSELF AND IN HIS RELATION TO THE REST OF THE UNIVERSE WILL BE INCREASINGLY CHALLENGED IN MANY OF THE INFLUENTIAL AND POLICY-PLANNING LEVELS OF SOCIETY. THE MOST IMPORTANT LESSON SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS WILL HAVE TO LEARN IS HOW TO CHANGE RAPIDLY AND FREQUENTLY. THIS ADDRESS WAS PRESENTED AT THE CONFERENCE ON THE TRAINING OF COUNSELORS OF ADULTS (CHATHAM, MAY 22-26, 1965). (RM)

NONPROFESSIONAL NEIGHBORHOOD PEOPLE COULD BE TRAINED TO CARRY OUT SOME PROFESSIONAL EMPLOYMENT FUNCTIONS. WOMEN MADE THE BEST INTERVIEWERS, BUT WERE RELUCTANT TO MAKE HOME VISITS, WHILE MEN WERE MORE SUCCESSFUL AS COUNSELORS. CERTAIN CHARACTERISTICS SEEM TO MAKE FOR SUCCESS—SUCH AS MATURITY, MARRIAGE, A LONG TERM, STEADY JOB, AND PREVIOUS COMMUNITY VOLUNTEER WORK. REASONS FOR TRAINEES' STAYING IN THE TRAINING PROGRAM WERE COUNSELOR SUPPORT, MOTIVATION, EXCELLENT TEACHERS, TRAINING ALLOWANCE, AND NEIGHBORHOOD SUPPORT. REASONS FOR DROPPING OUT WERE DISLIKE OF SCHOOL SITUATION, LACK OF MOTIVATION, AND NO TRAINING ALLOWANCE. GENERAL INFORMATION

1. PRICE LIST
The prices set forth herein may be changed without notice, however, any price change will be subject to the approval of the National Institute of Education Contracting Officer.

2. PAYMENT
The prices set forth herein do not include any sales, use, excise, or similar taxes which may apply to the sale of microfiche or hard copy to the Customer. The cost of such taxes, if any, shall be borne by the Customer. Payment shall be made within 30 days from date of invoice. Payment shall be without expense to CMIC.

3. REPRODUCTION
Express permission to reproduce a copyrighted document provided hereunder must be obtained in writing from the copyright holder noted on the title page of such copyrighted document.

4. CONTINGENCIES
CMIC shall not be liable to Customer or any other person for any failure or delay in the performance of an obligation if such failure or delay (a) is due to events beyond the control of CMIC, including, but not limited to, fire, storm, flood, earthquake, explosion, accident, acts of the public enemy, strikes, lockouts, labor disputes, labor shortages, work stoppages, transportation embargoes or delays, failure or shortage of materials, supplies or machinery, acts of God, or acts or regulations or priorities of the federal, state, or local governments; (b) is due to failures of performance of subcontractors beyond CMIC’s control and without negligence on the part of CMIC, or (c) is due to erroneous or incomplete information furnished by Customer.

5. LIABILITY
CMIC’s liability, if any, arising hereunder shall not exceed restitution of charges.

6. WARRANTY
CMIC MAKES NO WARRANTY, EXPRESS OR IMPLIED, AS TO ANY MATTER WHATSOEVER INCLUDING ANY WARRANTY OF MERCHANTABILITY OR FITNESS FOR ANY PARTICULAR PURPOSE.

7. QUALITY
CMIC will replace products returned because of reproduction defects or incompleteness. The quality of the input document is not the responsibility of CMIC. Best available copy will be supplied.

8. CHANGES
No waiver, alteration, or modification of any of the provisions hereof shall be binding unless in writing and signed by an officer of CMIC.

9. DEFAULT AND WAIVER
a. If Customer fails with respect to this or any other agreement with CMIC to pay any invoice when due or to accept any shipment as ordered, CMIC shall have the right to refuse to make any further shipments until the default is corrected, or cancel the Purchase Order.

b. No course of conduct nor any delay or failure of CMIC in exercising any right hereunder shall waive any rights of CMIC or modify this Agreement.

10. GOVERNING LAW
This Agreement shall be construed to be between merchants. Any question concerning its validity, construction, or performance shall be governed by the laws of the State of New York.

11. DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS
Customers who have a continuing need for ERIC documents may open a Deposit account by depositing a minimum of $200.00. Once a deposit account is opened, ERIC documents will be sent upon request, and the account shall be charged for the actual cost and postage. A monthly statement of the account will be furnished.

12. STANDING ORDER ACCOUNTS
Customers who desire to receive microfiche copies of all ERIC reports announced in each issue of Resources in Education may do so by depositing $200.00 or submitting an executed purchase order. The cost of each issue and postage will be charged against the account. A monthly statement of the account will be furnished.

13. PAPER COPY (PC)
A paper copy (PC) is xerographic reproduction, on paper, of the original document. Each paper copy has a Vellum Bristol cover to identify and protect the document.

14. FOREIGN POSTAGE
Postage for all countries other than the United States is based on the international postal rates in effect at the time the order is shipped. To determine postage allow $0.122/fiche for 75 microfiche or 75 (PC) pages per pound. Customers must specify the exact classification of mail desired, and include the postage for that classification in their order. Payment must be in United States funds.
