INTRODUCTION

The Hungarian Ethnic Heritage Study of Pittsburgh is pleased to present a series of ten educational curriculum kits concerning the history, culture and current community life of Hungarians in Greater Pittsburgh.

The purpose of this series is to provide an easily understandable guide to the Hungarian ethnic community in Greater Pittsburgh. The ten curriculum kits can be read and understood by the interested student, teacher, and general reader. No special training in Hungarian studies is presumed.

The format of curriculum kits was chosen for several reasons. By treating specific topics separately, we wished to present to the reader, student and teacher a comprehensive view of a well-defined topic. For example, the reader interested in current ethnic life will find most of that information in kits 3 and 4, concerned with "Historic Hungarian Places and Hungarian Community Life," respectively. On the other hand, the historically-inclined reader will turn to kit 2, "Hungarian Immigrants in Greater Pittsburgh, 1880-1980." Another practical consideration was that teachers should be able to use each kit as a basic information source, reading material, and teaching guide on a specific topic. Those interested in several topics will probably review all kits and consult additional sources listed in each of them.

The titles of the ten curriculum kits are:
1. Children's Hungarian Heritage.
5. Hungarian Folk Traditions Revisited.
6. Hungarian Folk Arts and Crafts.
8. Hungarian Historical Sources and Collections in Greater Pittsburgh.

These curriculum kits respond to the special need of the classroom teacher for relevant materials and a teaching guide to Hungarian ethnic studies. The first seven kits introduce selected subject areas, while kits 8-10 provide guidelines for research and teaching.

Another feature of our study is that it makes available an extraordinary amount of primary source material relating to the history of the Pittsburgh Hungarian community. In the course of our research, we have identified and evaluated historical resources preserved in 13 libraries, 25 church collections, and 24 organizational archives, amounting to a total of 62 separate documentary collections. All major holdings in each collection are identified, evaluated, and annotated for the benefit of the prospective student and scholar in kit 8. To illustrate the potential value of these resources, we have used them liberally in our narrative.

This publication is not intended as the final word on Hungarians in Pittsburgh, but the first major step leading to the discovery and better understanding of the Hungarian heritage. Our primary task was to prepare an inventory of documentary resources, to present selected aspects of the Hungarian heritage, and to design guidelines for classroom teaching. We hope that the results of our work will encourage students, teachers, and scholars to explore the Hungarian heritage. We welcome such explorations and are prepared to provide assistance if requested.

We extend our sincere appreciation to all persons and organizations who supported this undertaking. We acknowledge the financial assistance provided to us by the Ethnic Heritage Studies Program of the United States Department of Education, which made our study possible. We express our special thanks to the Pittsburgh Hungarian community, to all churches and synagogues, fraternal, social, and cultural organizations, as well as individuals who responded so generously to our requests. We wish to extend our appreciation to our Advisory Council, representing both Hungarian organizations and ethnic studies specialists. We appreciate also the support received from our organizational sponsor, the American Hungarian Educators' Association.

Finally, as project director I wish to take this opportunity to commend the outstanding cooperation, dedication, and sustained performance, often under trying circumstances, of all study participants, and especially of their families, whose patience, sacrifices, and sense of humor made the completion of this study possible.

PREFACE

For a hundred years Western Pennsylvania provided a home for countless immigrants from Hungary. Many settled here permanently and set up their own communities. Although Hungarians no longer live in compact communities as they once did, they continue to support Hungarian churches, educational programs, folk art activities, and other common aspirations.

This booklet offers a reference guide to present-day Hungarian churches, organizations, and events in Greater Pittsburgh. In addition to the listing of organizations and events, we have provided names of contact persons, addresses, and telephone numbers. An annual calendar of events listing a selection of special events has also been included.

We hope that such a guide will benefit both the Hungarian community and Americans interested in Hungarian events. Our purpose was to provide a brief, yet comprehensive summary of information on contemporary Hungarian life in Pittsburgh. More detailed information can be obtained either from the contact persons listed or from the other kits of the Hungarian Ethnic Heritage Study.
1. Historical Survey

Hungarians have formed a part of the multiethnic Western Pennsylvania community for a century. The small number of Hungarians recorded by the census in 1870 increased significantly during the decades preceding the First World War, when the greatest number of Hungarians migrated to America. The next great wave of Hungarian immigration took place as a result of the turmoil created by the Second World War. The Hungarian Revolution of 1956 provided the latest significant group of Hungarian refugees, some seven hundred of whom were welcomed into the greater Pittsburgh area.

