The directory lists 123 local or state parent groups for gifted children in 37 states. Groups are listed alphabetically by name under each state. Provided for each listing is name and address; a contact person (name, address, and phone number); an additional contact person; membership number; organization focus; examples of past and present activities; and desired future activities. Also included is a fact sheet on how a parent group can effect legislation for the gifted and talented. (DB)
PARENT/ADVOCATE GROUP

for

THE GIFTED AND TALENTED

John A. Grosset, Ed.D.

April, 19.
There are many similarities between the education of gifted and talented children and the education of other populations of exceptional children. Today, the most pronounced similarity is advocacy initiated and maintained by parents. A parent is the child's first teacher. As such, parents are often more acutely aware of the social, emotional and educational needs of their children than teachers and other professionals, who begin their involvement when the child reaches school age or is admitted to some type of formal school setting.

One significant difference between the education of gifted and talented children and other exceptional students is that the gifted and talented do not have the support of federal law mandating their appropriate education. Parents often find themselves striving to effect their child's education in a system where there is no desire to improve existing conditions. Long ago, parents realized that unity is a key to getting things accomplished. As a result, we have witnessed parents with individual and specific concerns forming coalitions with other parents to achieve common goals. To date, parents of gifted and talented children, working in organized groups, have been instrumental in furthering their child's education. However, the effort has not yet achieved the quality education for the gifted it is capable of on the national level. There are probably two reasons for this underachievement. First, gifted education is a relatively "new" entity in the special education arena. It has not yet had the time to make the progress and effect the change its counterparts have been successful in accomplishing. Secondly, most efforts undertaken by parent organizations have been isolated by state or local districts. Communication between groups seldom, if ever, occurs.

Gifted and talented child education has been a concern of parents for many years. Enhancing communication and promoting shared activities between individual parents and parent groups can be one means of translating that concern into action. Such communication has the potential of evolving into a network that can provide support, information, and direction to other parents, and facilitate the improved education of gifted and talented children. Toward that end, this compilation of names, addresses, and descriptions of parent groups across the country has been completed.

To compile the list, CEC staff sent a letter to each state consultant for the gifted requesting the names and addresses of state and local parent groups from within their state. Each identified group was asked to complete a one-page information survey on the size, activities and future goals of its organization, as well as the current address, president and president-elect or additional contact.
The results of this survey have yielded information on 123 separate parent groups for the gifted and talented, representing 37 states. Thirteen states and the District of Columbia did not report.

The list would not have been possible without the diligent efforts of Ms. Laeten Bechtel, doctoral candidate with the University of Maryland. Additional thanks must go to Ms. Gloria Grisby, who typed and typed, and typed...

It is our intention to revise this list periodically. Therefore, if there are groups that have not been included in this list, or if modifications need to be made in the current listings, please notify

John A. Grossi
Education Specialist, Gifted and Talented

HOW A PARENT GROUP CAN EFFECT LEGISLATION FOR THE GIFTED AND TALENTED

Is it possible for parents to effect the development and subsequent enactment of legislation for the gifted and talented?

Yes; in fact, most of the existing state legislation for the gifted and talented was greatly influenced by parents. In addition, the Education of Gifted and Talented Children's Act of 1978, Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1978 (Public Law 95-561), was formulated with input and support from individual parents and parent groups across the country.

How can parents of the gifted and talented effect legislation?

The best and most effective way parents can influence legislation for their children is through initiating and maintaining open and constant communication with their elected representatives. Elected officials represent all constituents, not just special interest groups. Communication to a representative should deal with pressing legislative issues and should include information that serves to clarify and nurture a given position. The most effective parent groups are those that are well informed about the issues surrounding the education of gifted and talented children, and can furnish specific content information to elected representatives at all levels of government.

What strategies can parents use to effect legislation?

Draft a bill. A parent group can draft a bill sensitive to the needs of all gifted and talented children throughout their state. Once the bill is drafted, the group can then seek a sponsor from among their elected representatives.

Get help from professional advocates. Parents can contact a professional advocate organization for technical assistance in determining a direction and selecting a set of strategies to influence legislation.

Write letters. Writing letters is an activity that can be undertaken easily by individuals or groups. Letters help officials identify voter sentiment on major issues. The content of a letter should be explanatory without being wordy. Legislators appreciate letters that are well thought out and clearly represent a particular point of view. While many letters may be similar, form letters should not be used, as they carry little weight.

Make telephone calls. This strategy is useful for short range activities and immediate input. When telephoning a representative's office, callers should identify themselves and their affiliation such as parent of a gifted and talented child, or member of (name of parent organization). If the legislator is out of the office, speak with a member of the staff. All information will be forwarded to the legislator.

Send a wire. Sending a wire encouraging representative support is most effective on the day a bill is due to be acted upon. Wires should be short and to the point. A good rule of thumb is no more than three typewritten lines.

Visit your representative. Visiting a representative's office requires a greater time and energy commitment than some of the other strategies but it is worthwhile because it allows the representative to personally identify an issue with a person or group.

Testify. Parents should offer testimony at scheduled legislative hearings to present a case for gifted and talented children.

Additional strategies that can be used include:

- Inviting legislators to visit classrooms or programs for the gifted and talented.
- Inviting legislators to speak or attend an organization's banquet.
- Making awards to legislators who have publicly advocated for the gifted and talented.
- Publicizing all relevant activities involving legislators in local newspapers and on radio and television.