The years prior to the First World War represent the founding period of the Hungarian-American community. Even though more and more Hungarians settled in Western Pennsylvania, the new immigrants continued to feel alien in their new environment. The familiarity and support which the home village or family had supplied did not exist here, where the immigrants had only their jobs and the companionship of a few fellow countrymen. Increasingly they felt the need to establish a community life of their own.

Accident, illness, or death were primary worries as they plunged the immigrant's family into great financial difficulty. For this reason, Hungarians established sick and benefit societies, or fraternals. The City of Pittsburgh had some twenty-five such associations in 1910, while McKeesport had sixteen. The outlying smaller towns also had their own local associations or branches. The Verhovay Aid Society (later William Penn Association) and the Workingmen's Sick and Benevolent Federation were the two largest, and the most enduring, fraternals in Western Pennsylvania.

In the same period, the religious needs of the Hungarian immigrants were also gradually met. The early immigrants laid the foundations of most Hungarian churches which exist today. The first Hungarian congregations to be set up in the Pittsburgh area were formed by the Jewish immigrants from Hungary, who founded two synagogues here in the 1880s, Poale Zedeck in Squirrel Hill and Gemilas Chesed in McKeesport. The first Protestant church to be set up was the forerunner of the present Hazelwood Hungarian Reformed Church. In 1892 the congregation built its first house of worship on Bates Street, near the original Hungarian settlement in Pittsburgh. In 1904 they constructed a beautiful stone church in Hazelwood itself. The Roman Catholics were organized by Reverend Kálmán Kovács who came to the area in 1899 and set out to build a congregation serving the Monongahela Valley. In 1901, the Hungarian Roman Catholics in McKeesport dedicated St. Stephen's Church, named for the first Christian king of Hungary. Hungarian Baptist congregations also flourished in the area, notably in McKeesport and Homestead-Munhall Catholics of the Byzantine Rite organized in Homestead, McKeesport, and Duquesne, also in the decade before the First World War.

The churches have been important in community life because of their roles in preserving Hungarian cultural traditions as well as serving the spiritual needs of Hungarian immigrants. During the "Golden Age" of Hungarian ethnic life in the Pittsburgh area, the churches provided opportunities for Hungarian language maintenance by setting up weekend or summer classes. Among the Roman Catholics, the Sisters of the Divine Redeemer maintained regular schools as well as classes in needlecrafts and music. Their contribution to the maintenance of traditions was invaluable. The children would provide the adults with Old World Christmas plays and other entertainment in their native language. The tradition of the shepherds carrying a manger around the neighborhood (Bethlehemezés) was one of the Christmas customs which the Hungarians transplanted into their new environment.

Hungarian social and cultural life was also fostered by the organization of social clubs, singing groups, bands, self-culture circles, drama societies, and others. They created an environment conducive to the maintenance of Hungarian traditions, while introducing the new immigrants to American values. The celebration of national holidays such as March 15, commemorating the Revolution of 1848, were held annually. In more recent years, an October 23 memorial celebration in remembrance of the 1956 Hungarian Revolution is held. All segments of the community gather on these occasions in the clubs of Hazelwood and McKeesport.

These clubs, as well as the churches, have joined forces to provide other visible examples of their ethnic pride. This spirit was especially evident in the 1920s and the 1930s. In 1926, for example, the Hungarians organized the annual Magyar Day at Kennywood Park. A more permanent manifestation of this pride is shown by the creation of the Hungarian Nationality Room in the Cathedral of Learning on the University of Pittsburgh campus. Since its dedication in 1939 this Room has provided thousands of visitors with a glimpse of Hun-
The Hungarian language press has played an important role in the lives of Hungarians in Western Pennsylvania. During the past one hundred years between thirty and forty of these newspapers or periodicals have appeared in the Pittsburgh area. They have contributed to the cohesion and cultural advancement of the Pittsburgh Hungarian community.

2. Hungarian Religious Organizations
One of the most visible organizational signs of Hungarian life in Western Pennsylvania are the churches. Many continue to serve their members in both Hungarian and English. They encourage community participation through the observance of traditional religious customs, social events, summer festivals, and other celebrations.
